If you wish a Portrait, call at Brady's Gallery, 359 Broadway. THE AMBROTYPE.—Some members of the daguerrean fraternity have represented the Ambrotype—the latest and best improvement in the art—as unworthy of public confidence. Mr. BRADY, the introducer of the Ambrotype in New-York, has found in them a combination of rare qualities, never approached by any other style of camera pictures. 3m28ju

The Kilkenny Journal says:

No new incident of any importance has taken place in connection with the affairs of Italy; but one of the explosive elements of the question has been effectually neutralized for some time. England will scarcely think of prosecuting her designs against the Holy See, while every mail may bring her a Transatlantic Declaration of War. Austria has openly signified her determination to risk everything upon her alliance with Rome.

The following letter has been addressed to the editor of the Kilkenny Journal:

You deserve the thanks of the community for your effort to abate the nuisance of St. Patrick's churchyard. Dogs have been seen there mangling the bodies before now, and indeed there is nothing to hinder the like from happening every day. Persons of bad character resort to it both night and day, and playing cards is not the worst of their practices among the tombs.

DRILL ROOM GUIDE.

NINTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

TROOP A, (Irish Dragoons,) meet at the "Grape Vine Cottage," 45 Second Avenue, between Second and Third streets, on every Monday evening. JAMES MURPHY, Capt.

Company B, (Fitzgerald Guard) drill each Monday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." THOS. MAGUIRE, Capt.

Company D, (Guyon Cadets) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." THOS. MURPHY, Capt.

Company I, (Jackson Guard) drill each Thursday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." W. O. MURPHY, Capt.

Company H, (Erina Guard) drill Thursday Evening at "Military Hall." R. CODDINGTON, Capt.

Company —, (Irish Grenadiers) drill each Thursday Evening at 22 White street. FELIX DUFFY, Capt.

Company C, (Mitchel Guard,) drill each Wednesday Evening at the "Eagle Rooms." —— KEARNS, Capt.

Company J, (Carroll Guard,) drill each evening, at —— GALLAGHER, Capt.

TENTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company —, (Emmet Guard) drill each Thursday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." JOHN KENNEDY, Capt.

ELEVENTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company E, (Montgomery Guard) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." THOS. S. MURPHY, Capt.

FOURTEENTH REGIMENT, N. Y. S. M.

Company E, (Carroll Guard,) drill each Tuesday Evening, at the "Adelphi," Brooklyn. GEO. B. MAGRATH, Capt.

FIFTH REGIMENT N. J. S. M.

Company C, (O'Brien Columbia Rifles,) drill on the 1st and 3d Tuesdays in each month at their Armory, "Willow Hall," Orange, N. J. OWEN MURPHY, Captain.

SIXTY NINTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Troop A, (Irish Dragoons,) drill each Thursday Evening at "Montgomery Hall." Lieut. B. O'CONNOR, Com'dt.

Company C, (—— ——,) drill each Wednesday Evening at the "Eagle Rooms." Lieut. M. KEATING, Com'dt.

Company D, (Irish Rifles) drill each Monday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." JAMES QUINLAN, Capt.

Company E, (Fag a Bealac Guard) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." GILBERT RIORDAN, Capt.

Company F, (Shields' Guard,) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Milleman's Hall," 7th avenue, corner of 26th street. JOHN R. MURPHY, Capt.

Company G, (Mechanic's Guard) drill each Thursday Evening at the "Eagle Rooms." JOHN B. MADDEN, Capt.

Company I, (Irish Fuseleers,) drill each Monday Evening at 42 Prince street. M. CORCORAN, Capt.

Company K, (Brian Boroihme Guard) drill each Monday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." JAMES HUSTON, Capt.

Engineer Corps, (Emmet Life Guard) drill each Monday Evening at "Worth's Military Head Quarters," 22 White st. T. LYNCH, Capt.

70th REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company D, (Napper Tandy Light Artillery) drill each Thursday Evening at Brooklyn City Armory. WM. H. HOGAN, Capt.

SEVENTY FIFTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company A, (State Rifles) drill each Wednesday Evening at cor. of 11th street and 1st Avenue. Lieut. JAS. KELLY, Com'dt.

Company B, (Irish National Guard) drill each Friday Evening at "Centre Market Rooms." JOHN LANE, Capt.

Company C, (Young Ireland Rifles) drill each Friday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." JOHN BURKE, Capt.

Company D, (Wolf Tone Volunteers,) drill each Tuesday Evening, at the "Eagle Rooms." JOHN NUGENT, Capt.

Company E, (T. F. Meagher Rifles) drill each —— at cor. of 11th street and 1st Avenue. J. B. DONNELLY, Capt.

Company F, (Mich'l. Doheny Rifles) drill each —— at ——. J. F. MAGUIRE, Capt.

Company G. (Emmet Rifles) drill each —— at ——. JOHN BEGG, Capt.

INDEPENDENT COMPANIES.

Company —, (O'Mahony Guard, E. M. A.,) drill each Tuesday Evening at "North America Rooms," cor. of Bayard and Bowery. JAMES CAVANAGH, Capt.

Company —, (Sons of '98,) drill each Friday Evening at the corner of 11th street and 1st Avenue, N. Y. M. H. SMITH, Capt.

Company —, (Wolfe Tone Guard,) drill each alternate Monday Evening at the "Second Ward Hotel," cor. of York and Pearl streets, Brooklyn. JOHN J. CLANCY, Com'dt.

Company —, (Irish American Grenadiers,) drill the first and third Thursday of each month at "Montgomery Hall," 76 Prince street, N. Y. MICHAEL DOYLE, Capt.

Company —, (Montgomery Guard,) drill each Monday evening, at Bridgeport, Conn. MICHAEL O'CONNELL, Capt.

Company —, (Republican Guard) drill every Friday Evening, at "Worth's Military Headquarters," 22 White street. W. H. LYONS, Capt.

Company —, (Keystone Rifles,) drill every Monday evening, in Port Carbon, Pa. MATTHEW BYRNES, Captain.

TWENTY-FOURTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company —, (Columbian Guard), drill each Tuesday evening, at Washington Hall, Troy, N. Y. RICHARD S. QUINN, Captain.

TWENTY-FIFTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company —, (Emmet Guard,) drill each Wednesday Evening at Albany, N. Y. P. H. GRIFFIN, Capt.

SECOND REGIMENT—HUDSON BRIGADE.

Company —, (Montgomery Guard,) drill each week at the "Armory," Grand street, Jersey City. —— FARRELL, Capt.

SECOND REGIMENT PA. VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Hibernian Greens,) drill each Thursday Evening at 83 South Fifth street, Philadelphia. P. O'KEAN, Capt.

Company —, (Meagher Guard,) drill each Tuesday Evening at 104 Market street, Philadelphia. Lieut. PATRICK O'CONNOR, Com'dt.

Company —, (Emmet Guard,) drill each Friday Evening at "Ewen Hall," Hawley, Pa. M. W. MORRISS, Capt.

FIRST REGIMENT ME. VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Gratian Guard,) drill each Thursday Evening in Bangor, Me. JOHN CARROLL, Capt.

SIXTIETH REGIMENT ILL. S. M.

Company —, (Shields Guard,) drill each Thursday Evening in Chicago, Ill. CHAS. E. MOORE, Capt.

FIRST REGIMENT VA. VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Montgomery Guard,) drill each Monday and Friday Evenings in Richmond. P. S. MOORE, Capt.

SIXTEENTH REGIMENT S. C. S. M.

Company —, (Meagher Guard,) drill the second Thursday of each month in Charleston. GEO. SERGEANT, Capt.

SEVENTEENTH REGIMENT S. C. S. M.

Company —, (Irish Volunteers,) drill once a month in Charleston, S. C. EDWARD MAGRATH, Capt.

—— REGIMENT GEORGIA VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Irish Volunteers,) drill each —— evening, in the city of Augusta. EDWARD J. WALKER, Capt.

FIRST REGIMENT ST. LOUIS LEGION, MO.

Company—(St. Louis Washington Guard) drill each Tuesday evening, in the city of St. Louis, Mo. D. M. FROST, Capt.

FIRST WASHINGTON BATTALION OHIO S. M.

Company A, (Shields Guard), drill on each Thursday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati. DENNIS KAVANAGH, Captain.

Company B, (Sarsfield Guard), drill on each Monday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati. JOHN LEVY, Capt.

Company C, (Republican's Guard,) drill on each Saturday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati. JOHN ELITCH, Capt.

Company D, (Montgomery Light Artillery,) drill on each Wednesday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati. THOS. TIERNAN, Capt.

Company E, (Queen City Cadets, Rifles,) drill on each Tuesday and Friday evenings, at the "Cadets Armory," Pomeroy's Building, Third street, Cincinnati. JOSEPH H. BURKE, Capt.

N. B.—Commandants of Irish-American Military Companies throughout the United States, are respectfully tendered a place in the above "Directory," and requested to send such information as will enable us to represent them in it.

Continental Military Establishment.

J. PARKS,

195 FULTON, BELOW DUTCH, N.Y.

Hats, Caps, Ornaments, &c., made to order. 3m28ju

Business Directory.

PIANOS, MELODEONS AND MUSIC

The Cash system adopted!—Prices greatly reduced.

HORACE WATERS,

No. 333 Broadway, N. Y.,

AGENT FOR THE BEST BOSTON AND NEW-YORK INSTRUMENTS.

The largest assortment of

Pianos, Melodeons, Musical Instruments,

AND

MUSICAL MERCHANDISE,

of all kinds, in the United States, Pianos from ten different Manufactories, comprising those of every variety of style, from the plain, neat and substantial 6½ octaves, in Walnut or Rosewood Cases, from $150 to $200, to those of the most elegant finish up to $1000. No house in the Union can compete with the above in the number, variety, and celebrity of its instruments, nor in the extremely low prices at which they are sold.

Horace Waters' Modern Improved Pianos,

WITH OR WITHOUT IRON FRAMES.

possessing in their improvements of over-strings and action, a length of scale power, and compass of tone equal to the Grand Piano, united with the beauty and durability of structure of the square Piano. They are justly pronounced by the Press and by the first Musical Masters to be equal to those of any other manufacturer. They are built of the best and most thoroughly seasoned material, and guaranteed to stand the action of every climate.

Each Instrument guaranteed to give satisfaction, or purchase money refunded. Second-hand Pianos at great bargains, constantly in store; price from $30 to $140.

Horace Waters' Melodeons,

SUPERIOR INSTRUMENTS IN TONE, TOUCH AND DURABILITY OF MAKE.

(Tuned the equal temperament.) Melodeons of all other styles and makes. Price, $45, $60, $75, $100, $125, $140; double Reeds, $150; double Reeds and two banks of Keys, $200. Less a liberal discount. Clergymen and Churches, an extra discount.

Martin's Guitars, Brown's Harps, Flutes, Flutinas, Accordeons, Violins, and Musical Instruments,

OF ALL KINDS, AT LOWER PRICES THAN EVER BEFORE OFFERED TO THE PUBLIC.

A large discount to Teachers and Schools. The trade supplied on the most liberal terms.

MUSIC.

One of the largest and best selected catalogues of Music now published, comprising many of the choice and most popular airs of the day, and will be sold at one-third off from the regular prices.

Music sent by mail to all parts of the country, post paid. Particular and personal attention paid to all orders received by mail. Satisfaction guaranteed in every instance. Pianos and Melodeons for rent, and rent allowed on purchase. Pianos and Melodeons for sale on monthly payments. Second-hand Pianos taken in exchange for new. General and Select Catalogues and Schedule of prices forwarded to all parts of the country by mail.

☞ Great inducements offered to agents in all parts of the country, to sell the Horace Waters' Pianos, Melodeons, and Catalogue of Music.

PIANOS AND MUSIC.—We learn that Horace Waters, of 333 Broadway, N. Y., agent for the sale of many of the most celebrated makers of Pianos and Melodeons, is offering them at prices which we advise all who desire to purchase to avail themselves of. He is also selling his large and well-known Catalogue of Music at one-third off from the regular prices, and will forward the same free of postage. His offers to the trade, teachers and schools, are of the most favorable character, all of which he will be able to fill to the letter, for having wisely adopted the cash system. The Horace Waters' Pianos are known as among the very best. We are enabled to speak of those instruments with some degree of confidence, from personal knowledge of their excellent tone and durab quality.—N. Y. Evangelist. ap19tf

Special Notices.

Notice.—The "Sisters of Charity" beg leave to acknowledge with gratitude the very handsome sum of $1276, being the net proceeds of the Lecture delivered by Thomas Francis Meagher, Esq., for the benefit of the orphans under their charge. ORPHAN ASYLUM, Prince street.

June 18, 1856.

Genin's Cassimere Hats.—A new variety of the cassimere hat, of an exquisitely delicate and becoming tint, extremely light and of the finest texture, has just been brought out by Genin as a leading style for the present summer. The shape, color, and mounting of this elegant fabric are most attractive, and it is equally well adapted for riding, driving, the morning promenade, or full dress. The first cassimere hats which obtained any popularity in this country, were introduced by Genin, and each successive issue has been an improvement upon the preceding, until in the one now offered, perfection may be said to have been obtained.

GENIN, 214 Broadway, opposite St. Pauls.

Mayor's Office, New-York, June 16, 1856.

Notice to Owners of Dogs.—Notice is hereby given that on and after Wednesday, June 25th inst., the ordinance respecting dogs found running loose or at large in any street south of Forty-second street, without being muzzled, will be strictly enforced. The sum of fifty cents will be paid for every dog brought alive to the Pound, on the corner of First Avenue and Thirty-first street, which shall have been found in the streets, running loose or at large without being properly muzzled, on presentation of the certificate of the pound-keeper to the Chief of Police at his office in the Park. Owners of dogs may reclaim them at the Pound between sunrise and sunset on the day on which they are received, on payment of expenses.

FERNANDO WOOD, Mayor.

MAYOR'S OFFICE, NEW-YORK, May 28, 1856.

NOTICE is hereby given, that the Complaint Book, opened at this office on the 1st of January, 1855, is still open for the reception of complaints of municipal abuses of all kinds. So far as the Mayor has the power, he will continue to exercise it for the abatement of any such evils, when brought to his attention through the Complaint Book, or otherwise. The Mayor invites all persons to take this method of reporting to him all violations of corporation ordinances, nuisances, or dereliction of duty upon the part of the officers of the Corporation, and he will, as heretofore, use all the legal means at his command to see the laws enforced, and the interests of the public protected. By order of the Mayor. ALEXANDER MING, Chief Clerk.

To the lady readers of this paper.—Ladies, if you wish to get Linen and other Gaiter Boots from 12s. to 20s.; Slipper Ties and Buskins, 1st quality, 8s. to 10s.; second quality, same styles, 6s. and 7s per pair; boys', misses', and children's Boots & Shoes of all kinds and prices, Patronize 4tjun21 J. B. MILLER & CO., 134 Canal street.

Information Wanted—Of MICHAEL BOODEN, a native of the Parish of Urlingford, near Johnstown, County Kilkenny, Ireland, who left his residence in Ireland for New-York last December. Any information of his whereabouts, sent to the office of the Commissioners of Emigration, N. Y., will be thankfully received by his wife.

Wanted, A situation as Engineer, to run a stationary engine, in any part of this city. Apply to James Casty, 405 Ninth street, opposite the Morgan Iron Works, who will give most satisfactory references.

Information Wanted of John Duffy, a native of Castleblaney, county Monaghan, Ireland, by trade a carpenter, who arrived in this city about five years ago, and when last heard from was living at Staten Island. Any information of his whereabouts, sent to the office of the Commissioners of Emigration, will be thankfully received by his wife Alice Duffy.

OFFICE of Receiver of Taxes—New City Hall, Park, May 29, 1856.—Public notice is hereby given that there is no such office as Collector of Arrearages on Personal Taxes, and that no person but the undersigned, or HENRY B. VENN, Esq., appointed for that purpose, to be found at this office, is authorized to receive any moneys due for arrears on Personal Taxes.

je7 6t HENRY H. HOWARD, Receiver of Taxes.

Information Wanted—Of WILLIAM KELLEY, a native of the county Cavan, Ireland, who left this city about three years ago for the State of Pennsylvania. Any information concerning him will be thankfully received by his sisters, Rosie and Anne Kelley, at No. 15 Rose street, in care of Thomas McManus. je14

JUST PUBLISHED.

Price 6 1-4 cents.

A Lecture on the

LIFE AND TIMES OF DANIEL O'CONNELL,

Delivered on the 12th of June, 1856, by the Most Rev. John Hughes, D.D., Archbishop of New-York. Edward Dunigan & Brother, jly5 151 Fulton street, New-York.

Billiards.

IMPROVED BILLIARD TABLES AND CUSHIONS.

MICHAEL PHELAN'S

MODEL TABLES AND COMBINATION CUSHIONS,

(Patented February 19, 1856,)

CORRECT in principle and perfect in action—so constructed as to insure mathematical correctness of angles when played upon, and warranted to possess the requisite elasticity in all seasons, having been tested by the best players in this conntry, and by them pronounced the most perfect of any hitherto constructed—are offered to the public as cheap as the ordinary tables of the day. Orders promptly attended to for fitting up private or public Billiard Rooms; new Cushions put on old Tables, &c.

Saloon and Salesroom No. 39 Chambers street, up stairs.

O'CONNOR & COLLENDER,

BILLIARD TABLE MANUFACTURERS.

53 ANN STREET, NEW-YORK.

"Hereditary bondsmen, know ye not
Who would be free, themselves must strike the blow?"

RICHARD KAVANAGH,

132 and 134 FEDERAL STREET, BOSTON.

THANKFUL to his numerous patrons for past favors, is desirous of letting them know that he has given up the Grocery and Provision trade, and intends in future to devote his untiring exertions to promote their terrestrial happiness in the shape of good Liquors, Segars, to say nothing of a Free Lunch every day at 11 o'clock. Attached is a very handsome Sitting Room, and a splendid Room for Committee Meetings. my31 4t

I. E. Tate's Pannus Corrium Boot and Shoe store, for tender feet. A large stock of Boots, Shoes and Gaiters always on hand, in great variety, and made to order at the shortest notice, for Gentlemen, Boys and Youths—wholesale and retail, at the lowest Cash prices. Particular attention is requested to the Pannus Corrium or Leather Cloth Boots and Shoes, for those troubled with corns, bunions or tenderness of the feet. Its qualities for summer boots or shoes, surpass anything ever got up in this country for real comfort, as it keeps the feet perfectly cool, and at the same time is susceptible of the finest polish; for a dress boot more so than any French calfskin, with one half the labor. ISAAC E. TATE.

my 24, 3 mos. 427 Broadway New-York.

Edwin A. Brooks, wholesale and retail Boot and Shoe Store, Nos. 575 Broadway, and 150 Fulton street, New-York. Constantly on hand French Calf Skin and Patent Leather Boots, Shoes and Gaiters, made with Dick's Patent Elastic Shanks, and Congress Gaiter Boots; also a large assortment of Ladies' and Children's Gaiters and Shoes, Waterproof and Cork Sole Boots, Perpetual Gloss and Leather Over Shoes.

Boy's and Youth's Boots, Shoes and Over Shoes. my8 3m

Furniture.—F. FITZSIMMONS respectfully calls the attention of his customers and the public to his stock of elegant and substantial FURNITURE; (not made for the auction room) consisting of rich Parlor Suites in rosewood; oak Dining and Chamber Sets of every description; Upholstery in all its branches executed in the best mechanical manner. Prices unexceptionable. Warerooms No. 8 Astor place, near Broadway. my24 3m

Lumber and Timber for Export and City Trade.—THOS. RIGNEY & Co. offer for sale AT THEIR YARD FOOT OF THIRTIETH-STREET, North River, a general assortment of LUMBER AND TIMBER, suitable for export and the city trade. SHIPPERS AND BUILDERS will find it to their advantage to examine their stock previous to buying. Apply as above, or to J. PICKARD, Agent, 26 Bridge street. my17 3m*

KNOX'S

OFFICE FURNITURE WAREROOMS,

59 BEEKMAN STREET, UP STAIRS.

DESKS! DESKS!! DESKS!!!

DOUBLE and Single counting-room DESKS, from 3 to 8 feet long. Office Desks from 3 to 6 ft., of Mahogany, blackwalnut and oak; cases for Books and pigeon-holes. Office chairs, cushions, lounges and Office Tables of every description. my17 tf

STATEN ISLAND

FANCY DYING ESTABLISHMENT.

OFFICE No. 3 John street, (two doors from Broadway,) New-York, solicit orders for dying Broadcloths, Merinoes, Paramattas, De Laines, and Silk, Woolen, and fancy goods of every description; Satin and Taffeta Ribbons, Gimps, Fringes, Galloons, and other trimmings dyed and re-finished with great success.

Also ladies and gentlemen's garments, Shawls, &c., &c.

BARRETT, NEPHEW & CO.,

3mos 3 John st., (2 doors from Broadway,) N. Y.

REMOVAL.

THOMAS McLAUGHLIN, Shirt Manufacturer, and dealer in Gentlemen's Furnishing Goods, WHOLESALE AND RETAIL, has removed from his old stand, 292, to 269 Greenwich street, corner of Murray, and invites the attention of buyers generally to his Spring and Summer stock of the above goods. Feeling confident from his long experience in the business and his increased facilities for manufacturing a superior article of Shirts, Bosoms, Collars, Stocks, Ties, &c., to be able to offer for nett cash the cheapest goods to be found in the city. Shirts made to order for the trade or otherwise. We will also receive from auction daily, Under Shirts and Drawers Gloves, Hosiery, Ties, Cravats, &c., worthy the attention of Clothiers, Dry Goods Dealers and others. Our motto IS ONE PRICE ONLY. THOMAS McLAUGHLIN, 269 Greenwich street,

ap26 3mos (Corner of Murray street, New-York.)

Analytical and Metallurgical Chemistry and Mining Geology.

DR. ISAIAH DECK,

No. 18 EXCHANGE PLACE, NEW-YORK.

MAY be consulted on all subjects relating to Practical Chemistry, Mining- and Metallurgy. Assays of Ores, Analyses of Minerals, and Mining Products in general carefully and expeditiously conducted, and sound opinions delivered upon the most economical methods of working them, based on the latest chemical discoveries. Geological and Mining Surveys undertaken in any part of the world—Dr. DECK having had considerable experience in this branch of his profession. my31 3m

Important to the Ladies.

GLENFIELD PATENT STARCH.

FOR the dressing of Laces and all descriptions of fine goods. This celebrated starch is unrivalled.

ONE TRIAL WILL CONVINCE.

For sale by all respectable druggists and grocers.

3m28ju ROBERT HOSIE, 8 Pine Street, New-York,

Sole Agent for the United States.

JAMES O'FLYN.

HOWARD HOTEL,

176 BROADWAY, NEW-YORK.

Advertising Envelope Manufacturer, Embosser, Die Sinker, and General Engraver. Notarial and Lodge Seals, Crests, and Coats of Arms. Seal Presses of every description constantly on hand. 14ju3m

TEACHERS, ATTENTION!!—Perhaps the greatest educational event of this century is the publication of JOHNSON'S PHILOSOPHICAL CHARTS. There are ten Charts in all, each measuring 34 by 52 inches, and the set contains altogether about 300 Diagrams, illustrative of the most important outline principles of the Natural Sciences. Besides the essential diagrams found in the ordinary text-books, these charts contain several original illustrations, and possess the merit, rarely found in school-books, of being entirely original in plan and arrangement. They are, moreover, highly ornamental to a school-room, and obviate the necessity of philosophical apparatus which would cost from $3,000 to $5,000. Price of the set of ten charts, neatly colored and mounted, and accompanied with an explanatory Key, (a bound book,) $15. Ditto, on thick paper, colored and mounted, without cloth, $10. Ditto, plain, in sheets, neatly bound, $5.

Booksellers, Teachers, Agents, and all interested in Education, are respectfully requested to address the publisher, Adolphus Ranney, No. 195 Broadway, New-York.

Mr. Ranney has also the pleasure to announce that he has purchased from EDWARD H. DIXON, M. D., editor of The Scalpel, and acknowledged to be the first surgeon in America, the copy-right of a work entitled "WOMAN AND HER DISEASES, FROM THE CRADLE TO THE GRAVE;" Adapted exclusively to her instruction in the Physiology of her system, and all the diseases of her critical periods; with an Appendix on the propriety of limiting the increase of family. Price $1. Copies mailed, post-paid, on receipt of price. Address as above. ap26tf

Medical.

THE CAUSE OF CONSUMPTION.

BRONCHITIS.—WHAT PRODUCES BRONCHITIS?

FIRST STAGE OF DISEASE.

COSTIVENESS is the first link that connects disease in the System. It creates, induces, feeds and supports Bronchitis; and is slightly or indifferently treated, as though it was of no serious tendency: nevertheless, it has laid the foundation of that destroying disease, without the knowledge of the sufferers, undermining and sapping the very vitals of their constitutions.

Among the numerous class of diseases which afflict man, there is none more silent or treacherous in its approaches or more certain to triumph over its slowly consuming victim, than that formidable and insidious leveller of humanity—Bronchitis, which is produced by catching cold, through a neglect of regulating the state of the bowels when arriving to adult age. It seldom excites attention or alarm in the mind of any person, until it has sown the seed of disease and suffering in the human system, by checking the circulation of the blood; and it is to this source alone that we attribute the awful mortality of Consumption.

The following is a simple but correct illustration, namely:—If the culverts and sewers of the city were choked or clogged up, accidentally or otherwise, what would be the result? An overflow of accumulated filth and slush on the surface of the earth in its neighborhood, until it fills every hole, corner and crevice. This is quite similar to the human body, when the channel or sewer of life, as I may term it, which is the bowels, is checked or confined through constipation or some unnatural obstruction, which prevents the blood from circulating through the general system.

What, then, is the consequence? An accumulation of diseased matter and bile. Where will this bile and poisonous substance go to when it is prevented from taking its natural exit, through the bowels? It must surge itself back again into the blood, to be infused through the entire frame by the agency of the blood, bringing in its passage disease and suffering, and exhibiting itself by pain, nervous sensations and irritation all over the body—producing a bad feeling at the stomach, sourness of the food, a rush of blood to the head, catarrh, bronchitis, a short dry cough, dizziness, pain in the shoulders, and through or under the shoulder blades, cold feet, a peevish and irritable temper, annoyed by this hacking cough, and then gradually begins the expectorating from the throat of a lightish phlegm, resembling boiled starch or tough jelly of various colors, from a light to a darkish substance, and hawked up like a string.

SECOND STAGE.

From this period the patient is aware of some unusual and disagreeable feeling, though he seldom takes the hint till it goes from bad to worse. Catching cold from the slightest exposure, which he cannot avoid in consequence of the blood being in a diseased and corrupt condition for a long time previous to the appearance of those troublous symptoms, through the impure state of the blood, that at every breath the patient draws he inhales a similar quantity of fresh air by the nostrils and mouth, which keeps the tickling that exists in the throat and bronchial tubes in a ferment of irritation—this is the reason why some people complain of catching cold, even when confined to their room. Hence the sufferer is hacking, hawking, or expectorating a little at a time, with the impression that there is something in his throat that wants to come out; and which he desires to get out. There is a frequent desire for heavy sighing, with a dryness of the nostrils, which inclines the patient to pick or scratch them; sleepy, drowsy, dull, and heavy loss of appetite, and confused memory; a stuffing, tightness, and oppression of the chest, with a rawness and soreness of the gullet of the throat. This is caused by the silent enemy that has lurked in the system for months, and even years, and has at last aroused your fears, and well it might; for out of one hundred persons who die of Consumption ninety-nine are owing to disease of the throat alone, though simply called Bronchitis; and wretchedly treated by this self-pretended and dignified class of sheepskin physicians termed M. D.'s, who have proved a curse to the human family. They treat their patient on the following abusive principle, by cutting the tonsols and palate from the throat, as you might cut the gills out of a fish—next comes the solution or wash of nitrate of silver or caustic, and the whalebone swab, to wash and burn away the disease that has occupied the throat. Then comes the application of blister, and Croton oil externally to the throat and neck, to draw out the inflammation, as the physicians suppose (what blind philosophy.) Then comes the quack sheet of their MATERIA MEDICA—Calomel, Antimony, Morphine and Opium, to salivate and lull the feelings of the patient, which adds to the disease and increases the suffering, by giving the disease an opportunity of triumphing over nature. What a delusive idea to think the above treatment would be available in having recourse to those debilitating and irritating remedies of cutting, burning, blistering, purging and starving, which is of itself sufficient to lower and reduce the constitution of an ox.

THE THIRD STAGE

Confirms the above remarks. While undergoing this torturing treatment, the constitution is gradually failing and giving away, in giving rise to more alarming symptoms, evidently preparing its victim for the shroud, while the physician and friends fail to see the cause until those confirmed symptoms of consumption set in, but foolishly assign the cause to some other besides the genuine one, till the disease has reached its meridian, with a complication of fresh symptoms, breathing short and hurried, cough frequent, with an accumulation of corrupted matter, sometimes streaked with blood; profuse night sweats, emaciation and debility; cold chills in the forenoon, with a burning fever after; flesh soft and flabby, the limbs scarcely able to support the body; a susceptibility of catching cold on the least exposure, attended with a hoarseness and loss of voice, with a very heavy expectoration in the forenoon; flying pains in the chest, sides and shoulders, with a severe fit of coughing in the morning, or awaking from sleep. The painful crisis is fast approaching, with a swelling and puffing of the feet and ankles, and frequent attacks of diarrhœa. In females, the symptoms are more distressing at an earlier period than in the male, with a weakness in the back and loins, a sinking and exhausted feeling at the stomach, nervous and excitable, with gradual and frequent interruptions of the monthly flow, and as the disease progresses, a total or final cessation of it, with the harbinger of a broken down constitution which is a discharge of whites, a symptom that proves very debilitating and irritating to females.

All the above symptoms and sufferings are the fruits of costiveness at an early period, accruing to the sufferer through neglect of keeping the bowels in gentle operation, which would circulate the blood, and prove as ventilation to the general system, from the age of 18 to 26, when this disease creeps on and grows on, until every organ in the body is totally disorganized.

My long experience and observations, and my unprecedented success in treating consumption, inclines me to devote the remainder of my life to the cause of suffering humanity. I have cured more consumptive patients in the last ten years than any other doctor in the world in that time, and not by steam, smoke or vapor, nor by smelling medicine through an India rubber or glass tube, but through the selection I make from the forest and verdant meadows. I can always determine on examination whether I can be successful or not, and I speak accordingly. I have made it a rule to treat no disease longer than three weeks. If I cannot check the fatal progress of the disease in that time, I give up the patient as lost, and lead the sufferer to no further expense.

☞ In compliance with the repeated solicitations of consumptive patients living in remote parts of the country, I have opened an hospital at No. 178 Bowery, for the exclusive treatment of those laboring under any species of the above disease, where I can bestow on them the unremitted attention which the seriousness of their cases require; where I can be able to regulate their diet and regimen according to circumstances. Three weeks under the supervision of my especial care is worth four months at a distance.

All persons desirous of medical information can obtain it by enclosing one dollar, when all information and communication will be forwarded on receipt.

D. Durkin, Chronic and Consumptive Doctor,

my31 No. 178 Bowery, New-York.

DR. B. F. ADAMS,

SURGEON DENTIST, (formerly of Barclay street,) feeling grateful for the patronage so liberally bestowed upon him for the last fourteen years, respectfully informs his friends and the public, that he has taken an elegant suite of rooms, at

NO. 122 CHAMBERS STREET,

(near the Sixth and Eighth Avenue Railroads,) where he may always be found, ready to perform all operations pertaining to his profession, in a manner unsurpassed, and on the most reasonable terms. Whole or part sets of incorruptible teeth inserted without pain, on gold plate or gutta percha, excelling nature in beauty and durability. No impure gold or dangerous amalgams used. Irregularities in children's teeth prevented, or of adults remedied. Cleansing, extracting, &c. &c., all at reduced prices. Sets of teeth inserted on Silver or Gutta Percha, for six shillings each. Teeth examined, and advice given free of charge. Please call.

8m7jun B. F. ADAMS, 122 Chambers street, New-York.

DR. J. VOORHIES,

MEDICAL ELECTRICIAN,

NO. 69 SANDS STREET,

Brooklyn.

Office hours from 9 A. M. to 4 P. M.

N. B. All chronic or nervous diseases cured by Electricity in some form. Electro Medicated Vapor Baths ready for operation. Dropsy can be cured by this treatment. Consultations free. m8jun14

WRITING INKS.

WE ask the attention of all who wish imperishable records,—a matter of great importance to State, County and Town Offices, Banks, and others, to Dr. Chilton's test of the prominent Inks in use, made with a view to show their different degrees of permanence by exposure. Engraved facsimiles of the test can be seen at our office.

Thaddeus Davids & Co.,

ap19 6m Manufacturing Stationers, 26 Cliff street.

Medical.

THE GREAT RUSSIAN REMEDY.

Pro Bono Publico.

"EVERY MOTHER SHOULD HAVE A BOX IN THE HOUSE HANDY IN CASE OF ACCIDENTS TO THE CHILDREN."

REDDING'S RUSSIAN SALVE. It is a Boston remedy of thirty years' standing, and is recommended by physicians. It is a sure and speedy cure for Burns, Piles, Boils, Corns, Felons, Chilblains, and old Sores of every kind.

For Fever Sores, Ulcers, Itch, Scald Head, Nettle Rash, Bunions, Sore Nipples, (recommended by nurses); Whitlows, Stiles, Festers, Flea Bites, Spider Stings, Frozen Limbs, Salt Rheum, Scurvy, Sore and Cracked Lips, Sore Nose, Warts and Flesh Wounds, it is a most valuable remedy and cure, which can be testified to by thousands who have used it in the city of Boston and vicinity for the last thirty years.

In no instance will this Salve do an injury, or interfere with a physician's prescriptions. It is made from the purest materials, from a recipe brought from Russia, of articles growing in that country, and the proprietors have letters from all classes, clergymen, physicians, sea captains, nurses, and others who have used it themselves and recommend it to others.

REDDING'S RUSSIAN SALVE is put in large tin boxes, stamped on the cover with the picture of a horse and a disabled soldier, which picture is also engraved on the wrapper. PRICE, 25 Cents a Box. Sold at all the stores in town or country, or may be ordered of any wholesale druggist.

ap19tf Redding & Co., Proprietors, No. 8 State st., Boston.

"Eye and Ear."—DOCTOR HENDERSON, Oculist and Aurist, 419 Broadway, corner of Canal street, treats all diseases of the eye and ear, without cupping, leeching, blistering or the use of calomel. Within the past two years upwards of thirty cases of blindness from inflamation have been restored to sight, to whom reference can be given, (hundreds of which can be seen in my circular,) by inclosing three postage stamps. Electro-chemical Medicated Vapor and Sulphur, hot and cold water BATHS. Office hours 9 A. M. to 5 P. M. Sundays and evenings by appointment. 419 Broadway, corner of Canal st., New-York. my17 3m

ARTIFICIAL EYES inserted.

H. G. LUTHER,

SURGICAL AND MECHANICAL DENTIST,

No. 698 BROADWAY, Second House above Fourth st.

HAVING enjoyed an extensive practice during the last twelve years, feels confident of his ability to give perfect satisfaction to all who may honor him with their preference. He is prepared to perform all operations connected with his profession, in the most faithful manner, and in strict accordance with scientific principles, embracing all the recent improvements of the day.

References of the most respectable character given if desired. Patronage respectfully solicited.

☞ N. B. Teeth extracted without pain. my17 3m

Dr. J. J. McGowan, Physician and Surgeon, Graduate of Harvard University, Fellow of the Massachusetts and Rhode Island Medical Societies, etc., has removed to No. 69 Canal street, New-York, a few doors from Broadway, where he will attend to calls in every branch of the medical profession. Dr. McG. will devote particular attention to chronic diseases, and those of women and children. m10 1t

New School of Medicine and Pharmacy. The last Unfolding of the ART of Healing. My daily practice proves that I CURE CONSUMPTION, in all its varied forms and most advanced states, as readily as any other disease. Therefore I desire to treat all Consumptives, but particularly those who have tried all other physicians without relief. Mrs. M. J. MARIN, M.D., No. 37. Lafayette place, N. Y. (First street east of Broadway, between 4th and 8th sts.) Office hours: from 10 A. M. to 1 P. M., exclusively for Ladies; and from 2 to 5 P. M., for Gentlemen, Wednesdays excepted. All other hours by appointment. my31 3m

THE GREATEST WONDER OF THE AGE!

A REMEDY WHICH CURES IN FIVE MINUTES.—M. LEROUX'S FRENCH CHOLERA COGNAC BITTERS.—This wonderful and scientific compound is recommended by the most eminent and learned physicians of all Europe and America, and enjoys the best reputation of anything similar ever offered. It is without doubt the best, most efficient and generally acknowledged remedy against Cholera, dysentery, diarrhœa, and complaints of the stomach in general. The numerous patients who have tried it according to directions, have invariably found relief in a very short time, and the best proof of it is, that since this standard remedy was introducee in the armies of the allies in the Crimea, the mortality of the soldiers from Cholera and similar diseases was reduced by over 75 per cent.; in consideration of which, the inventor was presented by the French and English governments with a gold medal, bearing the inscription, "Hail! M. LEROUX, the great Chemist and inventor, by whose knowledge our armies are preserved from Cholera."

This invaluable preparation is also a remedy for biliousness, indigestion, weakness, and general derangement of the stomach. Upon being taken, it creates appetite, and prevents the heaviness attendant upon eating, by persons who are dyspeptic.

In this city, also, this remedy has been tried with the most undoubted success, and the undersigned can produce the best testimonials of our most celebrated physicians, as to its immediate and complete success, which he will be happy at any time to show to any that may wish to see them. S. STEINFELD, sole agent for the United States, No. 70 Nassau street, corner of John.

P. S.—Those not having money to pay, may call at my place from 8 to 5 P. M. and receive this remedy gratis. my17 3m

TO NERVOUS SUFFERERS.

A Retired Clergyman, restored to health in a few days, after many years of great nervous suffering, is anxious to make known the means of cure. Will send (free) the prescriptions used. Direct to my10 8m No. 59 Fulton street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Rev. JOHN M. DAGNALL,

The Best Hair Dye.—DR. O. M. BALLARD'S new article received the highest premium at the World's Fair and American Institute, where it was examined by the distinguished Chemists, Dr. Chilton, and Prof. John Torrey, and pronounced the best. For sale by the best Druggists. Principal office and store, 498 Broadway, New-York. my17 3m

The undersigned announces to the legitimate faculty that he has opened a store for the dispensing of pure medicines, chemicals, &c. Having obtained a knowledge of the profession in the best schools in the world, during twelve years, he will be able to compound prescriptions precisely as they are ordered. JOHN. C. GILES, Apothecary, 21ju3m 285 Bleecker, two doors above Barrow.

A CARD.—To the Medical Profession.—A Physician residing in a large and wealthy city, west of New-York, is desirous of selling his Practice, the actual receipts of which amount to $4000 per annum. The appointment of Physician to a Large General Hospital would be also available,—thus securing at once a prominent professional position. Satisfactory reasons will be assigned for the disposal of this fine practice, and a reasonable introduction in the form of a copartnership for a limited period, will be given. Address, &c. &c., to the office of the "Irish News," 29 Ann street.

Reed's Celebrated London Cordial Gin, having gained much popularity in this country, being distilled the same as that in London, as he was formerly a distiller of the same kind of Gin in England, under the EXCISE LAWS.

This article is used in every hospital in and out of England's great metropolis. Its medicinal properties are invaluable.

☞ This Gin is not an imitation or a mixture of raw materials, of which much is sold in this city, under the name of London Cordial Gin, but a genuine and pure article, equal to any imported.

W. R. takes the opportunity of thanking the public for their liberal support, support, and begs a continuance of the same.

DISTILLERY,

118 East 29th st., New-York, between 2d and 3d avenues.

LABORATORY AND CHEMICAL OFFICE,
18 Exchange Place, N. Y., March 4, 1856.

MR. REED: Sir—I have submitted to close examination two samples of London Cordial Gin, manufactured by you, and purporting to equal the English article. I find on comparison with samples of Hodges' and Burnett's previously examined by me, and which I know to have been imported direct, that the quality of yours is by no meansinferior to their celebrated compounds, while the perfect method you posess of rectifying, insures an article of a higher degree of purity and flavor, when it has the equal advantage of time to soften it, than much of the so-called imported London gin. As a medicinal agent and cordial, under proper advice, it may be depended upon, from the care with which you select the essential oils combined with it in the distillation. Yours, respectfully,

ISAIAH DECK, M. D.,

Consulting and Analytical Chemist.

Mr. REED'S Distillery, 118 East Twenty-ninth st., New-York. [my31 3m

REMOVAL.

McConville & Murphy, Importers of Wide Silks Shawls, Vestings, and Linen Goods, have REMOVED to No. 86 LIBERTY STREET, where all orders will be punctually attended to. tf

Business Directory.

RICH CARPETING.

1856. [SPRING IMPORTATION. 1856.

ARTHUR DONNELLY,

98 BOWERY, (West side,) BETWEEN GRAND AND HESTER STREETS.

IS now prepared to exhibit his New Spring Styles of

Foreign and Domestic Carpetings,

Comprising every grade and every description, from the Cheapest Fabric to the Richest.

Importing his goods direct and thus saving the commission and interest which most dealers pay, he is enabled to offer them at prices highly favorable to consumers, who will find at his store, among other Carpetings adopted to all varieties of taste, the following elegant descriptions:

Medallions,	at	14s to 18s per yard.
Velvet,	"	10s to 16s "
Tapestry,	"	6s to 12s "
Brussels,	"	7s to 12s "
Three-ply,	"	7s to 10s "
Ingrain,	"	8s to 7s "
Common Ingrain,	"	18d to 8s "

English and American Floor Oil Cloths,

of every imaginable width, pattern and style.

A complete and choice assortment of

STAIR AND HALL CARPETS, RUGS, MATS, MATTINGS,

and of everything else appertaining to the Carpet Trade.

ARTHUR DONNELLY, 98 Bowery, (West side,)
ap198m Between Grand and Hester sts., N. Y.

NEW STORE

AND

NEW GOODS.

THE subscriber having leased for a term of years the premises

374 Hudson street,

and made exthnsive additions thereto, and having laid in a large stock o

Carpeting and Oil Cloths,

mostly bought at Auction, for CASH, is now prepared to sell them at the following extremely low prices:

Tapestry Brussels, 8s. usually sold at 10s.
Three Ply Ingrain 8s. usually sold at 10s.
Superfine do 6s. usually sold at 8s.
Fine do 5s. usually sold at 6s.
Common do All WOOL 3s. 6d. per yard, a price absolutely unheard of.

Ingrain, Cotton Warp and Wool Filling 2s. 6d.
Oil Cloths 3s. per yard, usually sold at 5s.

Mats, Matting, Table and Piano Covers, Venetian and Hall Carpetting, Stair Rods, &c. &c.

Clergymen and Churches furnished at wholesale prices.

Goods in all cases warranted as represented.

J. R. Landon, 374 Hudson street, New-York,
3mjun a few doors from Hamersly.

SMITH, BROTHERS,

ONE PRICE

CLOTHING WAREHOUSES,

122 AND 140 FULTON ST., N. Y.

The PRICE is marked on all the goods in

PLAIN FIGURES.

We have now on hadd a splendid assortment of Spring and Summer Clothing, together with our new styles of Spring

RAGLANS,

PELISSIERS,

AND CANROBERTS—

OR, SUMMER OVER-COATS.

ap266m SMITH, BROTHERS, 122 AND 140 FULTON ST.

P. L. ROGERS,

FOUNDER OF THE ONE PRICE SYSTEM,

invites an inspection of the extensive

SPRING STOCK OF FASHIONABLE CLOTHING,

at his great central wholesale and retail warehouse,

CORNER OF FULTON AND NASSAU STREETS,

opposite the Herald office.

There any gentleman can procure an elegant outfit in twenty minutes Every garment is warranted of the newest cut and of good workmanship.

Parents can fit out a family of boys with equal dispatch from a stock that includes every style, size, color, material and quality.

The selling prices, which are guaranteed to be 25 per cent. under market average, are all affixed in plain figures to the articles, and NO DEVIATION can be made.

The Order Department is stocked with the finest CLOTHS, CASSIMERES, etc., and the Clothing made to measure cannot be excelled in the world, although the prices are far lower than at other establishments.

my24tf P. L. Rogers.

TAILORS, ATTENTION!

If you wish to possess the best and most exact system of Coat and Jacket Cutting, procure HOLDWAY'S DIAGRAM AND SCALE, whereby you are enabled to cut for 30 different sizes, varying from 20 breast measure (which, you know, is small,) to 54, which you also consider large, and whereby you will find a misfit next to impossible. See it and judge for yourself.

To be had of TILL & COOK, 299 Broadway; or of A. HOLDWAY, 29 Anne street, next door to the IRISH NEWS office. je14 tf

---

JAMES CAIN,

MERCHANT TAILOR,

AND

CLOTHIER,

NO. 129 FULTON STREET,

(HERALD BUILDING,) New-York.
my31y

THOMAS BRENNAN,

DRAPER AND TAILOR,

CANAL STREET, ONE DOOR FROM BOWERY, WEST SIDE.

NEW-YORK.

I am prepared to serve my customers with the newest styles, and at the most reasonable rates. y28je

---

GEO. McDONNELL,

BOOT AND SHOE MANUFACTURER,

32 PARK ROW, NEXT DOOR TO LOVEJOY'S HOTEL, NEW-YORK.

Boots, Shoes, and Gaiters of the best quality made to order.

3m.my10 Geo. McDonnell.

ROBERT IRWIN,

CHEAP BOOT AND SHOE STORE,

my10 156 Chatham street, opposite James' st., New-York. 3m

R. HOGAN,

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL

UMBRELLA AND PARASOL MANUFACTURER,

374 BOWERY, NEAR FOURTH STREET.

Repairing neatly executed. my17 3m*

M. GRADY,

27 FAYETTE STREET, LOWELL, MASS.

ju21 Agent for the IRISH NEWS and all the other choice literature of the day.

MEAGHER & CAMPBELL,

ATTORNEYS AND COUNSELLORS AT LAW,

NO. 82 BROADWAY.

NOTARY PUBLIC,

Commissioner for the U. S. Court of Claims.

THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER, having formed a partnership with MALCOLM CAMPBELL, for the general practice of the law, the firm will continue to devote their attention to such law business as may be intrusted to them, including conveyancing, practice in all the courts of the state of New-York and of the United States, and general collecting business in all parts of the world. Particular attention will be given to the prosecution of claims against the United States in the Court of Claims.

Mr. Meagher may be consulted daily, on law business only, at No. 82 Broadway, from three till five o'clock P. M.

B. S. TREANOR,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,

15 MASSACHUSETTS BLOCK, COURT SQUARE, BOSTON.

Particular attention paid to Conveyancing, and the examination of titles to Real Estate.

WILLIAM E. ROBINSON,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR,

HAVING entered into partnership with ISAAC DAYTON, Esq., (author of the work on Surrogates,) and WILLIAM A. COURSEN, Esq., gentlemen long known, and of high standing at the New-York Bar, has removed to their new office at 267 BROADWAY, third door below Chambers street.

All business either in the Criminal or Civil Courts, promptly and faithfully attended to. ap191y

---

JOHN O'ROURKE,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,

NO. 10 CENTRE STREET,

(Opposite the Superior Court Buildings,)

7jun NEW-YORK.

JAMES M. SHEEHAN,

Attorney and Counsellor at Law,

No. 13 Chambers Street, New-York.

2y1ju Collections promptly attended to, and Liens carefully filed, &c.

JOHN A. McSORLEY,

CUSTOM HOUSE AND SHIP BROKER, AND NOTARY PUBLIC,

7 BROAD STREET,

Clergymen, importing Vestments, Church Ornaments, &c., will be liberally treated with by calling on the subscriber.

REFERENCES:

Messrs. Thos. McClune & Co., C. Meletta, | Messrs. D. & J. Sadlier & Co., James Cook & Co. 6m

---

JAMES HARLIN,

WATCH, CLOCK MAKER, AND JEWELER.

236 HENRY STREET, BROOKLYN.

All watches and clocks bought or repaired at my establishment, warranted for twelve months.

JOHN FOLEY,

WATCHMAKER,

JEWELER AND FINISHER OF FINE WATCHES,

NO. 202 BOWERY.

Between Spring and Prince Streets, New-York.

Watches of a superior quality made to order, and warranted not to err more than four minutes a year. Cases jointed, works jeweled, and chronometer balances set in the best style. Jewelry of every kind repaired in a jul2m6 workmanlike manner. All orders punctually attended to.

J. McCARTEN,

WATCH AND CLOCK MAKER,

154 SEVENTH AVENUE.

Between 20th and 21st streets, New-York.

Watches, Clocks, and Jewelry carefully repaired and warranted. A good
7jun assortment of watches and clocks always on hand. 3m

JOHN FOLEY,

MANUFACTURER OF FINE GOLD PENS

BEST QUALITY ONLY.

GOLD AND SILVER PENCIL CASES.

my24tf No. 168 BROADWAY, NEW-YORK.

JOHN KENNEDY'S

STEAM MARBLE WORKS,

35TH STREET, NEAR BROADWAY.

Statuary and Marble Mantle-Pieces, Monuments, Grave Stones, Tombs, &c. All orders thankfully received and punctually attended to.

THOMAS GAFFNEY'S

SOAP AND CANDLE

MANUFACTORY,

325 EAST SENECA STREET, BUFFALO,

NEW-YORK. 6mJune7

WILLIAM M. SMITH,

The Public Favorite, and only American Opposition

BILL POSTER AND DISTRIBUTOR,

THE OLDEST ESTABLISHED IN THE BUSINESS.

Work done promptly and faithfully—cheaper, quicker, and better than any other poster in the city. Work done either in New-York, Brooklyn, Williamsburgh, or Jersey City. Boards lent for concerts, or any kind of work.

OFFICE, 28½ SPRUCE STREET, NEW-YORK,
ap26tf (Between William and Gold streets.)

THE METROPOLITAN

FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY,

No. 108 BROADWAY,

(Cor. Pine Street.)

CASH CAPITAL $300,000.

JAMES LORIMER GRAHAM, President.

EDWARD A. STANSBURY, Secretary. my31y

CABINET FURNITURE AND UPHOLSTERY.

Established in 1827.

THE largest and cheapest assortment in the State of New-York. Every thing, from a Broom to the richest article, may be found, including Carpets, Oil Cloths, Mattrasses, Beds, &c., &c., at 1 yr R. J. TODD'S, 88 Fulton street, Brooklyn.

WILLARD, FELT & CO.,

MANUFACTURERS OF ACCOUNT BOOKS,

AND IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN PAPER AND STATIONERY,

NO. 14 MAIDEN LANE,

3mos (near Broadway.)

THE VIRGINIA TOBACCO AGENCY,

(ESTABLISHED IN 1836.)

45] Water street, New-York.

CHARLES M. CONNOLLY,

Commission Merchant and Agent for the sale of Manufactured Tobacco.

Has always on hand, at the above agency, a full supply of

Manufactured Tobacco,

Of all brands and descriptions, direct from the Virginia Factories, for sale on liberal terms. jly5 y

---

MRS. J. McCARTHY,

FASHIONABLE MILLINERY STORE,

44 THIRD AVENUE,

Third door from 10th Street, NEW-YORK.

Cheap Straw Hats, Ribbons, Flowers, Ladies' Straw Goods.

Straw Bonnets cleaned and altered to the newest fashions.

LADIES' OWN MATERIALS MADE UP TO THE LATEST STYLES. tf

NICHOLAS WALSH.

SEXTON AND UNDERTAKER.

NO. 8 SIXTH AVENUE.

MATTHEW WALLACE,

25 CLARK STREET, CHICAGO, ILL.,

WHOLESALE DEALER IN NEWSPAPERS, BOOKS, &c.

"The Irish News," on hand, by the earliest moment, each week. tf

---

McLOUGHLIN & McSHANE,

(Successors to THOS. ANDREWS,

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALERS IN

CHOICE TEAS, COFFEES, WINES, BRANDIES, AND GROCERIES,

61 FULTON STREET, near Cliff street,

NEW-YORK. 3m

SHIP STORES SUPPLIED.

CALL ON

THOMAS LYNCH,

OF the "FULTON SHADES," Fulton Ferry, Brooklyn, for the best XX and XXX ales, brandies, and segars.

JOHN J. STAFF'S.

WINES, LIQUORS, SEGARS,

LONDON, DUBLIN, PHILADELPHIA,

PORTER and ALE,

SCOTCH, BURTON, and EAST INDIA ALES,

CHAMPAGNE CIDER, in quantities to suit purchasers,

at 333 Broadway,

tf corner of Anthony street, New-York.

J. MURPHY & SON,

IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN

BRANDIES, WINES, GIN, RUM, IRISH AND SCOTCH WHISKEY, SEGARS, ALE AND PORTER, CORDIALS, &c.

J. M. & SON would call the attention of City and Country Dealers to their EXTENSIVE STOCK OF LIQUORS AND SEGARS under CUSTOM HOUSE LOCK and in STORE.

We do not claim any superiority for our goods over those of any other House, but customers may rely upon being honorably and fairly dealt with, and all Liquors warranted as represented.

J. M. & SON are SOLE AGENTS for this City of Messrs. BUNCHARD & HARRISON'S superior Creaming and Sparkling DOMESTIC CHAMPAGNE, which possesses the same qualities as Imported Wine, and is more agreeable to the palate. It can be sold as low as $7 the basket.

A Superior Quality of IMPORTED ST. JULIAN CLARET, in cases, at $2 50.

Orders from Country Merchants solicited, and shipped with dispatch, at 150 Pearl, and 113 Water streets.

Office 188 Pearl street.

P. MONAGHAN,

IMPORTER of the various and best brands of HAVANA SEGARS, &c. &c. Country and city merchants supplied in bond or in store. Duties paid or unpaid. 121 PEARL STREET, New-York.

N. B.—Sole Importer of the J. M. Vichot, La Union, and La Primavera brands. ap261y

---

McLOUGHLIN & EVERARD,

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL GROCERS,

Keep constantly on hand a select assortment of

GROCERIES, WINES, BRANDIES, TEAS, COFFEES, &c., &c.,

AT THE OLD ESTABLISHED STAND,

ap268m 44 FULTON, between Pearl and Cliff streets, New York.

WISE'S IRISH MALT WHISKEY.

IMPORTED by J. & P. Hogan, Nos. 6 and 12 West street, and 257 Third Avenue, corner of 21st street, New-York, and corner of Vanbrunt and Sullivan streets, Brooklyn. J. & P. Hogan wish to inform their friends and the public that they have just received a large quantity of WISE'S CORK MALT WHISKEY, which will be sold at a reduced price, out of bond and at the above establishment. They are the only firm who import the same in New-York. ap261y

---

BURKE & MYLER,

IMPORTED WINES, LIQUORS AND SEGARS,

No. 42 SPRING STREET, NEW-YORK,

ap268m between Mulberry and Mott streets.

HOSEY & RILEY,

PACIFIC RESTAURANT,

600 BROADWAY, NEW-YORK.

Private entrance on the first floor, 134 Crosby street.

Hosey & Riley invite their friends to give them a call.

my24 3m

JAMES AINSLIE,

NO. 93 BEAVER STREET,

OFFERS for sale from U. S. Bonded Warehouses, of his own importation, Cognac Brandies, also Rochelle Brandies, in half, quarter, and eighth Pipes, pale and dark, of the well known brand of ARZAC Seignette.

Gin—Sole importer of the superior Magnolia Brand; also, Cologne and Schnapps Gin.

Wines—Burgundy, Pure Juice, and old Port, Sherry, &c. Jamaica and St Croix Rums; Stewart's Paisley Whiskey, &c. 3mos

---

P. HUGHES,

LEMON SYRUP AND CORDIAL REFINER, and Dealer in Foreign Liquors, and French Brandies of different brands, Hollands Gin, Irish and Scotch Whiskey, Scotch Ale and Porter, and other Liquors, returns his sincere thanks to the public for the patronage he has already received, and hopes they will continue the same. No. 88 Cherry street, New-York. tf

---

DRY-DOCK DISTILLERY.

No. 291 East-thirteenth st., near Avenue B.

JAMES RUSSELL,

Rectifier and Manufacturer of Cordials,

IMPORTER AND DEALER

IN Foreign and Domestic Wines, Liquors, Cordials, &c. J. R. having had long experience in the liquor trade, he has facilities of selecting wines and liquors of the most superior quality, which he offers to dealers and families at the lowest market prices, and flatters himself that a single trial will be quite sufficient to secure custom.

Goods delivered free of expense in any part of the city, and country orders promptly attended to. 3m jun14

The Irish News.

THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.
JOHN SAVAGE, LITERARY EDITOR.

THREE DOLLARS PER ANNUM. SINGLE COPIES 6 CENTS
Publication Office, 29 Ann St., cor. of Nassau.

VOL. I. NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, JULY 12, 1856. NO. 14.

Publications.

CONTENTS OF NO. XIV.

Editorial.

YOUNG IRELAND IN NICARAGUA.
DEATH OF AUGUSTINE THIERRY.
SMITH O'BRIEN'S LETTER ON GREECE.
SMITH O'BRIEN.

Answers to Correspondents.

Catherine Hayes—Ancient Philadelphia—The Park Fountain, &c.

Correspondence.

Dublin Letter—from "Kilmainham."
Waterford " " "The Metal Man."

Literature.

PERSONAL RECOLLECTIONS.—The Galway Election—More of it.
A HEAP OF HISTORY.—Alison's "Europe"—Wheeler's "Herodotus"—Ferris's "Great West"—Smucker's "Catharine of Russia"—Herbert's "Henry VIII. and his Six Wives"—Irving's "Washington."—Literary Items.

Poetry.

Another Song from Blarney Lake—by "Shine Bradstone."
Leaving!—by "Nial."

Miscellaneous.

European News—Buchanan and the Press—History of the Potato—America 70 years ago—Hessians in America—Irish News—Congressional—American News—all the news of the week.

THE IRISH NEWS,

EDITED BY THE PROPRIETOR,

THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER,

DEDICATED TO THE SERVICE OF THE

IRISH PEOPLE,

AT HOME AND ABROAD,

Will be published every Saturday, on and after the 12th of April, at 29 Ann street, corner of Nassau, New-York.

TERMS.

For subscribers, $3 per annum: 6 cents a copy.
For retailers and carriers, $4 per hundred.
For Clubs, 4 copies to one address, per annum, $10.
" 7 " " " " $17.
" 10 " " " " $20.

For advertising.—Each square of eight lines,

Transient	$1
Monthly	$2
Quarterly	$5
Yearly	$16

N. B. Four lines, or under, constitute half a square.

Agents or Postmasters who interest themselves in procuring and remitting subscriptions, may retain 50 cents out of each annual subscription of $3.

☞ Subscribers, Agents, and Advertisers will please send in their orders early, and observe that our terms are invariably, payments in advance.

Communications of a PRIVATE nature should always be marked so. Those connected with the editorial department are to be addressed to Thomas Francis Meagher, and those on business to Richard J. Lalor, Irish News Office, 29 Ann street, corner of Nassau.

☞ Subscribers, residing in New-York, Brooklyn, and Williamsburgh, who pay in advance, will have their papers neatly enveloped, addressed, and delivered on each Wednesday through Boyd's Express or some similar medium.

Wholesale Dealers.

DEXTER & BROTHERS, 14 Ann Street, New-York.
ROSS & TOUSEY, 108 Nassau Street, New-York.
SAMUEL YATES, 22 Beekman Street, New-York.
MIKE MADDEN, 22 Ann Street, New-York.
HAMILTON & JOHNSON, 30 Ann Street, New-York.
DE WITT & DAVENPORT, 160 & 162 Nassau Street, New-York.
HENRY TAYLOR, Baltimore, Md.
FEDERHEN & CO., 13 Court Street, Boston.
WM. HICKEY, 128 Federal Street, Boston.
REDDING & CO., 8 Court Street, Boston.
THOS. McLOUGHLIN, 42 South 4th Street, Philadelphia.
T. R. CALLENDER, 88 South-Third Street, Philadelphia.
DROVIN & CO., Philadelphia.
A. WINCH, 116 Chestnut street.
J. M. CRAWFORD, 30 and 32 Chestnut Street, St. Louis, Mo.
MATTHEW WALLACE, 25 Clark Street, Chicago, Ill.
McNALLY & CO., 75 Dearborn Street.
J. W. SULLIVAN, Kearney Street, San Francisco, Cal.
ROY'S, Detroit, Mich.
J. B. MAHONY, Cincinnati, Ohio.
J. P. WALSH, Cincinnati, Ohio.
—— COURTNEY, Charleston, South Carolina.
BRICE, 100 Exchange Place, New Orleans.
JOHN PLASTO, 144 Upper Abbey street, Dublin.
STILL & CO., 120 Montgomery street, San Francisco.
WM. BOYLE, News Carrier, San Francisco.
J. C. Morgan, next post office, New Orleans.

Retail Dealers.

NAGLE, Bangor, Me.
O'CONNELL, Cincinnati, O.
HASTINGS, Albany, N. Y.
McGOWANS, Portland, Me.
ADAMSON, Washington, D. C.
DOWNS, New-Haven, Conn.
MORRISEY, " "
DONOHUE, Newark, N. J.
JOHN H. TYSON, 89 Washington street, Hoboken, N. J.
JOHN C. CLARKE, 38 Newark avenue, Jersey City.
B. E. DOWLING, Jefferson st., next the Post Office, Newport, Ky.
M. GRADY. 27 Fayette st., Lowell, Mass.

Printed by Watters Brothers, 47 Ann street.
POWER PRESS OF J. B. WILLIAMS.

P. O'SHEA,

739 BROADWAY, NEW-YORK,

Catholic Bookseller and Publisher, Importer of Vestments, Altar Furniture, and Religious Articles generally, RESPECTFULLY calls the attention of the Catholic Clergy, Religious Orders, Superiors of Schools and Libraries, and his patrons, generally, to his large and varied assortment of Standard and Devotional Books and Religious articles of every description, which he offers for sale on the most reasonable terms, wholesale and retail.

Particular attention is called to his recently published works, viz.,

Bickerton; or, The Immigrant's Daughter. (An anti-Know-Nothing Tale,) 12mo., cloth, ... $0 50

Life of the Princess Borghese; (Daughter of the Earl of Shrewsbury.) Translated by Rev. A. F. Hewit, (of the Redemptorists.) 1 vol., 18mo, cloth, ... 0 37½

Life of St. Francis of Assisium. By Rev. Titus Jocelin. 1 vol., 18mo, cl., ... 0 37½

Life of the Egyptian Aloyzius. Translated by Rev. A. F. Hewit. 2 vols., 18mo, cloth, each, ... 0 37½

Edma and Marguerite. A Tale; by the Author of the Orphan of Moscow. 2 vols., 18mo, cloth, ... 0 37½

Religious Articles.

Rosaries, per dozen, from 20 cents, to 4 00
" each, on silver chains, from 75 cents, to 12 00
Crucifixes, (brass,) per dozen, from 8 cents, to 1½ 00
" (silver,) each, from 25 cents, to 25 00
Statuettes, Holy Water Founts, &c., &c., in great varieties. Country Booksellers and travelling dealers, would do well when they come to New-York, to examine this stock before purchasing elsewhere.

P. O'SHEA, 739 Broadway, New-York.
8mos

Wanted.—Good hands to embroider on linen. Apply at GENIN'S Bazaar (under St. Nicholas Hotel,) 513 Broadway. my17 3m

Publications.

SCARCE BOOKS RELATING TO IRELAND.

WARE'S ANTIQUITIES OF IRELAND. Edited by Harris. 2 vols., plates, fine copy. $35.
LANIGAN'S ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY OF IRELAND. 4 vols., 8vo. $18.
STUART'S HISTORY OF ARMAGH. 8vo. $3.
MONASTICUM HIBERNICUM. By Stevens. 8vo, calf, plates. $3.
J. K. L.'s LETTERS (Rt. Rev. Dr. Doyle). 8vo. $3 50.
SMITH'S HISTORY OF CORK. 2 vols., 8vo. $6.
WALKER'S IRISH BARDS AND DRESSES. 2 vols., 8vo. $3 50.
CONEY'S IRISH DICTIONARY. 8vo. $3.
McGREGOR'S HISTORY OF LIMERICK. 2 vols. $6.
MISS BROOKES' RELIQUES OF IRISH POETRY. 8vo. $3.
IRISH QUARTERLY REVIEW. 5 vols., 8vo, containing Gilbert's Streets of Dublin—Life of John Banim—Celtic Records of Ireland—Memoirs of Irish Celebrities—Lady Blessington—Maturin—Dr. Maginn—Chief Justice Bushe—Rev. S. Madden—Tom Moore—Barry, the painter—Macklin, &c., &c. $16.
IRISH PENNY JOURNAL. 1 vol., quarto. $3 50.
DUBLIN PENNY JOURNAL. 4 vols., very scarce. $16.
ANCIENT IRISH HISTORIES. By Spencer Campion Hanmer and Marlborough. 2 vols., 8vo. $7 50.
PACATA HIBERNIA. $6.
IRISH PENNY MAGAZINE. Edited by Lover. $3 50.
WYSE'S HISTORY OF THE CATHOLIC ASSOCIATION. 2 vols. $6.
ANNALS OF THE FOUR MASTERS. Translated by Connellan. 4to, cloth, map. $6 50.
HARDY'S LIFE OF CHARLEMONT. 2 vols. $3.
KEATING'S HISTORY OF IRELAND. 8vo. $4.
TAAFFE'S HISTORY OF IRELAND. 4 vols. $8.
THE CITIZEN, a Dublin magazine. 4 vols., with a collection of ancient Irish music. $12.
O'BRIEN'S ROUND TOWERS. 8vo, half calf. $10.
MUSGRAVE'S IRISH REBELLIONS. 2 vols., 8vo, half calf. $4.
And a large collection of miscellaneous Irish books.
For sale by P. M. Haverty, Bookseller,
110 Fulton street, New-York.

VOLUNTEERS ASSEMBLED IN COLLEGE GREEN—A copy of this rare engraving (described in No. 10 Irish News) for sale. Price $5. jy12 tf

KEATING'S IRELAND.

A NEW TRANSLATION OF THE

FORAS FEASA AR ERINN;

OR, GENERAL HISTORY OF IRELAND.

From a Manuscript Copy of the Original Irish of the Rev. and Learned GEOFFREY KEATING.

With Notes, Historical, Topographical, and Explanatory,
By JOHN O'MAHONY, Esq.

The work is now in course of preparation, and will be speedily published, in one large octavo volume of about 600 pages, with plates. Price to Subscribers, $2,00.

The book will be got up in superior style, and furnished to the address of Subscribers giving their names to a duly-authorized canvasser, or to
A list of subscribers will be printed in the work.

P. M. HAVERTY, Publisher,
tf 110 Fulton street, N. Y.

Study the Life of Mary!

THE OLD ESTABLISHED CATHOLIC HOUSE

OF

EDWARD DUNIGAN & BROTHER,

(JAMES B. KIRKER,)

151 Fulton street, New-York,

Are now publishing, in monthly parts, at twenty-five cents each, and with the express approbation of the

MOST REV. JOHN HUGHES, D.D.,

ARCHBISHOP OF NEW-YORK,

The Life of the Blessed Virgin Mary,

By the

RIGHT REV. ROMUALD GENTILUCCI,

Chamberlain of Honor to His Holiness,

Dedicated to and honored with the suffrages of His Holiness

POPE PIUS IX.,

ILLUSTRATED with fine steel engravings, and vignettes, borders, and initials, designed expressly for this work. This Life, published at Rome in 1848, by a Prelate high in the esteem of the Holy Father, is approved by the Master of the Sacred Palace, and has already been translated into other languages. Amid the many lives that have appeared, Gentilucci's will ever be remarkable for its unction and beauty of style, no less than for the deep knowledge which it displays of the writings of the Holy Fathers, and all the monuments of Ecclesiastical History that can in any way throw light on the Life of the Immaculate Mother of our Lord, as handed down in the loving traditions of the faithful from the age in which she lived.

It is a book for the studious as well as for the fervent Christian; a book for every one who seeks to rouse in his heart feelings of devotion for Her, whom the unerring Judge selected for the greatest honor which the human mind can conceive.

Conditions of the Work.

Gentilucci's Life of the Blessed Virgin Mary will be published in semi-monthly parts of 48 pages each, with a steel engraving in every number, and several fine woodcuts. Printed on fine paper, from new type, it will, when complete, form a most unique and beautiful volume of six to seven hundred and fifty pages.

OBSERVATIONS OF THE PRESS.

No other work of our day, on the same subject, can be compared to it. It is unrivalled for beauty of style and depth of erudition. It is the offering of a learned and devoted son of the blessed Virgin, who enjoys the confidence and friendship of our most Holy Father, to whom the work is dedicated. We are not more edified at the piety of the author, than astonished at the wonderful erudition displayed in the book. The translator has performed his task admirably.—Pittsburg Catholic.

We cannot too highly recommend it to the consideration of our readers, whether we regard the intrinsic value of the work itself, or the beauty and exquisite ensemble of its getting up.—Truthteller.

Profusely illustrated with engravings and vignettes, this work is brought out in such an elegant style, as to make it, exclusive of its literary merit, a fitting library companion to the Bible of the same enterprising publishers.—Detroit Vindicator.

This work is one of devotion and merit. We do not know who translated it, but it seems better than average translations.—Freeman's Journal.

This work, translated from the Italian, and apparently well translated, is by an eminent author, is dedicated by permission to his Holiness Pius IX., and is spoken of in very high terms by competent judges. As far as we have seen it, we like it very much, and think it must prove a great favorite with the children of Mary and all devout Catholics.—Brownson's Review.

Inducement.

Each subscriber to this splendid work will receive with the last number a magnificent steel engraving, suitable for framing, of the

MOST. REV. JOHN HUGHES, D.D.,

ARCHBISHOP OF NEW-YORK.

Canvassers will find it to their advantage to address the publishers.
8t12jly EDWARD DUNIGAN & BROTHER.

THE LONDON JOURNAL

Is now printed in New-York, and published weekly at 60 NASSAU STREET, by J. SMITH. Price two cents each. Subscription terms, one dollar per annum. N. B. All the back numbers, from the commencement of the new volume, can be obtained by applying as above.
Agents wanted in every town in the Union and the Canadas. 2tjly5 1t12jly

Publications.

FOUR NEW VOLUMES

OF

SADLIER'S POPULAR LIBRARY.

 These and other books for popular reading, libraries, &c., issued by the publishers, are sent free by post, on receipt of the amount; and if ordered in any considerable number for libraries or prizes, a very large reduction is made. It is hoped that the low terms will induce a very general use of these books.

Just Ready—Volume 10th,

HISTORY OF THE WAR IN LA VENDEE, and THE LITTLE CHOUANNERIE. By G. J. HILL, M.A. With two maps and seven engravings. 12mo, cloth, extra, 75 cents; cloth, extra gilt edges, $1 12.

Volume 11th,

TALES AND LEGENDS FROM HISTORY.

CONTENTS—1. Gonsalvo of Amaranta—2. The victory of Muret—3. The Dominicans Ghent—4. The Martyrs of Stone—5. The Abbey of Premontre—6. Legends of St. Winifride—7. The feast of the Immaculate Conception—8. The Consecration of Westminster Abbey—9. The Monk's last Words—10. The Martyr Maidens of Ostend—11. The loss of the Conception—12. Foundation of the Abbey of Anchin—13. Our Lady of Mercy—14. John de la Cambe—15. The Carpenter of Roosendael—16. The Widow of Artois—17. The village of Blankenberg—18. St. Edward's Death—19. The windows of San Petronio—20. The Vessels of St. Peter.
12 mo. cloth, extra, 63 cents; cloth, gilt, 88 cents.

Volume 12th,

THE MISSIONS IN JAPAN AND PARAGUAY. By CECELIA CADDELL, author of "Tales of the Festivals," "Miner's Daughter," "Lost Genoveffa," &c. &c. 12mo, cloth, extra, 63 cents; cloth, extra, gilt edges, 88 cts.

Volume 13th,

CALLISTA, A Tale of the Third Century. By. Very Reverend JOHN HENRY NEWMAN, D.D., Rector of the Catholic University, Dublin. 12mo. cloth, extra 75 cents; cloth, extra gilt, $1 12.

The following extract is from a very long notice of the work in the Dublin Tablet:

"The story is partly interwoven with historical facts, but its author professes, at the outset, that as a whole it is a simple fiction from beginning to end. However that may be, as an instrument of conveying a real and genuine historical knowledge of the days of which it treats, in their aspect toward Christianity, it will probably remain without a rival in the literary world."

Just Ready, the eighth thousand

1. FABIOLA, or the Church of the Catacombs. By Cardinal WISEMAN. Cloth, extra, 75 cents; gilt, $1 12.

"In "Fabiola" it is not difficult to recognize the learning and brilliancy of an eminent person, whose perfect knowledge of the Rome of to-day imparts to his description of the primeval remains of Christian antiquity a truthfulness and value, independent of the rich stores of erudition which he has applied to their examination."—Catholic University Gazette.

2. HEROINES OF CHARITY. With Preface by AUBREY DE VERE, Esq. Cloth, extra, 50 cents; gilt, 75 cents.

CONTENTS:—1. The Sisters of Vincennes—2. Jeanne Biscot—3. Anne de Melun—4. Louise de Marillac, Duchess de Aiguillon, Madame de Pollalion, Mademoiselle de Lamoignon—5. Madame de Moramion—6. Mrs. Eliza A. Seton—7. The Little Sisters of the Poor.

3. THE LIFE OF ST. FRANCES OF ROME. By Lady GEORGIANNA FULLERTON. With three others; and an Essay on the Miraculous Lives of the Saints. By J. M. CAPES, Esq. Cloth, extra, 50 cents; cloth, gilt, 75 cents.

4. CATHOLIC LEGENDS AND STORIES. A varied and beautiful volume, containing 31 of the choicest specimens, for the most part new to English readers. Cloth extra, 50 cents; gilt, 75 cents.

5. THE WITCH OF MELTON HILL. By the author of "Mt. St. Lawrence," &c. Cloth, extra, 50 cents; cloth gilt 75 cents.

"We have seldom read a better story than this. If all the volumes of the 'Popular Library' are as good as this, the series will have an immense success. As for the moral and religious tendency of the book, it is excellent. We can conscientiously recommend it.—Catholic Leader.

6. PICTURES OF CHRISTIAN HEROISM. With Preface by the Rev. H. E. MANNING, D.D. Cloth, extra, 50 cents; gilt, 75 cents.

CONTENTS:—1. Father Azevedo—2. Sister Honoria Magaen—3. Blessed Andrew Bobola—4. Blessed John de Britto—5. The Nuns of Minsk—6. A Confessor of the Faith, 1793—7. The Martyrs of the Carmeg—8. Gabriel de Nailac—9. Margaret Clitherow—10. Geronimo at Algiers—11. Martyrdoms in China—12. Father Thomas of Jesus.
Cloth, extra, 12mo, 50 cents; gilt edges, 75 cents.

Just published, the 5th thousand of

7. THE BLAKES AND FLANAGANS. A Tale illustrative of Irish Life in the United States. By Mrs. J. SADLIER. 12mo. 400 pages, cloth extra, 75 cents; cloth, extra, gilt edge, $1 12.

"The style is excellent, thoroughly natural and unaffected, the narrative flowing, the conversation full of vivacity, and the characters well sustained. ....We cannot but wish it the widest circulation that a book can have."—St. Louis Leader.

8. THE LIFE AND TIMES OF ST. BERNARD. Translated from the French of M. L'Abbe RATISBONNE. With a Prefaee by Henry Edmanning, D.D., and a Portrait. 1 vol. 12mo. 500 pages.
Cloth, extra, $1; gilt edges $1 50.

9. THE LIFE AND VICTORIES OF THE EARLY MARTYRS. By Mrs. HOPE. Written for the Oratorian's Schools of our Lady's Compassion. 1 vol. 12 mo. 400 pages.
Cloth, extra, 75 cents. Gilt edges, $1 12.

D. & J. SADLIER & CO., 164 William street, New-York; 128 Federal street, Boston; and cor. Notre Dame and St. Francis Xavier streets, Montreal, C. E.

A VALUABLE BOOK OF REFERENCE.

Will be published in July,
In one volume, 8vo. cloth, price $1 50,

HISTORY OF IMMIGRATION

TO THE

UNITED STATES,

EXHIBITING THE

umber, Sex, Age, Occupation, and country of birth,

OF

PASSENGERS ARRIVING IN THE UNITED STATES,

By sea from Foreign Countries, from September 30th, 1819, to December 31st, 1855.

COMPILED ENTIRELY FROM OFFICIAL DATA.

With

An Introductory View of the Progress and Extent of Immigration to the United States prior to 1819.
And an appendix containing the

NATURALIZATION AND PASSENGER LAWS

Of the United States, and extracts from the Laws of the Several States relative to Immigrants, the Importation of Paupers, Convicts, Lunatics, etc.

BY WILLIAM J. BROMWELL,

Of the Department of State.

tf28je J. S. Redfield, 34 Beekman street.

JUST PUBLISHED.

Brownson's Quarterly Review, for July, 1856.

I. The Church and the Republic.
II. The Effects of the Reformation.
III. The Unholy Alliance.
IV. Reason and Faith.
V. Pere Gratry's Logic.
VI. Literary Notices and Criticisms.

Edward Dunigan & Brother.
(James B. Kirker,) 151 Fulton street, New-York.

Shipping.

THE NEW-YORK AND LIVERPOOL

United States Mail Line.

The ships composing this line are the following:

The ATLANTIC .....Capt. Eldridge.
The ADRIATIC .....Capt. West.
The PACIFIC .....Capt. Eldridge.
The BALTIC .....Capt. Comstock.

These ships have been built by contract, expressly for the government service. Every care has been taken in their construction, as also in their engines to insure strength and speed; and their accommodations for passengers are unequalled for elegance and comfort.

Price of passage from New-York to Liverpool in first cabin, $130; in second do., $75. Exclusive use of extra size state rooms, $325. From Liverpool to New-York, 30 and 20 guineas.

An experienced surgeon attached to each ship.

No berth can be secured until paid for.

PROPOSED DATES OF SAILING.

FROM NEW-YORK.	FROM LIVERPOOL.
Saturday, April 26, 1856.	Wednesday, April 16, 1856.
.. May 10, ..	.. April 30, ..
.. May 24, ..	.. May 14, ..
	.. May 28, ..
	.. June 11, ..

For freight or passage, apply to

Edw'd. K. Collins & Co., No. 56 Wall street, New-York.
Brown, Shipley & Co., Liverpool.
Stephen Kennard & Co., 27 Austin Friars, London.
B. G. Wainwright & Co., Paris.

The owners of these ships will not be accountable for gold, silver, bullion, specie, jewelry, precious stones or metals, unless bills of lading are signed therefor, and the value thereof therein expressed.

Shippers will please take notice, that the ships of this line cannot carry any goods contraband of war. ap26 6m.

C. H. MARSHALL & CO.,

Old Black Ball Line of Liverpool Packets.

CERTIFICATES

Furnished for Passage to and from Liverpool, on the 1st and 16th of every Month, by the following splendid ships:

James Foster, Jr.	Capt. J. W. Porter.
Neptune	" E. W. Peabody.
Harvest Queen	" E. Young.
Isaac Webb	" J. M. Bayer.
Great Western	" W. G. Furrier.
Manhattan	" T. Dixon.
Isaac Wright	" E. Abeel.
Columbia	" C. Hutchinson.
Fidelia	" W. A. Macgill.
Yorkshire	" C. A. Marshall.

REMITTANCES.

Drafts, for £1 and upwards, on the Royal Bank of Ireland, and on Messrs. Baring Brothers & Co., Bankers, Liverpool and London, payable on sight.

C. H. MARSHALL & CO.,
88 Burling Slip, N. Y.

Agents in Liverpool, Baring Brothers & Co.,
OLD LINE PACKETS,
Pier 23 East River, foot of Beekman street. 6m

WILLIAMS & GUION'S

Old Black Star Line of Packets. 1856.

Passage from any part of Great Britain and Ireland, secured at the lowest possible rates by this old-established line, sailing from Liverpool to New-York every five days, comprising the following magnificent Ships:

Ships.	Captains.	Tonage.
AUSTRALIA,	Smith,	2,000
BRIDGEWATER (new),	Barstow,	2,000
CULTIVATOR (new),	Austin,	2,000
CYNOSURE,	Bray,	2,000
CORNELIA LAWRENCE (new),	Knapp,	2,000
DE WITT CLINTON,	Funk,	1,800
ENTERPRISE,	Davis,	1,200
GUY MANNERING,	Dollard,	2,000
JACOB A. WESTERVELT,	Hoodless,	2,000
IRENE,	Williams,	1,400
JOHN BRIGHT (new),	Cutting,	2,000
MARMION,	Hanley,	1,200
NORTH AMERICAN,	Clark,	1,800
OSWEGO,	Stevens,	1,400
ROBERT KELLY,	Barstow,	1,500
SILAS WRIGHT (new),	Freeman,	2,000
SOUTHAMPTON,	Furlong,	1,600
THORNTON (new),	Collins,	2,000
TICONDEROGA,	Boyle,	1,400
UNIVERSE,	Cave,	2,000
VANGUARD,	Norton,	1,800

The ships of this line are the largest and swiftest in the trade, their accommodations for passengers are unequalled, and the frequency and punctuality of their departure offer advantages to the emigrant not to be had by any Line of Packets. Such passengers as decline coming out, the money paid for them will be promptly refunded without discount.

Provisions of best quality are provided for passengers; rations, consisting of Bread, Flour, Rice, Oatmeal, Tea, Sugar, Molasses, Salt, &c.

The increased patronage received by the proprietors of the Old Black Star Line has induced them to add to the Line several New Ships, which have taken their place this season; no expense has been spared to render the facilities for Emigration equal to the times, and add to the renown of these celebrated Packets.

The regular Sailing days are 1st, 8th, 11th, 18th, 21st, and 26th of each month; this will give passengers opportunity for embarking more frequent than by any other established Line, to which the attention of the public is respectfully called.

No Certificate of Passage will be issued for children under 12 years of age unless accompanied by an adult, who must be paid for on same certificate; for persons over 60 years of age, or with any impediment, without a Permit from Commissioners of Emigration.

REMITTANCES.

Persons wanting to send money to their friends can obtain drafts for any amount, which will be cashed at sight at the following Banks:

Ireland—National Bank of Ireland; Royal Bank of Ireland; Ulster Banking Co., and their Branches.

Scotland—National Bank of Scotland and Branches.

England—Messrs. GLYNN, MILLS & Co, Bankers, London; GUION & Co., Merchants, Liverpool.

For further particulars apply, if by letter post-paid, to

WILLIAMS & GUION,
40 Fulton street, New-York.

GUION & CO.,
115 Waterloo Road, Liverpool.

AGENTS—JOHN WHITNEY, Providence, R. I.
EDWARD RYAN, 2 Albany street, Boston.
THOMAS RATTIGAN, Pittsburgh, Pa.

THOS. C. ROCHE'S

PASSAGE AND DRAFT OFFICE 83 SOUTH ST.

Sole Passenger Agent for GRINNELL'S celebrated

Swallow Tail Line of Liverpool and London Packets.

THOSE sending for their friends in the Old Country can make arrangements at this office to bring them from any part of IRELAND or ENGLAND at the lowest rates.

The ships sail from Liverpool four times a month, and from London twice a month.

Drafts for sale for £1 and upwards, payable in any part of England, Ireland, Scotland or Wales.

Passage Tickets and Drafts sold in this office are GUARANTEED by CORNELIUS GRINNELL, Esq., 87 South street, New-York.

☞ No connection whatever with any other Person or House useing the name of Roche.

For further information apply to THOMAS C. ROCHE, ap268m Old Stand, 83 South street, New-York.

Shipping.

LIVERPOOL AND PHILADELPHIA

STEAMSHIP LINE.

CITY OF BALTIMORE....CITY OF WASHINGTON.
CITY OF MANCHESTER...KANGAROO.

THE magnificent new steamship City of Baltimore, Capt. Leitch, 2,367 tons, 500 horse power, will sail from Philadelphia Thursday, 7th August, and from Liverpool Wednesday, 27 Aug. Steerage passage from Philadelphia, $30; from Liverpool, $40, including cooked provisions. Persons wishing to send for friends from Great Britain and Ireland, by the above line of splendid Steamships, or by first-class sailing Packets, can purchase passage tickets on application to

Sabel & Cortis, 177 Broadway, New-York.

Or to their Agents in

Albany—A. T. Holmes.....Dubuque—Jas. C. Rattray.
Baltimore—Foard & Rodgers.....Hartford, Ct.—A. Rose.
Boston—F. S. Saxton.....New-Orleans—Jenkins, Williams & Co.
Buffalo—Robt. Hager.....Pittsburg—John Thompson.
Chicago—Lull & Mayer.....Pottsville—R. Edwards.
Cincinnati——————.....Toronto, C. W.—D. K. Feehan. tf24my

BLACK BALL LINE

OF LIVERPOOL PACKETS,

Sailing to and from Liverpool on the 1st and 16th of each Month.

THE following ten magnificent clipper Packet Ships comprise the "Black Ball Line, viz:—

James Foster Jr.,	Manhattan,
Great Western,	Neptune,
Harvest Queen,	Columbia,
Isaac Webb,	Yorkshire,
Isaac Wright,	Fidelia.

DRAFTS AT SIGHT for any amount payable in every town throughout England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales.

Persons returning to the old country, or those sending for their friends, will find it to their interest to select the "Black Ball Line," as the accommodations in the above clippers for Cabin, Second Cabin, and Steerage Passengers, are well known by the travelling public to be far superior to any other.

☞ Apply or address by letter, post-paid; no letter will be answered unless a postage stamp is enclosed to pre-pay postage.

Jacob Wilson, 108 South street, New York,

Who is the only authorized Passenger Agent for the "Black Ball Line," which lay at Pier 23 East River, opposite this office. my3 3m

Emigration.

REMITTANCES TO IRELAND.

IRISH EMIGRANT SOCIETY,
Office, 51 Chambers street.

NOTICE.—The recent failures, by which a large amount of Bills remitted from this country to friends in Ireland, has been returned unpaid, afford to this Society the opportunity, and at the same time impose upon it the duty of informing the public, that such losses would have been prevented if the parties purchasing Bills had availed themselves of the advantages offered by the Society.

For the purpose of entire protection a fund is constantly kept on deposit in the Bank of Ireland, against which this Society issues its drafts, payable at sight (from sums of £1 sterling and upwards), on the Bank and all its branches, and has thereby for the last Ten Years afforded a mode of remittance perfectly safe and unquestionable.

New-York, December 29, 1851.

ANDREW CARRIGAN, President.

JOHN MANNING,
ROBERT J. DILLON, } Vice-Presidents.
HUGH KELLY,

EDWARD C. DONNELLY, Corresponding Secretary.
PETER CREAR, Recording Secretary.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

Felix Ingoldsby,	John Nicholson,	William Redmond.
William Watson,	Hugh Kelly,	James Olwell,
John Manning,	Cornel Sheehan,	Daniel Devlin,
Terence Donnelly,	Romaine Dillon,	John McMenomy.

EMIGRANT INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS BANK.

No. 51 CHAMBERS STREET.

THIS Institution has been established for the purpose of affording to Emigrants and others, a safe place of deposit for their funds, to protect them from robbery and fraud.

It is conducted with the strictest economy—neither the Officers and Trustees, receive any compensation for their services. The entire profits belong to the Depositors, and will be divided amongst them, having due regard to the safety of the funds.

The last dividend was six per cent. upon all sums of $500 and under, and and will be continued or increased as the profits may justify.

Bank open to receive Deposits, daily, from 10 A. M., to 2, and from 5 to 7 P. M.

TRUSTEES.

William Watson,	John P. Nesmith,
John Nicholson,	John Milhau,
Andrew Carrigan,	Edward W. Tiers,
James Kelly,	Charles M. Connelly,
James Kerrigan,	Cornelius H. Sheehan,
Hugh Kelly,	Edward Bayer,
Charles O'Connor,	Daniel Devlin.
James Olwell,

JOSEPH STUART, President.
FELIX INGOLDSBY, 1st Vice-President.
JOHN MCMENOMY, 2d Vice-President.
TERENCE DONNELLY, Treasurer.
LOUIS B. BINSSE, Secretary.
PETER CREAR, Accountant.
JOHN MANNING, Comptroller. tf

REMITTANCES TO

ENGLAND, IRELAND AND SCOTLAND.

STERLING BILLS for sale on Messrs. Prescott, Grote & Co., Bankers, London, from £1 upwards, payable on demand, and negotiable in any part of the United Kingdom; also Bank of England Notes and Drafts of any of the English Banks or Bankers, bought and sold.

ap19ly Prime & Co., 54 Wall street.

DRAFTS FOR £1 AND UPWARDS,

ON THE ROYAL BANK OF IRELAND,

(Expressly authorised by the Bank,)

FOR SALE AT THE BANKING HOUSE OF JOHN B. MURRAY,

No. 44 Wall street, (over Bank of North America,) New-York.

PERSONS wishing to send money to their friends in Europe, can remit it as above, by letter, post-paid, and upon receipt, a draft on the Royal Bank, will be forwarded without charge, to the person designated. 3m*

☞ To prevent loss, every Draft is registered here, and a copy of the register forwarded to the Bank by every mail steamer.

Hotels.

STEVENS HOUSE.

(LATE DELMONICO'S HOTEL.

21, 23, 25, & 27 Broadway, New-York.

THE undersigned avails himself of this opportunity of informing his friends and the public that he has leased the above named house for a term of years, and has made extensive alterations and repairs, and omitted nothing that will tend to the accomodations or comfort of guests. The house having been newly furnished throughout in the most thorough and modern style, with a view to convenience and comfort, and as it will be conducted on the European plan, and with an experienced caterer, and thorough cooks, he hopes to give satisfaction to those who favor him with their patronage which has never failed while in other Hotels in this city.

Catholic families and clergymen visiting New-York will find in the arrangements of this spacious establishment, elegance, convenience, and comfort, at moderate charges. JOHN O'GRADY, JR.,

3m5jly Formerly of Judson's Hotel and the Brandreth House.

Business Notices.

S. CAHILL'S

BOOT AND SHOE STORE,

NO. 377 BROADWAY,

(One door below White street), New York.

S. CAHILL respectfully informs his friends, customers, and the public generally, that, having made an extensive addition to his Store, for the better accommodation of his customers, he has now the largest and most extensive BOOT AND SHOE STORE in the world, and is prepared to exhibit the most extensive assortment of

LADIES, MISSES, AND CHILDREN'S, GENTLEMEN'S, BOYS, AND YOUTH'S

BOOTS AND SHOES

EVER BEFORE OFFERED TO THE CITIZENS OF NEW YORK.

His facilities for manufacturing on an extensive scale, together with his superb assortment of FRENCH BOOTS and SHOES, received direct from Paris by every steamer, enable him to sell a much better article at much lower prices than can be purchased at any other house in the city. BOOTS AND SHOES OF ALL DESCRIPTIONS MADE TO MEASURE AT THE SHORTEST NOTICE. je28 3mos

Monday, June 16th, and during the week—

HANNA & BEEBE,

COMMISSION PAPER WAREHOUSE,

No. 27 BEEKMAN STREET, NEW-YORK,

KEEP CONSTANTLY ON HAND ALL DESCRIPTIONS OF PAPER SUCH AS Book, Printing, Flat-cap, Folio, Glazed, colored, (sized and unsized,) Druggists' Hardware, Envelope, Manilla, Palm-leaf, Straw and Shipping, Papers
Straw Boards, Box Boards, &c., &c., &c.
ALSO—Cop Waste for Steamboats and Railroad Engines.
They offer to Manufacturers at the lowest market prices,
Rags, Bleaching Powders, Soda Ash, Alum, Rosin, China Clay, Oil Vitriol, O
Feltings, Twines, Wire Cloth, Leather belting.
☞ LIBERAL ADVANCES MADE UPON all CONSIGNMENTS.
Agents for Hanna, Carpenter & Abbott's Chandlerswick.
ap193m*

LATEST FASHIONS.

THE New Hat Company would here lay before their readers a few of the advantages to be derived from their system of doing business, which is ONE QUALITY, ONE PRICE, AND NO ABATEMENT. In the first place, any gentleman, whether he be a judge of the article or not, can rely upon receiving our first and only quality. Secondly, our price is so low, that the man of the most limited means is enabled to procure a fine and fashionable hat, (at the same time we wish it to be distinctly understood that our hats are not to be excelled by those sold at four dollars by any other establishment,) and lastly, we strive to please. If any gentleman desiring a hat differing from the usual style, will call and leave his order, we shall endeavor to suit him in every respect. The inducements which we offer to wholesale purchasers, and the trade in general, are not to be exceeded by those of any other establishment.

Also, a large assortment of CLOTH CAPS, CHILDREN'S FANCY HATS, UMBRELLAS, &c., constantly on hand at the lowest rates. Nos. 146 and 148 Nassau st. ap263m

---

FASHIONABLE HATTER, 223 THIRD AVENUE.

COWHY'S Spring style of Hats, now ready, are superior to anything hitherto offered in Beauty of Shape, and Elegance of Finish. Being a practical hatter himself, Cowhy is enabled to sell A SUPERIOR HAT AT A VERY MODERATE PRICE.

His young gent's hat is one of great beauty, and his assortment of children's fancy hats and caps cannot be surpassed by any other establishment in the city.

N. B.—Hats and Caps made to order, and warranted to fit, by COWHY, 223 Third Avenue, between 19th and 20th streets. my31y

Bankers.

GREEN & SEWELL,

BANKERS,

No. 29 Wall Street, New-York.

DRAFTS on the Belfast Banking Co., available in any part of Ireland, for sale.

REMITTANCES from the interior, promptly forwarded to any address in Ireland, and receipt therefor returned to the sender. General Banking business transacted. my17 6m

---

BREWER & CALDWELL,

20 OLD SLIP, CORNER OF WATER STREET, N. Y.

ISSUE BANK OF CHARLESTON BILLS

ON

BANK OF LIVERPOOL,

In sums of one pound sterling and upwards, payable at any of the Banks in ENGLAND, IRELAND, SCOTLAND, AND WALES. jun14

Employment.

EMPLOYMENT OFFICE FOR SERVANTS.

275 BOWERY, NEW-YORK.

MALE and Female Servants can be promptly suited at the above number, with any situation in the city or country, at good wages, in first-rate families, without delay.

N. B. Employers quickly supplied.
3m may 31 ALEXANDER F. RUNGE, Agent.

Wanted, at 766 Broadway, (near 8th street.) Places procured for conductors, Bookkeepers, Clerks, Salesmen, Firemen, Brakemen, Barkeepers, Porters, Waiters, men on Steamers and Railroads, boys for trades, and girls of every description. 21my3m
French, English, and German spoken. LOUIS KAUFMAN, Agent.

EMPLOYMENT OFFICE for Servants, 129 Waverley Place, two doors from Sixth avenue, New-York.—A large number of competent help can be suited with good situations, in city and country, without delay. Employers in the city and country supplied with the best of female help. [my17 3m] WM. O'BRIEN, Proprietor.

NEW-YORK EMPLOYMEMT OFFICE.

480 Broadway.

HONEST, capable, and faithful servants can at all times find good situations at this office. Protestant and Catholic have equal privilege. Established in 1844 by [3m21ju] T. P. SAUNDERS.

Coal.

COAL.

THE subscriber respectfully informs his friends and the public generally, that he has opened a new Coal Yard, cor. 27th Street and 9th Avenue, where he is prepared to sell the best quality of Red and White Ash Coal, at the lowest market price for cash. Weight warranted, or forfeit coal.
6mos* JOHN MACDONALD.

CHEAP COAL.

I BEG to inform my countrymen and friends and the public in general that I always sell the very best sort of Red and White Ash Coal at the very lowest prices. My object being quick sales and small profits, for cash.
ap198m Richard Clinton, 250 1st Avenue, cor. 15th St.

COAL of the very best quality both Anthracite and Bituminous, for family and manufacturing purposes, for sale by the subscriber from his Yards, 632 Washington, 128 McDougal, and 146 West Thirty-second streets. Also, Coal by the cargo.
ap191y Thomas Maher.

P. H. McGINN,

FURNISHING UNDERTAKER,

No. 198 WEST 42d STREET,

Adjoining the Church of the Holy Cross, New-York.

INTERMENTS procured in any Burial Ground or Cemetery in the vicinity of New-York or elsewhere. All articles for Funerals, furnished on the most reasonable terms and at the shortest notice.

☞ All Orders promptly attended to, at all hours, day or night. ap198m

European News.

The British steamer, Canada, brought papers to the 21st ult. The news was unimportant.

The excitement consequent on Mr. Crampton's arrival out speedily subsided, and as Mr. Dallas was not to be dismissed, the recruiting business was regarded as definitely settled, and hopes were freely interchanged that the Central American question would soon be also.

Mr. Baillie's motion in the House of Commons respecting the American difficulties, and on which it was supposed the Palmerston ministry would be defeated and resign, is withdrawn.

A rumor prevailed that Great Britain would send no minister to Washington during the Administration of President Pierce. It was, however merely rumor.

Sir Edmund Lyons is to be raised to the peerage for services rendered in the Black Sea, being the only Peer manutactured from war with Russia.

The Queen gave a grand ball on the evening of the 17th. Two thousand invitations had been given out. Mr. Dallas was present.

On the evening of Friday, the 20th, Mr. Gladstone stated that, on Monday last when Lord Palmerston announced that it was the intention of Her Majesty's government to continue diplomatic relations with the American Minister, he had not given any explanation of the motives which led to that course, nor did he advert to the conduct of the American Government in the dismissal of Mr. Crampton. At that period there was reason to expect an immediate discussion on the question, and therefore he might have thought the explanations at that time too premature. He did not complain of this silence, but the motion to which he referred having been withdrawn, and there being some uncertainty also as to the line which an honorable member opposite, who had given notice of his intention to introduce the question, was about to take, he thought it important that the House should know as early as possible the nature of the reply which the Government intended to give to the dispatch from Mr. Marcy, respecting the dismissal of Mr. Crampton from Washington, and, perhaps, when they had that answer it would be time to discuss the question—he therefore wished to know when the Government would be prepared to lay their reply to Mr. Marcy on the table.

Lord Palmerston said his honorable friend had rightly understood the motives which induced him to abstain on Monday from making any observations upon the subject. Motives equally strong prevailed on the present occasion. He would therefore say in reply to the question, that he had no doubt of being able to lay all the papers, including Lord Clarendon's answer to Mr. Marcy, in the course of next week, probably on an early day.

Sir J. Packington said, the honorable gentleman had acted quite right in asking the Government for the production of the papers, and he was glad to hear that in the course of a few days the House would be in possession of the answer returned to Mr. Marcy's dispatch.

For the present painful position of affairs, he attached the blame—judging only from the public documents which were in the hands of honorable members—to what he considered to be the serious misconduct and unwise policy of Her Majesty's Government, by which the Government of the United States had been irritated, deceived and offended. Under these circumstances, he regretted that Mr. Baillie felt himself under the necessity of withdrawing his motion, but he trusted that the intention of Mr. Moore, or some other independent member, would afford honorable members on the conservative side of the house an opportunity of calling attention to the real merits of the question.

Sir George Grey strongly deprecated the tone adopted by the Hon. Bart.

Mr. Moore appealed to Lord Palmerston to appoint an early day for discussion upon the subject.

No answer was returned and the subject was dropped.

The London Times of June 18, in an article on British Diplomacy, adroitly shifts the blame of disturbing the amicable relations existing between England and the United States upon the shoulders of Mr. Crampton. The following extract undoubtedly reflects the popular sentiment on the subject in England at the present time :—

"If we did not live in an age and in a country which seem to have adopted as their maxim the rule 'That nothing bad should be mended,' we should feel a little surprised that we submit as readily as we do to the glaring and notorious—we had almost said, the incredible and outrageous—inefficiency of our diplomatic service. Much as we have had occasion to remark during the last two years upon the incapacity of different public departments, there is nothing, we apprehend, which will bear a moment's comparison with the state of that service to which we must look principally to maintain the honor, assert the interests, and support the dignity of the country.

"Let us consider what our diplomatists have done of late years, and what they have not. We need, unhappily, no very protracted retrospect. Within the last ten years we have been obliged to submit to more insults, to pocket more affronts, to make more apologies, to admit more errors, than any other nation in a century. Within that period we have seen Sir Henry Bulwer ignominiously expelled from Spain, and Mr. Crampton civilly dismissed from America ; we have made every species of blunder, floundered into every species of scrape, and got out of them as ill as we got into them.

"What a picture has Mr. Crampton drawn of himself! Two mighty nations are on the eve of a quarrel, perhaps of a war. Neither will recede a step. Each confronts the other with invincible pride, and the world trembles for the result. A sudden thought strikes an able and conscientious minister, 'What if we refer the matter to arbitration?' No sooner said than done; a despatch is written and the offer made; but the despatch might as well have been unwritten and the offer unmade, for Mr. Crampton cannot take the trouble to read the despatch through to the end. 'Some he reads and some he skips,' as they say at school; but, unfortunately, that which he skips is the last expedient except his own disgrace, that remained for preserving two continents and two oceans from the scourge of an internecine war. Take another instance. We wish to recruit in America without infringing her laws ; all that was needed was publicity ; at least all that could be done with safety and propriety ; and our diplomatist contrives matters so ill that, as it now appears, the distribution of money for the purposes of enlistment is actually traced to his hands. These things our diplomacy can do."

In an article on the same subject, published the day previous, the Times says :—

"We do not doubt in the least Mr. Crampton's faithful devotion to his own government and good intentions towards the government to which he was sent. But there is such a thing as careless and undisciplined fidelity, which tells its master, 'Oh, trust me; I know what you want, I'll do it, and I won't be particular either.'

"There is a fidelity to a master which implies too little self-respect in the servant. Mr. Crampton appears to have wanted self-respect in the kind of persons with whom he connected himself in these transactions and the style of proceeding he adopted, and to have managed the affair on a free and easy principle, never intending, perhaps, really to offend the United States government or to violate the United States law, but simply thinking that 'it didn't signify,' that it was of no use sticking at a trifle, and that the United States government would never make a fuss about such a little matter. But this was a line unfortunately most unsuitable for dealing with a jealous and ticklish people like our friends across the Atlantic, most tender about their dignity, and on the look-out for the slightest indication of a difference of behavior towards themselves by European governments."

Austria.—The Morning Post's correspondent writes from Vienna that Marshal Radetzky has communicated from Lombardy with his government, stating that if certain symptoms of excitement continued in the Lombardo-Venetian provinces he should demand an increase of 30,000 Austrian troops. On receipt of this dispatch a council was summoned, at which the Emperor presided, when it was agreed that the increased force should be accorded if necessary. The same writer says : "I understand a note has been received by the French government, which is very haughty and independent." On the 15th the King of Sardinia distributed the English Crimean medal to his troops at Turin with military ceremonies.

Denmark.—The treaty of commerce between Denmark and the United States expired on the 14th of June. On the 17th the American vessel, Sarah Bryant, Captain Jefferson, arrived, bound from Cronstadt to New-York, with a cargo of Russian produce. She paid the Sound dues, but under protest.

Russia.—The Russian government is turning attention to its American territory. An important decree notifies that, to assist the developement of the Russian naval power, the administration of fleets and harbors therein is to be placed under the independent control of the kingdom of Eastern Siberia. An expedition is fitting at Hamburg by a Russian American Company, to sail next month for the Russian American territory. The expedition is of the nature of a new colony, numbering five hundred persons, including artificers of all kinds. The Russian ships Czarowitch and Constantine, and a Hamburg steamer, will convey the expedition.

The papers say that it appears now settled that no grain to speak of will be obtained from Russia this season, and hundreds of vessels in the Black Sea, which had gone there in anticipation of meeting cargoes, may have to return empty.

Prince Menschikoff has been summoned from retirement by the Emperor, to cousult respecting the rumored military expedition in Asia.

The latest advices from St. Petersbug state that in consequence of the dearness of provisions in the Crimea, and the sickness which prevails there, a decree has been issued prohibiting all persons not inhabitants, from landing there.

The East.—Accounts from the Crimea to the 7th state that previous to that day, Lord Gough invested Marshal Pelissier and the English generals with the Order of the Bath. The ceremony took place in a shed erected at head-quarters, which was decorated with the national flags.

The evacuation of the Crimea proceeded rapidly. Balaklava would be cleared by the 15th of June.

Interesting from Central America.

YOUNG IRELAND IN NICARAGUA.

We have received, through a young man who has just returned to New York from General Walker's army, some additional particulars respecting the engagement at Rivas and the general position of affairs in Nicaragua. This young soldier of freedom was engaged in the hottest of the fight in Rivas, and received a gun-shot wound in the leg, and he has consequently returned to recruit his health. When the columns of attack were formed, Gen. Walker took his position at the head of the leading division, and was only distinguished from the rest of the troops by a blue flannel shirt which he wore—the only distinctive uniform which he sported upon the occasion. He, too, fired the first shot, bringing down with his revolver a Costa Rican officer who commanded the party immediately opposed to him. Then there was a general volley, and both parties went at it with a determination and vigor ; but the cheer and rush of Walker's men could not be withstood, and the enemy was promptly driven from his position. Other strong places had also to be carried, and from the nature of the ground and the desperate resistance of the Costa Ricans, who fought well, the conflict was prolonged for seventeen hours.

During one period of the battle, a body of Walker's troops took possession of a church, from which a large force of the enemy vainly attempted to dislodge them. It is utterly untrue that any damage was done to the building, or any images or paintings destroyed. The party who occupied it were nearly all Irish Catholics, and under the command of Gen. Walker's brother—who since died—a member of the Catholic religion. Being seventeen hours without food, they used some demijohns of wine which they found in the church. They were a perfect God-send to the parched and wounded warriors. The great bulk of Walker's army were composed of Irishmen, who, on hearing of English interference on behalf of Costa Rica, were anxious to cross weapons with their old enemy on the streets of Rivas, and ready to "give 'em Jessie."

Before they approached the city, every Irishman placed a wreath of evergreens in his hat, in remembrance of a bunch of shamrocks, and in remembrance of the green old isle they might never see again, and then old Erin went into the fight with her accustomed impetuosity, standing shoulder to shoulder with native-born Americans and native-born Nicaraguans. Every man nobly did his duty on that trying day, and none better, our informant avers, than the Nicaraguan Democrats, who promptly obeyed every order, and bravely carried out every command with the utmost coolness and gallantry. After the first fire they all warmed to the fight—raw recruits as they were—and seemed to regard it as excellent sport.

We are assured that nothing could be better than the arrangements for supplying the army of General Walker with everything to minister to the comfort and well-being of the men. The hospitals were provided with all the requisites which the occasion required, and there was a full attendance of surgeons. The six prisoners that Walker ordered to be hung, were six spies, taken with treasonable documents in their possession, and proclamations addressed to the people of Nicaragua, calling upon them to rise in arms and join the Costa Ricans. They were not mere prisoners taken in honorable warfare, but spies whom the laws of warfare and of nations, from the siege of Troy to the capture of Rivas, have doomed to an ignominious death.

Walker raises no individual to command until he has first given practical evidence of his courage. Gen. Hornsby is an accomplished soldier and an able tactician. He is very popular with the troops. General Walker is a great favorite with the Democratic party of Nicaragua, who actually idolize him. They provide, unasked, the army with mules and everything else that is required. There is no compulsion necessary. They regard Walker as the liberator of their country. His position is so strong in Nicaragua at present that the combined forces of all Central America would not be able to make the slightest impression upon him. The ardor of the troops is greater than ever. The wounded were anxious to leave hospital before they were half well. A young Irishman from the county Sligo, who had both arms broken by rifle balls in the battle of Rivas, could not be induced to remain in the hospital a single day, but would be out among the troops with bandaged limbs. Walker is going to be a ruling power in Central America, all bogus treaties and foreign despots to the contrary notwithstanding.—N. Y. Sun.

Congressional.

Thirty-Fourth Congress—First Session—Senate.

June 27.—Nothing of importance was done beyond the announcement of the death and customary eulogy upon the Hon. Mr. Bayly, late Member of Congress from Virginia.

June 30.—Mr. Douglas made a report on Kansas affairs. The report proposes a new bill, providing for the appointment of five commissioners, to be selected from different sections of the Union, to take a census and provide for a fair election of delegates to form a State Constitution. No test to be required except three months' residence. Mr. Douglas gave notice that he will ask for a vote on the 7th prox.

July 1.—A resolution was adopted, calling on the President for the facts in regard to the arrest of a Judge of District Court of Washington Territory, by Gov. Stevens, and the proclamation of martial law in that Territory. Mr. Collamer submitted a minority report from the Territorial Committee in regard to Kansas. The Kansas bill was discussed by Messrs. Thompson of Ky., Bigler, Hale and others.

July 2.—A communication was received from the Secretary of State, transmitting the proceedings of the Board of American Commissioners at Paris to liquidate and audit the claims of American citizens for debts and satisfaction against the French Government, according to the Convention between this country and France, April 3, 1803. Mr. Clayton called attention to the document, because it completely refuted the ground upon which the President based his veto of the French Spoliation bill, and showed that Mr. Pierce's veto was an error in fact. Mr. Douglas's bill for the admission of Kansas was taken up, and a night session resolved upon. Mr. Adams's motion to strike out the clause giving foreigners, who have declared their intention to become citizens, the right to vote in Kansas, was adopted—22 to 15. Mr. Wilson moved to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert instead, that "All acts passed by the Legislature of Kansas, or any Assembly acting as such, are hereby declared void and of no effect." An earnest and excited debate followed, in which Messrs. Wilson, Wade, Seward, Toombs, Pugh and others participated. Mr. Wade's criticism on the President's course, and on the speech of his colleague, Mr. Pugh, brought out the latter gentleman, who was called to order by the Speaker. Mr. Seward advocated Mr. Wilson's motion, and characterized the bill as one calculated to make Kansas a Slave State. In the course of his remarks he said : "The day for compromise has ended."

HOUSE.

June 27.—The proceedings were similar to those in the Senate.

June 28.—The debate on the admission of Kansas was resumed—Messrs. Stephens of Georgia and Campbell of Ohio being the principal speakers, respectively, for and against the measure. The motion to refer the subject to the Committee of the Whole was defeated by a vote of 70 against 101.

June 30.—The bill for the immediate admission of Kansas was the order. Mr. Grow made the closing speech in its favor. Mr. Stephens moved to recommit, with instructions to report the substitute which he had offered. Mr. Dunn moved, as an amendment, that the Committee on Territories be required to report a bill for the restoration of the Missouri Compromise, which was adopted by 7 majority. Mr. Stephens' motion was voted down. A motion to recommit without instructions was also rejected. A motion to lay on the table was negatived. The main question was then taken, and the bill was rejected by one majority. The House immediately adjourned.

July 1.—Mr. Barclay of Pa. moved a reconsideration of the vote on the bill for the admission of Kansas under the Topeka Constitution. A warm and somewhat personal debate followed, between Mr. Barclay, Mr. Houston and others, when Mr. H. moved to lay Mr. Barclay's motion on the table ; but without further action, Mr. Howard presented the report of the Kansas Investigation Committee, which was read.

July 2.—An abortive attempt was made to change the daily hours of meeting. The reading of the Report of the Investigating Committee was concluded, and a Southern effort to cause the documents to be read also failed. The report was referred to the Committee on Elections and ordered to be printed, and the minority of the Committee was allowed ten days to submit a report.

Not long ago, a dead body was taken from the water at Alexandria, Virginia. Having been recognized and claimed by the wife of a citizen, as the corpse of her husband, it was borne to the grave with all due solemnity, followed by the widow and children in all the habiliments of woe. Several days passed, when the husband and father whose funeral had lately been celebrated, suddenly returned in full enjoyment of perfect health. The surprise with which he was greeted, and his own on learning what had occurred, may be imagined. The sequel of this strange story did not terminate so happily. The sexton, it seems, had run up a large bill for funeral expenses, which the city authorities refused to allow, and the consequence was that the man actually had to pay for his own burial.

American News.

The following is the list of the late acting midshipmen who have just graduated at the Naval school at Annapolis, Md., and are now midshipmen :—Joseph W. Harris, Augustus P. Cook, R L. Phythian, Thomas K. Porter, Rush R. Wallace, Thos. H. Eastman, William E. Evans, Robert F. Bradford, W. N. Allen, Le Roy Fitch, George A. Bigelow, Chester Hatfield, George S. Shryock and George M. Blodgett. They stand on the naval register in the order announced above.

The wharf at the foot of Reed street, Philadelphia, caved in on the evening of the 1st, and the heavy shears used by Merrick & Sons, for raising machinery, fell among the crowds of men, women and children who were promenading. It is reported that from twenty to thirty persons were crushed, maimed, or drowned. Not less than a hundred persons were precipitated into the water. The news spreading rapidly, the scene became one of great excitement and anxiety. A later account says that the names of ten persons certainly dead have been ascertained.

The Beaver Dam (Wis.) Republican, 19th ultimo, says :—Walter James, a son of G. R. P. James, the novelist, ordered some Indians away from the hunting grounds around Rice Lake, Waupacca county, lately. The Indians refused to leave. James, as we understand, visited them late on last Saturday night, and called one of them out with the apparent purpose of speaking with him. After some words, he cut open the Indian's head with a bowie knife; two others came out, not knowing what had happened, whereupon Mr. James cut the arm off of one of them, and laid open the side of the other. The Indians are on the trail of James, and will, in all probability, have their revenge.

We copy the following from the Macon (Ga.) Telegraph: "We have a private letter from Wacahoota, East Florida, dated the 12th inst., and detailing incidentally the recent assault upon Captain Bradley's house. It was just after dusk in the evening of the 14th of May, and Bradley lying abed sick. Two of his children—a little boy and girl—were sitting before the open door in the entry of the house, when a band of some twenty Indians stole up and fired upon them. The little girl was killed outright and the boy mortally wounded: but he nevertheless rose, went into the family, gave the alarm, then took down his gun, and fired at the enemy. He then handed it to his brother, saying he had no further use for it, and died immediately. His body had been pierced by two balls. Bradley and the other son kept up a fire, and the cowardly Indians dare not make an assault. The neighbors finally gathered and drove them off.

Herr Driesbach was travelling with his mammoth menagerie recently, and when near Laporte, Indiana, observed, a short distance from the road, under the shade of a cluster of trees, a fine fat buck. He was anxious to obtain it ; but there was a law prohibiting the shooting of deer, and he had no dogs. In this emergency a happy thought struck him. He unbarred the cage of his pet leopard, and pointing to the deer, in a moment the beautiful but treacherous animal was stealthily creeping towards his prey, and with a sudden spring buried his talons in its body. Driesbach then went and dispatched the deer.

A young man was well nigh being ruined by a legacy left him by his father, a few years since. It was $25,000, and the career he ran in Chicago, the fastest town in America, made him a pauper, and a miserable broken down loafer, who was, from a liberal sowing of wild oats, reaping a most abundant crop of repentance. In this mood and tense, it was announced to him that a deceased uncle had left him $30,000. "Oh, dear!" was his exclamation, "have I got to go through all this again? It'll kill me just as sure as shooting. It is no use to fight against fate—they're bound to ruin me."

On 2d inst., as a train on the Great Western Railway was approaching the station at Fairchild's Creek, it was found that part of the ground over which they had just passed had given way, and buried four or five of the workmen under the vast mass of gravel which they were engaged in quarrying. One man was killed on the spot, his head being squeezed into his body by the overwhelming mass that fell upon him. Several others were more or less injured, and it is a question whether one, or probably more, are not buried under the mass of gravel.

The Allgemeine Zeitung states : "The emigration from Norway to the United States is very considerable this year. Several large ships from different ports of Norway, with a full cargo of emigrants, have left for America. The bark Juno, of Bergen sailed a few days ago, with 130 passengers. Seven other ships, with 1,500 emigrants, will leave this port for the United States shortly. Several of these persons have left behind good farms, and the emigration fever in some parts of Norway is so great, that the value of property has fallen considerably."

Much excitement has been created in Montreal, by the refusal of the majority of the Corporation to vote money to get up a demonstration of welcome to the 39th Regiment, on their arrival from the Crimea. A public meeting was held, at which the Mayor presided. The attendance was very large and respectable. The Corporation were freely denounced, and it was resolved, that the demonstration should be got up by private subscription, and the Corporation was allowed to take part in it!

A tremendous fire has been for some days raging along the Saguenay, in Canada. Dwelling houses, barns, out-houses, fences, stacks and standing crops, have been destroyed, to the value of many thousands of dollars. Some seventy-five families have lost their crops, and many have been turned out of their houses. The parish of Chicoutimi was burned out completely, excepting a church, a mill, and a few houses.

A few days ago, an account was published of the brutal murder of a merchant, at Chicago, by some one who entered his store after the clerk had been dismissed for the night. The supposed murderer has been arrested in Kentucky, and is now confined in Louisville. He was taken by Alanson Barnard, who followed him from Chicago, and, after a chase of ten days, succeeded in effecting his arrest.

While the agent was paying off the Indians at Syracuse, last week, an old "native" presented himself and squaw and seventeen children. His share, at $5 a head, was $95, and as he received his portion, he remarked, "Me get a hundred dollars next year."

The farmers in the vicinity of Louisville, Ky., have commenced cutting wheat, and we learn the yield is fair. Accounts from other parts of the State are to the same effect.

The Nashville Whig says that the wheat crop of Tennessee will, at least, prove an average one.

Judge Kellogg, a venerable citizen of Michigan, arrived in Washington not long since. It was his first visit to the Federal Capital, and when the cars stopped he was a little uncertain where he was; but as he noticed all the passengers were leaving the cars, he followed suit. As he entered the main hall of the depot, he saw a man engaged in caning another ferociously, all over the room. "When I saw that," says the Judge, "I knew I was in Washington, immediately." The sarcasm of the remark is as biting as the wit is pungent.

A dispatch from Columbia, S. C., of the 20th inst., says, preliminary steps have been taken for the formation of a Southern Commercial Association, for the purpose of discriminating in the bestowal of business patronage between the friends and enemies of the South, and an agency is to be established in New-York in season for the fall trade. The matter will also be brought up before the Commercial Convention, which is to meet at Savannah in December.

Order has been restored in the Indiana Penitentiary. The convicts are thoroughly subdued, and it is believed that there will be no further signs of rebellion. Some twenty-five were punished. Heaton, the ring-leader of the mutineers, received sixty-five lashes on the bare back with a cowhide, thirty of which were applied before he began to beg for mercy.

The following, from a New-Jersey paper, would indicate that the Federal capital will not be allowed to monopolize the warlike spirit of the age. In the Hudson, N. J., Court, a few days since, counsel were engaged in summing up a case in which Messrs. E. B. Wakeman and Chatfield were engaged. During Mr. Chatfield's remarks, Mr. Wakeman lost his equanimity, and flung a law book at Mr. Chatfield's head, which Mr. Chatfield threatened to retaliate with an inkstand, when Judge Ogden immediately stopped the affray.

At the Western Unitarian Conference, just held in Chicago, an attempt was made to commit it to freesoil action, on motion of a Mr. Mumford, who has indulged in political haranguing ; but his motion was tabled. The Detroit Free Press timely remarks—"Those religious denominations which shall, in their collective capacity, in the present crisis in political affairs, preserve their integrity, will be entitled to the gratitude of all good men."

At a trial in Charlestown, Va., the jury in the case of Gotlipp Collimer, for forgery, were out for some five or six hours, but were unable to agree, and getting tired of being confined to a small room in the court house, proposed to the constable in attendance to let them out in the front yard to play marbles, which he did, but forbid them to speak to any person.

A letter in El Nicaraguense says that Wm. Irving Langsdale, of Kentucky, who was in the battle of Rivas, and who made forty-eight shots at the enemy with a Kentucky rifle, killed forty-eight Costa Ricans! He occupied a place of security, took rest in shooting, saw twenty-six of them fall himself, the balance others witnessing.

Since the 2d of June, nearly 500 dogs of all ages and conditions have been captured by the legally appointed dog catchers, and given to a man in Jersey, for the manufacture of oil, buttons, &c. Heretofore the city were compelled to pay $2 a cart load to get them out of the way, but now they are taken from the general depot free of charge by this enterprising Jerseyman. —Philadelphia Ledger.

A story is going the rounds of the English clubs to the effect that Barnum has written to the Earl of Shaftesbury, inquiring whether it would be possible to induce the persecuted Italian Protestants, the Madiai, to visit America, and be exhibited, and offering Lord Shaftsbury a commission on the profits on condition he interested himself in the undertaking.

The bill against polygamy, now introduced in the House, is for the purpose, it is said, of testing the power of Congress to legislate for the territories. "H. G." writes from Washington : "I am told that Mr. Bernshiel, the Delegate from Utah, has five wives, and I have heard that they were all at one time in this city ; but I think that must be an error."

The Albany Times states that a pistol has been invented in that city, which will fire ninety times per minute, carry a ball forty yards farther than any pistol now in use, and that it is also much lighter, and in every respect superior to Colt's revolvers.

At the annual meeting of the Boston Emigrant Society, the following sums were received : W. Keating, H. Duffy, P. Holly, N. J. Bean, C. A. Connor, E. Ryan, D. Moore, M. Griffin, G. E. Murphy, J. C. Robinson, D. Farren, D. Bonner, $1 each. The former government of the society also contributed $3 each ; and B. F. Trainer, $2. James Ferguson, Secretary.

A city editor says that a man in New York got himself into trouble by marrying two wives. A Western editor assures his contemporary that a good many men in Michigan have done the same thing by marrying one.

It is a fact worth noticing that three of the most popular democratic Presidents have been called James : James Madison, James Monroe, and James K. Polk. James Buchanan will make the fourth of the series.

The New-York Exchange Committee have received from Wm. Crichton, Esq., Baltimore, $1800 for the Cape de Verde sufferers, of which the Baltimore Corn-Exchange contributed $18,045 ; the Catholic Churches of Baltimore, $755.

The democratic papers of Connecticut claim that state for Buchanan and Breckinridge by 5000 majority, and offer to bet on it.

Herbert, who shot the waiter Keating, was indicted for murder by the Grand Jury of Washington, and committed to jail for trial on the 2d inst.

Over 200,000 bushels of wheat and corn were shipped from the Upper Lake ports for Oswego, during the week ending June 27.

During the thunderstorm at Savannah, Ga., on the 25th inst., three men on board the brig Ganges were struck by lightning. They were not killed, however—only stunned for some fifteen minutes.

Casey, recently hung in California, says the Newark Advertiser, owned six lots of land situated in this city, valued at about $600.

There are at present in the Kentucky penitentiary 237 convicts; 186 are native Americans, 51 are of foreign birth. Of Of the 186 natives, 87 were born in Kentucky.

Barnum, with a sad jocularity, when asked in court what his occupation was, answered, from Shakspeare, that it was "gone."

Wm. Bernard has been fined $100 at St. Louis for insulting a lady on the street.

Buchanan and the Press.

The Watertown, (Wis.,) Democrat, says :—"It is now almost forty years since James Buchanan entered upon the long and honorable career of public service, which is about to close with the crowning reward of a patriot's labor. During this protracted period of public life, at home and abroad, he has discharged every official duty with a faithfulness and fidelity that has won for him the approbation of all parties and all classes. As a Representative, Senator, Secretary of State, Foreign Minister—in all the walks of public life—he has proved himself the right man in the right place—a statesman of comprehensive views, practical measures, disinterested purposes, and unblemished character. In all those fierce contests which the Democratic party have had with the Whigs for the ascendency of its principles, Mr. Buchanan has been on the side which the majority of the people have firmly sustained, because it was right, and has for its basis the rock of truth. Never doubting, never wavering, always Democratic, there has been a consistency and beauty throughout the whole of his brilliant and successful career, that has won the confidence and admiration of the nation, and, in an hour of peril, has pointed him out as preeminently the man to stand at the helm of state, and by his wisdom and wide experience, safely guide the noble ship through the storms that now rage around her. There is a pervading feeling abroad everywhere that he is the man for the occasion—safe, reliable, able and willing, with the talents and capacity to adorn and dignify the elevated and responsible office which he is destined to fill."

The Elkhorn Independent, (Republican,) says :—"For success it is the best Ticket, probably, that could possibly have been made. Mr. Buchanan, personally, is respectable, and enjoys a wide social reputation. There are no personal bad habits to lay to his charge. He has been in public life a long time, is a man of eminent ability, and has never outraged public sentiment. He will therefore draw more largely the strength of the Party North, than any other man could do."

The Jeffersonian, (Wis.,) says :—"Our Democratic readers will rejoice to see the names of the Hon. James Buchanan and Hon. John C. Breckinridge, at the head of the Jeffersonian. We hail the above nominations as a new era in the history of the Democratic party ; for if Mr. Buchanan is elected, and who can doubt it, he will accomplish and bring about more real good to the country than any President since the days of General Jackson. His character as a statesman is unblemished ; he has been before the country for the last forty years, and has acquitted himself nobly in all the relations of life, both public and private.

The candidate for Vice President is Mr. Breckinridge, of Kentucky, possessing talents of the first order, which his political opponents freely concede."

The Washington Star, says :—"One of the most striking facts of the present political campaign is the evident impossibility on the part of the opposition of finding throughout Mr. Buchanan's forty years' career as a public man, any personal point on which to attack him."

There never was a time, says the Boston Constitution, since the organization of our Federal Government, when the United States were involved in so many entangling disputes with foreign nations, as at present. We have difficulties with Denmark, Spain and France ; but our chief ones are, as usual, with Great Britain. It is true that the present occupant of the White House remains in power till next March ; but we have an evidence, in the postponement of the Danish Sound Dues Question, that the solution of most of these knotty points will probably devolve upon his successor. This fact we hold to be an unanswerable argument in favor of the election of James Buchanan, for no other statesman living is so equal to the occasion. Familiar with European diplomacy, having been our Minister at both the Courts of St. Petersburgh and London, he knows the precise force of these interests, and how far their Governments will be backed by the people. In a word, like a physician who has made a particular branch of disease his study, he knows his case thoroughly. He will not rush to the lancet when anodynes are required, nor administer soothing syrups when a vigorous tonic is called for. We feel that we can leave in his hands the Central American and the Enlistment disputes, without any fear of precipitate action, or undignified hesitation. The same may be said of other pending discussions. His nomination even now has doubtless assured the English people that they will have to settle with one who has been among them, who recognizes what is good in them, and knows what is treacherous and overreaching, and who has both received and returned many courtesies. We fearlessly assert that nothing is so likely to reconcile the British Government to a postponement of the present dispute, and lead to an amicable adjustment of the difficulty, as the probability of our late Minister to St. James's being our next President.

The New-Yorker Abendzeitung says : The nomination of Buchanan renders the triumph of the democratic party at the Presidential election probable ; nay more, it renders their success certain in case the republican party err in their choice of a candidate. They must put forward their strongest man to run against Buchanan, and that man is Fremont. His nomination alone can render the result of the election doubtful.

The New-Yorker Staats Zeitung says : Buchanan is a statesman of talent, experience, and liberal sentiments. He knows the old world and the new ; the most liberal country of Europe as well as the most enslaved. He has seen too much of the world to be a man of low prejudices. He knows the emigrants to this country too well not to acknowledge their merits. We repeat : The Democratic National Convention has done a good day's work, and we rejoice to be able to say, that we have performed our part to obtain this result. The Staats Zeitung was one of the first papers (and among the German papers the very first) which advocated the nomination of Buchanan, and his past life gives us a guarantee that we shall have no cause, as far as the country is concerned, to regret the result. Buchanan will be our next President, and certainly the best of all those who have conducted the fortunes of this country since the days when the heroes of democracy adorned the Presidential chair.

The New-Yorker Staats Demokrat says : Buchanan stands, therefore, in a double-faced capacity on this great Cincinnati platform, and if he should become the occupant of the White House, would have to betray one party, though which that may be will depend on circumstances. He understands perfectly how to adapt his garments to the weather. It is to be regretted that Mr. Buchanan was not nominated and elected President in 1852, because then he would only have represented the party of the Fugitive Slave Law, which had no influence upon the freedom of the Territories. We do not believe that under his administration the Nebraska Bill would have passed. At this moment he is the representative of that party which has committed all the atrocities in Kansas, and directly defends by its platform the extension of slavery. This will lose Mr. Buchanan many thousand votes, which otherwise would have been given to the democratic candidate. Even his name is not able to remedy this evil. Thousands of old democrats will vote, not against Buchanan, but against the party which he represents, and this loss cannot be made up again from all those who split upon the platform and vote for Buchanan.

The Jackson Mississipian, says:—"With joyous heart and bounding pulse we plant ourselves upon the Platform of the Convention, and rally to the support of its nominees. It is no difficult undertaking for us to enlist in the support of James Buchanan and John C. Breckinridge.

In the National Convention of 1852 we well recollect how with more than woman's devotion, through days of tedious ballottings, Mississippi clung to the fortunes of James Buchanan. For thirty-five ballottings her vote was cast for him without variation. And although events have subsequently transpired to control her votes for another in the last Convention, yet no act of that wise and eminent statesman and patriot has tended in the least degree to diminish the confidence which was then reposed in his capacity and fitness for the high position which has been assigned him. On the contrary, he has increased the debt of gratitude which his country owes him, and has furnished additional evidences of his worthiness to be placed at the helm of the affairs of this great and growing Republic.

The Democratic standard-bearer is not a man of yesterday. Identified with the political history of the country for the last forty years, his record is a record of long unchanging devotion to its interests. Among the giants of the land, he has towered in the Senate and in the Cabinet, the loftiest of the lofty, and in every position which he has occupied, he has left the impress of true patriotism and of a mighty intellect. Entering upon his national career in the year 1829, as a member of the popular branch of Congress, he at once became a leading champion of the administration of Gen. Jackson. Pennsylvania was the first to bring forward the Hero of the Hermitage, for the Presidency, and when he had been clothed with the high honors of the office, it was appropriate that the noblest and most gifted of her sons should step forth as the ablest defender of his administration. For the success of the wise system of public policy inaugurated during the administration of Gen. Jackson, the country is indebted to no living statesman more than to Mr. Buchanan.

To the people of the South, as well as to the Conservatives and patriotic men of the North, his nomination cannot be otherwise than acceptable. On all questions touching the constitutional rights of the South, he has stood in the fore-front of the battle against Northern fanatics and traitors. It was the pride and pleasure of John C. Calhoun to bear testimony to the fidelity with which he resisted Abolition aggressions. Mr. Calhoun served with him long in the Senate, and the testimony of such a witness will not be impeached. Even in times when Southern men faltered, Mr. Buchanan has stood to his post of duty. The early friend of Texan annexation, it will not be forgotten that he gave that important measure his earnest support to the period of its consummation. Identified with the administration of James K. Polk, as Secretary of State, he contributed largely to its success. The papers which emanated from the State Department at that trying and critical period, are the best evidences of his sagacity and his statesmanship."

The New-York Sun meets some slanders which are current thus: On the one hand we have it charged, in the face of repeated and conclusive proof of its falsity, that Mr. Buchanan once declared in a speech made at Lancaster, that "if he knew he had a drop of democratic blood in his veins, he would let it out." The slander originated as long back as 1828; but though its falsity was promptly shown, and Mr. Buchanan himself publicly denounced it as "a ridiculous story, without a shadow of foundation," the story survives, and is now circulated by Mr. Buchanan's political opponents, with as much confidence as if its truth had never been questioned. And, on the other hand, we have the story set afloat, and persistently maintained, that Col. Fremont was bred up a Catholic, and until recently belonged to that communion. There is not one of the journals in which we have seen the story which is able to make the assertion from positive knowledge, but "it is said," &c., is the form of assault. What have the newspapers to do with the religion of the candidates, unless a man shows want of truthfulness and honor, by denying his creed for political ends.

In answer to the question, "Who is James Buchanan?" the Cincinnati Enquirer replies: No man asks, or need ask, "Who is James Buchanan?" His history is that of the country for nearly forty years, and not a blot sullies the brightness of the page upon which it is indelibly written. One who knows him intimately has well said: "We can name no living man who excels him in the qualities which command general admiration and respect. He always displays the refinements of honor and the graces of a gentleman. Born and reared among a manly race, the structure of his body and mind are happy types of the power and resources of his native State. His friendship is warm, generous and sincere. His manners are familiar without coarseness, and eloquent without pomp. His extensive information is the fair result of diligence and study; and he imparts it freely without pedantry or ostentation. This gifted character, although comparable to any in the attainment of knowledge, has made the science of government his particular study. And if politics be a science, and really deserve so sublime a title, Mr. Buchanan's success in the pursuit of it merits a diploma of the rarest sort. For forty years this eminent statesman has trod the stage of public life; and no matter in what drama he was called to act, the stage was clean, the lights were bright, the scenery was fine, the performance was admirable, and the spectators cheered till the curtain fell. He has been tried in every crisis that could measure the range of wisdom and the versatile powers of the human mind, and was never found wanting on any decisive occasion."

The New-Orleans Delta daguerreotypes the nominees: Mr. Buchanan is very tall and English-looking, having a burly figure and florid complexion. There is a defect or squint in one of his eyes which gives him a very peculiar expression, especially while looking at the ladies. Mr. Buchanan is slightly bald, and his hair very gray—indeed almost white. His manner is cold, calm, and dignified, and decidedly aristocratic. There is a peculiar expression of benevolence combined with firmness which is very engaging. His face wins on you the more you see it. Mr. Breckinridge is decidedly one of the noblest-looking men in the State of noble men. He has the eye of an eagle—large, blue, and full of expression. His bearing is that of a fearless man, with a front to inspire awe and admiration. Mr. Breckinridge is a young man, and exceedingly good-looking. He generally wears a frock-coat, buttoned up closely. His figure is tall and graceful, and his whole air full of dignity and repose. The expression of Breckinridge's lower face indicates the firmness and steadiness of his character. There is a fixed appearance about the jaws, as though he had a nail or other hard substance between his teeth—the certain indication of nerve. His manners are frank, plain and cordial, and to use a Kentucky expression, his heart is in the right place. He will preside over the deliberations of the Senate of the United States as its presiding officer, if elected Vice-President, with credit to himself, and with a thorough appreciation of the propriety and dignity due that august body representing the conservative element of our Government.

Never, says the Washington Sentinel, since the formation of our confederacy, have we so much needed at the helm of State wise and patriotic statesmen. Indeed, it is, in our opinion, the most critical period which our country has reached. The struggles of the revolution were but the struggles for her independence. Her subsequent war with the same great power was waged to maintain her rights and dignity as a great nation. Later than this was her conflict with Mexico, in which the latter was the silly aggressor, and for which aggression she received a just and merited chastisement. How insignificant are all these struggles, in which a united people participated, to the dark and portentous cloud that threatens the distraction and division of that people. Nay, more, the very question so important to mankind, of the practicability of republican institutions is to be solved now and forever; for who will doubt, that the hold once loosened, which the American Government has taken upon all the Governments of Christendom, will, in all time to come, deter and frighten them from the imitation of our own theory of government?

The eyes of the whole world are fixed upon us with an intensity of interest. * * * * * *

The wicked pertinacity of the Abolitionists have caused civil strife and bloodshed in one of our otherwise most favored Territories In California, murder and rapine are the order of the day, and the laws of the country, failing in their beneficent effect to correct this violence, are substituted for the self-constituted tribunal of the people. Scarcely a mail but brings the sad intelligence of Indian depredations upon the citizens upon our frontiers; and public confidence and commercial stability too much shaken by the uncertain and vacillating course of the present Administration upon our foreign policy. All unite in demanding the election of Mr. Buchanan. Place him in the chair of State by an overwhelming majority, as we hope to do, and all these evils will find their correction. Peace and good will abroad, and a surcease of crimination and recrimination at home, will be the results that will surely flow from this salutary change in the administration of the affairs of our country.

John C. Calhoun has said: "Mr. Buchanan has habitually indicated, on the dangerous question of slavery, correct feelings."

Correspondence.

DUBLIN, JUNE 21ST.

A Calm—Manchester "saves" America—A gorgeous burlesque, in which an elderly lion, Crampton, Marcy, Pierce, Cushing, John McKeon, the London Times and Ben. Disraeli are the dramatis personæ—The elderly lion doth a tale unfold, and is slapped to death therewith—Ireland for America, priests and people—the Catholic Bishops destroy the Irish Parliamentary party—Sadleir not defunct—A probable city of the dead in the Polynesian group—The main wire of the Dublin Telegraph off the hooks.

Everything is quiet here now. The fireworks are over. The talk and hubbub about the priceless Peace has completely gone down. The chances of a war between England and America are no longer discussed; Manchester principles, if not Manchester men, determine at present the affairs of Great Britain. The Crimea has been a Sinking-fund with a vengeance. Cobden is in the ascendant. Bright is brighter than ever. England can't afford to have another fight, with all her colossal Spithead war-ships and swarms of gun-boats. Crampton's dismissal is pocketed not only quietly, but philosophically. Not only philosophically, but with the most graceful concurrence in the views set forth by the hard quill of Secretary Marcy. The Times considers the expelled Minister a bungler, accuses him of inappropriate levity, and declares that it was quite right in General Pierce to pack him about his business. D'Israeli, in the House of Commons, in terms the most unctuous, expresses the like sentiments. Never was a slap in the face taken before with such an affable grace. The whole affair reminds me of a great incident I saw once in a gorgeous burlesque on the boards of Hawkins' street.

The scene lies in India. A destitute traveller has lost his way in the jungle. In the middle of it, an elderly lion confronts him. The lion has not yet dined, but intends to dine. He springs at the traveller. The traveller dodges behind and between a few stumps thrown here and there in the jungle; but all to no purpose. The lion closed in on his intended dinner. There was but one way of escape. The traveller nimbly leaped behind the lion, seized the lion by the tail, and held on to it with all his might. The lion pulled one way—the traveller another. With the dragging and pulling they had, the tail became long. In a few seconds, it was several yards long. The lion wheeled round and leaped at the traveller. The traveller stood his ground, held the tail stifly within a foot of the tuft, and as the enemy came toward him, gave him a clout across the bristles. The lion exhausted by the length of his tail, immediately gave up, fell down in a swoon, and cried like a kitten. The spectacle deeply moved me. The sight of an elderly lion, slapped to death almost across his old "mug" with the but-end of his own tail, was saddening to witness. Could a lion of advanced years have had a graver insult offered him?

What was Crampton but the but-end of the tail of the old British tail? And has not Marcy, and Pierce and Cushing, and John McKeon, been hauling at that tail this year or more back? And have they not lengthened it as far as its elasticity would permit? And now havn't they, as this old Lion turned round threatening (as he did at Spithead) to chaw them up, slapped him in between the eyes and about the ears and chops with his disgraced extremity? And, to complete the parallel and picture, hasn't the old Lion, crowned with the white cliffs of Dover, as if with a gigantic mural crown, lain sweetly down, licked his lips, and become a lap-dog?

Here, we were all up to the mark. The true heart of the country was panting to see the carnivorous foe of Ireland in the toils again. War with America would have been a far different thing for England, than war with Russia. Though indifferent to the successes of the Allies in the Crimea, we could not heartily sympathize with the grim turnkey of Poland and the pest and robber of beautiful Circassia. And then, there was, and will long be, a joyous sympathy with France. Bantry Bay can never be forgotten. Nor Killala neither. That monument at Boulogne, ever reminds us that the greatest son of France was the fiercest and strongest foe of England. The shadow of that monument still falls upon the white shore of Kent. The straits are but twenty miles across.

A war with America would call forth quite another chord. The tone would be altogether different. The sympathies of Ireland would be thoroughly with America. Not a peasant from Lough Foyle to Dingle—from the Devil's Mill at Leixlip to the Clifden light-house—but would give his heart and eyes to see the Stars and Stripes flying from London Tower, or some place nearer home, as it did from that crag-built fortress of Chepultepec. The mechanics of the towns, every one of them, would be with America. All the young priests, also, without a doubt. In a word, the people, the democracy of Ireland would be, heart and soul, with the people, with the democracy of America. England knows this well. The conviction that it would be so strikes her to the marrow. She foresees, to, that as Canada was the first point of attack in the first war waged by America with England, Ireland would be the first point in any war which might now or hereafter take place. Ireland is many weeks nearer to America in these days than Quebec was when Montgomery led up his men through the forests of Maine to the heights of Abraham. Besides, Ireland is infinitely better worth invading and annexing than that sprawling waste of ice and swamp, pine-stumps and rocks, which stretches away there along the St. Lawrence and the Lakes to the blubber beach of Behring Straits. Depend upon it, and mark my words, as long as Ireland has her head above water, England will never hazard a war with America.

The Nation has regained most of its famous old pluck. It writes dashingly and forcibly on the events of the day. It sums up the whole of the American business in a paragraph tidy and small enough to fit in the daintiest card-case a lady could carry:

"A glance at the news of the day reveals an instructive and interesting spectacle—England bowing, cowering, cringing before the fresh and vigorous power of the West. Her Minister and three Consuls have been dismissed, ordered out of American territory, politely it seems, but she dares not return the compliment, affects to heed only the soft words, sees but the gilding of the pill, and tries to stomach the indignity. All which, of course, will only excite and encourage a nation sufficiently fearless and exacting under any circumstances."

On Irish questions (those of immediate interest to the people here at home) it is equally independent, vigorous and able. This morning's number charges Archbishop Cullen and the Catholic Bishops, as a body, with the enervation, if not the complete destruction, of the Irish Parliamentary party. Showing up the indifferentism, and, in some instances, the mischievous activity of these Right Reverend gentlemen in politics, the Nation, putting its finger on fact after fact, demonstrates the danger into which the temporal interests, rights and dignity of the Catholic Church in Ireland have been brought by the obsequiousness (active and passive) to the English Government, which the successors of St. Patrick, Laurence O'Toole, and Oliver Plunkett, have seen fit to cultivate. The Nation says:

"Not merely is Maynooth in disgraceful peril. The House of Commons has this week adopted an address to the Crown to make the National System of Education an immense machinery of Proselytism. It is not quite certain that a well-managed motion to enlarge the Ecclesiastical Titles Act or to repeal Emancipation, might not, adroitly managed, be carried with a certain success. The truth is, that her Majesty's Ministers and the House of Commons have a most thorough and complete contempt for the political force of the Irish Catholics—Bishops, Priests, gentry and people. They know we are not honest, and that we countenance lies; that we are timid, bigoted, narrow-minded, and mean-spirited; that all we want, with occasional exceptions, (who appear almost insane in their violence by contrast with the mangy temper of the mass,) is to be allowed to eat our mess of pottage in silence."

This is surely terrible. 'Tis the truth, however, and I cry "well done!" to the brave voice which makes it known.

A startling letter has just appeared in the Cork Examiner, dated from London; it is written by John Francis Maguire, the Member for Dungarvan. The writer says:—

"I assure you in all possible seriousness, that I myself have heard numbers of the greatest sagacity assert with all possible deliberation and sincerity, that John Sadleir is not dead; but that he is at this moment in a foreign, though not distant, country, and in the possession of a vast sum of money, which had been gradually remitted to the place in question. I have also heard persons largely connected with mercantile affairs state, that the belief in the existence of the gigantic swindler is as positive as it is general in the city; and gray headed cashiers in eminent banking-houses, and well-known names on Change, are freely quoted as sharers in the common conviction of the suicide being a sham, and the whole of that ghastly affair another proof of John Sadleir's genius for fraud. I do not in the slightest degree exaggerate when I tell you that the belief in John Sadleir's existence, as a living man, is not only wide-spread and general, but that it is daily and hourly on the increase. For my part, I have been amazed at the gravity with which men, eminent for their wisdom and attainments, argue this question, and make out their case."

Mr. Maguire then proceeds to enumerate the several questions, suspicions and facts, which serve in some degree to substantiate the rumor that John Sadleir, the devout proprietor of the orthodox Telegraph, has been all this time in some snug corner, listening to the beautiful prayers and orations with which his memory has been sweetly embalmed.

"They say, there was an inquest, it is true: but what of that? It does not prove that it was an inquest on John Sadleir's body. Bodies may be easily had in London, where so many deaths take place in the public hospitals in one week; and the body of an Italian—long-visaged and swarthy, if dressed in a suit of John Sadleir's clothes, with a card of John Sadleir's in the pocket, and a silver cream jug of John Sadleir's lying along side of it, might be easily taken for the body of John Sadleir, especially as the delusion was further sustained by letters which were written with great art, and preparations which were made with particular pomp and circumstance. They further say, that not one of John Sadleir's relatives saw the body, or, if they did, that not one of them ever declared that it was his body. And they ask, how, supposing it to have been John Sadleir's body, did John Sadleir come to the particular spot on which it was lying? Did he ride, or did he walk? If he rode, where is the cabman who drove him? If he walked, whether the whole way, or any part of the way, how did it happen that the boots were perfectly clean, and free from stain of any kind? How did he cross the moist and muddy ground that encircled the hillock on which the body was found? If that hillock could not be approached in the day time without the shoes or boots of the person approaching it being dirtied, how did it happen that John Sadleir contrived to get at it in the dark, without spot or stain of any kind? Then, there was no post mortem examination. The presence of the essential oil of bitter almonds was ascertained by smell; but whether any of the poison had reached the stomach of the body then examined, was never ascertained, because knife never touched it. If another body passed for a while for that of Foschini, the Italian assassin, why might not a well selected body pass for that of John Sadleir, especially when so many concurring circumstances helped the spectators and the public to an easy credulity?"

If really alive, where the deuce on earth can he be? He must be among savages. He couldn't be safe a minute where there was a white population, or any intercourse with one. I think it was his brother Clement, who at Clongowes, the Christmas of 1833, acted Rolla in Sheridan's Pizarro. With this enormous sum of £237,000, which, it is said, the pretended suicide has decamped with, it may be that a city, costlier and more radiant and roseate than the golden-gated city of the Incas, will rise up to drink the glittering nectar of the Sun from some solitary coral-rocks in the cobalt Pacific. Ages to come, it may so happen, that it will be discovered. And then the learned and inquisitive will be as busy trying to unravel the gorgeous mysteries of its architecture, and the legends on the palace-porticoes and tomb-stones, as Stephens has been in Yucatan or Laborde in Arabia Petra. In a dead tongue, a tongue once in play all through the Golden Vale of Tipperary, in characters similar to those found on the famous Ogham stones, or the sculptured crosses of Clonmacnoise, there may, probably, be deciphered the first line of the Shakesperian song—

"I know a bank."

Here, then, I've given you the hints for a dramatic piece as wild and wondrous as the Tempest itself. Having done so, I drop the subject, coming back from the land of dreams to this dull earth of ours. As a postscript, however, I may as well add, that Mr. W. B. McCabe has requested the Evening Post, (indeed, I may say, the papers all round,) to inform the public he is no longer editor of the Weekly Telegraph. He has, also, requested them to state, that it was his wish to have placed before the readers of that immaculate paper his reason for resigning; but as such a statement was considered by the proprietor likely to prove injurious, Mr. McCabe's proposed letter has been withheld. Himself and his letter ought to be sent to—

KILMAINHAM.

WATERFORD, June 2, 1856.

However well our ancestors, by reason of their loyal cruise against that unfortunate fillibuster Perkins Warbeck, may have won the immaculate motto which now surrounds our city arms, and however well their successors may have conserved the virginal distinction which that motto implies, I fear me much that the "untouched city" sadly wants a pretty extensive touching up; and I fear me, also, that she is about to surrender some of those venerable charms, some of those vestal robes which she has worn so long, and on whose threadbare folds Time and the "necessities of the times" have stamped those fatal marks which point them out for destruction.

What a suggestive thing is an old coat!—that ancient friend which clasps the heart with uniform and unswerving fidelity, whilst the little organ within bounds against our sides with restless and varying emotions; how many times has it borne the "pelting of the pitiless storm," and given that protection and shelter it could not find for itself; how many secrets, bright and bland, billet-doux and billet duns, missives of love and messages from creditors, has it concealed within its inmost pockets; how often has it worn the face of smiles in the gay saloon, and the crippled, crumpled look of dejection in the darker scenes; how sad it is to part with it—it fitted so well, it harmonized so agreeably with every curve and cranny of our form; but now it looks so thin, so shabby, so hapless, and, Miss Cherrylip, the necessity of the times is to meet me this evening, "under the elms," at Newtown. I cannot think of being seen in doubtful company; poor old friend, go to the Jews—we must part! If it be true that there are "sermons in stones," I can see no reason why there should not be "reflections" also; and probably our good city, thinking of the sacrifice it is about to make, like John Reynolds "immolating himself on the altar of his country," or John O'Connell "dying on the floor of the House," should indulge in reflections somewhat similar to those I would use in giving up my old coat. Centuries have rolled over those old roofs, clouds have loomed and storms have pelted around those old gables; the mailed bands of Pembroke and the canting crews of Cromwell have beaten the old walls; peaceful processions have been greeted with white handkerchiefs, waved by whiter hands from those venerable windows; O'Connell has nodded his blandest smiles to the fair occupants of those domiciles; and Meagher has inspired with his own enthusiasm the very children who have been nursed there; yet, with all these memories, grand and gay—with all the prestige of antiquity—all the pre-eminence of position—that venerable block of houses which form the west side of Barronstrand street has been voted an obstruction, and the Crowbar Brigade is already at work tumbling them to the earth.

I cannot say that this is a new project—I believe it has been the main improvement thought of for many a day—to remove that old peninsula now standing between our splendid Catholic Cathedral, Broad street and Georges street, and which forced the great tide of business to ooze through two very narrow passages into the larger thoroughfares of trade. From the day on which Turgesius' Tower was supplanted by Maurice Harney's public-house, and Barronstrand mill, on the opposite side, succumbed to John Hurly's iron yard, this project has been discussed; committees have sat on it for centuries, and yet nothing resulted from their laborious incubations; mayor after mayor have pledged themselves to raze this old citadel, yet so formidable have been the stockades and earthworks by which the law had surrounded it, that it has well withstood every assault. Now, however, it is besieged at all points, a considerable breach has been made in its old sides, the inhabitants have offered terms of capitulation, and the most sanguine of its defenders believe its downfall to be imminent. Next winter the comfortable burghers of Broad street and Georges street will have occasion for an extra glass of punch. The barrier which has so long stood between them and the keen, cold, north-east wind, shall have been removed, and they will find it necessary to fortify the inward man against its chilling influence.

Another work of a very important character is now being carried out in Waterford—the construction of a public park for the recreation of the citizens. I do not much care about the system of bringing the country into town. I prefer going out and enjoying Nature in its wild, unsubdued grandeur; to climb the rugged brows of the Commeraghs, holding on by its heathery locks, bounding over its beetling crags, splashing through its limpid streams, or flinging stones from its hoary summit into the soft smooth lake of Cumshanane, resting on its lap below. I prefer to reel in the liquid luxury of a tumble in the wild waves on Tramore strand, or a stroll through the rocks and caverns around Brownstown Head. But it is not at all times we can enjoy scenes like these, and it is well to afford places of recreation for the poor children of toil, who are forced to eke out existence in cheerless caverns which they are obliged to call homes; it is well to enliven the hard din of labor with the sight of green fields and the music of summer birds. It is indeed a winsome thing to behold little children gambol on the green sward, and old age reclining in contented ease on mossy seats. Heaven bless those who provide luxuries of this character for the poor.

This Park is being laid out in Lombard's fields. The boundary commences at Canada street, running along Newtown to Captain Doyle's house, then turns off to Water street down which it runs parallel to the Model School to Hardy's Road, then, into the Bridge, and sweeps round the new Pill into Canada street again. It is separated from the Court House grounds by the river, over which it is proposed to construct a handsome foot bridge, connecting thus the two grounds and forming one beautiful garden of sixteen or eighteen acres in area. I understand the plan is very handsome, and it is now being carried out under the directions of a landscape gardener of first-rate abilities from Dublin. I walked through it this morning, and saw it laid out in circles and squares, and a variety of other geometrical figures. Men are busily employed throwing up earth-works to form these into mounds and hillocks to be afterwards planted according to the specification of the plan; it will be a charming spot, yet I doubt whether those swelling mounds, teeming with bloom and blossom, those green trees waving in the soft summer winds, those sylvan nooks thrilling with the songs of birds, shall ever look so gay to me as those grounds in their rough brown ruggedness did this morning. There was man working, his bronzed brow glowing with cheerfulness at the prospect of a summer's work to enable him to perform his duties to his little ones at home; there was the cheerful laugh of requited toil; there was the contented eye of honest industry; there was the untold luxury which no one feels but the sober working man—that happiness immeasurable, to which other classes are perfect strangers—there he is, his bright eye and his clear brain dilating over the senseless mass of stone, or wood, or iron in his hands, and watching every change as it grows up into shape of power and beauty by the efforts of his noble hand; why should working men repine; why should the hot bitter taint of envy enter their soul towards richer folks? What is indolent ease? What is the senseless revelry which wealth produces? What is the bloody wreath which soldiers die for, compared with the grand creations of intellectual labor and the gladsome heart of requited toil? The great raree show at Spithead, with all its elements of gorgeous destruction, were worse than worthless in comparison with the ring of the spade, the plunge of the pick, and the laugh of the workman in the "People's Park" this morning.

This Park is another of those valuable projects for which we are indebted to the inexhaustible brain of our present Mayor; nearly the entire of the ground belongs to the Corporation; the Town Council cheerfully gave it up to the citizens, and purchased the remainder from the landlords who owned it; by a great deal of diplomacy the British government was induced to subscribe five hundred pounds; that prince of merchants, Joseph Malcomson, gave one hundred, and the citizens subscribed about one thousand pounds more, so that in an incredibly short space of time ample funds were raised to commence the work

Waterford has the reputation of being a quiet lifeless place, yet I have never known her citizens to be called on for any great purpose, either of charity or improvement, or any other public good, that they did not spring forth with an alacrity and munificence which leaves our more showy neighbors far behind.

The news of the day is thrilling indeed; if we are to believe the public papers, a letter has reached Ireland from New-Orleans announcing John Sadlier's arrival there alive and hale; some people think this to be only a sequel to the clever canard of the "Nation," and laugh at it accordingly. I think, however, that there is one circumstance connected with it which deserves attention, and may go some way towards verifying it: this letter has come from a warm climate, and surely if John Sadlier ever turns up he certainly must be found only in the hottest regions either of this world or the next.

I cannot write long letters from Waterford; it were as difficult to rear a crop of Mangel Wurzel on the sands of the rabbit-burrow at Tramore, as to write an interesting letter from the scanty materials here. Other times may come, and more stirring events may take place when you will always find me most ready and willing to pay my earnest regards to the Irish News.

THE METAL-MAN.

Irish News.

A few years ago, Mr. Thomas Burrowes, cabinet-maker of Cork, opened an establishment in Patrick street, and embarked extensively in the finer branches of his trade, to meet which large consignments of goods were sent to him from various firms in London, Birmingham, Glasgow, and Halifax. Some time afterwards, however, the impoverishment of the country seriously interfered with his business; and after struggling on until 1852, he had to claim the consideration of his creditors. He returned such goods as he had belonging to them, and the creditors signed a composition deed, accepting 13s. 4d. in the pound. After some time, Mr. Burrowes was enabled to pay off the composition, and having removed to Old George's street, he recommenced the cabinet-making business, in which he has proved so successful that this year, without any expectation being entertained by his creditors, he forwarded to them the balance, 6s. 8d. in the pound, upon each of their accounts. Yesterday morning, Mr. Burrowes received a consignment containing a handsome silver tea service.

We have, writes the Evening Mail, to record an act of bravery on the part of Joseph Browne, the engine-driver on the Dublin and Wicklow Railway, which has prevented the Dublin and Wicklow line from being stained with blood. After passing Bray-head, the driver perceived three children at some distance on the rails, of whom the two eldest made their escape on seeing the train approach, leaving the youngest to its fate. The driver seeing the imminent peril of the child, at once turned off the steam, but calculating that this would not avail, at the greatest peril to himself, jumped off the engine, and, though stunned momentarily, he succeeded in outstripping the speed of the train, and plucked the child away almost at the very instant that the wheels were going over the spot, thus saving it by a second or two.

The sixteenth general report of the Emigration Commissioners presents much valuable information. One of the tables shows the progress of emigration from the close of the Peninsular war to the end of 1855. The largest emigration in any one year was in 1852, when it amounted to 368,764; but last year the emigrants amounted to only 176,807. The estimated emigration from Ireland, between 1841 and 1854, was not less than 2,000,000. It is stated that the sums of money remitted to Ireland from the emigrants, since 1848, amounted to £8,393,000, and during the last three years they exceeded three millions and a half.

The Lord Lieutenant at the distribution of the prizes awarded by the Government Department of Science and Art, which took place recently at the Museum of Irish Industry, conferred honors on two gentlemen, who are supernumeraries in government offices. The gentlemen who have thus distinguished themselves are Mr. James Penny, of the Board of Works, who received certificates for geology and natural philosophy, and Mr. J. C. Hayes, of the Poor Law Commission, who received a certificate for natural philosophy. The first named gentleman has been upwards of ten years in the Board of Works, and his position is in no way improved since the first day he entered the service. A supernumerary he entered, and a supernumerary he has remained to this hour.

The Limerick Reporter and Tipperary Vindicator inform us that the anomalous state of the representation of the county Tipperary, in reference to one of its Members, has caused a movement on the part of the electors, and a County Meeting is in contemplation to be held immediately. A requisition convening a meeting has been numerously signed, the requisitionists stating that they deem it their duty to their country and to themselves to take into consideration the present state of the representation of the county of Tipperary, and for that purpose request a meeting of the electors, to be holden at Thurles. The day has not been named. Several clerical and lay electors have signed the requisition.

Of the late Lord Carew, the Wexford People writes:—"In the presence of Death we would speak as gently as possible of the departed; but we do not think that any maudlin sentimentality should be employed to the detriment of truth and justice. The deceased nobleman was in his early days one of the champions of the liberal party in their struggle with the Orange ascendancy; ultimately he associated himself with a cold and heartless aristocracy, and whatever good qualities he possessed as a public man lay dead or torpid. His land was set at high rents, and the tread of the bailiff was well known on the estate.

The number of loans made in 1855 by the Irish Loan Fund Board amounted to £208,655, at a gross profit of £26,120, and a nett profit of £8,036. The circulation of loan funds throughout the country amounted, in 1855, to £883,321, exceeding that of 1854 by £13 297. The capital of loan funds working in 1855 was £213,070. The working capital was less by £1,665, than in 1854, and yet the operation of loan funds was more active last year. The working of the system in 1855 was attended with less loss than in any past year since 1845.

At a meeting of the Royal College of Surgeons, the following gentlemen were elected officers for the year 1856–7:—President—Robert Carlisle Williams. Vice-President—Hans Irvine. Secretary to the College—Edward Hutton. Council—Sir Philip Crampton, Bart.; Alexander Read, Arthur Jacob, Thomas E. Beatty, William Hargrave, Andrew Ellis, Leonard Trant, Robert Adams, James Barker, William Colles, John H. Power, James S. Hughes, Edward Hutton, Robert Pentland, Samuel G. Wilmot, Auley P. Banon, Peter Shannon, Rawdon Macnamara.

The people of Darver, county Louth, have collected £120 to erect a belfry for the Catholic Church of the parish. Stones were being quarried at Kiliencoole for the work, when a land agent stopped the men, as the quarry, he stated, belonged to the landlord. The people of Darver, not to be frustrated, succeeded in getting stones on Mr. Byrne's estate at Cargans, and they are being carried at present to Darver.

A large number of emigrants left Londonderry for New Zealand. The majority of the emigrants belong to Strabane, several of them having been among the most respectable inhabitants of that town.

A deputation, consisting of Lords Bernard, M. P., and Dungarvan, M. P., Sir D. Norreys, Bart., M. P., J. I. Heard, Esq., M. P., John F. Maguire, Esq., and the members for the city of Cork, waited by appointment upon Lord Palmerston on Saturday, at his residence in Piccadilly, to submit a memorial from the inhabitants of Queenstown, calling for the construction of a naval arsenal in the harbor of Cork. Mr. Beamish stated the case on behalf of the memorialists. Lord Palmerston expressed himself desirous of giving the question every attention, without however, pledging himself or the government to any specific course.

The Limerick Reporter informs us that, the improvement of pastures has had the effect of enhancing the demand. Reports from all the country fairs agree in stating that the business done is most satisfactory. Every one now feels satisfied that agricultural prosperity is not dependent on the country being at war, but that, with a continuance of good trade in manufacturing, and therefore consuming districts, farmers have little cause for apprehension.

A bill for the continuance of the Incumbered Estates' Court will be introduced this session. The Chief Commissioner and his staff are to be done away with, and the court, with increased powers, will be carried on under two commissioners, to be removed to the Four Courts' Buildings, Dublin.

A costly testimonial has just been presented to Captain Sir Robert M'Clure, of Wexford, by a number of officers of the Royal Navy, in admiration of his intrepidity and perseverance in penetrating through the Polar Ocean in search of Sir John Franklin, which led to the discovery of the North-West Passage. The testimonial consists of a winged figure of Fame standing on tiptoe on the part of a globe representing the Polar Seas.

Accounts from Cork state that the screw steamer Propontis, Captain Goodwin, is now at Queenstown, where she is coaling, having on board the sub-marine electric cable, to be laid down between Cape Ray, Newfoundland, and Cape North, Cape Breton Island. The length of this cable is 85 miles, and its weight 170 tons. She has also on board the cable to be laid down between Cape Traverse, Prince Edward's Island, and Cape Formantino, New-Brunswick.

The Cork Examiner records the death of one of the oldest and most sincerely respected citizens of Cork. Mr. John R. Burke has, after a long and painful illness, closed a career which through its whole course was marked by its usefulness to others and the respect it won for himself. For nearly half a century Mr. Burke was the head of the oldest commercial firm in the city of Cork.

A misunderstanding of rather a serious character has taken place between the highest official of the Queen's College, Cork, and one of the professors, which has resulted in an appeal to his Excellency the Lord Lieutenant, complaining of serious infraction of College discipline. It is believed that the dissension will become matter of investigation before the Visitants, when the whole conduct of the College will be inquired into.

Speaking of a sermon delivered at the beginning of the month in the Chapel of the Catholic University, by the Very Rev. Dr. Russell, the Dublin Evening Post says :—

"We were particularly pleased with his remark on the advantages Catholics now enjoy in having a really noble University devoted to their education. The contrast is astonishing when we reflect how few years have elapsed since it was penal to establish even a common hedge-school."

Mr. Gleig, Inspector-General of Military Schools, has visited the Royal Hibernian Military School, Phœnix Park. The proficiency displayed by the pupils in their course of studies, was only equalled by the efficiency shown in their more soldierly accomplishments. The gun practice on the lawn and the model battery erected by the pupils in rear of the school, excited the admiration of the visitors. The literary proficiency of the pupils was most creditable to Mr. Young.

A bill brought in by Mr. Napier and Mr. G. A. Hamilton repeals the acts requiring the residence in London of law students in Dublin University, and reduces the stamp duty on articles of apprenticeship in the case of graduates in arts or law who may hereafter wish to qualify for attorneys to £72. The University professorships of anatomy, chemistry, and botany are opened to Roman Catholics and to candidates not graduates in medicine, persons of all nations "professing their faith in Christ" being equally eligible.

A reception at the Convent of the Immaculate Conception, All Hallows, Ballina, county Mayo, took place on the 8th of June. Miss Julia Madden, Ballycastle, and Miss O. Kelly, Limerick, received the holy habit from the hands of the Right Rev. Dr. Henry, Lord Bishop of Killala, assisted by Reverend Peter Nolan, Rev. J. Griffen, and Rev. Anthony Haly.

Four clergymen of the Society of Jesus have opened a mission at the Catholic Cathedral of Londonderry. The object of the mission is not controversial, says the Londonderry Journal, nor do the members of the Order touch upon polemics. Their purpose is to recall, and, if possible, to bring back the careless and indifferent of their own communion to the paths of Christian piety.

On the 16th of June, the City of Dublin Company's steamers commenced plying daily between Limerick city and Kilrush. Several families had arrived at Kilkee, the Brighton of Ireland; and Lisdoonvarna, celebrated for its spas, is visited by a large assemblage. Castle Connell still maintains its well deserved character for beauteous scenery and invigorating waters.

The Banner of Ulster says that late news from the United States had cast a slight dulness over the linen manufacture. The turn-out at the bleach-fields is quite up to that reported some months past. The extent of land at present under cloth in the process of finish, is much above that of the highest ever before known in the North of Ireland.

The Town Council of Belfast exhibit a touching anxiety (so the Ulsterman informs us) for the respectability of their constabulary. They have issued an advertisement for tenders to supply every man in the force with a new hat.

The second reading of the Maynooth College bill had been fixed for the 25th of June, when Mr. Maguire would move its rejection. The government, and the whole force of the Irish brigade, had promised to support him.

The Rev. Dr. M'Cosh, Professor of Logic and Metaphysics, Queen's College, Belfast, has been appointed Professor of Theology and Apologetics in the new Free Church College, Glasgow.

Mrs. Dorothy Dillon, of Adare, was received into the Catholic Church on Sunday last by the Rev. Mr. Cregan.

The ceremonies of reception and profession have lately taken place at the Convent of our Lady of Charity, in Dublin. The postulants clothed with the habit were Miss Lynch, of Dublin, who took the name of Sister Mary of St. Stanislaus, and Miss Catherine Power, of Waterford, under the title of Sister Mary of the Good Shepherd. The novice admitted to holy profession was Miss O'Callaghan, of Dublin, as Sister Mary of St. Joseph.

An inspector from the General Post Office, Dublin, was in Waterford two or three weeks ago, for the purpose of making arrangements to have street receivers, as now used in London and elsewhere, placed in the Mayor's Walk, at the corner of John and Beresford streets, the Mall, and Newtown. The letter-carriers will have charge of the boxes, and previous to the departure of each mail they will be examined and their contents transferred for despatch to the office in George's street.

Miss Catherine Ryan, the venerable daughter of the late E. Ryan, Esq., and aunt to E. F. G. Ryan, Esq., R. M., Portumna, and M. R. Ryan, Esq., Limerick, after several years' absence, has visited the site of the new Cathedral of St. John. It is nearly thirty years since Miss Ryan visited that portion of the city before, having been invalided from the time of the gunpowder explosion in Patrick street, of which she was one of the sufferers.

Some specimens of potatoes grown in the open air on the ground of the Rev. Somers Payne, at Upton, have been exhibited at the Cork Examiner office, which give promise of a magnificent crop. They were of the variety called Pinks, perfectly sound and healthy, and average about four ounces in weight.

It is rumored in the Hall of the Four Courts, Dublin, that a trial for libel will be tried at the ensuing assizes, to be held for the County Kildare, on the Home Circuit. The plaintiff held the office of professor in the University of Dublin; and the defendant is a reverend Fellow of the same distinguished college.

The Right Rev. Dr. O'Brien, Bishop of Waterford and Lismore, has held a visitation in the parish chapel of Crook, and administered the sacrament of confirmation to nearly one thousand children of both sexes. Many respectable Protestants from Passage were present.

The Month's Mind, for the Venerable Mrs. O'Keeffe, mother of the Rev. Matthew O'Keeffe, took place on Wednesday, in the church of Dunnamaggen. Seventy-five clergymen took part in the ceremonies, most of them belonging to Ossory, but several had travelled from Waterford and Cashel. A large number of ladies and gentlemen were assembled from all parts of the county.

A declaration was posted at the chapel of Creehan, signed by Hugh Brady, of the same place, to the effect that he had not acted as hangman at the execution of Dunne and Murphy. It was countersigned by Robert Erskine, Esq., J. P.

The Wexford Independent gives a glowing account of the mission of the Redemptorist Fathers in Gorey. The concluding ceremonies were of a peculiarly devotional character. There was a grand procession, and Father Furniss's farewell discourse drew tears from every eye.

The Banner of Ulster states that a man named Cumming was engaged along with other men in blasting a rock at the Cavendish Limestone Quarry, and after the explosion a stone of about six pounds weight descended upon his head, breaking his skull in several places. He expired soon after.

The Cork Reporter understands that the decision in the case of the Cork and Youghal Railway Company against Patterson, which was tried in the Court of Common Pleas, London, will affect a large class of respectable and solvent parties, and will bring into the hands of the company a sum of not less than £30,000.

There are 212 subscribers to the next year's Derby. Eleven are the produce of Irish Birdcatcher, five of Chanticleer, four of Connaught Ranger, two of Elvas, three of Mickey Free, and three of Simoon. Lord Waterford has three engaged in next year's Oaks, to which there are 135 subscribers. Mr. Bradshaw's Barbarity, by Simoon, and Mr. Nugent's Hasty, by Horn of Chase, are amongst the number.

The Waterford Chronicle says that Lord Palmerston, notwithstanding the many faults of his government, has been strengthening himself in his position, and instead of being ousted from office—as it was so confidently stated the peace would do—has rather shown the country that in peace, as in war, there is no one so well qualified to govern the country as himself.

The same paper gives us the pleasantest news about the weather and crops. They are still blessed with very fine warm weather, the effect of which, after the rains, is evident throughout every part of the country. The potato crop is strong and healthy-looking, and gives every indication of yielding a large return.

At the late examination in Trinity College, Mr. James Slattery, son of Pierce Slattery, Esq., of Carrick-on-Suir, obtained a Sizarship. This young gentleman was prepared for examination by Mr. Henry J. G. Pasley, the accomplished principal of the Youghal Endowed School, under whose tuition very many of the alumni of old Trinity have distinguished themselves during their college career.

The Lord Lieutenancy of the county of Wexford has become vacant by the death of Lord Carew. Mr. Stanley, late Secretary to the Poor Law Commission, has been appointed comptroller and accountant-general of the stamps and taxes department, Dublin, in the room of Mr. Eyre Burton Powell, retired on full salary. Salary of the comptrollership, £800 per annum.

The Tipperary Artillery Militia still continue great favorites with the Dublin people of all classes. They were greatly cheered going to and returning from the review on the Queen's birth-day, where they formed a splendid appearance at the "flag-staff," being told off as a guard of honor to the Lord Lieutenant.

The committee appointed by the Waterford Corporation to report on the amount to be spent in improving the defective state of the water-supply in the city have, after a lengthened examination of the subject, resolved to recommend the expenditure of $2,000 for this important purpose.

The nuns of the Presentation Convent, Holy Cross, Waterford, gratefully acknowledge the receipt of £5 from the Rev. Patrick Cuddeny, of the Boston mission, his second contribution towards the completion of their church.

At the last meeting of the British Archæological Association, Captain Tupper exhibited two flint arrow heads and two stone axes, discovered in Belfast.

A bill for the regulation of the Court of Chancery will be introduced next session, giving the Masters, who will be reduced to three, increased jurisdiction, and enabling them, in certain cases, to carry out a cause from the beginning to the end, or, in other words, making them Vice-Chancellors.

Mr. Cowman, the contractor, has commenced the stone work of the new bridge of Wexford; and the County Surveyor, J. B. Farrell, Esq., has gone to Dublin, to inspect the metal castings at the Irish Engineering Company.

The Sisters of the Good Shepherd gratefully acknowledge the receipt of £3 from the Dowager Lady Dunraven; £1 from Mr, Michael Cregan, Maynooth College, and 10s. from Anonymous, towards the building.

Mr. Yelverton, a member of the Avonmore family, has issued a lithograph circular to a large number of the leading constituents of Mayo, announcing his intention to offer himself at the next general election. Mr. Yelverton does not state what his politics are.

A rumor having circulated to the effect that Mr. Russell intends retiring from the representation of Limerick at the ensuing election, the Limerick Observer gives the rumor the most unqualified contradiction.

The counties comprised within the district in which the late Sir Edward Tierney discharged the duties of Crown Solicitor, have been divided amongst three solicitors, Mr. T. Fitzgerald, Mr. Geale, of the firm of Messrs. Geale and Dwyer, and Mr. W. H. M'Grath.

Several families who have been in the United States for some years have returned to Pallaskenry, in this county. Others, who only went out this spring have also come back, having repudiated America and its discomforts. This we give on the authority of the Limerick Chronicle.

At the review in the Phœnix Park, Dublin, on the Queen's birthday, was Lieut Massy, the young hero of the Redan, looking with great apparent pleasure on the mimic performance of those acts, in the reality of which a few months ago he played so great a part.

The Lords of the Admiralty recently sent two experienced Captains of the Royal Navy to inspect the new pier at Tarbert, for accommodation of vessels putting in there in stress of weather. They disapprove of the present plan.

The Waterford fair for the month of June was largely attended by buyers from all parts of the country, and supplied with some fine stock. Much business was done, and prices were excellent.

Edward Blackburne, Esq., barrister-at-law, son of the Right Hon. Francis Blackburne, is sworn in Seneschal to the Manor Courts of Oxmantown, Grangegorman, and the liberties of Christ Church, in the room of Richard Bourke, Esq., deceased.

The sum of near £50 has been lately presented to their young curate Rev. Mr Roche, by several kind friends in the united parishes of Ballingarry and Grana.

In the case of the Representatives of the late Robert Potter, Esq., M. P., against the Corporation of Limerick, notice of trial was served for the 13th of last month in Dublin.

The police of Ennis and surrounding districts are engaged in taking the annual agricultural census of Ireland.

There are 182 pupils in the Cork School of Art, and 240 receiving instructions in design in four national schools in the city.

Capt. Esmonde paired with Mr. Vance on the Tenant-right Bill, and Mr. Bond was accidentally shut out.

Daniel O'Connell, Esq., son of Captain John O'Connell, M. P., has been appointed as an Ensign in his regiment.

There are 484 paupers in the Clogheen union, being a decrease of 183 from the same period last year.

The office of Comptroller at the port of Belfast is vacant by the death of John W. Trousdell, Esq.

The Cork distillers have reduced the price of whisky to 10s. 9d. per imperial gallon, 25 o. p.

America Seventy Years ago.

A. D. 1788.—As a subject of curious comparison of the past with the present, we re-produce from a monthly magazine called the English Review, published in 1788, the following remarks about the United States:

"The American States, after a long suspense, seem at length to be upon the point of establishing their General Government. By the last accounts, seven of the States had acceded to the plan proposed. The previous consent of two-thirds of the whole, however, is necessary; and as no doubt is entertained of the concurrence of South Carolina and Virginia, the Congress, as soon as the consent of these provinces is obtained, will proceed to the organization of their confederated republic. In the meantime, civilization is everywhere extending its influence; the institution of universities and philosophical societies begins to dissipate the fanaticism which has long maintained an authority in several of the provinces; and such is the ardor of improvement at Philadelphia, that this city, and the whole province, are now diligently employed in stretching roads through the country for above a hundred and fifty miles. A spirit for agriculture seems to be universally disseminated over the States. This is the first necessary step in the advancement of a nation to prosperity; and it is the policy of the Americans to render it their principal object. In a little time, however, they will doubtless turn their attention to the improvement of manufactures for internal consumption, though their good friends, the French, are endeavoring all in their power to dissuade them from this undertaking.

"Separated from the nations of the ancient world by an immense ocean, the Americans can be but little affected by the situation of politics in Europe; but they are exposed in the back settlements to the incursions of ferocious tribes, which form a barrier to the progress of dominion and civilized manners in the Western Continent. The province of Georgia suffers at present from the violence of these Indians; but she must now trust for protection to her own resources, or in the assistance of the other States, and not from the aid of Great Britain, who had often lavished her blood and treasure in the defence of her long supported, but now emancipated, colonies."

Miss Ellen Conran.—This clever young Irish artiste continues to win the praises of the Italian critics, who lavish the strongest expressions of admiration on her appearance and acting on the stage. Since the conclusion of her engagement at Perugia she has sung repeatedly in concerts at Florence, and is now engaged for the opera at Naples. It is an arduous struggle for a native of our country to win success in Italy; but Miss Conran has several examples to encourage her, and we trust there is every prospect of her achieving for herself a high and honorable position as a dramatic singer.

Answers to Correspondents.

Moyamensing is informed, that the original Philadelphia was built by the descendants of the soldiers who followed Alexander the Great in his Persian expedition. It stood on a hill, in the centre of a singularly rich and beautiful country. Gardens, vineyards, and fertile plains circled it with all the loveliness, sweetness, wealth and luxury of nature. It fell a prey to the Turks under Ilderim and Bajazet. A wall of human bones, strongly cemented, remains to this day a monument of the savage soldiership of the latter. The Turk still rules there. A Moslem population of 15,000 souls vegetates amongst its ruined walls, towers, and bastions. Philadelphia is one of the seven churches mentioned by the inspired pen-man of the Apocalypse. He speaks of it as the church which "kept the word of God, and denied not his name." The Turks call it Allah Sher—the City of God. The early Christians gave it the name of Philadelphia, which signifies the City of Brotherly Love.

Old Mortality wants to know what has become of the leaden statue of George III. which formerly stood, he understands, in the Bowling Green. We refer him to the other world for a satisfactory reply. All we know about it appears in the second volume of Irving's Life of Washington. The author of the Sketch Book informs us, that "the excitable population of New York were not content with the ringing of bells to express their joy. There was a leaden statue of George III. in the Bowling Green, in front of the fort. Since kingly rule is at an end, why retain its effigy? On the same evening, therefore, the statue was pulled down, amid the shouts of the multitude, and broken up to be run into bullets "to be used in the cause of independence."

Carolan of Castledermot asks us if Joseph Rodman Drake, the author of the American Flag, the splendid ode beginning with the well-known lines—

"When Freedom, from her mountain height,
Unfurled her standard to the air,
She tore the azure robe of night,
And set the stars of glory there"— was an Irishman. This we cannot positively state. Of his Irish descent, however, we have the most beautiful and touching intimation in the lines he addressed to a Lady on hearing her sing the Cushlamachree—

"Yes! heaven protect thee, thou gem of the ocean;
Dear land of my sires, though distant thy shore;
Ere my heart cease to love thee, its latest emotion,
The last dying throbs of its pulse must be o'er."

A Trinity Collegian writes from Dublin, informing us that the celebrated Burton Bindon is dead. He had just completed his eightieth year. Mr. Bindon was for many years the proprietor of the famous oyster-shop in Duke street, Dublin. He was, also, one of the best horsemen in Ireland, and in earlier life kept and hunted a splendid pack of hounds in Galway. The Collegian adds, that George Bennett, Esq., one of the most eminent members of the Irish Bar during the last half century, is no more. His death took place, the last week of June, at his residence, in Shropshire, England. He was the intimate friend of Charles Kendal Bushe, Plunkett, Burrowes, Wolfe, Saurin, Dogherty and Jackson. For several years previous to his death he was known as the Father of the Munster Bar.

One of the Jaspers of Savannah asks us if Catherine Hayes has arrived in Calcutta. We can't say. When last we heard of her, she was in Van Dieman's Land, or Tasmania, as it is now more euphoniously called. A friend of ours, two or three weeks ago, sent us a clipping from the Hobart Town Colonial Times, containing the programme of a grand performance about to take place in Campbell Town, the principal town of the Midland district of that island. The glorious Limerick girl's voice must have been an ecstatic treat to the people of that town and neighborhood. The only performance we ever witnessed there was that of a company of New-York Ethiopean Serenaders, who came over to Australia, by the Sandwich Islands, from San Francisco, in the summer of 1851. And that, at the time, was considered an extraordinary feast of harmony and flow of soul. For miles and miles, the settlers, with their wives and daughters, crowded in to the entertainment, and for weeks after nothing else was talked of. Catherine Hayes must not only have astonished, but bewildered them with the witchery of her notes.

☞ A demure philanthropist (he dates his communication Cape Cod, Massachusetts, and signs himself Hominy) finds fault with the custom of letting off crackers and fireworks all over the country on the Fourth of July. He considers it a deplorable nuisance, injurious to the peace of respectable families, and depreciative of the national dignity. The country adopts the views put forth by the noble and venerable John Adams in preference to those advanced by any marrowless vegetarian like Hominy. "That day," says the eloquent old statesman, "ought to be commemorated as the day of deliverance, by solemn acts of devotion to Almighty God. It ought to be solemnized with pomp and parades, with shows, games, sports, guns, bells, bonfires, and illuminations, from one end of this continent to the other, from this time forth for evermore."

An Old Man from the Urbs Intacta (Waterford) has sent us his reminiscences of that old Dane-built city of the gentle Suir. They date back to 1806. Simply but clearly written, full of fondness and the gentle poetry of a loving heart, they touch us painfully and yet as tenderly as the sight of an early friend's grave, in some little old chapel-yard, such as that of Faithlegg or Drumcannon, would do. These reminiscences are in type. They appear next week. The Old Man has our affectionate thanks. The scenes and faces he has called up refresh, with delight and warm the heart of every man, woman, and child who, like ourselves, have been cradled in that dear old city.

Roderick O'Connor writes us, from Martha's Vineyard, a long and highly ornamental dissertation on the power of eloquence. Among the illustrations he adduces of the effect of eloquence, he reminds us of the story of Keskarrah, an old Indian of the Slave and Dog-ribbed tribes, who, being seated one day at the door of his tent near Fort Enterprise, and seeing a large bear making towards him, evidently with carnivorous intentions, addressed the intruder in the following able speech—"Oh, Bear! I never did you any harm; I have always had the highest respect for you and your relations, and never killed any of them except through necessity; go away, good bear, and let me alone, and I promise not to molest you." The bear instantly departed. Roderick wants to know if it wouldn't be well to have such a man as Keskarrah among us from this till November next?

☞ Diogenes has rolled out of his tub, and been philosophizing in the Park. He sends us many verses, none very good, and a great many very bad. As a specimen, first to hand comes what he calls

A SIMILE IN THE PARK.

I stood beside the fountain, and its spray
Like blessed three-cent pieces sprinkled o'er me,
Flung up (so all of our young bards would say)
As small change for the golden fish before me.

But ah! no matter how the wind will play,
The self-sustaining Fountain has a knack
(Like all obliging brokers, by the way,)
Of getting half its change in shape of discount back.

Another, evidently penned while the author was under that peculiar influence he rather bunglingly attempts to describe, is as follows:

It was a day of subter-mundane hottishness,
Which fact did make necessity,
To usher in the night with sottishness,
And end it in obesity.

Oh, who can shape that dread line of declivity!
'Tis so near perpendicular,
That slides a coon, with sprawling dumb activity,
No where in particular.

Oh, who can fix, with arithmetic suavity,
The point where gay propriety
Just takes one glass too much, with drunken gravity,
And sees no more sobriety.

But who, with self-abusive, pale peculiarity,
Forgets the next morn's dizziness,
Which, spite of all his well-known regularity,
Makes him abhor his business.

Diogenes here begins to growl; therefore we cut short his communication. Like our friend "Shamrock," of late, he must have been "out on a bender;" but, unlike him, he had no old maid to satirize, and even if he had, he was minus the strength and humor to "clank her lank shank" with all the irresistible comicality of Swaine Buckley, with the bone castanets.

Declined.—"Notes from a Tinder-box, or how to preserve Fireworks against dampness, by a practical pyrotechnist." Had the writer accompanied this with "our usual advertising rates," we would have published it as an advertisement, previous to the Fourth. It will keep until next year. J. H. Your "Emmet's Grave" is not without some melody, but it lacks force. Here is a specimen—Hibernia is beside the grave:

She tuned her wild harp, but no mortal may hear
Such strains, and remain on this Time-rolling sphere;
'Twas the language of Heaven, and spirits of clay,
To hear it, should melt with its echoes away.

She sang till the vales were dissolved into tears;
She rose as the sun in the eastward appears,
And piercing the mists of the future, she smiled
As an angel might bend o'er the dreams of a child.

Received—"Desiderum," by F. O, R.

Declined—O. K. Lines to the White House (without precedent.) D. E. D. A Death Chant—"Slowly raise the bier" (evidently the word "lager" has been unintentionally omitted.) Jack o'Lantern—(you must be a blue-light, friend Jack.) "The End of the World," by Marcus—(we doubt if Marcus has had mentally a beginning in the world yet. Time enough to think of an end when he has.

T. L. writes to correct a mistake in a Kilkenny Man's Notes from the Nore, in our last issue. T. L. states that it was from the "Citizens' Club Rooms," not the Mechanics' Institute, Dr. Cane retired, on the occasion referred to, "there being no such place as the Mechanics' Institute in William street."

We will regularly send a copy of the News to any part of Ireland, on receipt of subscription at the rate of 16s. sterling per annum.

Mr. Sullivan, our California agent, desires us to state, that though we send the News to subscribers there, from here, at the rate of $3 per annum, he has to charge $5 to those who receive it through him.

Mr. P. H. McCAWLEY has received our authority to collect Subscriptions and Advertisements for the "Irish News," throughout the Canadas.

MR. J. J. CONWAY, has a similar mission for the States of New-York, New-Jersey and Pennsylvania.

We bespeak the kind assistance of our friends for both gentlemen.

We desire it to be perfectly understood, that our Agents are always provided with our written authority, and for them we believe we can promise uniform politeness and gentlemanly consideration.

☞ Mr. P. H. McCAWLEY has not reported. We suspend all authority delegated to him until we hear from him.

THE IRISH NEWS.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, JULY 12, 1856.

YOUNG IRELAND IN NICARAGUA.

Apart from the interest which the struggle of a beautiful country to ennoble its condition inspires, there are special circumstances interwoven with the events occurring in Nicaragua which excite our attention. Attention is a cold word. The events we speak of excite our sympathy, solicitude and pride. Numbers of young Irishmen are in arms for Nicaragua. A communication in the New-York Sun mentions their wearing green branches in their hats on the march from Granada to the battle of Rivas. They wore them in place of the shamrock, in memory of Ireland. Right gallantly the brave boys have thrown their lives and fame into the conflict, the issue of which determines the future of Nicaragua.

No wonder. Their passion for national freedom, and all that conduces to it, impelled them to the fight. They repeat the story which has been told of their people a hundred times. Wherever a nation has leaped up to break its chains and strangle its oppressor, the sympathies of Ireland have torn a channel for themselves to the glorious scene.

When all along the base of the Andes the rule of Spain went to pieces—a war-ship upon a reef—did not a hearty cheer break out from Carnsore to Ennis? Were there not bonfires on the iron cliffs of Clare? Did not O'Connell lift up his mighty arm and voice, hailing the event as one of promise to his people and warning to their foes. At the mouth of the Orinoco, whose were the lances that threatened the chivalry of Castille? A few weeks before, they flashed in the sun which gilds the granite-crown of Killiney. Carried by Irish youths—most of them of gentle blood, education, and courtly accomplishments—they were destined, under Devereux, to mingle their silver splendors on the Plaza of Caracas in the victorious inauguration of Bolivar!

Early in the month of August, 1830, in a spacious, lofty-pillared building on Usher's quay, in the city of Dublin, thousands were assembled. A platform, decorated with the Tri-color of France, rivetted every eye and heart. Sheil was there. Moore was there. Honest Jack Lawless, with his coat thrown back over his shoulders, and his thumbs inside the arm-holes of his waistcoat, stood pompously in front of them. O'Gorman Mahon, the puissant chevalier of the Catholic campaign, in his green cut-away coat and brass buttons, waving a tri-colored handkerchief, divided with Tom Steele the applauses of the crowd. O'Connell towered above them all.

Charles the Tenth had taken to his heels, leaving behind him in the Court-yard of St. Cloud his crown, smeared with blood and choked with the rumpled Ordonances he had drawn up, himself and Polignac, against the press, the people, and the deputies. Once again did the sublime Marsellaise shake the towers of Notre Dame. Once again did the grim Faubourg St. Antoine thunder at the Tuilleries. Republicanism, trampled down on the bridge of Lodi, buried under the cannon of Marengo, had thrown off the pyramids, thrones, triumphal columns of the Empire, and the flimsy footstool of the Restoration. France again was free. Free to avenge the perfidies that had made her famous at the expense of her liberties. Free to avenge the fouler perfidies which had humbled her in presence of the victories speaking to her from the monumental brass of the Place Vendome.

For this resurrection of the people of France, there flew all through Ireland the noblest joy. On the day of which we speak, the finest impersonations of her genius, the sweetest and brightest of her poets, the greatest of her orators, chronicled the event in lyric tones and periods fraught with the thunder of the Forum.

And so it was in other epochs. The lyre that has given to the world in deathless melodies the sorrows, hopes, and beauties of Ireland, made the arbutus groves and holy ruins of the sweet poor land of our birth familiar with the festive and heroic harmonies of Greece. Byron did more for the land of Miltiades than Moore. But he could not love her more than the minstrel whose sorrowful sweetness found a solace in the Evenings that gladden the Ægean.

So prompt and impetuous is this sympathy amongst Irishmen with every nation in arms for its freedom, that even where the merits of the contest are doubtful—even where it is questionable if freedom can at-all eventuate—their good words and deeds have been given in the fullest measure. Even the name of freedom is enough. So it was in the Carlist war. The cause of Christina was the one enthusiastically upheld in Ireland. The four Provinces united round her standard. The homes on the Boyne, as well as those of the Shannon, with equal alacrity sent forth the flower of their youth to the fierce quarrel of the Spanish Succession. Joyously and proudly the young men of Ireland flung themselves into that bloody broil—joyously, proudly and bravely they bared their swords to the storm which drenched with blood and withered with red lightnings the olives of Spain—for in the name of freedom their manhood had been invoked. De Lacy Evans and his Legion swept the Sierras of the Ebro and Guadalquiver, as the O'Doghertys and O'Donnells did the fords, woods and bogs, under Red Hugh, from Dal-riada to Desmond.

The year which saw the sceptre and dynasty of the House of Orleans flung from the summit of the Column of July, and lying in shreds and splinters on the Place Bastille, is fresh in the minds of all. Applauding the revolutions which from one end of Europe to the other overturned, as though they were ignoble idols, the tyrants of the people, Ireland was hurled with the full force of her memories, vengeance and enthusiasm to the fatal field, where the weapon was broken in her hand before she had time to strike.

With these precedents inspiring them, and the military spirit flashing brightly through them, and the love of freedom and adventure stirring them as restlessly as it did the generations just gone before them, no wonder that now-a-days we hear of the Irish in Granada, fighting in the service of that Republic to give it a name, liberty, and a proud station in the future. Success and honor to them! Despite the calamities that have toppled on their homes, and the mean condition to which their country has been reduced, and the jabberings and slanders that have been heaped upon it in that condition, they prove the soundness and fertility of the stock from which they come, and on a narrow isthmus, with the old and new worlds as their witnesses, transmit, as soldiers of freedom, the martial celebrity of their race.

DEATH OF AUGUSTIN THIERRY.

During the present century, France, if unstable and giddy in almost every other phase of her political and literary career, has been the persistent, patient, and illustrious teacher of the world in one of the highest moods to which the human intellect can be excited or inspired. If the harp of the "poor old Chansonnier" Beranger, with its clashing tones of steel and silver, has been for many years hung up, living on the thrilling vibrations which can never die while Democracy needs a text, or Love a coy excuse; if there are no orators like the mighty Mirabeau, the audacious Danton, and the virtuous Vergniaud; if in Poetry and Oratory France is behind the era, bounded on the one hand by the rise of Napoleon and the restoration of the Bourbons on the other, she is undeniably before all the world in the wealth which her historians have conferred on her language and literature. Guizot, Thiers, Sismondi, Thierry, Michelet, Quinet, Lamartine, Michaud, Barante, Louis Blanc, are names which each invoke a various splendor, not only a brilliant, but a profound individuality of thought, leading forth, as it were, into a continuous and stately movement before the mind's eye, the hidden, the teeming, the fitful, the regal and revolutionary generalities of ancient and modern history.

Both in the manner of compilation and the art of writing, these men have struck out new paths. They are the conquer-ers of chronicles—analyzers of annals, not the re-publishers of them, and, in fact, well may be termed in a literary sense what many of them are politically—heroes of history. They understand truly and feel deeply that history is philosophy teaching by example; and following the examples which it is their province to exhume from musty archives and unread tons of stupidly-swathed truths, they seek to sound the philosophy indicated. They are not chronological catalogue-makers. They do not merely weld dates together, but they labor diligently, even unto darkness as did Augustin Thierry, to expound the real causes, not the mere superficial symptoms, which by mighty throbs and hearty action forced those dates into gigantic importance on the roll-call of Time.

Charles James Fox said the position of the historian should be after the poet, and before the orator. He had not read Thierry, Michelet, Blanc, or Lamartine, or instead of having them in rotation, he would have placed them abreast—history still keeping its position between poetry and oratory—being as strong a combination of both as is possible to be without rendering secondary the peculiar and leading characteristic suggested by its name.

A late mail from Europe brought us intelligence of the death of one of those deeply bright intellects who have shed such lustre on the department of letters we have alluded to. Though the eminent author had been for years, with blind eyes and useless body, but a passive monument chronicling the labors of the past—and though able hands have thrown such chaplets on his living tomb as are rarely placed upon the resting-place of the dead, still, as the great blind man has awakened from his earth-slumber in the land of light and love—has gone journeying hence—it is but just that we collect the memories he has left us into one mental wreath, that our admiration may partake somewhat of the unity so remarkable in the intellectual character and studies of the historian.

Sprung from the people, his sympathies were ever with them, ever on the side of liberality and rational freedom. He was alike opposed to the revolutionary exactitude amid which he was born, and the morbid slothfulness of the Imperial regime. Not less was his distaste for the English constitution. He yearned for a freedom, the offspring (to use his own words) of "a government with the greatest possible amount of individual guarantees, and the least possible amount of administrative action." In other words, he came near to that idea which so well characterizes the Democratic faith in this country, that the best government is that which governs least.

Born on the 20th of May, 1795, of poor and humble parents, the future historian went through his studies in his native town with distinction and success. With a vivid imagination, and an energy only equalled by his sensibility, it is no wonder that the writings of Chateaubriand aroused the youth into an almost ecstatic frenzy.

Forming, soon after leaving college, a strong attachment for St. Simon, he flung himself with ardor into the study and illustration of the political economy peculiar to that remarkable man. Hazlett, in his brief but brilliant biographical notice of Thierry, calls our attention to the fact that at the time he became secretary and disciple of St. Simon, the latter "had propounded no idea of constructing anything at all resembling a new religion. This was a notion which occurred to him much later, if indeed it be not altogether a posthumous crotchet, gratuitously attributed to him by his successors." The connection, however, from which several pamphlets sprung, did not long continue, and Thierry, at the age of twenty-two, sought employment in the columns of the Censeur Europeén, a liberal journal of reputation. Here he commenced the publication of those researches into, and vigorous combinations of historical lore, which have so delighted all classes of readers. These sketches of the English revolutions from the invasion by William of Normandy, down to the sixteenth century, he collected, adding thereto, and published in 1825 with the title Histoire de la Conquete d' Angleterre par les Normands. The Censeur being discontinued he furnished to the Courrier Francais another series which he collected in 1827 under the title of Lettres sur l'Histoire de France; both of these works immediately created a sensation which still continues unabated among students and thinkers. In 1830 their author was elected a member of the Academie des Inscriptiones et Belles Lettres. Dividing his time from 1831 to 1836 between Vesoul and the baths of Luxeuil, he was chiefly occupied in collecting the writings of his youth—for he had become a premature old man—and in revising the works mentioned. His Dix Ans des Etudes, made its appearance in 1834, and his Recits des Temps Merovingiens, in the following year, having previously appeared in the Revue des Deux Mondes. The latter obtained from the French Academy the Baron Gobert prize of two thousand dollars. At various times he had leagued with M. Mignet and M. Guizot for the production of historical works, but both speculations were unfortunately abandoned.

When not more than twenty-seven, the indefatigable nature of his studies, which so illuminated and excited the eyes of others, darkened his—he became blind—a misfortune which, a couple of years afterwards, was heightened by a nervous malady, which, in time, deprived him of motion. Impending blindness did not quiet his historic thirst, and aided by one who became his secretary, a man then obscure, but destined as well for a proud position among the writers of his day, as a melancholy death—Armand Carrel, the great historian pursued those studies so dear to him.

In 1831, Thierry married Julie de Quarangal, a woman whose devotion to her husband, pride in him, and beautiful nature, made his eye-closed life a dream of domestic happiness. Her soul, her grandeur, her attention, by a divine dispensation, were to him as eyes and hands. She was the communicating spirit between her great husband and his worshippers, the world. If Thierry was fortunate in his genius, he was more fortunate in the genii in the shape of his wife, who so aided to keep filled the treasury of his intellect, by the magnificent and continued outlay of which he startled the reading world. Gifted with high literary powers, and the authoress of some charming productions, his wife anticipated his every want, illuminated his darkness, swayed beneath the exigencies of his maladies like a gentle slave, and rose triumphant above them like an angel.

Thomas Davis believed Thierry superior to Livy; and characterized his "Merovingian Era" as "the lasting and finished image of past times." It is impossible in the space allotted that we can indulge in any extensive criticism on the noble words of our author; and must be satisfied with this graphic and truthful opinion, also by Davis: "There is more deep dramatic skill, more picturesque and colored scenery, more distinct and characteristic grouping, and more lively faith to the look and spirit of men and times aad feelings of which he writes, in Thierry, than in any other historian that ever lived. He had almost an intuition in favor of liberty, and his vindication of the 'men of '98' out of the slanderous pages of Musgrave, is a miracle of historical skill and depth of judgment."

SMITH O'BRIEN ON GREECE.

The following characteristic letter from Smith O'Brien will be read not only with the interest which attaches to everything connected with so truly eminent a man, but for the glimpse of Modern Greece so clearly given, and the political conclusions which his observations in that classic region indicate. Every sentence sustains the principles which are typical of O'Brien's greatness and misfortunes. He extols the means by which the "simple mountaineers of Parnassus" enjoy and illustrate as genuine a civilization as can be met with in the exclusiveness of London Clubs, or the heartier bon-hommie of Parisian Cafes. His allusion to the insurrectionary movements of 1854, in Greece, are made with his usual conservative democratic candor; all that he evidently feels cause of difference with, being the time when the Greek patriots arose against the "cruel oppression" which they have inherited from the Turk. On the educational progress of Greece, as a means of national strength and revolutionary resource, O'Brien does not place too high an importance. Almost the same words he applied to Ireland. He could not say more or less to Greece:

ATHENS, May 21, 1856.

DEAR SIR—Being desirous to present to the University of Athens a copy of a work in two volumes which I have recently published, under the title of "Principles of Government," I shall feel much obliged if, as representative of the University, you will cause it to be deposited in the Library.

I avail myself of this opportunity of offering my thanks to the professors for having been permitted, in company with my son, to attend several lectures at the University. Although I am aware that your halls are thrown open gratuitously to all who desire the different courses of instruction, I am not the less sensible of the polite cordiality with which the professors welcomed our presence.

We have observed with the greatest pleasure that in this country, a most eager desire for instruction exists among all classes, and that the government has endeavored to encourage these tendencies by promoting the establishment of schools for primary and intermediate education, as also by aiding the resources of your University, an institution which, I believe, owes its foundation to the public spirit of enlightened and patriotic individuals. These efforts have not been unproductive of fruit, and I much doubt whether there is a town in Europe, inhabited by a population commensurate with that of Athens, which has made a greater progress in intellectual development.

This progress is the more remarkable when it is remembered that in other countries the resources accumulated during the past ages are brought to assist the intellectual operations of the present generation, whereas the very existence of modern Greece as a member of the European family claims no longer space of time than about a quarter of a century.

The same observation applies also to industrial development. When it is remembered that almost every town and every field in Greece was laid waste by the Turks during the war of independence, the traveller is disposed to wonder that so much had been done, though I have perceived with regret that some things have been left undone which might have been accomplished without much trouble or expense.

"I feel it to be due to a people from whom we have experienced much kindness and hospitality, to offer my testimony in refutation of some of the misrepresentations which have been circulated in Western Europe with respect to the social condition of Greece, and which describe its inhabitants as a semi-barbarous people.

"Having just returned from an excursion in the northern provinces, during which my son and I rode about 300 miles unaccompanied by guards, and during which we had opportunities of conversing familiarly with men of all classes, from the monarch to the humblest peasant, I have come to the conclusion that there is at least as much of genuine civilization, if that word be used in the proper meaning, among the simple mountaineers of Parnassus as is to be found in the clubs of London or in the cafes of Paris. Let me add that during our tour we did not see a single drunken man and were solicited for alms by only one beggar, a cripple without hands. I know no part of the United Kingdom, or of France, respecting which a stranger could make a similar observation.

That Brigandage exists in part of Greece, and specially in that part of the country through which we have recently travelled, is a fact which cannot be denied. Causes which lie beyond the control of the wisest statesman have at various times occasioned outbreaks of this social disease; but in candor, it ought to be observed that the greater part of Greece is as free as other portions of Europe from this calamity, and that great energy is at present directed towards its total suppression in those sections of the country in which it still exists.

The misrepresentations to which I allude have been occasioned, in great measure, by the proceedings which took place in connection with the insurrectionary movements of Thessaly and Epirus in 1854. I am not prepared to contend that those proceedings were consistent with political wisdom. They placed the Greek nation in antagonism with the two most powerful states of Western Europe, at a moment when those states were closely allied with Turkey.

But, whatever may have been the motives of the individuals, there can be no doubt that a great majority of the Greeks who took part in that movement were animated solely by a passionate desire, highly honorable to those who entertained it, to rescue their fellow countrymen now resident in the Turkish dominions from that cruel oppression of which their own fathers had so long been victims. Had this movement taken place at a more favorable moment, it would probably have been hailed with enthusiastic approbation by the public opinion of Europe.

Believing that the Hellenic race still possesses those heroic and civil virtues for which their ancestors were distinguished; believing also that the various elements of which it consists are destined to form hereafter one great and combined nation, I should feel disposed, if I were a Greek, to make little account of undeserved reproaches. On the other hand, sound policy appears to suggest that Greek patriotism should abide the progress of events, and avoid external collisions, while, in the meantime, it should cultivate to the utmost all the resources, material, moral, and intellectual, with which your country has been so richly endowed by Providence, In the performance of these honorable duties the university which you represent naturally bears an important part.

"With best wishes for the success of its noble functions, I have the honor to be,

"Faithfully yours, WM. SMITH O'BRIEN."

"To M. Pillicas, Representative of the University."

At a period like the present, the return of a man with such inflexible integrity, with a political faith of such deep foundation, strengthened and beautified by the meditations of a long exile, and the not less profound observations during the past two years of the growth of European society, since his banishment—of its appearance and working on the ruins of the crushed revolutions of '48, and through the "heated term" of the Eastern War—the return to Ireland now of such a man should be a boon to that country, like the first dawn of reason to one raving and restless with the imbecile throbs of fever.

O'Brien has the heart to feel, and the cultivation to make his guidance a blessing. He has no connection with any of the mad parties who have reeled and fought over the corpse of Ireland. He comes with a calm judgment, a pure, intrepid heart, a mind of the highest culture, into a land in which politics, like the Tipperary Bank, is one monstrous swindle, and he comes to sustain the good, and by his presence alone to shame the corrupt and wavering.

Whilst Smith O'Brien lives there is a soul of honor in old Ireland, and there is hope and glory for her.

THE EUROPEAN STAGE.

The arrival of the Baltic, on last Sunday, brought us English dates to the 25th ult. Notwithstanding that some of the newspapers keep up a decent but rather undecided howl anent the Crampton dismissal, still the excitement is below par. The London Star publishes a letter from a correspondent who "sends his name" privately, and claims relationship with the ex-Minister, notwithstanding which, he shows "that the public good has been sacrificed to Lord Clarendon's private friendship" for Crampton.

The London Times has altered its opinion. It would not, for the world, question Mr. Crampton's zeal and activity; but, in its own words, "he wanted caution and dignity," and appears "not to have been considerate or particular enough in the means and the instruments he employed." Mr. Buchanan's nomination is the next question "in order;" and the Times, reprinting the Cincinnati platform, which it does not consider "pleasant reading," as it is "self-willed," &c., warns the Government to settle up Central American affairs before Mr. Buchanan becomes President, the latter being a prospective fact needless to discuss. The polite Thunderer would rather not "leave to Mr. Buchanan the trouble of discovering some new doctrine of the Monroe class in the settlement of the remaining differences between us."

The news from the European Continent is not of importance. Russia we are informed has returned to its every-day life.

The Emperor has called together a new Cabinet, which includes Gortschakoff, (Foreign Affairs,) Lanskoi, Ostensacken and Orloff.

In France the chief interest pertains to the question of the Regency.

The Pope has nominated six new Cardinals, of whom three are Italians, two Austrians and one French.

The town of Kars had been surrendered to the Turks, and the Turkish troops had evacuated the fortress of Redout Kaleh.

Literature.

PERSONAL RECOLLECTIONS.

THE GALWAY ELECTION—MORE OF IT.

It was a fierce contest. Night and day the combatants were at the work. For more than a week they fought. From dawn to sun-down, the battle surged and thundered within the Court-house. From sun-down to dawn, the theatre, the lanes, the streets, some of the oldest houses in the city, the suburbs, the roads all round, were scenes of furious action.

The theatre was a ridiculous old building. The walls inside were salmon-colored. The paint, here and there and everywhere, had been rubbed off. Occasionally some desperate gashes appeared. The white underground shone through these. Monstrous noses, boldly delineated with burnt stick, revealed themselves in swelling curves upon the walls. Cobwebs were plentiful. They were there by the yard, the perch, the mile. They were there in pocket-book editions and the folio size. They were there as small as a snuff-box and as huge as a bale. It was a warehouse of cobwebs.

Two or three of the side-scenes were standing. One was a stricken oak. Another, a dingy pilaster with an Ionic volute. A third represented an abutment of sand-stone, with an iron ring hanging out of it—a large black pudding describing a circle on the door of a kitchen. A few yards of the curtain still clung to the top of the proscenium. The gas foot-lights seemed very little better off than the rest of the furniture. They were dismally out of repair. Most of them were no better than rush-lights. A few of them did too much. Extravagant beyond control, they went literally to blazes. The rest of them, choked with dust, and otherwise incapacitated, were not a spark of use.

Nothing more favorable can be said of the stage. Full of holes; with a trap-door now and then giving way; with a scene-roller at intervals breaking loose from the ropes, or the ropes snapping; with the scantiest allowance of light; bare walls on either side, and a bare wall in the rear; it was the most disreputable old platform any patriot could have the infatuation to stand on. For years no tragic step had made it creak. For years no ghost had risen through the shifting apertures from the musty regions underneath. For years no death by bowl or dagger had provoked the approving thunders of the soapless gods.

Seven o'clock, every evening of the contest, saw that paint less, lustreless, dishevelled temple of the Drama in possession of the stormiest crowd. Pit, boxes, galleries, every seat, every standing-place, from floor to ceiling, were black with people. The orchestra didn't escape. The first into the theatre, the moment the front doors were opened, had that. Instead of trombones and fiddles, basoons and kettle-drums, we had devoted Repealers who beat time with their heels, and previously to the chair being taken, enthusiastically whistled Garryowen with variations. One of these performers was a man of huge limbs, upwards of six feet in height. His shoulders were broad enough to carry a dray, whilst the girth and shape of his arm realized what has been told us of the colossal pugilist of Crotona. This famous Italian carried a young bullock over forty yards, and then killed it with one blow of his fist. Our friend in the orchestra might easily have accomplished a similar feat. He was the image of Hugh in the story of Barnaby Rudge. Every inch as sinewy and large, he was as wild and shaggy in appearance, and almost as desperate in his onslaughts. During the election his exploits were terrific. In the Court-house, the day of the nomination, he seized four men round the neck with his right arm, and crushed them together as if they were walnuts and he himself was a nutcracker. Another time he pulled a big Sergeant of Hussars clean off his horse—saddle, saddle-cloth and all—with one jerk at the spurred heel of the trooper.

About twelve o'clock one night, he called on one of theConfederates. Creeping inch by inch softly into the room on tip-toe, he stood with his broken hat in his hand—his brown mass of hair strewed about his face and shoulders, and his coarse shirt, spattered with mud, torn open from his throat—the very picture of a Rapparee outlaw.

"I'm done for," says Mullin.

"How so—what's the matter now?"

"Done for," says Mullin.

"Let us know how?"

"It's up with me entirely," says he.

"But what's the matter?" asks his friend, the Confederate.

Mullin straightens himself up, twirls his hat twice, throws back with his left hand half a dozen brown flakes off his face, and leaning over towards the table where his confidential adviser was sitting, in a dismal whisper informs him, that he's had no less than eleven Petty Session notices served on him for assault and battery, since morning.

"Now, what's to be done?" said he.

"Make them a dozen," was the prompt reply of his Counsel.

Mullin, without saying a word, but with a comical shrug of one shoulder, walked out. Slowly and heavily he descended the stairs, plaintively whistling as he went, but making up his mind to make it the dozen. He did so. Mullin was the terror of Monahan. He was the terror of every man of the Government party. The latter would have been beaten to rags, were it not for the sabres of the Hussars and the bayonets of the Police. Mullin would have done it. Alone, he'd have fluttered the Volsces in Corioli.

A little after seven, the chair in the theatre was usually taken. The chair was a picturesque piece of stage furniture. Made entirely of the plainest wood, with a high arched back, and no openings between the legs, it was painted to harmonize with the color of the walls. It had been the judgment-seat of the Doge in the Merchant of Venice; had, also, supported in their dying moments several dynasties of Kings and Queens, and, with its back to the audience, and the help of a little black and white canvas, had served as the rostrum from which Mark Antony, more than once, poured out his eloquent sorrows over the senseless body of Cæsar. It was all that was left of the gorgeous palaces, temples, villas, banquet-halls and solemn courts of justice, which had collapsed and withered into cobwebs.

One evening the orators and committee were half an hour late. The people, grown utterly impatient, and despairing of the usual performance, resolved on having something by way of a change.

It was very near eight o'clock, when a few of us entered the Green-room. From the door opening on to the stage, we beheld the chair planted close to the foot-lights, and a number of legs and arms, with a head and a pretty big stick, flashing from it on all sides. They were evidently keeping time to a rollicking song.

"I'm a ranting roving blade,
Of never a thing was I ever afraid;
I'm a gentleman born, I scorn a trade,
And I'd be a rich man if my debts were paid!
Right fal-lal de-lal lal."

This was the sentiment of the singer, and in this sentiment, in ranting roving chorus, the tumultuous theatre seemed to concur. They had voted some frolicsome vagabond into the chair, and this bright lad with his hat tipped on three hairs, and the wrists of his coat turned up, was flourishing a beautiful knobby bit of blackthorn in the handsomest style, striking out with his elbows and fists, and handling his legs with bewildering ease and rapidity. Now and then, when he chanced to do something perfectly marvellous—when the blackthorn gave an extra twirl or two, or his elbows and toes seemed to strike one another and knock fresh music out of his throat—there was a roar of applause, during which the shillelagh and legs worked away as if the boy were possessed.

The Committee having arrived, we moved towards the vocalist. A shout, lusty enough to sweep every cobweb, the toughest and blackest from the walls, greeted our entrance on the stage. Again and again it broke out. The ranting roving blade, carried away with the enthusiasm of his art, infatuated with the belief that it was all meant for him, redoubled his efforts and continued his song. We continued to advance. He continued his song. We came closer. The shouts grew louder. The blackthorn frantically swept the air, the elbows shot out right and left, the legs fairly flew asunder. Closer still. Up to the chair. Deafening shouts! The roving blade was one blaze of musical and gymnastic insanity!

In the midst of the next chorus he saw it all. One sudden glance to the left disclosed to him the Committee and Dublin deputations, Tom Steele at their head. The stick fell from his grasp. His head fell back. His hat fell off. His legs shot out, and quivered at full length. 'Twas all over with him. The thought stunned him. Recovering a little, he leaped headlong from the salmon-colored chair into the densely-packed orchestra, and disappeared for the rest of the contest. I never saw him after that night. I never heard that any one else did. Indeed, I never heard that he was seen in Galway again. His hat and favorite blackthorn, left behind on the surface as he vanished with a plunge, were charitably fished up by the treasurer of the Committee, carried away as trophies, and deposited in the library of that gentleman.

The speeches in the theatre can be easily imagined. They were philippics against the Whigs. They were panegyrics on Repeal. The servility of the landlords—the Marquis of Clanricarde especially—swelled many an indignant period. From the graves with which the famine had crowded the land, flowers of the darkest hue sprang up. With the hard stern facts which years of vicious government had set one upon another, these flowers were woven. It was the ruin and the ivy. Both had their roots in the soil strewed with wreck, and consecrated to the dead. The history of the Whigs, in connection with the popular party in Ireland, was laid open with the boldest hand. Tom Steele denounced them as the deadliest enemies to Repeal. The Rev. Mr. Roche spoke with a thrilling emphasis of the "cruel and criminal policy of the Whig government." That the people were reduced to starvation; that all the corn and Indian meal stored in Galway was permitted to rot; that the gain of the English merchants was preferred to the very lives of the people; that coroner's inquests daily and hourly took place, whilst the store-houses and granaries were overflowing; these, he said, and many other evils, were the rank fruit of the policy maintained by that heartless government. Richard O'Gorman, Michael Joseph Barry and Michael Doheny, shook that old building with an eloquence which would have saved Galway the disgrace of being beaten by the public prosecutor of the British Government, if eloquence could have availed against the power of a corrupt government, backed by a servile aristocracy, and hundreds of tenants reduced to serfdom.

There were many of the voters just as corrupt as the government themselves. There were some who laid out their votes for sale just as openly as an apple-woman does her Golden Russedens and Sweet Williams. They asked high prices, too. One old thief was exorbitant. A pawnbroker by profession, he was a politician by trade. Inhabiting two rooms on the third floor of a gloomy gaunt Spanish house, there was a quaint picturesqueness surrounding him which would have made, and may still render him, an attractive figure in an Irish romance.

The house was very large. A dark low passage led to a still darker staircase, up which one groped to the duskiest lobbies, which again opened into the gloomiest chambers. These chambers were wide and lofty, but it was somehow a very subdued light which their four walls imprisoned. Imprisoned is the word, for the light never played in them. It was dull—it was stagnant. It seemed to have been shut up in those big coffins of masonry, and to have grown stale and decayed. The windows were square. Massive stone mullions gave them a deep thick-set frown on the outside. The staunch stone-work in which the small diamond-shaped panes of greenish glass flickered, and the lead sashes in which these pieces of mournful crystal were set, deepened the gloom inside. Everything in and out of those Andalusian houses wore a frown. The protruding parapet up there, seven stories above the rough pavement, was a petrified frown. The stone carvings under the parapet, were ever-so-many gray frowns. The door-way was an arch frown. The whole front of the house was a ponderous frown. Within, as I have hinted, it wasn't a whit better.

In such a house lived the corrupt pawnbroker. Reported to be wealthy, he sluggishly spun out on crumbs his existence in rags. One of the two rooms he rented served as a kitchen, a nursery, an audience chamber for his distressed friends, and a refectory where he picked his occasional meal. Lubberly as a sloth, he was as sly as a fox. The moment the election began, he slipped off his clothes and slipped into bed. He was determined to be bought. Was determined to be bought at the highest possible price. With this determination he got into bed and gave out he was sick. The greater the difficulties the buyers had in getting him to market, the greater the inducements, to his walking that way, the considerate contractors were likely to offer. The difficulty of finding them enhances the value of the emeralds of Granada. The pawnbroker knew this. The difficulty of gathering it, infuses a fresh lustre into the sapphire. This, too, the pawnbroker knew. His logic was perfect.

For the first five days of the election no one took notice of him. No one mentioned him. No one thought of him even. He might have been dead—stone dead—instead of pretending to be a little indisposed. He must have grown weary of his speculation. The time must have been heavy with him in his blankets. There was no one to visit him.

Drawing close to the last day of the contest, every vote was of consequence. It was now a neck-and-neck race. The registry book was anxiously scrutinized. It was sharply scrutinized. It was scrutinized with the eye of a proof-reader, or that of a London detective. Not a voter's name appeared on the ruled sheets but was studied, sifted, hunted, as it were, into its remotest recesses. Even the voters reported to be dead, reported to be away at sea, reported to be off in some Terra del Fuego, or Sandwich Island, became the subjects of inquiry, anxious, profound, and persevering. After which search and exploration, it's no wonder that the poor invalid pawnbroker was found out. An active agent of O'Flahertie's Committee asked me to accompany him on a visit to the patient. I consented to do so. Indeed, urged by curiosity, I cheerfully assented.

"Come in."

This came from a very weak voice. We had heard that the inmate of the room at which we knocked was laid up—the whole town had suddenly heard of it and wakened up sympathetically to the disconsolate fact—and the tenderness of the tones in which we were desired to come in confirmed the report. Gently, noiselessly, stealthily we opened the door.

"Come in," said the sick man, coughing harshly but weakly, and drawing up the quilt.

"Mr. Cassidy," said my friend, in the sweetest notes possible, and bending towards him with all the affection of a family physician, "we've heard of your illness, and have called in to see you."

"Thank you, gentlemen, thank you," coughed out spasmodically the prostrate poor pawnbroker.

"You're aware, sir," continued the eloquent and active Repealer, "you're aware, sir"——

"I'm aware of nothing," hastily interposed the consumptive man, with a spit and a spasm, and some minutes' coughing.

"Most probably not, sir," resumed the Repealer; "for having been for so many days, so many months, a victim to neuralgia."

"It's not neuralgia," shouted the pawnbroker, with a jerk, kicking the quilt violently up at the foot of the bed.

"Well, then, sir," the patriotic agent calmly resumed, "not being professionally cognizant of your disease, I may have innocently erred in the few preliminary words which have fallen from me, and which courtesy, as well as a deep sympathy with your present condition"——

"Never mind my condition," was the gruff injunction which came from the blankets.

"Which," the eloquent and courteous gentleman continued, never minding the interruption, "your present condition inspired."

A toss of the blankets, a restless cough, a snuffle or two, and a flap of the patient's hand on the pillow.

"But I've come," said the kindly Samaritan, "principally to see you on business."

The sick man rose up in the bed, straightened his spectacles, looked keenly and piercingly through them, coughed heartily—just for a second or two—then clapping the sheets, spread down before him, with the palm of his hand, somewhat effectively exclaimed—too much so, indeed, for a man dropping off with consumption—

"Well, then, to business, if that's what you're on."

At Appleton's in Broadway, is to be seen a cast of a bust of Agassis, executed by Mr. King, the Boston Sculptor, and at the Astor Library another. It is said to be an excellent likeness, and of great merit in other respects—a fine massive head, expressive of the intellectual character of the distinguished naturalist.

An English paper says that M. Kossuth received exactly the same sum for his two lectures at Darlington as he did at Leeds, namely, £105.

Michael Banim, Esq., brother and co-laborateur of the celebrated Irish novelist, has been appointed to the postmastership of Kilkenny.

M. Thiers is about to publish a work on Hindoo art, which has engaged his almost undivided attention for the last three years.

* Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year 1856, by THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER, in the Clerk's office of the District Court of the U. States, for the Southern District of New-York.

Books Received.

The Captive Youths of Judah. A Story with a Moral. By Rev. Erasmus W. Jones.....	Derby & Jackson. E. Stephens.
Mrs. Stephens' Illustrated New Monthly for July
Annual Report from Mercantile Library Association.
Littel's Living Age. 631.....	Littel & Co., Boston.
John Halifax, Gentleman. By the author of the "Head of the Family," &c.....	Harper & Brothers.
What Then? an Answer to the Question, Would Infidelity, if prevalent, be inimical to the refinement and elevation of the mind? &c. By T. S. Mackintosh, author of "The Electrical Theory of the Universe"	H. P. Scheerder
Aid to Teachers and Students in Natural Philosophy, &c. By Frank G. Johnson, A. M., M. D.....	A. Ranney
Brownson's Quarterly Review, July.....	J. B. Kirker.

A HEAP OF HISTORY.

History of Europe, from the Fall of Napoleon in 1815 to the Accession of Louis Napoleon in 1852. By Sir Archibald Alison, Bart., &c. Vols. 1 and 2.

The Life and Travels of Herodotus in the Fifth Century before Christ; an imaginary Biography, founded on fact, &c. By J. Talboys Wheeler, F.R.G.S., &c. 2 vols.

The States and Territories of the Great West, &c.; with a Map and numerous Illustrations. By Jacob Ferris. Miller, Orton & Mulligan.

Memoirs of Henry the Eighth; with the Fortunes, Fates and Characters of his Six Wives, &c. By Henry William Herbert; author of the "Captains of the Greek and Roman Republics," &c. Miller, Orton & Mulligan.

Memoirs of the Court and Reign of Catherine the Second, Empress of Russia; with brief Survey of the Romanoff Dynasty, &c. By Samuel M. Smucker, A.M. Miller, Orton & Mulligan.

Life of George Washington. By Washington Irving. Vols. 1 and 2. G. P. Putnam & Co.

In this age of "Mitchel Compositors" and "Hoe Printing-presses," of setting type by machinery with all the ease, dexterity and precision by which Strakosch runs a "flirtation polka" off the keys of a piano; and of printing the said types by lightning—in these days when the industry of book-makers is worked to fever heat in almost vain attempts to keep up with the enterprise of mighty publishers, it is no easy task to keep count of the multitudinous books, that by the combination of writers, publishers, printers and pressmen, are poured upon us. Sometimes we are so swathed in newspapers, bandaged by pamphlets, and walled-in by books, that we somewhat resemble a mummy in a pyramid.

It would be as impossible for us to read all the good, bad and indifferent loads of paper and binding that come within our grasp, as it would be for Mr. Buchanan to remember all the people with whom he shook hands at his levee in the City Hall. To most of them we can barely give more than a recognition, while to a minor portion, through the necessities of the day, and our position with the reading public, we vouchsafe a more careful attention, and if we find them worth the companionship, introduce them to the people.

There is the germ of a decent little library in the works named at the head of this article; combining as they do much useful and needful reading; illustrating monumental eras in the world's history, and embracing the lives and characters of men—the household gods of classic and "civilized" times.

[Entre nous: "civilized" is a word largely used, if not wholly invented, by Exeter Hall philosophers and other howling dervishes, to characterize "our day," in contradistinction to that which produced the poets, orators, lawgivers and warriors, by the study of whose greatness, and the stuttering of whose thoughts we are supposed to be "civilized."]

The subjects and varied natures of the works under notice may be taken as fair evidence of the omnivorous and diverse hunger of the reading public. Here may we wander with Herodotus, by the kind permission of Mr. Talboys Wheeler, through the fair islands of the Ægean, confab with the beautiful pagans without any fear of being taken for a missionary on the one hand, or mistaken for an infidel on the other; for, alack, in those days the Greek and Roman churches only reverenced such jolly gods as the lightning-fingered Zeus, and the vine-armed Bacchus, the jealous Juno and the voluptuous Venus. We may—with the continued kind permission of Talboys Wheeler—wheel into Egypt, and behold the swarth stolidity of its architecture and faith, and getting tired of Herodotus and his anti-Christian wanderings and ponderings we may, all at once, and as the jugglers say, "by a slight turn of the wrist," turn with Mr. Jacob Ferris—the Herodotus, so to speak, of the West—into a dish of hog and hominy in Ohio, view the path of empire through the white-oak openings of Michigan; be absorbed—like a drop of ink on a waste of blotting-paper—in the great prairie of Illinois; bid good-morrow to the buffaloes of Minnesota; bathe in all of the great lakes, or dance down the Mississippi, and fancy ourself one of Bingham's jolly flat-boatmen. Here we have, too, one of the best of men and one of the worst of women brought into close historical proximity, and only separated from that flabby beast Henry the Eighth, and his harem of not less beastly wives, by the stalwart partition, in the shape of Alison's European History, which is a stout specimen of hard Tory energy.

Thus, surrounded by austere aristocracy and regenerating revolutionism—by bad kings and sublime democrats; by lewd women and wrothy warriors; by a revivified panorama of pagan ruins and people, and the fresh virtue of the yet barely trodden great West, by the mysterious magnetism of the lands of the Nile, and the confused grandeur of the impromptu empires of the Mississippi—thus, our attention demanded by Napoleonism, Romanoffism and Europe; by Washington and the Great West; by Henry and his Harem; by Herodotus and Hellas, besides the gentlemen who have all the aforesaid in charge, is it astonishing that we cannot—having but the usual amount of visual organ. give to each that "full scorching glance," they, each so impatiently and clamorously desire. The weather is hot, and if they will not excuse our not portraying them at full length, our readers in this region we are advised will feel satisfied with miniature pictures. Well then.

Sir Archibald Alison's present work is the first instalment of a continuation of his well-known partizan and voluminous History of Europe from the rise of the French revolution to the caging of Napoleon. Sir Archibald sustains his tory partisanship, and also promises to fully equal the voluminous character he so deservedly has won. Of the thirty-seven years to be embraced in the work when complete, the present two volumes give sixteen, bringing the reader down to the fall of Poland in 1831. If the material for his present history is not of so thrilling and restless a nature as that which lay at his hands for the previous work, still it is full of deep interest, in a social and literary point of view, and will not be wanting in those more dramatic effects which heroism lends to history. The struggle for Greek Independence, and the Spanish, Portuguese and Italian revolutions of 1820; the Russian and Turkish war of 1828–29, the brilliant uprising of the Poles two years later, the French democracy under Louis Phillippe, and the European upheaving—the "Titan energy gone mad" of 1848 will add a picturesque and clashing variation to the more tedious discussion of English Parliamentary debates. Making allowance for the particulor color of the glass through which Alison views all things, his work is highly commendable. The style is clear and vigorous, not overladen with documents, the use of which the author condemns in Sismondi, but with references sufficient to knock Lamartine speechless. The chapters devoted to the progress of science, art and literature of the particular eras are among the most interesting in the volumes. In Chapter V., Alison gives Scotland the honor of applying steam to Locomotion, and to America the credit of successfully using the discovery. He says:

"The first steamboat ever constructed was built by Mr. Miller, of Dalwinston, in 1797. One of the workmen engaged in its construction carried the secret to America, where it was eagerly embraced, and energetically carried into execution by Fulton in 1812."

In 1848, Judge Duer delivered an address before the St. Nicholas Society of this city, entitled "New-York as it was," &c., in which he said:—

"Our worthy fellow-citizen, Anthony Lamb, recollects seeing on the Collect (or Kolch, a pond situate near where the Five Points now stand,) as early as the year 1795, a boat with a screw propeller at the stern, driven by a steam engine; and other experiments are said to have been made there in the summer of 1796, or 1797, by John Fitch, the undoubted inventor of the art, with a common ship's yawl, into which he had placed a rude steam-engine of his own construction, with paddle-wheels at the side of his boat."

The fact of Fitch's experiment is undoubted. It is matter of history, also, that Chancellor Livingston built a steamer on the Hudson in 1797; and on incontroverted authority that Livingston was present at Fitch's previous experiments. That would seem conclusive evidence enough in favor of Fitch's application. But suppose the latter did not take place until "the summer of 1797," there was scarcely time for one of Mr. Miller's assistants to have reached America, Miller's boat being constructed in the same year, and very probably, for obvious reasons, in the summer, also. At all events, the experiment of 1795 gives New-York the credit of the first application of steam to locomotion. These facts are interesting, and may suggest to some of our readers other researches on the point.

Mr. Wheeler's volumes are devoted to meet the so-called "intellectual" mania of the age (i. e.), the discovery of a short cut—a north-west passage to knowledge. The idea which he has applied to Herodotus is not a new one, but he has made a good deal out of it, and in some instances much more than probably any other man would dared to do. This the author has the courage, also, to tacitly admit—shielding the improbabilities of his work under public necessity. If one were to roll that seven-league booted Pennsylvanian, Bayard Taylor, and that venturesome little woman, Ida Pfeiffer, into one, and issue the life and travels of Mrs. Bayard Ida Pfeiffer Taylor, or Mr. Ida Bayard Taylor Pfeiffer, it would be something approximating for our day, to what Mr. Talboys Wheeler has done by Herodotus in his. Writing an imaginary biography of the historian and geographer of Greece some four and a-half centuries before the Christian era, he sets his hero on his travels; and, driving him through all kinds of experiences in the most noted nations of the ancient world, he thereby makes an opportunity for the description of the manners, customs, laws, people, &c., of those places; all of which is done on the most approved classical authorities; and, being well shaken up and strained, presents a multum in parvo of antique history and geography.

Mr. Jacob Ferris is his own Herodotus and his own Talboys Wheeler. He has "rare experience of the great West," having visited almost every part of it this side of the Rocky Mountains," to see for himself the country, the growth of civilization, and the ways and means of the people there. The portion of his work not taken up with his own experiences and observation is quite allowable, under the circumstances, Mr. Ferris not having been born at the time alluded to. The said portions, however, are compiled from the original manuscripts of the explorers, and afford "information which has never before been placed in the hands of the general reader." The volume is full of useful information relating in every point of view to Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Michigan, Wisconsin, Iowa, Minnesota, and even to Kansas. It is a ready and necessary companion and counsellor for the emigrant—is clearly written, and accompanied by a serviceable map, several illustrations, and a table of distances, routes and conveyances.

Mr. Smucker, in prefacing his life of that scandalously great and greatly scandalous woman, Catherine the Second of Russia, says that in the performance of his labor "it was impossible to refrain from entering into some details, which, while they do not themselves in any way offend the most rigid modesty, yet describe events and incidents which are inconsistent with pure morality." Such is the result of "a full and true account" of one of the most sensual women of the world, one who had "fathomed and exhausted" every depth and excess of impurity. The same passions that inspired her to outrage her own sex, also gave her characteristics which even the bravest of the opposite one rarely possess. She was a woman of indomitable will and capacity; but even a vigorous recital of her purely historic character does not over-balance the depravity of her un-official career. Two causes of this woman's fate are apparent. First, and above all, she had no religious principle, which, whether known by name, form, or otherwise, is the only resource of adversity and the only balancer of success. Second, she married a man vastly her inferior, for whose person and intellect, or rather the want of it, she could only feel the most scornful contempt. Her crafty and ambitious nature was played into by men equally crafty and ambitious, who aggravated the defects and vices of her husband. On the other hand, he had an infatuated faith in her fidelity, which she specially turned to account to betray her nuptial vow. She plunged into intrigue and arose into history to disgrace it.

Mr. Herbert's clever volume on the amours of Henry touches with various feeling the misfortunes of the six wives. Most of them were decidedly bad women. The age in which they lived was bad, and they were highly characteristic of it. The first and last of those "ladies faire" command the deep sympathy of the reader. They were beautiful, gentle, and, to all appearance, virtuous. The rest, however, were not much removed from the sensual character, ambition and craft of Catherine of Russia, though they were less able, and more beautiful.

As we write, the eightieth anniversary of the birth-day of the Republic is drawing to a close. The night is beautiful; the storm of the noon has relieved the air of the oppressive heat of the days previous. We look out of the window. Brooklyn, stretching from Gowanus to Greenpoint, lies beneath us, and seems to lean over on its stronger, if less beautiful brother, New-York. The scene is like a dream; there is a sustained hum rolling up to our hill, like the sea caressing a fair strand and jangling the pebbles and shells into continuous tones of playfulness and admiration. On every side, far as we can see, like spray flashing up from the heaving tide of life, every variety of fire-works leap and prance with a beauty at once fitful and exciting. These illuminations, these mad and jovial ebullitions of a worthy joy, at once arousing the curiosity of young minds and rejuvenating old ones; these warn us that in a paragraph we cannot do justice to the character of that man who, more than any other with whom he was associated, sustained the vow made on this day eighty years back, and consequently bequeathed to the present the triumphal ovations which on all sides shut out the night. With these thoughts we will not enter upon any criticism of Washington Irving's delightful Life of George Washington, two volumes of which are before us. We must postpone that pleasure to a near date, when our space will allow us to do the subject, the author and ourselves justice.

Another Song from Blarney Lake.

Oh come to the river's rim, come there with me,
The field paths are fair by the clear winding Lee;
The ash-tree is bathed in the sun's crimson dye,
And the castles in grandeur lean back on the sky!

Oh come to the river's rim, come there with me,
The woodlands are fair by the clear winding Lee,
Where, sunk in the moss, rests the wood-sorrel flower,
And shyest birds sing in the sunniest hour!

And shy is my Nanny! yet ever to me
Her bosom beats freely as waves of the Lee;
And kindly it heaves, whensoever I start
Those clustering kisses so dear to my heart.

In childhood neglected, she drooped in the shade;
I brought her where Nature a bright shelter made—
Where flowers were her playmates, and sunshine and shower
Unfolded the leaflet and colored the flower.

And what on the fields of this river so bright,
So gentle in movement, so graceful in height,
So loving, so modest, so steadfast, so free,
As Nanny, at home, on the banks of the Lee?

Shine Bradstone.

Leaving.

A dream? the crowded ship, the swelling sails,
The foaming ocean, far as eye can reach;
The tearful eyes, the sobs, the smothered speech?
Ah! 'tis no dream that conjures up those wails.

One effort more! The green flag may be furl'd
Where the accursed red now proudly floats;
And the long silent harp, in thrilling notes,
May sound a nation's freedom to the world!

Farewell! sweet land of love and beauty rare,
Thy green-capp'd hills are fading from my view;
The swelling waves rise up between. Adieu!
My spirit sinks with thee—still lingers there.

Nial.

The Limerick Observer, says:—"A picture of 'Christ healing the Blind,' was purchased at auction by Mr. Coleman for 35s., and it now turns out to be a painting of Michael Angelo, Buonarotti, for which the owner has been offered not only a large, but what may be termed an extravagant price."

R. H. Stoddard has in the press of Ticknor & Fields, of Boston, a new volume of poems. It will contain a selection of his poetical contributions to the magazines during the last four or five years, and some long poems hitherto unpublished—among others, "The Search for Persephone," an elaborate classical poem in blank verse.

Wm. L. Sontagg, the landscape painter, has arrived at New-York, from Italy.

Statues of James Otis, John Winthrop and John Adams, are to be erected at Mount Auburn, at a cost of $15,000.

A. G. Powers, the well known American portrait painter, is at Rome,

Literary and Artistic News.

History of the Potato.

At a late meeting of the Royal Irish Academy, Dr. Wilde read a paper on the general use of the potato in Ireland, and its failure since its introduction into this country. He said that some few years ago having turned his attention to the subject of the food of the Irish, especially in early times, and written some essays upon the subject in the Dublin University Magazine, the potato came in due course and chronological order under discussion. Having looked into the authorities which bore upon the subject of the early introduction of the potato in Ireland, he came to the conclusion that it became an article of general food, and consequently as such was the means of influencing, as far as the mode of procuring food, and the constituents and character of that food could be the means of influencing the moral, physical, social, political, and commercial condition of the people. Having written what he had to say on the subject, his attention was again aroused by the publication of Mr. Macaulay's History of England, in which he mentions the potato as influencing the feelings and the character of the people, during the period over which the third and fourth volumes of his history extended. He has twice mentioned the potato, and in one instance, under peculiar circumstances. At the siege of Limerick the beleaguered city, having stood out to the last, had capitulated, and then a memorable scene took place—a scene that was well worthy of the attention of the painter and the poet. On each side of the gates of Limerick stand the generals of the respective armies with their attendants, out marched the garrison to choose their destiny, and Mr. Macaulay in describing this scene, took occasion to state, among the various circumstances that influenced the minds of the men who were to expatriate themselves on the one hand, or to remain under what they considered a foreign yoke upon the other, was the remembrance of their homes, their potato garden, and their clump of turf, with other questions of a like nature, which still appertain to the Irish peasantry.

Recently Dr. John Darcy wrote him a letter, in which he questioned the opinion of Mr. Macaulay on this subject, on account of the statement in the great geographical dictionary, published in 1694, and in which it was stated that—"In hard times, they (the Irish) lived on water-cresses, roots, mushrooms, shamrocks, oatmeal, milk, and such other slender diet." He (Dr. Wilde) recently looked into some authorities to see whether the views of Dr. Darcy were supported, or those which he himself had expressed in the Dublin Periodical alluded to, and in which he stated in Munster, especially, the potato formed the staple-food of the Irish about the middle of the seventeenth century.

It was generally believed that Sir Walter Raleigh introduced the potato into Ireland. Sir Joseph Banks came to that conclusion when he wrote his essay on the subject, being an attempt to discover the time in which the potato was introduced into the British isles, and particularly into Ireland. The potato was introduced by Raleigh into England, and from England into Ireland about 1600. It must have been at least before 1602, because the estates of the Raleigh family then passed into the Boyle family, at which period the connection of the Raleigh family with Ireland ceased. He would now ask what had they to live on in Ireland when Raleigh introduced the potato? While most other nations had their history built up from the days of the hunter and the fisher, clothed in skins, and using weapons either for the chase, their own preservation, or the production of food, and so rising in the scale of creation and of civilization from barbarism to the highest amount of cultivation, in which the arts were made subservient to the food as well as to the ornament and education of man, they found this curious fact, that there was no record of such a state of existence in Ireland. They had mills, and pure white wheat, and a state of civilization of which that was but a small portion; because to raise corn and to grind corn, and to bake it into bread, was comparatively a high state of cultivation. He showed that we had in Ireland at that time a state very different from what he had alluded to as being the character of other nations in similar states of development, and which confirmed the idea that we were in all probability descended from a colony highly civilized, which settled in this country. His friend, the late Crofton Croker, had given some very interesting references to the early authorities respecting the introduction of the potato into Ireland, and Mr. McAdam, of Belfast, likewise wrote a valuable treatise on the subject. In 1662, at a meeting of the Royal Society of London, a letter was read containing a proposal for preventing famine by dispensing potatoes throughout all parts of the kingdom. It was evident from all he could gather, that the potato was not in general use in Ireland in 1663. A very remarkable reference was made by Sir William Petty to the potato, and also to the butter, which he said was made rancid by keeping in the bogs. There was a maddar on the table of the academy, filled with this bog butter, and he (Dr. Wilde) should for himself say, that when he originally read the statement of Sir William Petty, he came to the conclusion that he was wrong, but he had learned to correct that opinion. Why or wherefore the people put their butter in bogs, he could not tell, but it was a fact that great quantities of this substance were found in the bogs, and that after a certain length of time it assumed the physical and chemical character which was presented by the matter now before them. The only analysis which had been made of this substance, as far as he recollected, was by Professor Davy, which was published by the Royal Dublin Society. Since then nothing had been done in respect of it; but he (Dr. Wilde) had just received a letter from Mr. Sullivan, of the Museum of Irish Industry, in which he stated that this ancient Irish butter had been examined by some German chemist, and that several years ago he himself also made a very careful analysis of it, but that he waited until now to bring the result of his investigations before the public. He stated this curious fact, that into the common fosses in Paris, a great number of bodies were thrown in 1793; having been opened within the last few years, he had an opportunity for examining the substance into which the bodies had been converted, and he found they resembled this substance in every respect. With reference to the reasons which might have induced the ancient Irish to bury their butter, he might relate an incident which was recorded in an old book written upon the condition of the Faroe Isles, at the end of the seventeenth or beginning of the eighteenth century, in which were described the tallow dykes, not of geological formation, but which consisted of firkins of butter and of rendered tallow—principally sheep's tallow—and which were stored up against the evil day, which meant, against the depredations of their old foes the Danes, who used to come down upon them and carry off their flocks and food. The ancient Irish may have buried their butter for a like reason, as well as for the purpose of producing some change in the structure of the food to enable it to keep, as the present specimen had done. Dr. Wilde then resumed the history of the potato, and having referred to several authorities on the subject, stated that Mr. Macaulay's position was made good, and that in fact the words he used were but an eloquent and well worded paraphrase on authors who wrote cotemporaneous with the time he was describing. It was curious to observe that the potato, which had been in general use up to 1741, when it failed with such disastrous consequences, had not failed before that period. Possibly it might be accounted for by the fact that the potato was nearer to its original source—nearer to the time when it came afresh across the Atlantic to this country, and therefore did not perish for a certain length of time. Dr. Wilde then proceeded to describe the gradual failure of the potato crop, from 1741 to 1846, and the atmospheric changes which had taken place during the period. He concluded a highly interesting lecture loudly applauded.

John Hogan is at work on another statue of O'Connell. The Dublin Freeman has had a view of it, and writes—"Having just enjoyed the privilege of seeing the noble work now in progress in Mr. Hogan's studio—the colossal bronze statue of the Liberator about to be erected by the munificent patriotism of the people of Limerick in their city, we are enabled to report upon its progress in a way which we are sure will gratify all those interested in the undertaking. The figure is still in clay, the creative process of modelling being yet unfinished, but it already appears in all the majesty of its proportions. O'Connell stands before us in the colossal dignity so suited to the character of the man; and judging from the work even in its present state, we should say that Hogan may well be content, as he promised he would be, to rest upon it his fame as a sculptor. The artist's principal efforts in the attitude of the figure, in the likeness, and in the arrangement of the drapery have been achieved, and nothing remains but the working out of some particular details, some touches to the head, and the general finishing, when the work will be ready for casting in plaster, preparatory to the final casting in bronze; but we trust that the artist will not be induced to allow it to pass out of his hands, and to be transferred into a material in which all change and retouching become impossible, until the eye of his genius will have been perfectly satisfied with its own creation. We shall not attempt to describe the figure at present, nor is this the moment for doing so; but we will say this much, that Hogan has excelled himself in the inimitable grandeur and beauty of the drapery, and that the head is the best portrait of O'Connell which has yet been produced in sculpture, either by Hogan himself, or any one else."

Of Macaulay and the Quakers, the Athenæum says:—"Several correspondents have addressed us on the relationship of Mr. Macaulay to the Quakers, and we observe that some of our contemporaries occupy themselves with this question. The fact that Mr. Macaulay is the grandson of a Quaker admits of no doubt. That Mr. Macaulay's grandfather was disowned by the Society of Friends also admits of no doubt. How far this public act of repudiation may have been the consequence of 'dishonesty' on the part of Mr. Macaulay's grandfather—as most of our correspondents assert—and how far early feelings may have embittered the heart of the historian himself towards the Quaker body, are questions which we cannot answer, and do not care to discuss. When the Society of Friends casts out a member, the reason assigned for the disgrace is, "conduct inconsistent with the truth," a phrase which the outside world must interpret according to its own lights. Mr. Macaulay's grandfather, Thomas Mills, kept a book-shop in Bristol. He was not originally a Quaker, but, professing to be convinced of the truth of Quaker principles, he was admitted into membership in 1778. Eleven years later, he was publicly disowned. But he continued to use the garb and speech of a Quaker, and even to attend the Quaker meetings to the last. His daughter Selina married Zachary Macaulay, and was the mother of the essayist and historian. These facts are matters of history, whatever inference may be drawn from them by the curious.

An old man, formerly editor of a literary paper, gives this description of Percival:

He said that Percival first wrote poems to fill the "Poet's Corner" in his paper; he always brought them at the time promised, but never with a name. "We must have a name for this poem, Percival?" "Call it what you will, but don't ask me to father it," was the reply. Soon after the appearance of his first volume of poems, I called on him at his room, taking with me a most flattering review of his work, from one of the English reviews. The writer spoke of him with enthusiasm, and pronounced some of his poems as equal to the greatest works of the English poets—as having the pathos and brilliancy of Keats, and the beauty and easy naturalness of Wadsworth. I rapped at the door of his room, and in answer to his summons I walked in. He was sitting at a small table, correcting the proof sheets of Webster's Dictionary. On the floor, so thick that I could hardly step, were books, to which he was constantly referring. I asked his attention to what the review said of his work; he listened, laying down his pen, but showed no emotion. "Why, Percival," said I, "don't you hear that? Don't that make you proud?" He looked up sadly, and said, "What's the use of talking to a man of fame, who is starving here on $300 a year?" (the sum he was receiving on Webster's Dictionary.) So I left him feeling sadly.

The gold medal given annually by Prince Albert as Chancellor of the University of Cambridge, for the best English poem, has been awarded to Oswald William Wallace, of Emmanuel College.

M. Bergougnoux, formerly the editor of the Emancipation of Toulouse, was lately sentenced by the Tribunal of Ville-Neuve-sur-Lot, to two years' imprisonment, for having spoken ill of the Emperor of the French in a public carriage.

Defeat of the Trans-Atlantic Telegraph Bill at Toronto.

It will be recollected, says the New-York Tribune, that during the last Winter session of our Legislature at Albany an attempt was made by certain speculators to engineer through the House a bill for incorporating a Company designed as the beginning of an opposition to the New-York, Newfoundland and London Trans-Atlantic Telegraph Company, in which Peter Cooper, Cyrus W. Field, Wilson G. Hunt and other gentlemen of substance and respectability on both sides of the Atlantic are known to be interested.

Prof. Morse, together with several other respectable gentlemen, was inveigled into signing the petition for this bill, and such was the strength given to it by the names of these signers, that the bill was favorably reported on to the House, when an accident exposed its true character to the unsuspecting Legislators. In consequence of this exposure, Prof. Morse and the other gentlemen whose names had given respectability to the petition immediately withdrew their signatures, on the plea that deception had been practised in obtaining them; and the bill, thus emasculated, was defeated by an overwhelming majority.

But the parties most interested in this speculation were not disheartened by defeat. They commenced operations in another quarter, and we next hear of them at Toronto, where they have been playing a similar game to that at Albany, with almost precisely a similar result. It seems that they managed to get their bill into the Lower House, where by exciting the national prejudices and fostering a local jealousy against the New-York enterprise, they finally succeeded in getting it through by a small majority.

But when the bill reached the Legislateve Council, a rigid scrutiny was instituted as to the real object, as well as to the responsibility of its projectors, and the result was that it was thrown out by a decided vote.

Hessians in America.

At the late regular monthly meeting of the New-York Historical society, Frederick Kapp, Esq., read a highly interesting paper on the Hessians in America, and what was paid for them:—Mr. Kapp first gave an interesting sketch of the history of the custom of employing mercenary troops, which he traced from an early day. He also showed that in the various wars which England, before our Revolution, had waged on the Continent, she had employed foreign troops almost exclusively. Thus in the Seven Years' War, during the second year, the British army in Westphalia numbered 48,000 men, of whom 26,000 were Hanoverians 12,000 Hessians, and 10,000 Brunswickers.

At the commencement of the Revolution, England stood in great need of troops, and contemplated the hiring of 20,000 men from Russia. But it was decided before long to abandon this plan, and apply again to their old man-purveyors—the small Princes of Germany. The English Commissary—Col. Wm. Fawcett, Captain in the Guards—arrived in Germany early in 1776, and, in behalf of his Government, concluded, in the course of less than a month, the necessary treaties with the Duke of Brunswick, the Landgrave of Hesse Cassel, and the Count of Hanau. The treaties were submitted to the House of Commons on the 29th of February, and, after having been referred to a Committee, were finally ratified on the 4th of March, 1776.

The Duke of Brunswick, whose dominions comprised at that time 1,500 square miles, with 150,000 inhabitants, undertook to furnish 43,000 men, of whom 366 were cavalry, and the rest infantry. For these the Duke received, under the name of "levy money," 30 crowns ($35 59) for each man, the same sum for every one killed, or for three wounded, who were to be accounted equal to one killed; and besides this, for the expenses of equipment two months extra pay. The subsidies received by the Duke, as long as the troops received the pay of English soldiers, amounted to 64,500 crowns a year, and double that sum from the time their pay ceased until two years after their return into Brunswick.

The Landgrave of Hesse, the infamous Frederick II., although he possessed but 3,300 square miles with about 280,000 inhabitants, had an army of nearly 29,000 experienced troops. He undertook to furnish within four weeks three grenadier battalions, six infantry regiments and one company of riflemen, and in a month after that a battalion of grenadiers, nine infantry regiments and a company of riflemen—amounting in all to 12,104 men. The Landgrave received not only the levy money of 30 crowns a head, but there was paid him also a subsidy of 450,000 crowns per year, in addition to the regular pay of the troops.

The Landgrave's son also, then reigning Count of Hanau, sold a regiment of 668 men to the English for 25,000 crowns per year, besides the regular levy money. Even the Prince of little Waldeck, whose vast dominions consisted of some sterile hills of 400 square miles, with about 30,000 inhabitants, left, attracted by the prospect of larger profits, the regular trade with the Dutch, and instead of sending his soldiers, as usual, to the Cape of Good Hope or Batavia, sold an infantry regiment of 670 men to England on the same good terms as the Count of Hanau.

In the course of the year 1776 it became evident that more troops were needed for suppressing the "rebels" than had been provided and, accordingly, Col. Fawcett again visited Germany. He engaged on the same terms as before, 805 men in Cassel and 410 in Hanau. The Landgrave took the opportunity of renewing a claim for £80,000 for services in the seven years' war which had been before rejected, but which England was now obliged to pay.

In the beginning of 1777, the Markgrave of Anspach Brandenburg and the Prince of Anhalt Zerbst joined these princely dealers in human flesh and contributed, the former 1,285, and the latter 1,160 men. The Markgrave received, besides the levy money, an annual subsidy of 45,000 crowns; the Prince a similar sum.

The following table will show the quota of troops furnished by each Prince, the number lost and the money received. It must be remembered that the original numbers were continually supplied with fresh recruits.

Prince.	Troops.	No. of per cent'e of Population.	Lost	Received in Cash
Brunswick	5,723	3,45	3,015	£780,000
Hesse Cassel	13,992	4,55	6,500	2,600,000
Hesse Hanau	2,422	3,65	981	335,150
Anspach	1,644	0,79	461	305,400
Waldeck	1,225	4,05	720	122,670
Anhalt	1,160	5,05	176	535,500
Total	26,166	3,64	11,853	£4,678,620
Hanover received				488,000
Total				£5,126,620

This per centage of the population is not strictly accurate, as many of the soldiers were kidnapped strangers. So far was this carried in Hesse Cassel, that the inhabitants of the city of Cassel were exempt from military service in order to suppress all sympathy with the poor victims of despotism imprisoned in their midst. Most of the soldiers were forcibly enlisted, and of course desertions were frequent. Of the Anhalt Regiment, 140 men deserted at once, and the next day even an officer with 50 men were among the missing. For these reasons, every traveller, be he student or merchant, mechanic or artist, was obliged to be constantly on his guard. On this point we have the testimony of a very popular German writer, Seume, who, as a student on his way on foot from Leipzic to Paris, was kidnapped by Hessian recruiting officers, and enrolled in a regiment then on its way to America.

Mr. Kapp then read the interesting narrative of this author, and alluded to the noble opposition of Frederick the Great to this selling of men, and to the fact that he forbade the march of troops through his dominions. This great king, both during and after the revolution, had been favorably disposed to the Americans, and was one of the first continental princes to make a treaty with the United States, Mirabeau had also produced one of his best works on this subject, the "Counsel to the Hessians and other People of Germany sold by their Sovereigns to England," from which Mr. K. read extracts, in which Mirabeau advocated the rights of the Americans, and advised the Hessians to spurn the base rulers they were cursed with. The pamphlet produced a great sensation, and was answered by order of the Landgrave, to which answer Mirabeau again replied.

Mr. Kapp cited the notorious letter from the Hessian monarch to his officer in this country, which has been extensively published, desiring him to let as many of his men as possible be slaughtered, so that he might receive more funds. He declared this letter an imposition, as there had never been such an officer as he to whom it was addressed. To show the German feelings on the subject, he quoted a thrilling scene from Schiller's Kabale und Liebe (" Cabal and Love," the original of " Luisa Miller"), in which a kind-hearted English lady, the "favorite" of the Landgrave, is made aware of the manner in which the sparkling jewels which the latter has just given her are obtained, and in her indignation spurns them from her.

In conclusion, Mr. K. stated that the vast riches of the Rothschilds were founded on this trade in flesh. The Landgrave, when obliged to leave Hessia in 1806, intrusted his millions to Mayer Anselm Rothschild, a small money broker of Frankfort. When he returned in 1813, pleased at the security with which Rothschild had invested the money, he granted him the large sums of interest which had accumulated, and at the Congress of Vienna recommended him to the other European sovereigns, from which time the great reputation of the family commences. After alluding to the large numbers of Germans, who, deserting their ranks, had remained in this country, and by their industry had done much for its advancement, Mr. Kapp closed his very interesting paper, of which this is a mere abstract, amid great applause. It is to be hoped that the paper will be printed in full.

The thanks of the Society having been presented to Mr. Kapp for this contribution to the history of our country, the meeting adjourned.

City News.

Inauguration of the Washington Statue on Fourth of July.

About five years ago it was suggested by some wealthy citizens that, as no monument of WASHINGTON existed in this city, Union square would be a fitting place for such an erection. Money was accordingly soon subscribed, and a commission to execute the work given to Mr. Brown. The following are the names of the gentlemen who subscribed the $30,000 :

James Lee, William B. Astor, August Belmont, John Bridge, Isaac Bell, Jr., James Brown, Edward K. Collins, William Chamberlain, Richard F. Carman, Henry A. Coit, Wm. W. De Forest, Benjamin H. Field, Hamilton Fish, Seth Grosvenor, Jasper Grosvenor, Boonen Graves, Moses H. Grinnell, Samuel S. Howland, Wilson G. Hunt, John Q. Jones, Shepherd Knapp, James G. King, Jacob Little, Chas. M. Leupp, Edward B. Little, Peter Lorillard, James Lenox, Andrew Mount, Samuel L. Mitchell, Daniel S. Miller, Robert B. Minturn, Charles H. Marshall, William C. Rhinelander, Robert & Williams, Nelson Robinson, Gerard Stuyvesant, Cornelius Smith, Uriah J. Smith, Jonathan Sturges, Moses Taylor, Robert L. Taylor, William Wetmore, William Whitewright, Jr., Augustus H. Ward, John D. Wolfe, William E. Wilmerding.

On the Fourth, notwithstanding the bad weather in the early part of the day, the Avenue leading to Union square were thronged with people anxious to behold the inauguration of the statue. Shortly after eight o'clock the Seventh and Twelfth Regiments and the Washington Greys, reached the spot and formed in line on each side of the square. When the palings and canvassing was torn away and the noble figure of the great chief broke upon the eyes of the multitude, a thrilling shout of exultant welcome ascended to the heavens, mingled with the firing of guns and pistols and the explosion of fire-crackers from the crowd. The windows of all the houses that commanded a view of the proceedings were filled with ladies, who waved their handkerchiefs, and in many instances joined in the loud huzzas.

With peculiar fitness, characterizing the man who had shone through the storm of the Revolution, the sun shone brightly out, at once breaking from the clouds and intimating a day of splendor. The cheering somewhat subsided, and Col. Lee ascended the platform and requested the Rev. Dr. Bethune to address the troops and the people. The Doctor proceeded to deliver a graphic and able eulogium on the hero, contrasting him with Cromwell and Napoleon. Towards the conclusion, the orator introduced the sculptor to the people, who greeted him with long and enthusiastic cheers.

The friends of Mr. Brown, the sculptor, pressed around him to shake him by the hand and congratulate him. He had retired to the back of the platform after Dr. Bethune had introduced him to the crowd, but on his again coming forward, after the conclusion of the address, he was a second time hailed with enthusiastic plaudits, one man in the throng distinguishing himself above the rest by repeatedly shouting, " Hooray for the architect of the statue."

The troops fell into rank, and proceeded in regular order to march round the statue, the Washington Greys taking the lead on horseback. This formed quite an imposing scene. Each soldier, as he approached the statue, and during the time of marching round it, was uncovered. The multitude now numbering eight or nine thousand people, cheered again and again.

The statue, as we have said, is the work of Mr. Henry K. Brown, of Brooklyn. It is in every way worthy of the highest admiration. Washington is represented on horseback with his right arm out-stretched, as if restraining the noble ardor of his soldiers. The head is from the celebrated bust of Houdon, in the possession of Senator Fish. The horse, a truly noble animal, is apparently at a brisk trot. Washington is seated easily in the saddle, with the old Continental hat in his left hand.

The entire construction of the statue has occupied Mr. Brown four years. It is formed of rich bronze, 88 parts being of copper, 9 of tin, 2 of zinc, and 1 of lead. The body of the horse was cast in one piece, the thickness of the metal averaging three-eighths of an inch. The entire weight of the statue is over 4 tons. The plinth weighs 2,000 lbs., the horse 2,700 lbs., the rider and other parts 3,800 lbs. The modeling was done at Mr. Brown's studio at Brooklyn; the casting took place at Ames' foundry, Chicopee, Mass. The height of the statue is fourteen and a-half feet, which is also the height of the pedestal. The head of Washington is therefore 29 feet from the ground. The entire cost of the statue and pedestal was $30,000. Mr. Brown may well be proud of his work.

Thomas Graham, a stone cutter, was arrested on 1st inst., charged with stabbing Francis Donnolly eight times in the breast and side with an ice-pick. It appears that Graham had been with the members of Chapter No. 3, of the Protestant Association, on an excursion to Yonkers, and on his return home, stopped at the porter house, corner of Thirteenth and West streets. Here he met Donnolly, and having an orange colored lilly on his breast, the latter took offence at it, and with an oath, asked him if that was the color he wore. Angry words ensued and Donnolly threw a tumbler at Graham, which struck him in the face. The parties then clinched, and Graham seeing an ice-pick upon the counter, seized it, and stabbed his adversary in eight different places. Dr. Jones was immediately called in, and dressed the wounds, which are not considered dangerous. Graham was held to await an examination.

Some of the musical people about town are getting up a benefit concert for Palmo, who built the first Italian Opera House in the United States, and lost a large fortune by so doing. Palmo was once a celebrated cook, and his restaurant was the Delmonico's of other days. His old age is embittered by poverty, and the concert advertised elsewhere is for the purpose of giving him material aid, It ought to be eminently successful. The beneficiary is eminently deserving.

Fifty leading city firms intend to "shut up shop" every Saturday afternoon at three, that their assistants may have a little vacation during the summer. Good as far as it goes. Their card is in the dailies, and they urge others to do likewise. It is earnestly to be hoped they will.

Frederick L. Heald, aged 16 years, was accidentally drowned, 2nd inst., in attempting to step from the Hydraulic Dock to the floating church, foot of Pike street, East River.

Commissioner Morton on the 2d inst., directed Joseph Pedro de Canha to give bail in six thousand dollars to answer in the case of the alleged slave brig Braman.

The " Fourth" went off with more than usual eclat. The city was crowded. The fire-works were well preserved from the showers of the morning, and the evening presented a scene outvieing a Chinese feast of lanterns.

The Taxes this year are $6,000,000. With proper men elected (from undoubted authority) $3,000,000 will do.

MARRIAGES.

At St. Stephen's Church, Dublin, William N. Wallace, son of the late Hugh Wallace of Downpatrick, to Catherine Mary, daughter of the Hon. Francis C. Annesley, Captain in the Royal Navy.

At the Metropolitan church, Marlborough street, Dublin, R. Manly, late of the Census Office, to Miss Sullivan, of St. Laurence's Schools, North Strand.

At St. Thomas' Church, William, son of the late Rev. Arthur Ardagh, rector of Moyglese, county Meath, to Alice, daughter of Charles S. Gifford, of Upper Dorset street, Dublin.

At Francis street chapel, James Lyons, No. 10, Peter street, professor of dancing, to Mary, daughter of Christopher Kinsley.

At St. George's Church, Alexander Jack, Professor Queen's College, Cork, son of George A. Jack, Bloom Hill, Tyrone, to Georginia Maria, daughter of the late Captain James Goldfrapp, 60th Rifles.

At Coolock church, Benjamin Joseph Willson, of Roebuck, to Alicia Ann, daughter of George Symes, of Bonnybrook.

At Monkstown, the Rev. Charles Lewis M. Jones, Downragh, eldest son of the late Samuel Jones, of Ardkenny, to Elizabeth, daughter of John Samuels, of Seafield House, Kingstown.

At Kilfegan, county Wicklow, Major John Frend, of the 55th regiment, to Delia Maria, daughter of the late Richard Cane.

At Delgany, John O. G. Pollock, of Mountainstown, county Meath, to Maria Louisa, daughter of Henry Darley, of Wingfield, county Wicklow.

In Kilkenny, Major Edward Taddy, of the Royal Artillery, to Fannie Eliza, drughter of Captain J. G. Rogers, staff officer of the Kilkenny district.

At Thomastown, James Clarke, of Belmont, county Carlow, to Ellen Alcock, daughter of W. Clifford, of Millview, Kilkenny.

At Fethard, county Tipperary, James O'Donnell, of Maginstown, to Maria, daughter of Charles Blackmore, of Rathcoole.

At the Catholic Church, Keady, Thomas Campbell, to Miss Raverty, both of Keady.

At Benmore, county Fermanagh, Thomas Gordon, of Enniskillen, to Elizabeth, daughter of D. Parke, of Derrygonnelly.

At Boulogne-sur-Mer, John Peacan, of Ellestren Lodge, county Galway, to Mary Elizabeth, widow of James Stackpoole.

In Paris, Edouard, eldest son of Monsieur and Madame Hainguerlot, and grandson of the late Marechal Oudinot, Duc de Reggio, to Alice, eldest daughter of Edward Blount, and niece of Sir Edward Blount, of Mawley, Salop.

In London, Charles W. Digby, of Meridan Hall, Warwickshire, to Adelaide, daughter of the Right Hon. George Bankes, M. P.

At Melbourne, Victoria, Charles H. M'Knight, son of the late Rev. Thomas M'Knight, of Edinburgh, to Everina Isabella, daughter of the late Abraham Heatly, of Bray, county Wicklow.

At Sydney, New South Wales, Edward Stone, fourth son of the Rev. Wm. Stone, formerly of Kilkenny, to Maria, daughter of the late William Todhunter.

In the Moravian church, Gracehill, William Mullen, of Albert place, Ballymena, to Frances Amelia, daughter of James Smythe, of Gracehill.

In London, the Rev. James Turner, A. B., Trinity College, Dublin, to Maria, daughter of John Rudall, of Lincoln's Inn, barrister-at-law.

At Hothfield, Kent, Captain Thomas Leslie, son of the late Bishop of Kilmore to Annie, daughter of Sir Edward and Lady Hoare, of Little Hothfield.

In London, the Rev. A. Delap, son of the late W. Delap, of Ray, county Donegal, to Anna Jane, daughter of the late Joseph Goslett, of Sallymount, Dublin.

In London, Alexander Nesbitt, of Lismore House, county Cavan, to Cecilia, daughter of the late Frederick Franks.

In London, Patrick, son of John Donovan, of Tralee, county Kerry, to Bessie Murray, of Westbourne terrace, daughter of the late Adam Murray.

In London, Lord Forester to Lady Melbourne, relict of Viscount Melbourne.

At Denmark hill, George Leatherdale, of Newcastle, to Harriet Mary, daughter of the late J. Ryan, of the 82 regiment, and sister of the Right Rev. Dr. Ryan, Bishop of Mauritius.

At St. Thomas' Church, H. Lyons Montgomery, to Henrietta, Constance St. George, daughter of the Rev. Henry L. St. George, of Dromore, Omagh.

DEATHS.

At Dublin, Miss Anne Grubb, one of the Society of Friends, formerly of Clonmel.

At 51, Lower Gloucester street, Dublin, Samuel Neville Glenton.

At 4, Clarendon street, Dublin, Daniel Cullen.

At Kingstown, William Hart Talbot, late of Eccles street.

At Glasnevin, county Dublin, James, son of Alexander Campbell, Churchill Nurseries.

At Rathmines, Mary, daughter of John Smyth, late of Prospect Lodge, Roscrea, and niece of the late Captain Smith, Mount Butler.

In Limerick, Eliza, relict of John Vereker, Major in the City of Limerick Militia, and brother of the late Lord Gort.

At Springfield, Clonmel, Susanna, wife of the Hon. Francis S. Prittie.

At Fort Etna, county Limerick, Mary Liz, wife of Edward White.

In Beliast, Anne, daughter of the Rev. Robert M'Cormick, late of Seaforde.

At Kilclooney, county Galway, Valentine, son of John J. Bodkin.

At Southpark, in the county Roscommon, Nicholas Balfe.

In Cork, aged 78 years, Mary, wife of Captain Baylie, and mother of Dr. Baylie, ex-mayor of Geelong, Australia.

At Oranmore, Andrew Buist, formerly Manager of the Provincial Bank in Galway.

In Wexford, Eleanor, second daughter of the late Arthur Meadows, of Hermitage.

At Mitchelstown, county Cork, Dr. E. O'Neill.

In Belfast, Anne Boyd, daughter of the late John Hardy, of Cooley Hill, county Armagh.

At Castlepole, near Kells, county Meath, Henry Colston, in the 58th year of his age.

In London, Lieutenant R. Roberts of the Royal Navy, son of Thomas Roberts, of Clonmel.

In France, Emily, wife of the Hon. M. W. B. Nugent, of Earlspark, county Galway.

In London, Sarah, the wife of James Burke, barrister-at-law.

In London, aged 81 years, Mrs. Jacob, mother of the Rev. Benjamin Jacob, of Limerick.

At Putney, Lady St. Aubyn, aged 87 years.

At Naples, Lady Victoria Susan Talbot, daughter of Earl Talbot, and niece of the Marquis of Waterford.

In London, aged 77 years, Lieutenant-General B. M'Leod, of the Bengal Engineers.

At Newton St. Cyres, near Exeter, Lieutenant-Colonel John Allen Ridgway, who served in the 95th regiment (Rifle Brigade) during the Peninsular war and at Waterloo.

At Porto Rico, of yellow fever, Bellingham, daughter of B. Swan, of Cork.

At Denmark street, John Molony, victualler.

In Cornwallis street, John Gleeson, proprietor of the Hibernian Foundry.

In Thomondgate, Samuel Coe, retired Constable of the Limerick Constabulary.

In Parsonstown, Elizabeth, relict of Captain William Johnson formerly of the 87th regiment, aged 84 years.

In Ennis, Mr. John Curtin, for over thirty years Master of the old Clare Militia Band.

In London, Elizabeth, widow of Francis Synge, of Glanmore Castle, county Wicklow, and last surviving sister of the late General Sir John Taylor.

At Birkenhead, Cheshire, Miss Kate Cooper, daughter of Isaac Cooper, of Limerick.

Caution to the Public.—To distinguish the genuine magnetic powder, for the destruction of insects, from poisonous imitations, it is necesary to examine the wrapper. See that four national medals—those of England, France, Belgium, and the United States—are engraved thereon. Be sure also that a lithographic fac simile of Lyon's signature appears both on the wrapper and label. This caution is necessary to protect the proprietor from fraud and the public from danger and disappointment. The leading scientific societies, and the first chemists of Europe and America, have pronounced the magnetic powder the only poisonous insect bane in the world, as well as the most effective and fatal means for the destruction of bed-bugs, roaches, fleas, ants, flies, moths, &c., that was ever prepared or sold. The proprietors of the principal city hotels endorse it. Come and see the testimonials of Prince Albert, ex-President Fillmore, and hundreds of the nobility of Europe, as well as the sovereigns of America. The magnetic pills, for the extermination of rats and mice, are endorsed with equal emphasis by all who have tried them. Call and see the medals, diplomas, government orders, scientific certificates, letters, &c., at the Central Depot, No. 424 Broadway.

jun 21 3m EMANUEL LYON.

A perfumed breath.—What lady or gentleman would remain under the curse of a disagreeable breath, when by using the "Balm of a Thousand Flowers" as a dentrifice, would not only render it sweet, but leave the teeth white as alabaster? Many persons do not know their breath is bad, and the subject is so delicate their friends will never mention it. Pour a single drop of the Balm on your tooth-brush, and wash the teeth night and morning. A fifty cent bottle will last a year.

A Beautiful Complexion may easily be acquired by using the "Balm of a Thousand Flowers." It will remove tan, pimples, and freckles from the skin, leaving it of a soft and roseate hue. Wet a towel, pour on two or three drops and wash the face night and morning.

Shaving made Easy.—Wet your shaving brush in either warm or cold water, pour on two or three drops of the "Balm of a Thousand Flowers," run the beard well, and it will make a beautiful soft lather, much facilitating the operation of shaving. Price only 50 cents. For sale by all druggists.

8mjly5 W. P. FETRIDGE & Co., Franklin Square, New-York.

Phrenology.—Examinations with charts, and written descriptions of character given daily by PROF. FOWLER, at the Phrenological Cabinet, Broadway, two blocks above the Park. Private rooms for gentlemen and ladies. 4 t12jly

Amusements.

BOWERY THEATRE.

THE PEOPLES TEMPLE OF THE DRAMA.

Open every night,

WITH A POWERFUL

Star Company.

Lessee and Manager.....JOHN BROUGHAM

PRICES OF ADMISSION:

Boxes.....25 cents. | Pit.....12½ cents.
Gallery.....12½ cents. | Orchestra Stalls.....50 cents.
Private Boxes.....Five Dollars.

Doors open at 7½; commence at 7½.

WALLACK'S THEATRE,

THE

SUMMER GARDEN.

Every night the thrilling drama of

The Phantom,

To be followed by an after-piece in which

THE IRISH BLACKBIRD,

Miss Agnes Robertson,

Will introduce the national songs and dances of Ireland. On one night each week the beautiful picture of Irish character,

Andy Blake.

Andy Blake.....Miss Agnes Robertson

PRICES OF ADMISSION.

Parquette and boxes.....50 cents
Family Circle.....25 cents

Doors open at a quarter past seven P. M.

KELLER'S EMPIRE HALL,

TWO DOORS ABOVE THE METROPOLITAN HOTEL.

The coolest hall in New-York.

The celebrated Tyrolean Singers.

See Programme.

Performance at 8 o'clock. Tickets, 50 cents. Children half price. Private boxes $5. Single seats in private boxes $1.

HERRING'S

PATENT CHAMPION FIRE AND BURGLAR PROOF SAFES.

THE great interest manifested by the public to procure more perfect security from Fire for valuable papers, such as BONDS, MORTGAGES, DEEDS, NOTES, and BOOKS OF ACCOUNT than the ordinary SAFES heretofore in use had afforded, induced the subscribers to devote a large portion of time and attention during the past fourteen years in making improvements and discoveries for this object, and they now beg leave to assure their numerous friends and the public generally that their efforts have been crowned with complete success, and now offer the "IMPROVED HERRING'S PATENT WORLD'S FAIR PREMIUM FIRE-PROOF SAFE," as the

CHAMPION SAFE OF THE WORLD!

Having been awarded Medals at both the

World's Fair, London, 1851, and in New-York, 1853,

As superior to all others. It is now undoubtedly entitled to that appellation, and, secured with HALL'S PATENT POWDER-PROOF LOCKS, which also was awarded MEDALS as above), forms the most perfect Fire and Burglar Proof Safes ever offered to the public.

The subscribers also manufacture all kinds of Boiler and Chilled Iron Bank Chests and Vaults, Vault Doors, and Money Boxes or Chests, for Brokers, Jewelers, and Private Families, for Plate, Diamonds, and other Valuables, and are also Patentees (by purchase) and Manufacturers of

JONES' PATENT PERMUTATION BANK LOCK.

SILAS C. HERRING & CO., Patentees,

GREEN BLOCK, Nos. 185, 187 and 189 Water street, New-York. my10 tf

Important to the Ladies.

GLENFIELD PATENT STARCH.

FOR the dressing of Laces and all descriptions of fine goods. This celebrated starch is unrivalled.

ONE TRIAL WILL CONVINCE.

For sale by all respectable druggists and grocers.

3m28ju ROBERT HOSIE, 8 Pine Street, New-York,
Sole Agent for the United States.

Raspberries, Cherries, Green Peas—Or any other fruit or vegetable, may be preserved in a perfectly fresh state, by the use of SPRATT'S PATENT SELF-SEALING CANS. Full directions for preserving all kinds of fruits, and vegetables accompany the Cans. Price for quarts, $2 50 per dozen; half-gallon, $3 50. N. B.—All orders, by post or otherwise, promptly delivered free of expense, to any part of the City or Brooklyn.

WELLS & PROVOST, Proprietors,
jy12 2t No. 321 Pearl street, near Franklin square.

☞ Post Office Notice.—The MAILS FOR EUROPE, via Southampton and Havre, per U. S. steamer Hermann will close at this office on SATURDAY, the 12th day of July, at 10½ o'clock, A. M.

my17 Isaac V. Fowler, Postmaster

Publications.

OLD ESTABLISHED CATHOLIC HOUSE.

EDWARD DUNIGAN & BROTHER,

(JAMES B. KIRKER,)

151 FULTON STREET, NEW-YORK,

PUBLISH the largest and finest assortment of Catholic Bibles, Testaments, Prayer Books, Tales, School Books, and other works, to be found in the United States.

An extensive supply of all other Catholic articles always on hand.

Catalogues of their publications sent free of postage.

E. D. & BROTHER HAVE JUST ISSUED

1. THE LOVE OF MARY. Devotions for the month of May. 38c.
2. THE YOUNG CRUSADERS. A tale. 38c.
3. HOURS BEFORE THE ALTAR; or Meditations on the Blessed Sacrament. 25c.
4. THE CONVERSION OF RATISBONNE. 25c.
5. CONSCIENCE, or the Trials of May Brooke, a tale by Mrs. A. H. Dorsey. 2 vols; each 38c. 4t May 24

ONE THOUSAND AND ONE THINGS

WORTH KNOWING!

A BOOK disclosing invaluable Information, Receipts and Instruction in the Useful and Domestic Arts, everything of which is of practical use to everybody. 12mo, cloth; price 50 cents; sent by mail free of postage.

One Thousand and One Things contains full instructions in relation to the Art of Millinary and Dressmaking; Rules for Good Behavior; How to get Rich; 24 Practical Rules and Receipts on the choice of Meats and how to cook them; a Concise Treatise on the Treatment of Infants, Morally and Physically; Diseases of the Hair, with receipts for cure; 23 practical directions on Carving various dishes, with Illustrations; How to prevent or cure Warts and Corns; Receipts for making 23 different Puddings; A chapter on various small dishes for Supper or Tea; Pickling; Pastry; The Canary Bird Fancier; The Etiquette of Courtship and Marriage; The Water Cure; Art of Conversation; Cookery for the Sick Room, with 8 Receipts; Directions for the preservation of Clothing; On the care of Furniture and Housekeeping articles, with 25 Receipts; 4 cheap and wholesome Drinks for warm weather; 17 Receipts for Sweetmeats and Preserves; The Nurse's Manual, containing 25 plain prescriptions; 7 Medicinal Prescriptions; Young Ladies Manual, containing various rules for Dress and Toilette, with numerous receipts; The Lips, Hands and Arms; The Invalid's Manual, with directions as to Diet, &c.; On the use and choice of Spectacles; The Young Man's Manual; Choice of Husband or Wife, and how to win them; Various directions for improving Personal Appearance; How to make Money, with Receipts for manufacturing 73 articles in every day use.

The above work should be in the hands of everybody particularly of young persons. It is written in a plain, easily-to-be-understood style, and no household should be without it. Address George Backer, 85 Nassau street, or Box 3890 New-York P. O. jy5 6mo

NEW-YORK CATHOLIC LIBRARY ASSOCIATION.

"The objects of the Association are, 1st. The dissemination of Catholic and useful knowledge. 2d. To forward the moral and intellectual advancement of its members. 3d. To create among its members a spirit of harmony and good feeling, that will be conducive alike to their interest and pleasure. These to be attained by establishing a Library and Reading Room, and by Readings and Lectures when practicable."

Contributions of either books or money received at the office, No. 107 Nassau street.

M. T. COZANS, President.
JOSEPH MCGUIRE, Vice-President.

CORRESPONDING SECRETARY, D. Quinn.
RECORDING SECRETARY, James Fabb.
TREASURER, John Russell.
LIBRARIAN, T. S. Haughey.
DIRECTORS, R. T. Kelly, J. J. Mullen, M. B. Lynch, L. T. Cozans, P. J. McGuire. m3jun14

Business Directory.

PIANOS, MELODEONS AND MUSIC

The Cash system adopted!—Prices greatly reduced.

HORACE WATERS,

No. 333 Broadway, N. Y.,

AGENT FOR THE BEST BOSTON AND NEW-YORK INSTRUMENTS.

The largest assortment of

Pianos, Melodeons, Musical Instruments,

AND

MUSICAL MERCHANDISE,

of all kinds, in the United States, Pianos from ten different Manufactories, comprising those of every variety of style, from the plain, neat and subtsantial 6½ octaves, in Walnut or Rosewood Cases, from $150 to $200, to those of the most elegant finish up to $1000. No house in the Union can compete with the above in the number, variety, and celebrity of its instruments, nor in the extremely low prices at which they are sold.

Horace Waters' Modern Improved Pianos,

WITH OR WITHOUT IRON FRAMES.

possessing in their improvements of over-strings and action, a length of scale power, and compass of tone equal to the Grand Piano, united with the beauty and durability of structure of the square Piano. They are justly pronounced by the Press and by the first Musical Masters to be equal to those of any other manufacturer. They are built of the best and most thoroughly seasoned material, and guaranteed to stand the action of every climate.

Each Instrument guaranteed to give satisfaction, or purchase money refunded. Second-hand Pianos at great bargains, constantly in store; price from $30 to $140.

Horace Waters' Melodeons,

SUPERIOR INSTRUMENTS IN TONE, TOUCH AND DURABILITY OF MAKE.

(Tuned the equal temperament.) Melodeons of all other styles and makes. Price, $45, $60, $75, $100, $125, $140; double Reeds, $150; double Reeds and two banks of Keys, $200. Less a liberal discount. Clergymen and Churches, an extra discount.

Martin's Guitars, Brown's Harps, Flutes, Flutinas, Accordeons, Violins, and Musical Instruments,

OF ALL KINDS, AT LOWER PRICES THAN EVER BEFORE OFFERED TO THE PUBLIC.

A large discount to Teachers and Schools. The trade supplied on the most liberal terms.

MUSIC.

One of the largest and best selected catalogues of Music now published, comprising many of the choice and most popular airs of the day, and will be sold at one-third off from the regular prices.

Music sent by mail to all parts of the country, post paid. Particular and personal attention paid to all orders received by mail. Satisfaction guaranteed in every instance. Pianos and Melodeons for rent, and rent allowed on purchase. Pianos and Melodeons for sale on monthly payments. Second-hand Pianos taken in exchange for new. General and select Catalogues and Schedule of prices forwarded to all parts of the country by mail.

☞ Great inducements offered to agents in all parts of the country, to sell the Horace Waters' Pianos, Melodeons, and Catalogue of Music.

PIANOS AND MUSIC.—We learn that Horace Waters, of 333 Broadway, N. Y., agent for the sale of many of the most celebrated makers of Pianos and Melodeons, is offering them at prices which we advise all who desire to purchase to avail themselves of. He is also selling his large and well-known Catalogue of Music at one-third off from the regular prices, and will forward the same free of postage. His offers to the trade, teachers and schools, are of the most favorable character, all of which he will be able to fill to the letter, for having wisely adopted the cash system. The Horace Waters' Pianos are known as among the very best. We are enabled to speak of those instruments with some degree of confidence, from personal knowledge of their excellent tone and durability.—N. Y. Evangelist. ap19tf

"TERRA COTTA"

CHIMNEY TOPS,

PLAIN and Ornamental. Drain Pipes of all sizes, superior manufacture lowest rates. LONG ISLAND POTTERY. Depot, 82 Nassau street New-York. my10 3m

JAMES O'FLYN.

HOWARD HOTEL,

176 BROADWAY, NEW-YORK.

Advertising Envelope Manufacturer, Embosser, Die Sinker, and General Engraver. Notarial and Lodge Seals, Crests, and Coats of Arms. Seal Presses of every description constantly on hand. 14ju8m

DRILL ROOM GUIDE.

NINTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

TROOP A, (Irish Dragoons,) meet at the "Grape Vine Cottage," 45 Second Avenue, between Second and Third streets, on every Monday evening. JAMES MURPHY, Capt.

Company B, (Fitzgerald Guard) drill each Monday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." THOS. MAGUIRE, Capt.

Company D, (Guyon Cadets) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." THOS. MURPHY, Capt.

Company I, (Jackson Guard) drill each Thursday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." W. O. MURPHY, Capt.

Company H, (Erina Guard) drill Thursday Evening at "Military Hall." R. CODDINGTON, Capt.

Company —, (Irish Grenadiers) drill each Thursday Evening at 22 White street. FELIX DUFFY, Capt.

Company C, (Mitchel Guard,) drill each Wednesday Evening at the "Eagle Rooms." —— KEARNS, Capt.

Company J, (Carroll Guard,) drill each —— evening, at —— GALLAGHER, Capt.

TENTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company —, (Emmet Guard) drill each Thursday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." JOHN KENNEDY, Capt.

ELEVENTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company E, (Montgomery Guard) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." THOS. S. MURPHY, Capt.

FOURTEENTH REGIMENT, N. Y. S. M.

Company E, (Carroll Guard,) drill each Tuesday Evening, at the "Adelphi," Brooklyn. GEO. B. MAGRATH, Capt.

FIFTH REGIMENT N. J. S. M.

Company C, (O'Brien Columbia Rifles,) drill on the 1st and 3d Tuesdays in each month at their Armory, "Willow Hall," Orange, N. J. OWEN MURPHY, Captain.

SIXTY NINTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Troop A, (Irish Dragoons,) drill each Thursday Evening at "Montgomery Hall." Lieut. B. O'CONNOR, Com'dt.

Company C, (—— ——,) drill each Wednesday Evening at the "Eagle Rooms." Lieut. M. KEATING, Com'dt.

Company D, (Irish Rifles) drill each Monday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." JAMES QUINLAN, Capt.

Company E, (Fag a Bealac Guard) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." GILBERT RIORDAN, Capt.

Company F, (Shields' Guard,) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Milleman's Hall," 7th avenue, corner of 26th street. JOHN R. MURPHY, Capt.

Company G, (Mechanic's Guard) drill each Thursday Evening at the "Eagle Rooms." JOHN B. MADDEN, Capt.

Company I, (Irish Fuseleers,) drill each Monday Evening at 42 Prince street. M. CORCORAN, Capt.

Company K, (Brian Boroihme Guard) drill each Monday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." JAMES HUSTON, Capt.

Engineer Corps, (Emmet Life Guard) drill each Monday Evening at "Worth's Military Head Quarters," 22 White st. T. LYNCH, Capt.

70th REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company D, (Napper Tandy Light Artillery) drill each Thursday Evening at Brooklyn City Armory. WM. H. HOGAN, Capt.

SEVENTY FIFTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company A, (State Rifles) drill each Wednesday Evening at cor. of 11th street and 1st Avenue. Lieut. JAS. KELLY, Com'dt.

Company B, (Irish National Guard) drill each Friday Evening at "Centre Market Rooms." JOHN LANE, Capt.

Company C, (Young Ireland Rifles) drill each Friday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." JOHN BURKE, Capt.

Company D, (Wolf Tone Volunteers,) drill each Tuesday Evening, at the "Eagle Rooms." JOHN NUGENT, Capt.

Company E, (T. F. Meagher Rifles) drill each —— at cor. of 11th street and 1st Avenue. J. B. DONNELLY, Capt.

Company F, (Mich'l. Doheny Rifles) drill each —— at ——. J. F. MAGUIRE, Capt.

Company G. (Emmet Rifles) drill each —— at ——. JOHN BEGG, Capt.

INDEPENDENT COMPANIES.

Company —, (O'Mahony Guard, E. M. A.,) drill each Tuesday Evening at "North America Rooms," cor. of Bayard and Bowery. JAMES CAVANAGH, Capt.

Company —, (Sons of '98,) drill each Friday Evening at the corner of 11th street and 1st Avenue, N. Y. M. H. SMITH, Capt.

Company —, (Wolfe Tone Guard,) drill each alternate Monday Evening at the "Second Ward Hotel," cor. of York and Pearl streets, Brooklyn. JOHN J. CLANCY, Com'dt.

Company —, (Irish American Grenadiers,) drill the first and third Thursday of each month at "Montgomery Hall," 76 Prince street, N. Y. MICHAEL DOYLE, Capt.

Company —, (Montgomery Guard,) drill each Monday evening, at Bridgeport, Conn. MICHAEL O'CONNELL, Capt.

Company —, (Republican Guard) drill every Friday Evening, at "Worth's Military Headquarters," 22 White street. W. H. LYONS, Capt.

Company —, (Keystone Rifles,) drill every Monday evening, in Port Carbon, Pa. MATTHEW BYRNES, Captain.

TWENTY-FOURTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company —, (Columbian Guard), drill each Tuesday evening, at Washington Hall, Troy, N. Y. RICHARD S. QUINN, Captain.

TWENTY-FIFTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company —, (Emmet Guard,) drill each Wednesday Evening at Albany, N. Y. P. H. GRIFFIN, Capt.

SECOND REGIMENT—HUDSON BRIGADE.

Company —, (Montgomery Guard,) drill each week at the "Armory," Grand street, Jersey City. —— FARRELL, Capt.

SECOND REGIMENT PA. VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Hibernian Greens,) drill each Thursday Evening at 83 South Fifth street, Philadelphia. P. O'KEAN, Capt.

Company —, (Meagher Guard,) drill each Tuesday Evening at 104 Market street, Philadelphia. Lieut. PATRICK O'CONNOR, Com'dt.

Company —, (Emmet Guard,) drill each Friday Evening at "Ewen Hall," Hawley, Pa. M. W. MORRISS, Capt.

FIRST REGIMENT ME. VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Grattan Guard,) drill each Thursday Evening in Bangor, Me. JOHN CARROLL, Capt.

SIXTIETH REGIMENT ILL. S. M.

Company —, (Shields Guard,) drill each Thursday Evening in Chicago, Ill. CHAS. E. MOORE, Capt.

FIRST REGIMENT VA. VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Montgomery Guard,) drill each Monday and Friday Evenings in Richmond. P. S. MOORE, Capt.

SIXTEENTH REGIMENT S. C. S. M.

Company —, (Meagher Guard,) drill the second Thursday of each month in Charleston. GEO. SERGEANT, Capt.

SEVENTEENTH REGIMENT S. C. S. M.

Company —, (Irish Volunteers,) drill once a month in Charleston, S. C. EDWARD MAGRATH, Capt.

—— REGIMENT GEORGIA VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Irish Volunteers,) drill each —— evening, in the city of Augusta. EDWARD J. WALKER, Capt.

FIRST REGIMENT ST. LOUIS LEGION, MO.

Company—(St. Louis Washington Guard) drill each Tuesday evening, in the city of St. Louis, Mo. D. M. FROST, Capt.

FIRST WASHINGTON BATTALION OHIO S. M.

Company A, (Shields Guard), drill on each Thursday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati. DENNIS KAVANAGH, Captain.

Company B, (Sarsfield Guard), drill on each Monday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati. JOHN LEVY, Capt.

Company C, (Republican's Guard,) drill on each Saturday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati. JOHN ELITCH, Capt.

Company D, (Montgomery Light Artillery,) drill on each Wednesday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati. THOS. TIERNAN, Capt.

Company E, (Queen City Cadets, Rifles,) drill on each Tuesday and Friday evenings, at the "Cadets Armory," Pomeroy's Building, Third street, Cincinnati. JOSEPH H. BURKE, Capt.

N. B.—Commandants of Irish-American Military Companies throughout the United States, are respectfully tendered a place in the above "Directory," and requested to send such information as will enable us to represent them in it.

Continental Military Establishment.

J. PARKS,

195 FULTON, BELOW DUTCH, N. Y.

Hats, Caps, Ornaments, &c., made to order. 3m28ju

Special Notices.

Gould's Eating Saloon—THE BEST AND CHEAPEST EATING-HOUSE in New-York.—"Strawberries Smothered in Cream."—Can anything be more delicious than a "dish of ripe strawberries smothered in cream?" particularly if you drop in at Gould's Saloon, No. 144 Fulton street, and enjoy it in perfection. The berries served here are perfect pictures, large, and of the most tempting lusciousness, and the lacteal accompaniment is none of your sky-blue apology for milk, but the pure article, fresh, thick and creamy. Mr. Gould has one of the best dining places in the city; he serves up daily everything in season, in the cleanest and nicest style. je21 4t

If you wish a Portrait, call at Brady's Gallery, 359 Broadway. THE AMBROTYPE.—Some members of the daguerrean fraternity have represented the Ambrotype—the latest and best improvement in the art—as unworthy of public confidence. Mr. BRADY, the introducer of the Ambrotype in New-York, has found in them a combination of rare qualities, never approached by any other style of camera pictures. 3m28ju

Mayor's Office, New-York, June 16, 1856.

Notice to Owners of Dogs.—Notice is hereby given that on and after Wednesday, June 25th inst., the ordinance respecting dogs found running loose or at large in any street south of Forty-second street, without being muzzled, will be strictly enforced. The sum of fifty cents will be paid for every dog brought alive to the Pound, on the corner of First Avenue and Thirty-first street, which shall have been found in the streets, running loose or at large without being properly muzzled, on presentation of the certificate of the pound-keeper to the Chief of Police at his office in the Park. Owners of dogs may reclaim them at the Pound between sunrise and sunset on the day on which they are received, on payment of expenses.

FERNANDO WOOD, Mayor.

MAYOR'S OFFICE, NEW-YORK, May 23, 1856.

NOTICE is hereby given, that the Complaint Book, opened at this office on the 1st of January, 1855, is still open for the reception of complaints of municipal abuses of all kinds. So far as the Mayor has the power, he will continue to exercise it for the abatement of any such evils, when brought to his attention through the Complaint Book, or otherwise. The Mayor invites all persons to take this method of reporting to him all violations of corporation ordinances, nuisances, or dereliction of duty upon the part of the officers of the Corporation, and he will, as heretofore, use all the legal means at his command to see the laws enforced, and the interests of the public protected. By order of the Mayor. ALEXANDER MING, Chief Clerk.

To the lady readers of this paper.—Ladies, if you wish to get Linen and other Gaiter Boots from 12s. to 20s.; Slipper Ties and Buskins, 1st quality, 8s. to 10s.; second quality, same styles, 6s. and 7s. per pair; boys', misses', and children's Boots & Shoes of all kinds and prices, Patronize 4tjun21 J. B. MILLER & CO., 134 Canal street.

Information Wanted—Of MICHAEL BOODEN, a native of the Parish of Urlingford, near Johnstown, County Kilkenny, Ireland, who left his residence in Ireland for New-York last December. Any information of his whereabouts, sent to the office of the Commissioners of Emigration, N. Y., will be thankfully received by his wife.

Information wanted of John Duffy, a native of Castleblaney, county Monaghan, Ireland, by trade a carpenter, who arrived in this city about five years ago, and when last heard from was living at Staten Island. Any information of his whereabouts, sent to the office of the Commissioners of Emigration, will be thankfully received by his wife Alice Duffy.

OFFICE of Receiver of Taxes—New City Hall, Park, May 29, 1856.—Public notice is hereby given that there is no such office as Collector of Arrearages on Personal Taxes, and that no person but the undersigned, or HENRY B. VENN, Esq., appointed for that purpose, to be found at this office, is authorized to receive any moneys due for arrears on Personal Taxes.

je7 6t HENRY H. HOWARD, Receiver of Taxes.

Information Wanted—Of WILLIAM KELLEY, a native of the county Cavan, Ireland, who left this city about three years ago for the State of Pennsylvania. Any information concerning him will be thankfully received by his sisters, Rosie and Anne Kelley, at No. 15 Rose street, in care of Thomas McManus. je14

OFFICE OF RECEIVER OF TAXES, No. 32 Chambers street, New Court house

To avoid the risks that must inevitably occur from the crowd of Tax Payers who put off to the latest day the payment of their taxes, I have determined to adopt the following rule, which will be rigidly adhered to during my term of office. I shall receive no money after 2 o'clock p. m. Every officer in this department is STRICTLY PROHIBITED from receiving ENVELOPES containing money or checks for the payment of Taxes. By order, 3mjly5 HENRY H. HOWARD, Receiver.

New-York, June 28, 1856.

Photographs and Ambrotypes,—50 Franklin street, New-York. Persons wishing to have a true life-like Photograph or Ambrotype taken, will do well to call at this place; the pictures there made are finished in the best style, and no trouble or pains will be spared to suit the most delicate taste.

The prices will be lower than in any other establishment in town, the proprietor not having the expenses of artists to pay for the coloring of the pictures, or salaries of operators, the work being done by the proprietor himself.

Persons having black plain photographs, and wishing to have them colored or re-touched in China Ink, can have it done at low prices. The proprietor will also re-touch for any establishment in the city or country, that will ask for it, and those he has been coloring for can have their work done at the same rates and prices.

Instructions will be given to pupils in Photograph and Ambrotype. Good collodion for sale, and all kinds of chemicals for the business prepared to order. (3m12jly) A. Cosmes.

SAMUEL YATES,

GENERAL NEWS AGENT,

Foreign and Domestic Newspapers supplied to the Trade.

No. 22 Beekman Street.

James McPyke respectfully informs his friends and the public that he has leased for a term of years the spacious and elegant premises 90 Prince street, three doors west of Broadway, which he will open for the reception of his old patrons, friends, and those who will honor him with their patronage on the 4th inst. The house has been newly painted and furnished in a commodious manner, for the comfort of his guests. His bar will contain the choicest and most approved brands of liquor, and his larder will always be stocked with the finest luxuries and delicacies of the season. Rooms for private parties. Families supplied with meals at all hours. 4t12jly

Business Directory.

HAMILTON & JOHNSON,

NEWS AGENTS,

30 ANN STREET, NEW-YORK.

DAILY, weekly and Sunday papers, Magazines, and Cheap Publications. The trade supplied. Orders from the country solicited and promptly filled. JOHN HAMILTON,
S. W. JOHNSON.
tf

SARAH McFADDEN,

Maritime and National Flag Manufacturer,

198 Hudson street, four doors below Canal street, New-York.

☞ Mrs. McFadden justly baasts of having made up, for Thomas Francis Meagher, the Irish tri-color flag which he presented to the Confederate Club Men of '48, resident in New-York: also, the beautiful U. S. Flag recently presented by Mr. William Kinsella to the Montgomery Guard of Bridgeport. y21june

SHIRT IRONERS.

500 Wanted,

AT THE

BROADWAY STEAM LAUNDRY

e28 4t CORNER OF CANAL STREET, NEW-YORK.

Sewing Machine Depot.—Sewing Machines of all kinds sold, improved and repaired, on reasonable terms, in the most substantial manner. Superior Machine Oils for sale. A large assortment of Machine Silk Twist and Needles for sale at reduces prices.

my 24, 3 mos. F. S COATES & Co., 345 Broadway, New-York.

Business Notices.

I. E. Tate's Pannus Corrium Boot and Shoe store, for tender feet. A large stock of Boots, Shoes and Gaiters always on hand, in great variety, and made to order at the shortest notice, for Gentlemen, Boys and Youths—wholesale and retail, at the lowest Cash prices. Particular attention is requested to the Pannus Corrium or Leather Cloth Boots and Shoes, for those troubled with corns, bunions or tenderness of the feet. Its qualities for summer boots or shoes, surpass anything ever got up in this country for real comfort, as it keeps the feet perfectly cool, and at the same time is susceptible of the finest polish; for a dress boot more so than any French calfskin, with one half the labor. ISAAC E. TATE.
my 24, 3 mos. 427 Broadway New-York.

Edwin A. Brooks, wholesale and retail Boot and Shoe Store, Nos. 575 Broadway, and 150 Fulton street, New-York. Constantly on hand French Calf Skin and Patent Leather Boots, Shoes and Gaiters, made with Dick's Patent Elastic Shanks, and Congress Gaiter Boots; also a large assortment of Ladies' and Children's Gaiters and Shoes, Waterproof and Cork Sole Boots, Perpetual Gloss and Leather Over Shoes.
Boy's and Youth's Boots, Shoes and Over Shoes. my8 3m

Furniture.—F. FITZSIMMONS respectfully calls the attention of his customers and the public to his stock of elegant and substantial FURNITURE, (not made for the auction room) consisting of rich Parlor Suites in rosewood; oak Dining and Chamber Sets of every description; Upholstery in all its branches executed in the best mechanical manner. Prices unexceptionable. Warerooms No. 8 Astor place, near Broadway. my24 3m

Lumber and Timber for Export and City Trade.—THOS. RIGNEY & Co. offer for sale AT THEIR YARD FOOT OF THIRTIETH-STREET, North River, a general assortment of LUMBER AND TIMBER, suitable for export and the city trade. SHIPPERS AND BUILDERS will find it to their advantage to examine their stock previous to buying. Apply as above, or to J. PICKARD, Agent, 26 Bridge street. my17 3m*

KNOX'S
OFFICE FURNITURE WAREROOMS,
59 BEEKMAN STREET, UP STAIRS.
DESKS! DESKS!! DESKS!!!

DOUBLE and Single counting-room DESKS, from 3 to 8 feet long. Office Desks from 3 to 6 ft., of Mahogany, blackwalnut and oak; cases for Books and pigeon-holes. Office chairs, cushions, lounges and Office Tables of every description. my17 tf

STATEN ISLAND
FANCY DYING ESTABLISHMENT.

OFFICE No. 3 John street, (two doors from Broadway,) New-York, solicit orders for dying Broadcloths, Merinoes, Paramattas, De Laines, and Silk, Woolen, and fancy goods of every description; Satin and Taffeta Ribbons, Gimps, Fringes, Galloons, and other trimmings dyed and re-finished with great success.
Also ladies and gentlemen's garments, Shawls, &c., &c.
BARRETT, NEPHEW & CO.,
3mos 3 John st., (2 doors from Broadway,) N. Y.

REMOVAL.

THOMAS McLAUGHLIN, Shirt Manufacturer, and dealer in Gentlemen's Furnishing Goods, WHOLESALE AND RETAIL, has removed from his old stand, 292, to 269 Greenwich street, corner of Murray, and invites the attention of buyers generally to his Spring and Summer stock of the above goods. Feeling confident from his long experience in the business and his increased facilities for manufacturing a superior article of Shirts, Bosoms, Collars, Stocks, Ties, &c., to be able to offer for nett cash the cheapest goods to be found in the city. Shirts made to order for the trade or otherwise. We will also receive from auction daily, Under Shirts and Drawers Gloves, Hosiery, Ties, Cravats, &c., worthy the attention of Clothiers, Dry Goods Dealers and others. Our motto is ONE PRICE ONLY. THOMAS McLAUGHLIN, 269 Greenwich street,
ap263mos (Corner of Murray street, New-York.)

Analytical and Metallurgical Chemistry and Mining Geology.
DR. ISAIAH DECK,
No. 18 EXCHANGE PLACE, NEW-YORK.

MAY be consulted on all subjects relating to Practical Chemistry, Mining- and Metallurgy. Assays of Ores, Analyses of Minerals, and Mining Products in general carefully and expeditiously conducted, and sound opinions delivered upon the most economical methods of working them, based on the latest chemical discoveries. Geological and Mining Surveys undertaken in any part of the world—Dr. DECK having had considerable experience in this branch of his profession. my31 3m

Massachusetts Advertisements.

IRISH EMIGRANT SOCIETY,
Office, corner of South and Beach Streets, Boston.

THE office of this Society is open from 7 A. M., to 6 P. M., where Emigrants can apply to obtain situations for which they are fitted. Farmers, Mechanics, and others in want of labor, will apply at the office.
Orders from employers in the country, stating the services required, the wages given, and the cheapest mode of conveyance, and giving respectable reference, will meet with prompt attention.
The Society will be thankful for all circumstantial and early information of any fraud, imposition or outrage committed on emigrants, and will endeavor speedily to apply a remedy.

MARTIN GRIFFIN, } Vice Presidents.
ARTHUR M'AVOY, }

NICHOLAS J. BEAN, Cor. Secretary.
JAMES FERGUSON, Rec. Secretary.
WILLIAM HICKEY, Treasurer.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

John Hughes,	P. Holly,
William Keating,	Christopher Plunkett,
Daniel O'Rourke,	Jeremiah Ford,
Thomas Hughes,	Hugh Duffy,
Owen Lappan,	M. Lennon, Charlestown,
J. Ryder,	James O'Brien, do.,

Patrick C. Boyle, Roxbury.
MICHAEL HUGHES, Agent.

THE GREAT RUSSIAN REMEDY.
Pro Bono Publico.
"EVERY MOTHER SHOULD HAVE A BOX IN THE HOUSE HANDY IN CASE OF ACCIDENTS TO THE CHILDREN."

REDDING'S RUSSIAN SALVE. It is a Boston remedy of thirty years' standing, and is recommended by physicians. It is a sure and speedy cure for Burns, Piles, Boils, Corns, Felons, Chilblains, and old Sores of every kind.
For Fever Sores, Ulcers, Itch, Scald Head, Nettle Rash, Bunions, Sore Nipples, (recommended by nurses); Whitlows, Sties, Festers, Flea Bites, Spider Stings, Frozen Limbs, Salt Rheum, Scurvy, Sore and Cracked Lips, Sore Nose, Warts and Flesh Wounds, it is a most valuable remedy and cure, which can be testified to by thousands who have used it in the city of Boston and vicinity for the last thirty years.
In no instance will this Salve do an injury, or interfere with a physician's prescriptions. It is made from the purest materials, from a recipe brought from Russia, of articles growing in that country, and the proprietors have letters from all classes, clergymen, physicians, sea captains, nurses, and others who have used it themselves and recommend it to others.
REDDING'S RUSSIAN SALVE is put in large tin boxes, stamped on the cover with the picture of a horse and a disabled soldier, which picture is also engraved on the wrapper. PRICE, 25 Cents a Box. Sold at all the stores in town or country, or may be ordered of any wholesale druggist.
ap19cf Redding & Co., Proprietors, No. 8 State st., Boston.

WEEMAN'S IRON RAILING MANUFACTORY.
No. 26 Merrimac street, Boston, Mass.
Where he has been for the past thirty years.

All persons in want of IRON FENCES, suitable for cemetery, house, garden, Balustrades, &c., can, by calling on the subscriber, purchase a better fence at a lower price, than at any other establishment in the state, as he makes it his exclusive business.
Jn14m6 EBENEZER WEEMAN.

B. S. TREANOR,
ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,
15 MASSACHUSETTS BLOCK, COURT SQUARE, BOSTON.
Particular attention paid to Conveyancing, and the examination of titles to Real Estate.

Medical.

THE CAUSE OF CONSUMPTION.

BRONCHITIS.—WHAT PRODUCES BRONCHITIS?

FIRST STAGE OF DISEASE.

COSTIVENESS is the first link that connects disease in the System. It creates, induces, feeds and supports Bronchitis; and is slightly or indifferently treated, as though it was of no serious tendency: nevertheless, it has laid the foundation of that destroying disease, without the knowledge of the sufferers, undermining and sapping the very vitals of their constitutions.
Among the numerous class of diseases which afflict man, there is none more silent or treacherous in its approaches or more certain to triumph over its slowly consuming victim, than that formidable and insidious leveller of humanity—Bronchitis, which is produced by catching cold, through a neglect of regulating the state of the bowels when arriving to adult age. It seldom excites attention or alarm in the mind of any person, until it has sown the seed of disease and suffering in the human system, by checking the circulation of the blood; and it is to this source alone that we attribute the awful mortality of Consumption.
The following is a simple but correct illustration, namely:—If the culverts and sewers of the city were choked or clogged up, accidentally or otherwise, what would be the result? An overflow of accumulated filth and slush on the surface of the earth in its neighborhood, until it fills every hole, corner and crevice. This is quite similar to the human body, when the channel or sewer of life, as I may term it, which is the bowels, is checked or confined through constipation or some unnatural obstruction, which prevents the blood from circulating through the general system.
What, then, is the consequence? An accumulation of diseased matter and bile. Where will this bile and poisonous substance go to when it is prevented from taking its natural exit, through the bowels? It must surge itself back again into the blood, to be infused through the entire frame by the agency of the blood, bringing in its passage disease and suffering, and exhibiting itself by pain, nervous sensations and irritation all over the body—producing a bad feeling at the stomach, sourness of the food, a rush of blood to the head, catarrh, bronchitis, a short dry cough, dizziness, pain in the shoulders, and through or under the shoulder blades, cold feet, a peevish and irritable temper, annoyed by this hacking cough, and then gradually begins the expectorating from the throat of a lightish phlegm, resembling boiled starch or tough jelly of various colors, from a light to a darkish substance, and hawked up like a string.

SECOND STAGE.

From this period the patient is aware of some unusual and disagreeable feeling, though he seldom takes the hint till it goes from bad to worse. Catching cold from the slightest exposure, which he cannot avoid in consequence of the blood being in a diseased and corrupt condition for a long time previous to the appearance of those troublous symptoms, through the impure state of the blood, that at every breath the patient draws he inhales a similar quantity of fresh air by the nostrils and mouth, which keeps the tickling that exists in the throat and bronchial tubes in a ferment of irritation—this is the reason why some people complain of catching cold, even when confined to their room. Hence the sufferer is hacking, hawking, or expectorating a little at a time, with the impression that there is something in his throat that wants to come out; and which he desires to get out. There is a frequent desire for heavy sighing, with a dryness of the nostrils, which inclines the patient to pick or scratch them; sleepy, drowsy, dull, and heavy loss of appetite, and confused memory; a stuffing, tightness, and oppression of the chest, with a rawness and soreness of the gullet of the throat. This is caused by the silent enemy that has lurked in the system for months, and even years, and has at last aroused your fears, and well it might; for out of one hundred persons who die of Consumption ninety-nine are owing to disease of the throat alone, though simply called Bronchitis; and wretchedly treated by this self-pretended and dignified class of sheepskin physicians termed M. D.'s, who have proved a curse to the human family. They treat their patient on the following abusive principle, by cutting the tonsols and palate from the throat, as you might cut the gills out of a fish—next comes the solution or wash of nitrate of silver or caustic, and the whalebone swab, to wash and burn away the disease that has occupied the throat. Then comes the application of blister, and Croton oil externally to the throat and neck, to draw out the inflammation, as the physicians suppose (what blind philosophy.) Then comes the quack sheet of their MATERIA MEDICA—Calomel, Antimony, Morphine and Opium, to salivate and lull the feelings of the patient, which adds to the disease and increases the suffering, by giving the disease an opportunity of triumphing over nature. What a delusive idea to think the above treatment would be available in having recourse to those debilitating and irritating remedies of cutting, burning, blistering, purging and starving, which is of itself sufficient to lower and reduce the constitution of an ox.

THE THIRD STAGE

Confirms the above remarks. While undergoing this torturing treatment, the constitution is gradually failing and giving away, in giving rise to more alarming symptoms, evidently preparing its victim for the shroud, while the physician and friends fail to see the cause until those confirmed symptoms of consumption set in, but foolishly assign the cause to some other besides the genuine one, till the disease has reached its meridian, with a complication of fresh symptoms, breathing short and hurried, cough frequent, with an accumulation of corrupted matter, sometimes streaked with blood; profuse night sweats, emaciation and debility; cold chills in the forenoon, with a burning fever after; flesh soft and flabby, the limbs scarcely able to support the body; a susceptibility of catching cold on the least exposure, attended with a hoarseness and loss of voice, with a very heavy expectoration in the forenoon; flying pains in the chest, sides and shoulders, with a severe fit of coughing in the morning, or awaking from sleep. The painful crisis is fast approaching, with a swelling and puffing of the feet and ankles, and frequent attacks of diarrhœa. In females, the symptoms are more distressing at an earlier period than in the male, with a weakness in the back and loins, a sinking and exhausted feeling at the stomach, nervous and excitable, with gradual and frequent interruptions of the monthly flow, and as the disease progresses, a total or final cessation of it, with the harbinger of a broken down constitution' which is a discharge of whites, a symptom that proves very debilitating and irritating to females.
All the above symptoms and sufferings are the fruits of costiveness at an early period, accruing to the sufferer through neglect of keeping the bowels in gentle operation, which would circulate the blood, and prove as ventilation to the general system, from the age of 18 to 26, when this disease creeps on and grows on, until every organ in the body is totally disorganized.
My long experience and observations, and my unprecedented success in treating consumption, inclines me to devote the remainder of my life to the cause of suffering humanity. I have cured more consumptive patients in the last ten years than any other doctor in the world in that time, and not by steam, smoke or vapor, nor by smelling medicine through an India rubber or glass tube, but through the selection I make from the forest and verdant meadows. I can always determine on examination whether I can be successful or not, and I speak accordingly. I have made it a rule to treat no disease longer than three weeks. If I cannot check the fatal progress of the disease in that time, I give up the patient as lost, and lead the sufferer to no further expense.

☞ In compliance with the repeated solicitations of consumptive patients living in remote parts of the country, I have opened an hospital at No. 173 Bowery, for the exclusive treatment of those laboring under any species of the above disease, where I can bestow on them the unremitted attention which the seriousness of their cases require; where I can be able to regulate their diet and regimen according to circumstances. Three weeks under the supervision of my especial care is worth four months at a distance.
All persons desirous of medical information can obtain it by enclosing one dollar, when all information and communication will be forwarded on receipt.
D. Durkin, Chronic and Consumptive Doctor,
my31 No. 173 Bowery, New-York.

DR. B. F. ADAMS,
SURGEON DENTIST, (formerly of Barclay street,) feeling grateful for the patronage so liberally bestowed upon him for the last fourteen years, respectfully informs his friends and the public, that he has taken an elegant suite of rooms, at
NO. 122 CHAMBERS STREET,
(near the Sixth and Eighth Avenue Railroads,) where he may always be found, ready to perform all operations pertaining to his profession, in a manner unsurpassed, and on the most reasonable terms. Whole or part sets of incorruptible teeth inserted without pain, on gold plate or gutta percha, excelling nature in beauty and durability. No impure gold or dangerous amalgams used. Irregularities in children's teeth prevented, or of adults remedied. Cleansing, extracting, &c. &c., all at reduced prices. Sets of teeth inserted on Silver or Gutta Percha, for six shillings each. Teeth examined, and advice given free of charge. Please call.
8m7jun B. F. ADAMS, 122 Chambers street, New-York.

DR. J. VOORHIES,
MEDICAL ELECTRICIAN,
NO. 69 SANDS STREET,
Brooklyn.
Office hours from 9 A. M. to 4 P. M.
N. B. All chronic or nervous diseases cured by Electricity in some form. Electro Medicated Vapor Baths ready for operation. Dropsy can be cured by this treatment. Consultations free. m8jun14

WRITING INKS.

WE ask the attention of all who wish imperishable records,—a matter of great importance to State, County and Town Offices, Banks, and others, to Dr. Chilton's test of the prominent Inks in use, made with a view to show their different degrees of permanence by exposure. Engraved facsimiles of the test can be seen at our office.
Thaddeus Davids & Co.,
ap196m Manufacturing Stationers, 26 Cliff street.

Medical.

"Eye and Ear."—DOCTOR HENDERSON, Oculist and Aurist, 419 Broadway, corner of Canal street, treats all diseases of the eye and ear, without cupping, leeching, blistering or the use of calomel. Within the past two years upwards of thirty cases of blindness from inflamation have been restored to sight, to whom reference can be given, (hundreds of which can be seen in my circular,) by inclosing three postage stamps. Electro-chemical Medicated Vapor and Sulphur, hot and cold water BATHS. Office hours 9 A. M. to 5 P. M. Sundays and evenings by appointment. 419 Broadway, corner of Canal st., New-York. my17 3m
ARTIFICIAL EYES inserted.

H. G. LUTHER,
SURGICAL AND MECHANICAL DENTIST,
No. 698 BROADWAY, Second House above Fourth st.

HAVING enjoyed an extensive practice during the last twelve years, feels confident of his ability to give perfect satisfaction to all who may honor him with their preference. He is prepared to perform all operations connected with his profession, in the most faithful manner, and in strict accordance with scientific principles, embracing all the recent improvements of the day.
References of the most respectable character given if desired. Patronage respectfully solicited.
☞ N. B. Teeth extracted without pain. my17 3m

Dr. J. J. McGowan, Physician and Surgeon, Graduate of Harvard University, Fellow of the Massachusetts and Rhode Island Medical Societies, etc., has removed to No. 69 Canal street, New-York, a few doors from Broadway, where he will attend to calls in every branch of the medical profession. Dr. McG. will devote particular attention to chronic diseases, and those of women and children. m10 1t

New School of Medicine and Pharmacy. The last Unfolding of the Art of Healing. My daily practice proves that I CURE CONSUMPTION, in all its varied forms and most advanced states, as readily as any other disease. Therefore I desire to treat all Consumptives, but particularly those who have tried all other physicians without relief. MRS. M. J. MARIN, M.D., No. 37. Lafayette place, N. Y. (First street east of Broadway, between 4th and 8th sts.) Office hours: from 10 A. M. to 1 P. M., exclusively for Ladies; and from 2 to 5 P. M., for Gentlemen, Wednesdays excepted. All other hours by appointment. my31 3m

THE GREATEST WONDER OF THE AGE!

A REMEDY WHICH CURES IN FIVE MINUTES.—M. LEROUX'S FRENCH CHOLERA COGNAC BITTERS.—This wonderful and scientific compound is recommended by the most eminent and learned physicians of all Europe and America, and enjoys the best reputation of anything similar ever offered. It is without doubt the best, most efficient and generally acknowledged remedy against Cholera, dysentery, diarrhœa, and complaints of the stomach in general. The numerous patients who have tried it according to directions, have invariably found relief in a very short time, and the best proof of it is, that since this standard remedy was introducee in the armies of the allies in the Crimea, the mortality of the soldiers from Cholera and similar diseases was reduced by over 75 per cent.; in consideration of which, the inventor was presented by the French and English governments with a gold medal, bearing the inscription, "Hail! M. LEROUX, the great Chemist and inventor, by whose knowledge our armies are preserved from Cholera."
This invaluable preparation is also a remedy for biliousness, indigestion, weakness, and general derangement of the stomach. Upon being taken, it creates appetite, and prevents the heaviness attendant upon eating, by persons who are dyspeptic.
In this city, also, this remedy has been tried with the most undoubted success, and the undersigned can produce the best testimonials of our most celebrated physicians, as to its immediate and complete success, which he will be happy at any time to show to any that may wish to see them. S. STEINFELD, sole agent for the United States, No. 70 Nassau street, corner of John.
P. S.—Those not having money to pay, may call at my place from 3 to 5 P. M. and receive this remedy gratis. my17 3m

TO NERVOUS SUFFERERS.

A Retired Clergyman, restored to health in a few days, after many years of great nervous suffering, is anxious to make known the means of cure. Will send (free) the prescriptions used. Direct to
Rev. JOHN M. DAGNALL,
my10 3m No. 59 Fulton street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Best Hair Dye.—DR. O. M. BALLARD'S new article received the highest premium at the World's Fair and American Institute, where it was examined by the distinguished Chemists, Dr. Chilton, and Prof. John Torrey, and pronounced the best. For sale by the best Druggists. Principal office and store, 498 Broadway, New-York. my17 3m

The undersigned announces to the legitimate faculty that he has opened a store for the dispensing of pure medicines, chemicals, &c. Having obtained a knowledge of the profession in the best schools in the world, during twelve years, he will be able to compound prescriptions precisely as they are ordered. JOHN. C. GILES, Apothecary, 2ljn3m 285 Bleecker, two doors above Barrow.

☞ A CARD.—To the Medical Profession.—A Physician residing in a large and wealthy city, west of New-York, is desirous of selling his Practice, the actual receipts of which amount to $4000 per annum. The appointment of Physician to a Large General Hospital would be also available,—thus securing at once a prominent professional position. Satisfactory reasons will be assigned for the disposal of this fine practice, and a reasonable introduction in the form of a copartnership for a limited period, will be given. Address, &c. &c., to the office of the "Irish News," 29 Ann street.

Reed's Celebrated London Cordial Gin, having gained much popularity in this country, being distilled the same as that in London, as he was formerly a distiller of the same kind of Gin in England, under the EXCISE LAWS.
This article is used in every hospital in and out of England's great metropolis. Its medicinal properties are invaluable.
☞ This Gin is not an imitation or a mixture of raw materials, of which much is sold in this city, under the name of London Cordial Gin, but a genuine and pure article, equal to any imported.
W. R. takes the opportunity of thanking the public for their liberal support, support, and begs a continuance of the same.
DISTILLERY,
118 East 29th st., New-York, between 2d and 3d avenues.

LABORATORY AND CHEMICAL OFFICE,
18 Exchange Place, N. Y., March 4, 1856.

MR. REED: Sir—I have submitted to close examination two samples of London Cordial Gin, manufactured by you, and purporting to equal the English article. I find on comparison with samples of Hodges' and Burnett's previously examined by me, and which I know to have been imported direct, that the quality of yours is by no means inferior to their celebrated compounds, while the perfect method you posess of rectifying, insures an article of a higher degree of purity and flavor, when it has the equal advantage of time to soften it, than much of the so-called imported London gin. As a medicinal agent and cordial, under proper advice, it may be depended upon, from the care with which you select the essential oils combined with it in the distillation.
Yours, respectfully,
ISAIAH DECK, M. D.,
Consulting and Analytical Chemist.
Mr. REED'S Distillery, 118 East Twenty-ninth st., New-York. [my31 3m

Billiards.

IMPROVED BILLIARD TABLES AND CUSHIONS.
MICHAEL PHELAN'S
MODEL TABLES AND COMBINATION CUSHIONS,
(Patented February 19, 1856,)

CORRECT in principle and perfect in action—so constructed as to insure mathematical correctness of angles when played upon, and warranted to possess the requisite elasticity in all seasons, having been tested by the best players in this conntry, and by them pronounced the most perfect of any hitherto constructed—are offered to the public as cheap as the ordinary tables of the day. Orders promptly attended to for fitting up private or public Billiard Rooms; new Cushions put on old Tables, &c.
Saloon and Salesroom No. 39 Chambers street, up stairs.

O'CONNOR & COLLENDER,
BILLIARD TABLE MANUFACTURERS.
53 ANN STREET, NEW-YORK.

REMOVAL.
McConville & Murphy, Importers of Wide Silks Shawls, Vestings, and Linen Goods, have REMOVED to No. 86 LIBERTY STREET, where all orders will be punctually attended to. tf

Business Directory.

RICH CARPETING.

1856. [SPRING IMPORTATION. 1856.

ARTHUR DONNELLY,

98 BOWERY, (West side,) BETWEEN GRAND AND HESTER STREETS.

IS now prepared to exhibit his New Spring Styles of

Foreign and Domestic Carpetings,

Comprising every grade and every description, from the Cheapest Fabric to the Richest.

Importing his goods direct and thus saving the commission and interest which most dealers pay, he is enabled to offer them at prices highly favorable to consumers, who will find at his store, among other Carpetings adopted to all varieties of taste, the following elegant descriptions:

Medallions,	at	14s to 18s per yard.
Velvet,	"	10s to 16s "
Tapestry,	"	6s to 12s "
Brussels,	"	7s to 12s "
Three-ply,	"	7s to 10s "
Ingrain,	"	3s to 7s "
Common Ingrain,	"	18d to 3s "

English and American Floor Oil Cloths,

of every imaginable width, pattern and style.

A complete and choice assortment of

STAIR AND HALL CARPETS, RUGS, MATS, MATTINGS,

and of everything else appertaining to the Carpet Trade.

ARTHUR DONNELLY, 98 Bowery, (West side,)
ap198m Between Grand and Hester sts., N. Y.

NEW STORE

AND

NEW GOODS.

THE subscriber having leased for a term of years the premises

374 Hudson street,

and made exthnsive additions thereto, and having laid in a large stock o

Carpeting and Oil Cloths,

mostly bought at Auction, for CASH, is now prepared to sell them at the following extremely low prices:

Tapestry Brussels, 8s. usually sold at 10s.
Three Ply Ingrain 8s. usually sold at 10s.
Superfine do 6s. usually sold at 8s.
Fine do 5s. usually sold at 6s.
Common do All WOOL 3s. 6d. per yard, a price absolutely unheard of.

Ingrain, Cotton Warp and Wool Filling 2s. 6d.
Oil Cloths 3s. per yard, usually sold at 5s.

Mats, Matting, Table and Piano Covers, Venetian and Hall Carpetting, Stair Rods, &c. &c.

Clergymen and Churches furnished at wholesale prices.
Goods in all cases warranted as represented.

J. R. Landon, 374 Hudson street, New-York,
8mjun a few doors from Hamersly.

SMITH, BROTHERS,

ONE PRICE

CLOTHING WAREHOUSES,

122 AND 140 FULTON ST., N. Y.

The PRICE is marked on all the goods in

PLAIN FIGURES.

We have now on hadd a splendid assortment of Spring and Summer Clothing, together with our new styles of Spring

RAGLANS,

PELISSIERS,

AND CANROBERTS—

OR, SUMMER OVER-COATS.

ap263m SMITH, BROTHERS, 122 AND 140 FULTON ST.

P. L. ROGERS,

FOUNDER OF THE ONE PRICE SYSTEM,

invites an inspection of the extensive

SPRING STOCK OF FASHIONABLE CLOTHING,

at his great central wholesale and retail warehouse,

CORNER OF FULTON AND NASSAU STREETS,

opposite the Herald office.

There any gentleman can procure an elegant outfit in twenty minutes Every garment is warranted of the newest cut and of good workmanship.

Parents can fit out a family of boys with equal dispatch from a stock that includes every style, size, color, material and quality.

The selling prices, which are guaranteed to be 25 per cent. under market average, are all affixed in plain figures to the articles, and NO DEVIATION can be made.

The Order Department is stocked with the finest CLOTHS, CASSIMERES, etc., and the Clothing made to measure cannot be excelled in the world, although the prices are far lower than at other establishments.

my24tf P. L. Rogers.

TAILORS, ATTENTION!

If you wish to possess the best and most exact system of Coat and Jacket Cutting, procure HOLDWAY'S DIAGRAM AND SCALE, whereby you are enabled to cut for 30 different sizes, varying from 20 breast measure (which, you know, is small,) to 54, which you also consider large, and whereby you will find a misfit next to impossible. See it and judge for yourself.

To be had of TILL & COOK, 299 Broadway; or of A. HOLDWAY, 29 Anne street, next door to the IRISH NEWS office. je14 tf

---

JAMES CAIN,

MERCHANT TAILOR,

AND

CLOTHIER,

NO. 129 FULTON STREET,

(HERALD BUILDING,) New-York.
my81y

THOMAS BRENNAN,

DRAPER AND TAILOR,

CANAL STREET, ONE DOOR FROM BOWERY, WEST SIDE.

NEW-YORK.

☞ I am prepared to serve my customers with the newest styles, and at the most reasonable rates. y28je

---

GEO. McDONNELL,

BOOT AND SHOE MANUFACTURER,

32 PARK ROW, NEXT DOOR TO LOVEJOY'S HOTEL, NEW-YORK.

☞ Boots, Shoes, and Gaiters of the best quality made to order.

3m.my10 Geo. McDonnell.

ROBERT IRWIN,

CHEAP BOOT AND SHOE STORE,

my10 156 Chatham street, opposite James' st., New-York. 3m

R. HOGAN,

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL

UMBRELLA AND PARASOL MANUFACTURER,

374 BOWERY, NEAR FOURTH STREET.

Repairing neatly executed. my17 3m*

M. GRADY,

27 FAYETTE STREET, LOWELL, MASS.

ju21 Agent for the IRISH NEWS and all the other choice literature of the day.

MEAGHER & CAMPBELL,

ATTORNEYS AND COUNSELLORS AT LAW,

NO. 82 BROADWAY.

NOTARY PUBLIC,

Commissioner for the U. S. Court of Claims.

THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER, having formed a partnership with MALCOLM CAMPBELL, for the general practice of the law, the firm will continue to devote their attention to such law business as may be intrusted to them, including conveyancing, practice in all the courts of the state of New-York and of the United States, and general collecting business in all parts of the world. Particular attention will be given to the prosecution of claims against the United States in the Court of Claims.

Mr. Meagher may be consulted daily, on law business only, at No. 82 Broadway, from three till five o'clock P. M.

THOS. H. HURLEY,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,

NO. 10 CENTRE ST., OPPOSITE CITY HALL.

WILLIAM E. ROBINSON,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR,

HAVING entered into partnership with ISAAC DAYTON, Esq., (author of the work on Surrogates,) and WILLIAM A. COURSEN, Esq., gentlemen long known, and of high standing at the New-York Bar, has removed to their new office at 267 BROADWAY, third door below Chambers street.

☞ All business either in the Criminal or Civil Courts, promptly and faithfully attended to. ap191y

---

JOHN O'ROURKE,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,

NO. 10 CENTRE STREET,

(Opposite the Superior Court Buildings,)

7jun NEW-YORK.

JAMES M. SHEEHAN,

Attorney and Counsellor at Law,

No. 13 Chambers Street, New-York.

2y1ju Collections promptly attended to, and Liens carefully filed, &c.

JOHN A. McSORLEY,

CUSTOM HOUSE AND SHIP BROKER, AND NOTARY PUBLIC,

7 BROAD STREET,

Clergymen, importing Vestments, Church Ornaments, &c., will be liberally treated with by calling on the subscriber.

REFERENCES:

Messrs. Thos. McClune & Co., C. Meletta, | Messrs. D. & J. Sadlier & Co., James Cook & Co. 6m

---

JAMES HARLIN,

WATCH, CLOCK MAKER, AND JEWELER.

236 HENRY STREET, BROOKLYN.

All watches and clocks bought or repaired at my establishment, warranted for twelve months.

JOHN FOLEY,

WATCHMAKER,

JEWELER AND FINISHER OF FINE WATCHES,

NO. 202 BOWERY.

[Between Spring and Prince Streets, New-York.

Watches of a superior quality made to order, and warranted not to err more than four minutes a year. Cases jointed, works jeweled, and chronometer balances set in the best style. Jewelry of every kind repaired in a jul2m6 workmanlike manner. All orders punctually attended to.

J. McCARTEN,

WATCH AND CLOCK MAKER,

154 SEVENTH AVENUE.

Between 20th and 21st streets, New-York.

Watches, Clocks, and Jewelry carefully repaired and warranted. A good
7jun assortment of watches and clocks always on hand. 3m

JOHN FOLEY,

MANUFACTURER OF FINE GOLD PENS

BEST QUALITY ONLY.

GOLD AND SILVER PENCIL CASES.

my24tf No. 163 BROADWAY, NEW-YORK.

JOHN KENNEDY'S

STEAM MARBLE WORKS,

35TH STREET, NEAR BROADWAY.

Statuary and Marble Mantle-Pieces, Monuments, Grave Stones, Tombs, &c.
All orders thankfully received and punctually attended to.

THOMAS GAFFNEY'S

SOAP AND CANDLE

MANUFACTORY,

825 EAST SENECA STREET, BUFFALO,

NEW-YORK. 6mJune 7

WILLIAM M. SMITH,

The Public Favorite, and only American Opposition

BILL POSTER AND DISTRIBUTOR,

THE OLDEST ESTABLISHED IN THE BUSINESS.

Work done promptly and faithfully—cheaper, quicker, and better than any other poster in the city. Work done either in New-York, Brooklyn, Williamsburgh, or Jersey City. Boards lent for concerts, or any kind of work.

OFFICE, 23½ SPRUCE STREET, NEW-YORK,
ap26tf (Between William and Gold streets.)

THE METROPOLITAN

FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY,

No. 108 BROADWAY,

(Cor. Pine Street.)

CASH CAPITAL $300,000.

JAMES LORIMER GRAHAM, President.

EDWARD A. STANSBURY, Secretary. my31y

CABINET FURNITURE AND UPHOLSTERY.

Established in 1827.

THE largest and cheapest assortment in the State of New-York. Every thing, from a Broom to the richest article, may be found, including Carpets, Oil Cloths, Mattrasses, Beds, &c., &c., at 1 yr R. J. TODD'S, 88 Fulton street, Brooklyn.

WILLARD, FELT & CO.,

MANUFACTURERS OF ACCOUNT BOOKS,

AND IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN PAPER AND STATIONERY,

NO. 14 MAIDEN LANE,

8mos (near Broadway.)

THE VIRGINIA TOBACCO AGENCY,

(ESTABLISHED IN 1836.)

45] Water street, New-York.

CHARLES M. CONNOLLY,

Commission Merchant and Agent for the sale of Manufactured Tobacco.

Has always on hand, at the above agency, a full supply of

Manufactured Tobacco,

Of all brands and descriptions, direct from the Virginia Factories, for sale on liberal terms. jly5 y

---

MRS. J. McCARTHY,

FASHIONABLE MILLINERY STORE,

44 THIRD AVENUE,

Third door from 10th Street, NEW-YORK.

Cheap Straw Hats, Ribbons, Flowers, Ladies' Straw Goods.

Straw Bonnets cleaned and altered to the newest fashions.

LADIES' OWN MATERIALS MADE UP TO THE LATEST STYLES. tf

NICHOLAS WALSH.

SEXTON AND UNDERTAKER.

NO. 8 SIXTH AVENUE.

MATTHEW WALLACE,

25 CLARK STREET, CHICAGO, ILL.,

WHOLESALE DEALER IN NEWSPAPERS, BOOKS, &c.

☞ "The Irish News," on hand, by the earliest moment, each week. tf

---

McLOUGHLIN & McSHANE,

(Successors to THOS. ANDREWS,

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALERS IN

CHOICE TEAS, COFFEES, WINES, BRANDIES, AND GROCERIES,

61 FULTON STREET, near Cliff street,

NEW-YORK. 3m

☞ SHIP STORES SUPPLIED. ☜

CALL ON

THOMAS LYNCH,

OF the "FULTON SHADES," Fulton Ferry, Brooklyn, for the best XX and XXX ales, brandies, and segars.

JOHN J. STAFF'S.

WINES, LIQUORS, SEGARS,
LONDON, DUBLIN, PHILADELPHIA,
PORTER and ALE,
SCOTCH, BURTON, and EAST INDIA ALES,
CHAMPAGNE CIDER, in quantities to suit purchasers,
at 333 Broadway,
tf corner of Anthony street, New-York.

J. MURPHY & SON,

IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN

BRANDIES, WINES, GIN, RUM, IRISH AND SCOTCH WHISKEY, SEGARS, ALE AND PORTER, CORDIALS, &c.

J. M. & SON would call the attention of City and Country Dealers to their EXTENSIVE STOCK OF LIQUORS AND SEGARS under CUSTOM HOUSE LOCK and in STORE.

☞ We do not claim any superiority for our goods over those of any other House, but customers may rely upon being honorably and fairly dealt with, and all Liquors warranted as represented.

J. M. & SON are SOLE AGENTS for this City of Messrs. BUNCHARD & HARRISON'S superior Creaming and Sparkling DOMESTIC CHAMPAGNE, which possesses the same qualities as Imported Wine, and is more agreeable to the palate. It can be sold as low as $7 the basket.

A Superior Quality of IMPORTED ST. JULIAN CLARET, in cases, at $2 50.

Orders from Country Merchants solicited, and shipped with dispatch, at 150 Pearl, and 113 Water streets.

☞ Office 138 Pearl street.

P. MONAGHAN,

IMPORTER of the various and best brands of HAVANA SEGARS, &c. &c. Country and city merchants supplied in bond or in store. Duties paid or unpaid. 121 PEARL STREET, New-York.

N. B.—Sole Importer of the J. M. Vichot, La Union, and La Primavera brands. ap261y

---

McLOUGHLIN & EVERARD,

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL GROCERS,

Keep constantly on hand a select assortment of

GROCERIES, WINES, BRANDIES, TEAS, COFFEES, &c., &c.,

AT THE OLD ESTABLISHED STAND,

ap263m 44 FULTON, between Pearl and Cliff streets, New York.

WISE'S IRISH MALT WHISKEY.

IMPORTED by J. & P. Hogan, Nos. 6 and 12 West street, and 257 Third Avenue, corner of 21st street, New-York, and corner of Vanbrunt and Sullivan streets, Brooklyn. J. & P. Hogan wish to inform their friends and the public that they have just received a large quantity of WISE'S CORK MALT WHISKEY, which will be sold at a reduced price, out of bond and at the above establishment. They are the only firm who import the same in New-York. ap261y

---

BURKE & MYLER,

IMPORTED WINES, LIQUORS AND SEGARS,

No. 42 SPRING STREET, NEW-YORK,
ap263m between Mulberry and Mott streets.

HOSEY & RILEY,

PACIFIC RESTAURANT,

600 BROADWAY, NEW-YORK.

Private entrance on the first floor, 134 Crosby street.

☞ Hosey & Riley invite their friends to give them a call.

my24 3m

JAMES AINSLIE,

NO. 93 BEAVER STREET,

OFFERS for sale from U. S. Bonded Warehouses, of his own importation, Cognac Brandies, also Rochelle Brandies, in half, quarter, and eighth Pipes, pale and dark, of the well known brand of Arzac Seignette.

Gin—Sole importer of the superior Magnolia Brand; also, Cologne and Schnapps Gin.

Wines—Burgundy, Pure Juice, and old Port, Sherry, &c. Jamaica and St Croix Rums; Stewart's Paisley Whiskey, &c. 3mos

---

P. HUGHES,

LEMON SYRUP AND CORDIAL REFINER, and Dealer in Foreign Liquors, and French Brandies of different brands, Hollands Gin, Irish and Scotch Whiskey, Scotch Ale and Porter, and other Liquors, returns his sincere thanks to the public for the patronage he has already received and hopes they will continue the same. No. 88 Cherry street, New-York. tf

---

DRY-DOCK DISTILLERY.

No. 291 East-thirteenth st., near Avenue B.

JAMES RUSSELL,

Rectifier and Manufacturer of Cordials,

IMPORTER AND DEALER

IN Foreign and Domestic Wines, Liquors, Cordials, &c. J. R. having had long experience in the liquor trade, he has facilities of selecting wines and liquors of the most superior quality, which he offers to dealers and families at the lowest market prices, and flatters himself that a single trial will be quite sufficient to secure custom.

Goods delivered free of expense in any part of the city, and country orders promptly attended to. 3m jun14

The Irish News.

THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.
JOHN SAVAGE, LITERARY EDITOR.

THREE DOLLARS PER ANNUM. SINGLE COPIES 6 CENTS
Publication Office, 29 Ann St., cor. of Nassau.

VOL. I. NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, JULY 19, 1856. NO. 15.

Publications.

CONTENTS OF NO. XV.

Editorial.

OUR TRANS-ATLANTIC COUSINS.
THE PATRIOTISM OF THE POOR!
LETTER FROM JOHN MITCHEL TO JOHN MARTIN.
HEAR BOTH SIDES—Revolution in California.
LORETTO NUNS IN CANADA.

Correspondence.

Trip from Enniscorthy to Cork—by the "Wandering Ghost of Dunbrody."
Warning notes from California—by "Hard Facts," and "Sclavola."
Dublin Letter—from "Kilmainham."
Letter from Out West—by "Cosmopolite."
" " Augusta—by Thos. Whyte.

Literature.

PERSONAL RECOLLECTIONS.—High Dutch and Irish Gossip—Two hours on the Road to Niagara.
NEW BOOKS—History of Ireland by John O'Mahony; "Clara, or Slave Life in Europe." "Old Corner Cupboard;" Gentilucci' "Life of the Blessed Virgin;" U. S. Democratic Review.

Poetry.

"A Reverie."
Song by Beranger.

Miscellaneous.

European News—Irish News—Congressional News—all the news of the week.

Answers to Correspondents.

THE IRISH NEWS,

EDITED BY THE PROPRIETOR,

THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER,

DEDICATED TO THE SERVICE OF THE

IRISH PEOPLE,

AT HOME AND ABROAD,

Will be published every Saturday, on and after the 12th of April, at 29 Ann street, corner of Nassau, New-York.

TERMS.

For subscribers, $3 per annum: 6 cents a copy.
For retailers and carriers, $4 per hundred.
For Clubs, 4 copies to one address, per annum, $10.
" 7 " " " " $17.
" 10 " " " " $20.

For advertising.—Each square of eight lines,

Transient - - - - - - - - - - - - $1
Monthly - - - - - - - - - - - - $2
Quarterly - - - - - - - - - - - - $5
Yearly - - - - - - - - - - - - $16

N. B. Four lines, or under, constitute half a square.

Agents or Postmasters who interest themselves in procuring and remitting subscriptions, may retain 50 cents out of each annual subscription of $3.

☞ Subscribers, Agents, and Advertisers will please send in their orders early, and observe that our terms are invariably, payments in advance.

Communications of a PRIVATE nature should always be marked so. Those connected with the editorial department are to be addressed to Thomas Francis Meagher, and those on business to Richard J. Lalor, Irish News Office, 29 Ann street, corner of Nassau.

☞ Subscribers, residing in New-York, Brooklyn, and Williamsburgh, who pay in advance, will have their papers neatly enveloped, addressed, and delivered on each Wednesday through Boyd's Express or some similar medium.

Wholesale Dealers.

DEXTER & BROTHERS, 14 Ann Street, New-York.
ROSS & TOUSEY, 108 Nassau Street, New-York.
SAMUEL YATES, 22 Beekman Street, New-York.
MIKE MADDEN, 22 Ann Street, New-York.
HAMILTON & JOHNSON, 30 Ann Street, New-York.
DE WITT & DAVENPORT, 160 & 162 Nassau Street, New-York.
HENRY TAYLOR, Baltimore, Md.
FEDERHEN & CO., 13 Court Street, Boston.
WM. HICKEY, 128 Federal Street, Boston.
REDDING & CO., 8 Court Street, Boston.
THOS. McLOUGHLIN, 42 South 4th Street, Philadelphia.
T. R. CALLENDER, 88 South-Third Street, Philadelphia.
DROVIN & CO., Philadelphia.
A. WINCH, 116 Chestnut street.
J. M. CRAWFORD, 30 and 32 Chestnut Street, St. Louis, Mo.

Printed by Watters' Brothers, 47 Ann street.

POWER PRESS OF J. B. WILLIAMS.

BENZIGER BROTHERS.

Publishers and Booksellers,

MANUFACTURERS AND IMPORTERS OF

Church Furniture,

Einsiedeln, Switzerland, and 172 William street, corner of Beekman, New-York.

BENZIGER BROTHERS beg leave most respectfully to call the particular attention of the Right Rev. and the Rev. Clergy, the Religious Communities, Educational Establishments, and of the Trade, to the large and varied stock they have just opened in their new store, 172 William street.

Their Book Trade.

The old established house of Benziger Brothers, Einsiedeln, well known to many of the Hierarchy and the Rev. Clergy of the United States who have visited Switzerland, established this house in New-York four years ago, and they trust they will receive for the greatly increased advantages they offer, a continuance of that support, which for a period of over forty years has enabled them to build up, at the Pilgrimage of Our Lady of the Hermits (Einsiedeln) an establishment in which over four hundred persons are daily employed in the fabrication of the various articles that are used in the Church.

They desire particularly to call attention to their publications of PRAYER and DEVOTIONAL BOOKS, in German, French, Italian and Latin, consisting of over 200 different sorts. Being in immediate and constant intercourse with nearly all the principal publishers of Europe, they are enabled to offer a large assortment of standard THEOLOGICAL and LITURGICAL WORKS, among which are, the editions of Mechline, Paris, Ratisbone, &c., at exceedingly low prices.

They are also prepared to supply any of the English Catholic Books published in the United States, at publishers' lowest prices.

An assortment of Dutch and Flemish Prayer Books, and of German School and Story Books.

2. They very respectfully invite an inspection of their extensive assortment of VESTMENTS and CHURCH VESSELS, and, in doing so, feel confident that their stocks is more varied and of superior fabrication than any of the kind heretofore introduced into the United States, and from their facilities for purchasing in Europe, are enabled to sell at a lower price than any other house in the country.

ENGRAVINGS, BEADS, CRUCIFIXES, &c.

3. ENGRAVINGS.—An immense variety of their own manufacture, including Altar, Baptismal, Confirmation, First Communion and First Confession Cards, Holy Water Pots, and

BEADS—Pearl, Garnet, Cornelian, Cocoa, Ivory, Wood, and Glass.

CRUCIFIXES, MEDALS, and RELIQUARIES, &c., in great variety. Also, STATUARY, in porcelain, biscuit, plastique, &c., &c.

4. Together with the above they have a large number of BEAUTIFUL STATUES suitable for Churches and Oratories, imported from Germany, France, and Belgium; amongst which are "The Immaculate Conception," "Virgin Mother" or "Our Lady of Victories," "St. Peter," "St. Paul," "Eue Homo," "St. Joseph," "St. Aloysius," "St. Patrick," "The Resurrection," "Angel Guardian," "Angel Adoring," "The Infant Saviour in the Crib," "The Crucifixion," and many others. Any figure made to order, from design.

☞ Catalogues describing the Church Ornaments, Books, Pictures and Beads, can be had on application.

jy19 3mos

Publications.

SCARCE BOOKS RELATING TO IRELAND.

STUART'S HISTORY OF ARMAGH. 8vo. $8.
MONASTICUM HIBERNICUM. By Stevens. 8vo, calf, plates. $8.
J. K. L.'s LETTERS (Rt. Rev. Dr. Doyle). 8vo. $3 50.
SMITH'S HISTORY OF CORK. 2 vols., 8vo. $6.
CONEY'S IRISH DICTIONARY. 8vo. $8.
McGREGOR'S HISTORY OF LIMERICK. 2 vols. $6.
MISS BROOKES' RELIQUES OF IRISH POETRY. 8vo. $8.
IRISH QUARTERLY REVIEW. 5 vols., 8vo, containing Gilbert's Streets of Dublin—Life of John Banim—Celtic Records of Ireland—Memoirs of Irish Celebrities—Lady Blessington—Maturin—Dr. Maginn—Chief Justice Bushe—Rev. S. Madden—Tom Moore—Barry, the painter—Macklin, &c., &c. $16.
IRISH PENNY JOURNAL. 1 vol., quarto. $3 50.
DUBLIN PENNY JOURNAL. 4 vols., very scarce. $16.
ANCIENT IRISH HISTORIES. By Spencer Campion Hanmer and Marlborough. 2 vols., 8vo. $7 50.
PACATA HIBERNIA. $6.
IRISH PENNY MAGAZINE. Edited by Lover. $3 50.
WYSE'S HISTORY OF THE CATHOLIC ASSOCIATION. 2 vols. $6.
ANNALS OF THE FOUR MASTERS. Translated by Connellan. 4to, cloth, map. $6 50.
HARDY'S LIFE OF CHARLEMONT. 2 vols. $3.
KEATING'S HISTORY OF IRELAND. 8vo. $4.
TAAFFE'S HISTORY OF IRELAND. 4 vols. $8.
THE CITIZEN, a Dublin magazine. 4 vols., with a collection of ancient Irish music. $12.
O'BRIEN'S ROUND TOWERS. 8vo, half calf. $10.
MUSGRAVE'S IRISH REBELLIONS. 2 vols., 8vo, half calf. $4.
And a large collection of miscellaneous Irish books.
For sale by P. M. Haverty, Bookseller,
110 Fulton street, New-York.

VOLUNTEERS ASSEMBLED IN COLLEGE GREEN—A copy of this rare engraving (described in No. 10 Irish News) for sale. Price $5. jy12 tf

The Trade supplied on liberal terms with
MITCHEL'S JAIL JOURNAL.
MOORE'S LIFE OF LORD EDWARD FITZGERALD.
DAVIS'S POEMS, with an introduction by John Mitchel.

KEATING'S IRELAND.

A NEW TRANSLATION OF THE

FORAS FEASA AR ERINN;

OR, GENERAL HISTORY OF IRELAND.

From a Manuscript Copy of the Original Irish of the Rev. and Learned GEOFFREY KEATING.

With Notes, Historical, Topographical, and Explanatory,

By JOHN O'MAHONY, Esq.

The work is now in course of preparation, and will be speedily published, in one large octavo volume of about 600 pages, with plates. Price to Subscribers, $2,00.

The book will be got up in superior style, and furnished to the address of Subscribers giving their names to a duly-authorized canvasser, or to

A list of subscribers will be printed in the work.

P. M. HAVERTY, Publisher,
tf 110 Fulton street, N. Y.

Study the Life of Mary!

THE OLD ESTABLISHED CATHOLIC HOUSE

OF

EDWARD DUNIGAN & BROTHER,

(JAMES B. KIRKER,)

151 Fulton street, New-York,

Are now publishing, in monthly parts, at twenty-five cents each, and with the express approbation of the

MOST REV. JOHN HUGHES, D.D.,

ARCHBISHOP OF NEW-YORK,

The Life of the Blessed Virgin Mary,

By the

RIGHT REV. ROMUALD GENTILUCCI,

Chamberlain of Honor to His Holiness,

Dedicated to and honored with the suffrages of His Holiness

POPE PIUS IX.,

ILLUSTRATED with fine steel engravings, and vignettes, borders, and initials, designed expressly for this work. This Life, published at Rome in 1848, by a Prelate high in the esteem of the Holy Father, is approved by the Master of the Sacred Palace, and has already been translated into other languages. Amid the many lives that have appeared, Gentilucci's will ever be remarkable for its unction and beauty of style, no less than for the deep knowledge which it displays of the writings of the Holy Fathers, and all the monuments of Ecclesiastical History that can in any way throw light on the Life of the Immaculate Mother of our Lord, as handed down in the loving traditions of the faithful from the age in which she lived.

It is a book for the studious as well as for the fervent Christian; a book for every one who seeks to rouse in his heart feelings of devotion for Her, whom the unerring Judge selected for the greatest honor which the human mind can conceive.

Conditions of the Work.

Gentilucci's Life of the Blessed Virgin Mary will be published in semi-monthly parts of 48 pages each, with a steel engraving in every number, and several fine woodcuts. Printed on fine paper, from new type, it will, when complete, form a most unique and beautiful volume of six to seven hundred and fifty pages.

OBSERVATIONS OF THE PRESS.

No other work of our day, on the same subject, can be compared to it. It is unrivalled for beauty of style and depth of erudition. It is the offering of a learned and devoted son of the blessed Virgin, who enjoys the confidence and friendship of our most Holy Father, to whom the work is dedicated. We are not more edified at the piety of the author, than astonished at the wonderful erudition displayed in the book. The translator has performed his task admirably.—Pittsburg Catholic.

We cannot too highly recommend it to the consideration of our readers, whether we regard the intrinsic value of the work itself, or the beauty and exquisite ensemble of its getting up.—Truthteller.

Profusely illustrated with engravings and vignettes, this work is brought out in such an elegant style, as to make it, exclusive of its literary merit, a fitting library companion to the Bible of the same enterprising publishers.—Detroit Vindicator.

This work is one of devotion and merit. We do not know who translated it, but it seems better than average translations.—Freeman's Journal.

This work, translated from the Italian, and apparently well translated, is by an eminent author, is dedicated by permission to his Holiness Pius IX., and is spoken of in very high terms by competent judges. As far as we have seen it, we like it very much, and think it must prove a great favorite with the children of Mary and all devout Catholics.—Brownson's Review.

Inducement.

Each subscriber to this splendid work will receive with the last number a magnificent steel engraving, suitable for framing, of the

MOST. REV. JOHN HUGHES, D.D.,

ARCHBISHOP OF NEW-YORK.

Canvassers will find it to their advantage to address the publishers.

$12jly EDWARD DUNIGAN & BROTHER.

Publications.

FOUR NEW VOLUMES

OF

SADLIER'S POPULAR LIBRARY.

⁂ These and other books for popular reading, libraries, &c., issued by the publishers, are sent free by post, on receipt of the amount; and if ordered in any considerable number for libraries or prizes, a very large reduction is made. It is hoped that the low terms will induce a very general use of these books.

Just Ready—Volume 10th,

HISTORY OF THE WAR IN LA VENDEE, and THE LITTLE CHOUANNERIE. By G. J. HILL, M.A. With two maps and seven engravings. 12mo, cloth, extra, 75 cents; cloth, extra gilt edges, $1 12.

Volume 11th,

TALES AND LEGENDS FROM HISTORY.

CONTENTS—1. Gonsalvo of Amaranta—2. The victory of Muret—3. The Dominicans Ghent—4. The Martyrs of Stone—5. The Abbey of Premontre—6. Legends of St. Winifride—7. The feast of the Immaculate Conception—8. The Consecration of Westminster Abbey—9. The Monk's last Words—10. The Martyr Maidens of Ostend—11. The loss of the Conception—12. Foundation of the Abbey of Anchin—13. Our Lady of Mercy—14. John de la Cambe—15. The Carpenter of Roosendael—16. The Widow of Artois—17. The village of Blankenberg—18. St. Edward's Death—19. The windows of San Petron o—20. The Vessels of St. Peter.

12 mo. cloth, extra, 63 cents; cloth, gilt, 88 cents.

Volume 12th,

THE MISSIONS IN JAPAN AND PARAGUAY. By CECELIA CADDELL, author of "Tales of the Festivals," "Miner's Daughter," "Lost Genoveffa," &c. &c. 12mo, cloth, extra, 63 cents; cloth, extra, gilt edges, 88 cts.

Volume 13th,

CALLISTA, A Tale of the Third Century. By Very Reverend JOHN HENRY NEWMAN, D.D., Rector of the Catholic University, Dublin. 12mo. cloth, extra 75 cents; cloth, extra gilt, $1 12.

The following extract is from a very long notice of the work in the Dublin Tablet:

"The story is partly interwoven with historical facts, but its author professes, at the outset, that as a whole it is a simple fiction from beginning to end. However that may be, as an instrument of conveying a real and genuine historical knowledge of the days of which it treats, in their aspect toward Christianity, it will probably remain without a rival in the literary world."

Just Ready, the eighth thousand

1. FABIOLA, or the Church of the Catacombs. By Cardinal WISEMAN. Cloth, extra, 75 cents; gilt, $1 12.

"In "Fabiola" it is not difficult to recognize the learning and brilliancy of an eminent person, whose perfect knowledge of the Rome of to-day imparts to his description of the primeval remains of Christian antiquity a truthfulness and value, independent of the rich stores of erudition which he has applied to their examination."—Catholic University Gazette.

2. HEROINES OF CHARITY. With Preface by AUBREY DE VERE, Esq. Cloth, extra, 50 cents; gilt, 75 cents.

CONTENTS:—1. The Sisters of Vincennes—2. Jeanne Biscot—3. Anne de Melun—4. Louise de Marillac, Duchess de Aiguillon, Madame de Pollalion, Mademoiselle de Lamoignon—5. Madame de Moramion—6. Mrs. Eliza A. Seton—7. The Little Sisters of the Poor.

3. THE LIFE OF ST. FRANCES OF ROME. By Lady GEORGIANNA FULLERTON. With three others; and an Essay on the Miraculous Lives of the Saints. By J. M. CAPES, Esq. Cloth, extra, 50 cents; cloth, gilt, 75 cents.

4. CATHOLIC LEGENDS AND STORIES. A varied and beautiful volume, containing 31 of the choicest specimens, for the most part new to English readers. Cloth extra, 50 cents; gilt, 75 cents.

5. THE WITCH OF MELTON HILL. By the author of "Mt. St. Lawrence," &c. Cloth, extra, 50 cents; cloth gilt 75 cents.

"We have seldom read a better story than this. If all the volumes of the 'Popular Library' are as good as this, the series will have an immense success. As for the moral and religious tendency of the book, it is excellent. We can conscientiously recommend it.—Catholic Leader.

6. PICTURES OF CHRISTIAN HEROISM. With Preface by the Rev. H. E. MANNING, D.D. Cloth, extra, 50 cents; gilt, 75 cents.

CONTENTS:—1. Father Azevedo—2. Sister Honoria Magaen—3. Blessed Andrew Bobola—4. Blessed John de Britto—5. The Nuns of Minsk—6. A Confessor of the Faith, 1793—7. The Martyrs of the Carmeg—8. Gabriel de Naillac—9. Margaret Clitherow—10. Geronimo of Algiers—11. Martyrdoms in China—12. Father Thomas of Jesus.

Cloth, extra, 12mo, 50 cents; gilt edges, 75 cents.

Just published, the 5th thousand of

7. THE BLAKES AND FLANAGANS. A Tale illustrative of Irish Life in the United States. By Mrs. J. SADLIER. 12mo. 400 pages, cloth extra, 75 cents; cloth, extra, gilt edge, $1 12.

"The style is excellent, thoroughly natural and unaffected, the narrative flowing, the conversation full of vivacity, and the characters well sustained. ....We cannot but wish it the widest circulation that a book can have."—St. Louis Leader.

8. THE LIFE AND TIMES OF ST. BERNARD. Translated from the French of M. L'Abbe RATISBONNE. With a Preface by Henry Edward Manning, D.D., and a Portrait. 1 vol. 12mo, 500 pages.
Cloth, extra, $1; gilt edges $1 50.

9. THE LIFE AND VICTORIES OF THE EARLY MARTYRS. By Mrs. HOPE. Written for the Oratoriaa's Schools of our Lady's Compassion. 1 vol. 12 mo. 400 pages.
Cloth, extra, 75 cents. Gilt edges, $1 12.

D. & J. SADLIER & CO., 164 William street, New-York; 128 Federal street, Boston; and cor. Notre Dame and St. Francis Xavier streets, Montreal, C. E.

A VALUABLE BOOK OF REFERENCE.

Will be published in July,

In one volume, 8vo. cloth, price $1 50,

HISTORY OF IMMIGRATION

TO THE

UNITED STATES,

EXHIBITING THE

Number, Sex, Age, Occupation, and country of birth,

OF

PASSENGERS ARRIVING IN THE UNITED STATES,

By sea from Foreign Conntries, from September 30th, 1819, to December 31st, 1855.

COMPILED ENTIRELY FROM OFFICIAL DATA.

With

An Introductory View of the Progress and Extent of Immigration to the United States prior to 1819.

And an appendix containing the

NATURALIZATION AND PASSENGER LAWS

Of the United States, and extracts from the Laws of the Several States relative to Immigrants, the Importation of Paupers, Convicts, Lunatics, etc.

BY WILLIAM J. BROMWELL,

Of the Department of State.

tf28|e J. S. Redfield, 34 Beekman street.

☞ Post Office Notice.—The MAILS FOR EUROPE, via Liverpool, per U. S. steamer Baltic, will close at this office on SATURDAY, the 19th day of July, at 10½ o'clock, A. M.

my17 Isaac V. Fowler, Postmaster

☞ Post Office Notice.—The Mails for California, per U. S. steamer George Law, will close at this office on Monday, the 21st day of July, at 1 o'clock P. M. Isaac V. Fowler, Postmaster.

Shipping.

THE NEW-YORK AND LIVERPOOL

United States Mail Line.

The ships composing this line are the following:

The ATLANTIC .....Capt. Eldridge.
The ADRIATIC .....Capt. West.
The PACIFIC .....Capt. Eldridge.
The BALTIC .....Capt. Comstock.

These ships have been built by contract, expressly for the government service. Every care has been taken in their construction, as also in their engines to insure strength and speed; and their accommodations for passengers are unequalled for elegance and comfort.

Price of passage from New-York to Liverpool in first cabin, $130; in second do., $75. Exclusive use of extra size state rooms, $325. From Liverpool to New-York, 80 and 20 guineas.

An experienced surgeon attached to each ship.

No berth can be secured until paid for.

PROPOSED DATES OF SAILING.

FROM NEW-YORK.	FROM LIVERPOOL.
Saturday, April 26, 1856.	Wednesday, April 16, 1856.
.. May 10, ..	.. April 30, ..
.. May 24, ..	.. May 14, ..
	.. May 28, ..
	.. June 11, ..

For freight or passage, apply to

Edw'd. K. Collins & Co., No. 56 Wall street, New-York.
Brown, Shipley & Co., Liverpool.
Stephen Kennard & Co., 27 Austin Friars, London.
B. G. Wainwright & Co., Paris.

The owners of these ships will not be accountable for gold, silver, bullion, specie, jewelry, precious stones or metals, unless bills of lading are signed therefor, and the value thereof therein expressed.

Shippers will please take notice, that the ships of this line cannot carry any goods contraband of war. ap26 6m.

C. H. MARSHALL & CO.,

Old Black Ball Line of Liverpool Packets.

CERTIFICATES

Furnished for Passage to and from Liverpool, on the 1st and 16th of every Month, by the following splendid ships:

James Foster, Jr.	Capt. J. W. Porter.
Neptune	" E. W. Peabody.
Harvest Queen	" E. Young.
Isaac Webb	" J. M. Bayer.
Great Western	" W. G. Furrier.
Manhattan	" T. Dixon.
Isaac Wright	" E. Abeel.
Columbia	" C. Hutchinson.
Fidelia	" W. A. Macgill.
Yorkshire	" C. A. Marshall.

REMITTANCES.

Drafts, for £1 and upwards, on the Royal Bank of Ireland, and on Messrs. Baring Brothers & Co., Bankers, Liverpool and London, payable on sight.

C. H. MARSHALL & CO.,
88 Burling Slip, N. Y.

Agents in Liverpool, Baring Brothers & Co.,

OLD LINE PACKETS,

Pier 23 East River, foot of Beekman street. 6m

WILLIAMS & GUION'S

Old Black Star Line of Packets. 1856.

Passage from any part of Great Britain and Ireland, secured at the lowest possible rates by this old-established line, sailing from Liverpool to New-York every five days, comprising the following magnificent Ships:

Ships.	Captains.	Tonage.
AUSTRALIA,	Smith,	2,000
BRIDGEWATER (new),	Barstow,	2,000
CULTIVATOR (new),	Austin,	2,000
CYNOSURE,	Bray,	2,000
CORNELIA LAWRENCE (new),	Knapp,	2,000
DE WITT CLINTON,	Funk,	1,800
ENTERPRISE,	Davis,	1,200
GUY MANNERING,	Dollard,	2,000
JACOB A. WESTERVELT,	Hoodless,	2,000
IRENE,	Williams,	1,400
JOHN BRIGHT (new),	Cutting,	2,000
MARMION,	Hanley,	1,200
NORTH AMERICAN,	Clark,	1,800
OSWEGO,	Stevens,	1,400
ROBERT KELLY,	Barstow,	1,500
SILAS WRIGHT (new),	Freeman,	2,000
SOUTHAMPTON,	Furlong,	1,600
THORNTON (new),	Collins,	2,000
TICONDEROGA,	Boyle,	1,400
UNIVERSE,	Cave,	2,000
VANGUARD,	Norton,	1,800

The ships of this line are the largest and swiftest in the trade, their accommodations for passengers are unequalled, and the frequency and punctuality of their departure offer advantages to the emigrant not to be had by any Line of Packets. Such passengers as decline coming out, the money paid for them will be promptly refunded without discount.

Provisions of best quality are provided for passengers; rations, consisting of Bread, Flour, Rice, Oatmeal, Tea, Sugar, Molasses, Salt, &c.

The increased patronage received by the proprietors of the Old Black Star Line has induced them to add to the Line several New Ships, which have taken their place this season; no expense has been spared to render the facilities for Emigration equal to the times, and add to the renown of these celebrated Packets.

The regular Sailing days are 1st, 8th, 11th, 13th, 21st, and 26th of each month; this will give passengers opportunity for embarking more frequent than by any other established Line, to which the attention of the public is respectfully called.

No Certificate of Passage will be issued for children under 12 years of age unless accompanied by an adult, who must be paid for on same certificate; for persons over 60 years of age, or with any impediment, without a Permit from Commissioners of Emigration.

REMITTANCES.

Persons wanting to send money to their friends can obtain drafts for any amount, which will be cashed at sight at the following Banks:

Ireland—National Bank of Ireland; Royal Bank of Ireland; Ulster Banking Co., and their Branches.

Scotland—National Bank of Scotland and Branches.

England—Messrs. GLYNN, MILLS & Co, Bankers, London; GUION & Co., Merchants, Liverpool.

For further particulars apply, if by letter post-paid, to

WILLIAMS & GUION,
40 Fulton street, New-York.

GUION & CO.,
115 Waterloo Road, Liverpool.

AGENTS—JOHN WHITNEY, Providence, R. I.
EDWARD RYAN, 2 Albany street, Boston.
THOMAS RATTIGAN, Pittsburgh, Pa.

THOS. C. ROCHE'S

PASSAGE AND DRAFT OFFICE 83 SOUTH ST.

Sole Passenger Agent for GRINNELL'S celebrated

Swallow Tail Line of Liverpool and London Packets.

THOSE sending for their friends in the Old Country can make arrangements at this office to bring them from any part of IRELAND or ENGLAND at the lowest rates.

The ships sail from Liverpool four times a month, and from London twice a month.

Drafts for sale for £1 and upwards, payable in any part of England, Ireland, Scotland or Wales.

Passage Tickets and Drafts sold in this office are GUARANTEED by CORNELIUS GRINNELL, Esq., 87 South street, New-York.

☞ No connection whatever with any other Person or House useing the name of Roche.

For further information apply to THOMAS C. ROCHE, ap268m Old Stand, 83 South street, New-York.

Shipping.

LIVERPOOL AND PHILADELPHIA

STEAMSHIP LINE.

CITY OF BALTIMORE....CITY OF WASHINGTON.
CITY OF MANCHESTER...KANGAROO.

THE magnificent new steamship City of Baltimore, Capt. Leitch, 2,367 tons, 500 horse power, will sail from Philadelphia Thursday, 7th August, and from Liverpool Wednesday, 27 Aug. Steerage passage from Philadelphia, $30; from Liverpool, $40, including cooked provisions. Persons wishing to send for friends from Great Britain and Ireland, by the above line of splendid Steamships, or by first-class sailing Packets, can purchase passage tickets on application to

Sabel & Cortis, 177 Broadway, New-York.

Or to their Agents in

Albany—A. T. Holmes.....Dubuque—Jas. C. Rattray.
Baltimore—Foard & Rodgers.....Hartford, Ct.—A. Rose.
Boston—F. S. Saxton.....New-Orleans—Jenkins, Williams & Co.
Buffalo—Robt. Hager.....Pittsburg—John Thompson.
Chicago—Lull & Mayer.....Pottsville—R. Edwards.
Cincinnati———.....Toronto C. W.—D. K. Feehan. tf24my

BLACK BALL LINE
OF LIVERPOOL PACKETS,

Sailing to and from Liverpool on the 1st and 16th of each Month.

THE following ten magnificent clipper Packet Ships comprise the "Black Ball Line, viz:—

James Foster Jr.,	Manhattan,
Great Western,	Neptune,
Harvest Queen,	Columbia,
Isaac Webb,	Yorkshire,
Isaac Wright,	Fidelia.

DRAFTS AT SIGHT for any amount payable in every town throughout England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales.

Persons returning to the old country, or those sending for their friends, will find it to their interest to select the "Black Ball Line," as the accommodations in the above clippers for Cabin, Second Cabin, and Steerage Passengers, are well known by the travelling public to be far superior to any other.

☞ Apply or address by letter, post-paid; no letter will be answered unless a postage stamp is enclosed to pre-pay postage.

Jacob Wilson, 108 South street, New York,

Who is the only authorized Passenger Agent for the "Black Ball Line," which lay at Pier 23 East River, opposite this office. my3 3m

Bankers.

GREEN & SEWELL,

BANKERS,

No. 29 Wall Street, New-York.

DRAFTS on the Belfast Banking Co., available in any part of Ireland, for sale.

REMITTANCES from the interior, promptly forwarded to any address in Ireland, and receipt therefor returned to the sender. General Banking business transacted. my17 6m

---

BREWER & CALDWELL,

20 OLD SLIP, CORNER OF WATER STREET, N. Y.

ISSUE BANK OF CHARLESTON BILLS

ON

BANK OF LIVERPOOL,

In sums of one pound sterling and upwards, payable at any of the Banks in ENGLAND, IRELAND, SCOTLAND, AND WALES. jun14

REMITTANCES TO IRELAND.

IRISH EMIGRANT SOCIETY,
Office, 51 Chambers street.

NOTICE.—The recent failures, by which a large amount of Bills remitted from this country to friends in Ireland, has been returned unpaid, afford to this Society the opportunity, and at the same time impose upon it the duty of informing the public, that such losses would have been prevented if the parties purchasing Bills had availed themselves of the advantages offered by the Society.

For the purpose of entire protection a fund is constantly kept on deposit in the Bank of Ireland, against which this Society issues its drafts, payable at sight (from sums of £1 sterling and upwards), on the Bank and all its branches, and has thereby for the last Ten Years afforded a mode of remittance perfectly safe and unquestionable.

New-York, December 29, 1851.

ANDREW CARRIGAN, President.

JOHN MANNING,
ROBERT J. DILLON,
HUGH KELLY,
} Vice-Presidents.

EDWARD C. DONNELLY, Corresponding Secretary.
PETER CREAR, Recording Secretary.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

Felix Ingoldsby,	John Nicholson,	William Redmond.
William Watson,	Hugh Kelly,	James Olwell,
John Manning,	Cornel Sheehan,	Daniel Devlin,
Terence Donnelly,	Romaine Dillon,	John McMenomy.

EMIGRANT INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS BANK.

No. 51 CHAMBERS STREET.

THIS Institution has been established for the purpose of affording to Emigrants and others, a safe place of deposit for their funds, to protect them from robbery and fraud.

It is conducted with the strictest economy—neither the Officers and Trustees, receive any compensation for their services. The entire profits belong to the Depositors, and will be divided amongst them, having due regard to the safety of the funds.

The last dividend was six per cent. upon all sums of $500 and under, and and will be continued or increased as the profits may justify.

Bank open to receive Deposits, daily, from 10 A. M., to 2, and from 5 to 7 P. M.

TRUSTEES.

William Watson,	John P. Nesmith,
John Nicholson,	John Milhau,
Andrew Carrigan,	Edward W. Tiers,
James Kelly,	Charles M. Connelly,
James Kerrigan,	Cornelius H. Sheehan,
Hugh Kelly,	Edward Bayer,
Charles O'Connor,	Daniel Devlin.
James Olwell,

JOSEPH STUART, President.
FELIX INGOLDSBY, 1st Vice-President.
JOHN MCMENOMY, 2d Vice-President.
TERENCE DONNELLY, Treasurer.
LOUIS B. BINSSE, Secretary.
PETER CREAR, Accountant.
JOHN MANNING, Comptroller. tf

REMITTANCES TO

ENGLAND, IRELAND AND SCOTLAND.

STERLING BILLS for sale on Messrs. Prescott, Grote & Co., Bankers, London, from £1 upwards, payable on demand, and negotiable in any part of the United Kingdom; also Bank of England Notes and Drafts of any of the English Banks or Bankers, bought and sold.

ap191y Prime & Co., 54 Wall street.

DRAFTS FOR £1 AND UPWARDS,

ON THE ROYAL BANK OF IRELAND,

(Expressly authorised by the Bank,)

FOR SALE AT THE BANKING HOUSE OF JOHN B. MURRAY,

No. 44 Wall street, (over Bank of North America,) New-York.

PERSONS wishing to send money to their friends in Europe, can remit it as above, by letter, post-paid, and upon receipt, a draft on the Royal Bank, will be forwarded without charge, to the person designated. 8m*

☞ To prevent loss, every Draft is registered here, and a copy of the register forwarded to the Bank by every mail steamer.

Business Notices.

S. CAHILL'S

BOOT AND SHOE STORE,

NO. 377 BROADWAY,

(One door below White street), New York.

S. CAHILL respectfully informs his friends, customers, and the public generally, that, having made an extensive addition to his Store, for the better accommodation of his customers, he has now the largest and most extensive BOOT AND SHOE STORE in the world, and is prepared to exhibit the most extensive assortment of

LADIES, MISSES, AND CHILDREN'S, GENTLEMEN'S, BOYS, AND YOUTH'S
BOOTS AND SHOES
EVER BEFORE OFFERED TO THE CITIZENS OF NEW YORK.

His facilities for manufacturing on an extensive scale, together with his superb assortment of FRENCH BOOTS and SHOES, received direct from Paris by every steamer, enable him to sell a much better article at much lower prices than can be purchased at any other house in the city. BOOTS AND SHOES OF ALL DESCRIPTIONS MADE TO MEASURE AT THE SHORTEST NOTICE. je28 3mos

---

Monday, June 16th, and during the week—

LATEST FASHIONS.

THE New Hat Company would here lay before their readers a few of the advantages to be derived from their system of doing business, which is ONE QUALITY, ONE PRICE, AND NO ABATEMENT. In the first place, any gentleman, whether he be a judge of the article or not, can rely upon receiving our first and only quality. Secondly, our price is so low, that the man of the most limited means is enabled to procure a fine and fashionable hat, (at the same time we wish it to be distinctly understood that our hats are not to be excelled by those sold at four dollars by any other establishment,) and lastly, we strive to please. If any gentleman desiring a hat differing from the usual style, will call and leave his order, we shall endeavor to suit him in every respect. The inducements which we offer to wholesale purchasers, and the trade in general, are not to be exceeded by those of any other establishment.

Also, a large assortment of CLOTH CAPS, CHILDREN'S FANCY HATS, UMBRELLAS, &c., constantly on hand at the lowest rates. Nos. 146 and 148 Nassau st. ap268m

---

FASHIONABLE HATTER, 223 THIRD AVENUE.

COWHY'S Spring style of Hats, now ready, are superior to anything hitherto offered in Beauty of Shape, and Elegance of Finish. Being a practical hatter himself, Cowhy is enabled to sell A SUPERIOR HAT AT A VERY MODERATE PRICE.

His young gent's hat is one of great beauty, and his assortment of children's fancy hats and caps cannot be surpassed by any other establishment in the city.

N. B.—Hats and Caps made to order, and warranted to fit, by COWHY, 223 Third Avenue, between 19th and 20th streets. my31y

---

REMOVAL.

THOMAS McLAUGHLIN, Shirt Manufacturer, and dealer in Gentlemen's Furnishing Goods, WHOLESALE AND RETAIL, has removed from his old stand, 292, to 269 Greenwich street, corner of Murray, and invites the attention of buyers generally to his Spring and Summer stock of the above goods. Feeling confident from his long experience in the business and his increased facilities for manufacturing a superior article of Shirts, Bosoms, Collars, Stocks, Ties, &c., to be able to offer for nett cash the cheapest goods to be found in the city. Shirts made to order for the trade or otherwise. We will also receive from auction daily, Under Shirts and Drawers Gloves, Hosiery, Ties, Cravats, &c., worthy the attention of Clothiers, Dry Goods Dealers and others. Our motto is ONE PRICE ONLY. THOMAS McLAUGHLIN, 269 Greenwich street,
ap268mos (Corner of Murray street, New-York.)

Edwin A. Brooks, wholesale and retail Boot and Shoe Store, Nos. 575 Broadway, and 150 Fulton street, New-York. Constantly on hand French Calf Skin and Patent Leather Boots, Shoes and Gaiters, made with Dick's Patent Elastic Shanks, and Congress Gaiter Boots; also a large assortment of Ladies' and Children's Gaiters and Shoes, Waterproof and Cork Sole Boots, Perpetual Gloss and Leather Over Shoes.
Boy's and Youth's Boots, Shoes and Over Shoes. my3 3m

Furniture.—F. FITZSIMMONS respectfully calls the attention of his customers and the public to his stock of elegant and substantial FURNITURE, (not made for the auction room) consisting of rich Parlor Suites in rosewood; oak Dining and Chamber Sets of every description; Upholstery in all its branches executed in the best mechanical manner. Prices unexceptionable. Warerooms No. 8 Astor place, near Broadway. my24 3m

---

Lumber and Timber for Export and City Trade.—THOS. RIGNEY & Co. offer for sale AT THEIR YARD FOOT OF THIRTIETH-STREET, North River, a general assortment of LUMBER AND TIMBER, suitable for export and the city trade. SHIPPERS AND BUILDERS will find it to their advantage to examine their stock previous to buying. Apply as above, or to J. PICKARD, Agent, 26 Bridge street. my17 3m*

SHIRT IRONERS.

500 Wanted,

AT THE

BROADWAY STEAM LAUNDRY

e28 4t CORNER OF CANAL STREET, NEW-YORK.

"TERRA COTTA"

CHIMNEY TOPS,

PLAIN and Ornamental. Drain Pipes of all sizes, superior manufacture lowest rates. LONG ISLAND POTTERY. Depot, 82 Nassau street New-York. my10 3m

---

JAMES O'FLYN.

HOWARD HOTEL,

176 BROADWAY, NEW-YORK.

Advertising Envelope Manufacturer, Embosser, Die Sinker, and General Engraver. Notarial and Lodge Seals, Crests, and Coats of Arms. Seal Presses of every description constantly on hand. 14ju3m

Employment.

EMPLOYMENT OFFICE FOR SERVANTS.

275 BOWERY, NEW-YORK.

MALE and Female Servants can be promptly suited at the above number, with any situation in the city or country, at good wages, in first-rate families, without delay.

N. B. Employers quickly supplied.
3m may 31 ALEXANDER F. RUNGE, Agent.

Wanted, at 766 Broadway, (near 8th street.) Places procured for conductors, Bookkeepers, Clerks, Salesmen, Firemen, Brakemen, Barkeepers, Porters, Waiters, men on Steamers and Railroads, boys for trades, and girls of every description. 21my8m French, English, and German spoken. LOUIS KAUFMAN, Agent.

EMPLOYMENT OFFICE for Servants, 129 Waverley Place, two doors from Sixth avenue, New-York.—A large number of competent help can be suited with good situations, in city and country, without delay. Employers in the city and country supplied with the best of female help. [my17 3m] WM. O'BRIEN, Proprietor.

NEW-YORK EMPLOYMEMT OFFICE.

480 Broadway.

HONEST, capable, and faithful servants can at all times find good situations at this office. Protestant and Catholic have equal privilege. Established in 1844 by [8m21ju] T. P. SAUNDERS.

Coal.

COAL.

THE subscriber respectfully informs his friends and the public generally, that he has opened a new Coal Yard, cor. 27th Street and 9th Avenue, where he is prepared to sell the best quality of Red and White Ash Coal, at the lowest market price for cash. Weight warranted, or forfeit coal.
6mos* JOHN MACDONALD.

COAL of the very best quality both Anthracite and Bituminous, for family and manufacturing purposes, for sale by the subscriber from his Yards, 682 Washington, 128 McDougal, and 146 West Thirty-second streets. Also, Coal by the cargo.
ap191y Thomas Maher.

European News.

The British and North American mail steamer Africa, Capt. Ryrie, from Liverpool, afternoon of Saturday, the 28th of June, arrived on the 11th inst. She brings reports to the close of the markets of her day of sailing, Saturday, 28th of June.

American matters—or, rather, manners—have again been in everybody's mouth. The exciting cause was a contretemps that happened at the Queen's levee. Divested of the outrageous exaggerations of the British presses, the facts are simply these, that Mr. Dallas, accompanied by a friend, went to the Queen's levee; the friend's costume was not in accordance with the regulations, and both gentlemen, Mr. Dallas and friend, returned to the embassy in Harley street. Out of this incident the London Times found material for a savage onslaught upon American manners. As usual, the minor presses took up the cry, and for at least two days, Mr. Dallas labored under the imputation of having put a studied affront upon the Queen. Of course, an immense deal of patriotic wrath was unnecessarily wasted on his head.

Mark the loud impudence and stupid sophistry of the Times:

"When will Americans learn manners?" it cries. "Who shall teach our Transatlantic cousins how to behave? Here is one of them who tried on Wednesday, in defiance even of an etiquette modified to suit his countrymen, to parade his republican person before the Queen, at her levee, in a frock coat, black neckcloth, and yellow waistcoat. The thing itself was trivial, but the object was unmistakeable. He wished to have it to boast that he had compelled the Queen to forego the usages of her court in his especial behoof. He tried to accomplish this national feat under the wing of Mr. Dallas, who, when appealed to, supported his countryman, and left the place in a pet.

"Well, after all, we suppose her Majesty will continue to hold levees, in spite of Mr. Dallas's displeasure. It is scarcely worth while to confute the absurd pretensions of people who, with the most irritable touchiness as regard themselves, combine the greatest disregard of all decorum towards others.

"What would we think of a fellow in private life who, after accepting an invitation to a set dinner, in which everybody else wore full dress, presented himself in a shooting jacket and shepherd's plaid trousers? In all probability, should such a portent appear on the horizon of a gentleman's hall, it would never rise to the upper regions of the drawing-room, for the butler would infallibly show him to the door. Now, this is what the Queen's master of the ceremonies very properly did in the case of an American who, in a frock coat, yellow vest, and black neckcloth, chose to present himself at her Majesty's levee yesterday. He knew the usage of the court, but he preferred to withhold from the Queen and her august company the compliment which every gentleman would have rendered.

"Our American cousins must really learn the good old proverb about "doing at Rome as they do at Rome," and, though they may live at home in the enjoyment of all liberty or license of dress or undress, they must, when they visit these communities, either disguise themselves and their republican prejudices in decent attire on occasions of state solemnity, or forego the greatest delight on which a true republican can feast his eager eyes—the sight of a live Queen on her throne."

The Globe discusses the "unpleasant little accident" thus:

"It was absolutely necessary that the master of the ceremonies should inform the gentleman who then presented himself, that he had not yet completed his toilet in a manner to conform to the rules for his admission.

"It is not for us to pry into the resources of the carpet-bag; but anybody would imagine that a retirement of fifteen minutes might have enabled the visitor to amend his costume. The republican, however, took fire; he would not give way; he claimed admission in his 'uniform' as a right, and when that right was not acknowledged he inflicted upon St. James's the penalty of his retirement.

"So far the matter was a trifle. Persons have before attempted to force their way into the palace in costume not permitted by the regulations, and they have been prevented. Englishmen have been guilty of this foolery as well as Americans. When men are obstructed in asserting their right to do something very silly, they are always proportionately angry; and if a little loudness emanated from the annoyed gentleman, it was neither wonderful, nor unprecedented, nor to be remembered beyond the moment.

"The most unfortunate part of the matter is, that the American Minister identified himself with the ridiculous obtrusion on the part of his countryman. We can well understand Mr. Dallas's difficulty. Every American in office is open to the claims of any 'citizen' that chooses to obtrude himself; and men who have not firm nerves sometimes give way before the assertion of these claims.

"Mr. Dallas and the excluded gentleman stood together in the ante-room; and there, as is usual on such occasions, some kind of discussion took place; the Minister, no doubt, felt vexed, displeased, sorry that the thing should have happened; in the flurry he no doubt lost his self-possession for a moment, and instead of bidding his companion good bye, with a hint to dress better next time, Mr. Dallas most unluckily chose the course of taking his own departure with the retiring countryman.

"It is not for us to point out to the American Minister the duties of his office towards Americans. The master of the ceremonies maintained the regulations yesterday, and there, we conceive, the matter ends so far as we are concerned. It did happen, however, that Mr. Dallas had a specific duty to perform that day. The name of a distinguished American gentleman had in due course been submitted to the Lord Chamberlain for presentation to her Majesty; and we presume that that gentleman was ready to be presented.

"We are quite sure that Mr. Dallas could not intend any disrespect to her Majesty in absenting himself at an hour when he had given reason to expect his presence; any consequence of that kind must have been forgotten by the honorable gentleman, in the hurry of the moment; but his duty to his countryman unquestionably remained unperformed. An American gentleman was in attendance; he had every right to attention; and we are only saying what is a matter of course when we say that to that gentleman the highest in the land would feel pleasure in showing the courtesy which awaited him; but the Minister who should have presented him was not at his post.

Great Britain.

In the House of Commons, on Friday evening 27th ult., the following reference was made to American affairs:

"Mr. G. H. Moore said it would be in the recollection of the House that, ten or twelve days ago, he had a motion on the books with reference to the state of our affairs with America; subsequently, the right honorable member for Oxford University asked when papers upon that subject would be produced; and he, Mr. Moore, believed from the expressions of the Home Secretary, and also from the gestures of the noble lord, at the head of the government, that a day would be given to him after the production of those papers for the purpose of his motion. The house was now in possession of the papers in question; and he thought, therefore, that under the circumstances, he was justified in asking Lord Palmerston to give a night next week for the discussion of his motion.

"Lord Palmerston hoped the honorable member would not think that it was from any want of courtesy that he could not accede to his request; his opinion in the matter was that, in the present state of our relations with the United States, it would not conduce to the settlement of the points in dispute.

"Mr. Moore returned to the subject of our relations with America, complaining of the unsatisfactory nature of the answer given to him, shortly before, by Lord Palmerston, and insisting upon the right and duty of the house to pronounce an opinon on it, and not to leave the direction of affairs in the untrammelled hands of those who had hitherto so misdirected them."

RECRUITING IN THE UNITED STATES—DISPATCH OF EARL CLARENDON UPON MR. CRAMPTON'S DISMISSAL.

On Thursday evening the 26th ult., further papers relative to recruiting in the United States were presented to Parliament. They include Mr. Marcy's dispatch communicating the fact of the dismissal of the British Minister and the British Consuls, and the affidavits which accompanied the same; a letter from Mr. Crampton to the Earl of Clarendon, dated London, June 19; a memorandum by Consul Barclay, containing a denial of Mr. Marcy's charges ipsissimis verbis; correspondence of Consul Mathew with Mr. Marcy and with the Earl of Clarendon; and, finally, Earl Clarendon's reply to Mr. Marcy. The latter important dispatch is as follows:

THE EARL OF CLARENDON TO MR. DALLAS.

Foreign Office, June 26, 1856.

Sir: The despatch of Mr. Marcy, which you read to me on the 11th instant, and of which you placed a copy in my hands, has received the attentive consideration of Her Majesty's government.

Her Majesty's government are gratified at learning that the assurances contained in my note to you of the 30th of April, that no intention existed on the part of Her Majesty's government to violate the laws, compromise the neutrality, or disregard the sovereignty of the United States, have been unreservedly accepted by the President; and that all cause of difference with respect to the question of enlistment has ceased to exist between the governments of Great Britain and of the United States.

It is with much regret, however, that Her Majesty's government have learned that the President has been unable to alter the view which he had taken of the conduct of Her Majesty's Minister at Washington, and of Her Majesty's Consuls at New-York, Philadelphia and Cincinnati, in regard to the transactions which have been under discussion between the two governments.

Mr. Marcy had, in his dispatch of December 28, 1855, stated that the President was of opinion that those officers of Her Majesty had violated the laws of the United States, by being parties to enlistments within the Union; that he on that ground considered that they had become unacceptable organs of Her Majesty's government in the United States, and that he consequently requested that they might be removed from their respective posts.

Her Majesty's government did not share this opinion of the President in regard to the conduct of those officers of Her Majesty; and having communicated to those officers the charges made against them, and the evidence on which those charges rested, and having received from them full denials of the truth of the charges, and such corroborating evidence as they were able to procure tending to invalidate the testimony brought against them, Her Majesty's government laid all these matters fully and frankly before the government of the United States, with the persuasion that they would remove the unfavorable impression which had been created in the mind of the President with regard to the conduct and proceedings of Her Majesty's Minister at Washington and of the three above-mentioned Consuls.

It appears, however, that this communication has not produced the effect which Her Majesty's government had expected; and Mr. Marcy, in stating that the President's views of these matters remained unaltered, accompanied that statement by a number of additional documents, tending to confirm the view which the President had originally taken of these matters.

Her Majesty's government have carefully examined these additional documents, but do not find in them any evidence, worthy of belief, which should shake the confidence which they have reposed in the assurances of Mr. Crampton and of the consuls.

Her Majesty's government retain the high opinion which they have ever held of the zeal, ability, and integrity of Mr. Crampton; and of the earnest desire by which he has been animated to avoid all just cause of offence to the government to which he was accredited. Her Majesty's government cannot but believe that on many material points in respect to his conduct, the President has been misled by erroneous information, and by the testimony of witnesses undeserving of belief.

Her Majesty's government entertain similar convictions as to the conduct of Her Majesty's Consuls at New-York, Philadelphia and Cincinnati.

Such a conflict of opinions, on such a matter, between the governments of two great powers, must necessarily be the subject of serious deliberation by both; and Her Majesty's government have not failed to give to this matter all the consideration which it justly deserved.

If Her Majesty's government had been convinced, like the government of the United States, that Her Majesty's officers had, in defiance of their instructions, violated the laws of the United States, Her Majesty's government would, both out of deference to the United States, and from a due regard to the authority of the British crown, have removed those officers from the posts which they held.

If the government of a foreign country were capriciously, and without apparent belief that it had good grounds for doing so, to break off its diplomatic relations with the minister accredited to it by Her Majesty, Her Majesty's confidential servants, answerable for maintaining the honor and dignity of the crown, could not hesitate as to advising Her Majesty equally to break off all diplomatic intercourse with the minister of such governments accredited to her court.

But in the present case Her Majesty's government are bound to accept the formal and repeated declarations of the President of his belief that these officers of Her Majesty have violated the laws of the Union, and are, on that account, unacceptable organs of communication with the government and authorities of the United States; and Her Majesty's government cannot deny to the government of the United States a right similar to that which, in a parallel case, they would claim for themselves, the right, namely, of forming their own judgment as to the bearing of the laws of the Union upon transactions which have taken place within the Union.

I have, therefore, the honor to inform you that, however deeply Her Majesty's government regret a proceeding on the part of the President of the United States which cannot but be considered as of an unfriendly character, they have not deemed it their duty on that account to advise Her Majesty to command me to suspend my diplomatic intercourse with you; and I have to assure you that the high personal esteem which is felt for you by all the members of Her Majesty's government, will render it most agreeable to myself to have the honor of entering into communication with you upon all matters connected with the mutual relations of our two countries. You will be certain of meeting, on the part of Her Majesty's government, the most friendly feelings towards the United States, and the most anxious desire so to arrange all questions of difference, as to reconcile the just rights and real interests of the two countries with the maintenance of those amicable relations, the preservation of which is of such great importance to both.

I am, &c.,

(Signed) CLARENDON.

In regard to Central American affairs, Lord Clarendon closes his despatch to Mr. Dallas as follows:

"Her Majesty's government have learned with satisfaction that you are instructed to enter into communication with me in respect to Central America, in order to ascertain, in the first place, whether existing differences cannot be promptly terminated by direct negotiation, and, if they cannot be so settled, then to discuss the conditions of arbitration on those points of difference as to which this method of settlement may be requisite or applicable.

"This is the course which Her Majesty's government has throughout been willing to adopt; and I have accordingly the honor to inform you that I am prepared to enter into the proposed communication, and I trust that our conferences will be conducted in that spirit of cordiality and frankness which, as Mr. Marcy justly observes, is dictated by the true interests of Great Britain and the United States.

I am, &c.,

(Signed) CLARENDON."

FRANCE.—The Independence Belge says: "It is said that an interview will take place at no remote period between the Emperors of France and Austria."

From forty to fifty of the Poles resident in Paris have availed themselves of the amnesty accorded by the Emperor of Russia, and resolved to return to their country. The party that acknowledges Prince Czartoryski for its head protests against this act, and the military party that recognizes General Rybinski as its leader is said to abstain completely from any declaration of opinion.

A bill which has just been presented to the legistative body, relative to the pensions to be accorded to the great functionaries of the empire, declares that there may be granted by imperial decree to the ministers and other high functionaries, and to their widows and children, a pension, the maximum of which cannot exceed 20,000f. a year, when by eminent services to the state these functionaries shall have merited an extraordinary recompense, and when the insufficiency of their fortune renders such a pension necessary. These pensions cannot, in any case, be enjoyed together with other moneys or salaries coming from the state, and the aggregate amount of the pensions granted in virtue of the new regulation cannot exceed 500,000f.

The following document is given by the Paris correspondent of the Morning Post. It reveals the great respect entertained for Mr. O'Brien by the Greek Government, and the high value placed upon the testimony he should be able to bear to the condition of Greece:

"SECRET CIRCULAR OF THE MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR.

"To M. Prefect—Mr. Smith O'Brien, a dstinguished British subject, has the intention to visit all the provinces of the departments of Attica, Biotea, Phthiotida, and Focida. This gentleman merits much attention for his (friendship for Greece), consequently, no doubt he will receive from you as well as from the Mayors of other provinces, many civilities. As it is highly necessary to protect him, and as he will not accept of any military escort, take great care, and without his knowledge, to occupy all the suspicious districts of your province with forces where he may pass, in order to avoid all accident. I strictly recommend the object of this note to your secrecy and attention.

(Signed) "D. BOULGERIES,

"Prime Minister, and Minister of the Home Department.

"Athens, May 1, 1856."

The Bishop of Arros, according to the Paris correspondent of the Times, intends visiting England and Ireland with a view of exciting sympathy amongst the Roman Catholic prelacy on behalf of the maintenance of the Pope's temporal power.

The French Government has resolved to make a certain extent of restitution at the public expense to some of the members of the Orleans family, who were stripped of their property by the confiscation decree of 1852. The bill is now before the Council of State. Each of the daughters of Louis Phillippe will receive £8,000 a year.

M. Manin's denunciation of "the theory of the poignard" has brought upon him a letter from M. Mazzini, who still clings to republicanism as the only cure for Italian wrongs. "The theory of the poignard has never existed in Italy," says M. Mazzini; "the fact will disappear when Italy has a life of its own, recognised rights, and justice." He quotes many instances from history, both sacred and profane, to prove that patriotism has been held to sanctify what would otherwise be mere vulgar assassination; wherefore he says he cannot, like M. Manin, hurl anathemas on such assailants, neither can he brand them as cowards, or accuse the party of instigating them.

INDIA AND CHINA.—TRIESTE, JUNE 26.—The steamer America arrived here to-day at 7 30 A. M. She left Alexandria on the 20th. The India and China mails were to leave Alexandria on the 21st, with advices from Calcutta to the 17th of May, Bombay to the 27th of May, Hong Kong to the 10th of May, Shanghai to the 2d of May, and Manilla to the 6th of May. Public works in India are stopped. The Santals are again unquiet. An insurrection is on foot near Vizagapatm. The King of Oude has arrived at Calcutta. A band of rebels was approaching Soochow, 80 miles distant from Shanghai.

American News.

On Monday, says the Albany Knickerbocker, the painful particulars of the suicide of a young lady came to light in West Troy. The dead body of Miss Percie R. Brown, aged 28, and well known to the villagers, was fished out of the canal. She had been missing from home since Saturday afternoon. From a statement made by Mrs. Brown, her mother, it appeared that on Saturday her daughter came to her in much distress, and stated that her engagement of marriage with a young man, formerly a school teacher of West Troy, and now of Albany, had been broken off by him—she having learned, either from him or through some other source, that he was soon to marry another. The mother was aware that her daughter was engaged, and expressed her belief that the young man would not prove faithless. The young woman continued in great distress of mind, and in the afternoon left the house, as her mother supposed, for a short time only. Her absence, during the night, caused considerable anxiety on the part of her mother, though she supposed she might be staying at a neighbor's. Search was made for her on Sunday, but nothing was heard of her until the discovery of her body. The deceased sustained a character above reproach and above suspicion. For a number of years she has been clerk in the hat and linen store of G. H. Hill, Mansion Building. Her earnings have been devoted to her own support and the support of her widowed mother. We purposely suppress, for the present, the name of the young man who, if what is stated above is correct, has a fearful responsibility in this affair. The Coroner subpœnaed the young man implicated before the jury of inquest, and he was interrogated in regard to his intimacy with the young lady. It appeared from his testimony, and other corroborating evidence, that he was not engaged to the deceased. He was, of course, acquitted of all charges against him touching the young lady's death.

Here is a very pleasant affair: On the 7th inst. one Hugh R. Pleasants, a brother of the late John Hampden Pleasants, and formerly editor of the Penny Post of Richmond, went into the Executive Chamber of the Capitol of that city, where Governor Wise was engaged writing, and taking a seat by invitation of the Governor, said, after a brief period—"I thought gizzard-foot was here." Governor Wise smilingly replied—"I am the man." Pleasants, rising from his seat and approaching the table at which the Governor sat, said—"By God! I did not know you; and so you are Ebo-shin and gizzard-foot?" "I am," remarked Governor Wise, with a smile, "and you are Hugh Pleasants." Pleasants thereupon commenced abusing the Governor without any provocation whatever, when the Governor ordered him to leave the room, but he refused to do so. The Governor then rose from his seat, and approached Pleasants, and taking hold of him endeavored to push him off. Pleasants resisted, squared off, and placed himself in an attitude to strike, when the Governor struck him with his fist under the left eye and cut him pretty severely. He then seized him by the arm, turned him round and kicked him. At this time the Messenger of the Executive came up and had him removed by order of the Governor. It is said that Pleasants was intoxicated. The Know-Nothings of the city are very indignant about the affair.

The St. Louis Democrat of the 1st reports six premature deaths in that city. John O'Neill fell by the knife, Joseph Spies lost his life in attempting to bathe while intoxicated, Bryan Murphy while bathing, and a fourth was found floating in the river. Walter Connor, a lad, was also drowned while bathing; and an illegitimate infant, which had been deserted by its mother, was found in a house where it had lain dead for three days. In addition to these deaths a man was reported dangerously stabbed in a row, and another seriously injured by falling from a third story window. The same paper has the following: "We learn that last week a Methodist preacher named Robert Springer, and his entire family, living in Washington county of this State, were poisoned by a servant girl who was working in the house. On Thursday last the man died. His family are now lying very low. The intelligence came to us rather indirectly, and without details."

The St. Louis Evening Pilot says: From the bloody records of the last few days, it is evident that crime is on the increase in our city. For a week past the local columns of the press have been crowded with "stabbing cases," "brutal assaults," "assassinations," "mysterious murders," &c., and we fear that unless our authorities are more efficient in preserving order, that our citizens will be compelled to resort to a vigilance committee, as in San Francisco, and a summary infliction of punishment by Lynch law. And in this connection, we take occasion, on behalf of our community, to return thanks to Governor Price for the inflexible firmness he has displayed in his refusal to pardon some prominent criminals, when the application was made, too, by some of our most respectable citizens.

The Washington Intelligencer says:—"A subscription for the relief of the widow and children of the late Thomas Keating, at Washington, was put in circulation soon after the death of Keating, and the amount subscribed and paid $632. The money collected has been disposed of as follows: For the purchase of a two story house, near the corner of E and Twentieth streets, which has been conveyed to the widow and two children as joint tenants, $600; paid for recording the deed, $1 25; paid to Mrs. Keating, $30 75. The foregoing amount was contributed by 75 individuals, in sums from $1 to $50.

Under the head of "Love, Lunacy, and Luck," the New Orleans Delta gets out a very pretty piece of romance touching one Jarvis Wright, who became crazed by disappointment in love with a missionary's daughter, "a long time ago," and whose latest attachment was for a pet young alligator. As the story goes, the forlorn alligator-tamer took it into his head to buy a ticket in the Havana lottery, and to be guided in his selection of a number by the wagging of his pet's tail. After a long search the tail wagged, and the ticket was bought. It turned up a prize of $20,000. The Delta says that the story is a true one.

A farmer in Middleburry, Vt., speaking of the success of his labor last year, says: "My farm consists of 125 acres, and had been 'let' for many years, and was generally considered 'run out.' Sales of produce and stock amounted to $1,699 68. The increase of stock was enough to balance sales. Expenses of all kinds, together with $300 which I charge myself for my own work, $976, leaving a balance for profit of $732 68. This, I think, is better than money at 6 per cent, and answers the question 'Is farming profitable?'"

Senator Wilson, of Mass., has procured a rifle with a three feet barrel, designed as a walking cane, which he carries with him constantly, even into the Senate Chamber, ready loaded and capped.

A young lady, says the Cincinnati Enquirer, was recently taken off by a young man from this city, and being found out by some of her friends, they had him brought before 'Squire Roedter on a charge of living in an illicit state with this female. The magistrate was about binding the party over to appear at the next term of the Common Pleas, when the accused individual made a proposition of marriage, which the friends of the young woman at first hesitated in accepting. A license was, however, at length obtained, and the 'Squire performed the ceremony. The sequel of the story is, that after matters had been fixed up in this way, the bridegroom sloped without either paying the costs of prosecution or the marriage fee.

The Louisville Journal of the 25th says:

"For some time back the French residents of the islands of Guadaloupe and Martinique have been casting about for laborers to supply the place of negroes, and as a last resort it is now attempted to supply the deficiency of slave labor by importing Indians from the Main. Late accounts inform us that a company called the General Maritime Company, have undertaken to fill orders for obtaining the numbers required. The method adopted to do this is not stated—whether they are caught, or bought, or articled, we do not know. But four vessels are already engaged in this business, as appears by an official announcement in the Guadaloupe Gazette. 2,164 Indians have already arrived, and the Government of the Colony, which superintends and regulates the trade, received, up to the 31st of March of the present year, applications for 7,000 of these unfortunate people. It is thought that the whole number for 1856 will be about 8,000, to be distributed between Guadaloupe and Martinique.

The setting up of one of Hoe's presses brings the following from the London weekly newspaper, edited by Douglas Jerrold: Next week, we trust, these pages will be printed on an engine planned by an American brain, forged by American arms, and set up here on English soil by American hands—most noble specimens withal of our American brethren on the other side of the wave. Now, what need we care for the red tape, when we may bind both sides of the Atlantic together with the tapes of the steam-press?

The revised code of North Carolina declares that if a person fight a duel and either of the parties shall be killed, the survivor, on conviction, shall suffer death, and the aiders and abettors shall be considered accessories before the fact. If no death shall ensue, all the parties shall be deemed guilty of misdemeanor, and on conviction be punished accordingly, and moreover be ineligible to any office in the State.

A letter from Toronto says:

"Large quantities of Wheat are still in hands of the Upper Canada farmers—probably not less than 5,000,000 bushels. They have not had the good sense to sell when prices were at the highest. The extent of land under crop is greater than at any previous time."

Barney Ford and James Laverty, of Boston, had a prize-fight on Warwick Neck, R. I., on Saturday, in which Laverty lost by a foul blow. Ford's wrist was broken. Purse $500. The decision produced a general fight among the spectators, in which knives and pistols were used, but without doing serious injury.

The New York Sunday Courier understands that Barnum has received an offer from Sydenham Crystal Palace, in England, of $5,000 a year to go over there and take charge of one of its departments, and the editors learn that Barnum thinks seriously of accepting the offer.

The coal question in North Carolina is beginning to excite interest. One of the companies on Deep River have expended $570 in opening their mine, and are now raising one ton of coal per minute. At another mine, 500 cars can be loaded daily. Two bushels of North Carolina coal are said to be equal to three of Virginia.

Gov. Wise, of Virginia, got into an altercation the other day with the editor of a Know Nothing paper, who unceremoniously intruded himself into the Governor's room. His Excellency showed him the door, after introducing his boot to his pantaloons.

According to a correspondent of the Boston Transcript, the whole area of the United States in 1790, the original territory was no more than 820,630 square miles. Louisiana, in 1803, extended the area to 1,720,258 square miles; Florida, in 1821, to 2,787,159; Texas in 1845, Oregon in 1846, and California in 1848, to 2,936,166 square miles.

A correspondent of the Boston Traveller, writing from the West, says the scramble for land in the new Territories is greater than than the scramble for bread in the old settled States. Millions of acres are uncultivated, but all the choice spots are extravagantly dear.

A correspondent of the New York Evening Post, writing from Virginia, says he will pay $500 for any book or newspaper printed within the first fifty years of the adoption of the Constitution of the United States, which contains a denial of the right of Congress to prohibit slavery in the Territories of the United States.

During a recent thunder storm at Dayton, Ohio, the lightning "dropped off" from the telegraph wires at two different points, making a report like the explosion of a Chinese cracker and sending off a shower of sparks.

The Committee on Territories are preparing, and will report at an early day, a bill against bigamy in the Territories. This will test the question of the right of Congress to legislate for the Territories.

The Bostonians, last Friday, sent 6,000lbs. of yellow snuff to Melbourne, in exchange for the yellow gold of Australia. There will be a good sneezing when it gets there.

There are at the present time in this country 715 churches belonging to the Quakers, and the number of attendants is estimated at 183,000.

Mary Burks, of Kalamazoo, Mich., has been convicted of the murder of her husband by poison, and has been sentenced to solitary imprisonment with hard labor for life.

The Pensylvanian states that the New York Herald has lost 1,000 subscribers in Philadelphia since it came out for Fremont.

A coal mine is said to have been recently discovered near Lafayette, Marshall county, Iowa, in the east bank of the Iowa river.

The U. S. Camels have been set to work at Indianola, Texas. One of them carries 1,600lbs. with ease, and walks as fast as a horse will go on a brisk trot. The sight of them causes a general stampede among horses and other animals.

Petitions for a dissolution of the Union are now in circulation in all the Northern States, having been sent out by the agents of the American Anti-Slavery Society, with the request that they be signed and sent to Mr. Hale, Mr. Wilson, Mr. Wade, Mr. Seward, or Mr. Fessenden, for presentation to the Senate, or to Messrs. Giddings, Burlingame, or Comins, for presentation to the House. It is charged and not denied that prominent republicans in New York have signed these petitions.—Providence Post.

The people of Eaton Rapids (Mich.) have experienced much annoyance for some days past, in consequence of the fish dying in the river. On Monday and Tuesday, as many as twenty barrels of dead fish, which were creating an intolerable nuisance were removed, but the stream filled up with them nearly as fast as they were taken. Below the dam the river was so clogged up by them, that it was difficult to push a canoe through them.

The Cincinnati Inquirer says, during Col. Benton's sojourn in that city, he embraced every opportunity of denouncing the Freesoil or Republican cause, and reprobating in the strongest terms the nomination of Fremont. He said that the party was a crazy faction, and ought to be put down, to be crushed, and that it would ruin every body that was in any way connected with it.

Edmund Paul, well known in St. Louis for his pistol shooting accomplishments, was arrested in Galena on the charge of having forged the names of Gabriel Chonteau, J. C. Barlow, and Samuel G. Myerson, of this city, on paper to the amount of about $3,000.

The annual catalogue of Jefferson College develops the fact that, of 1,411 graduates in that institution, since 1802, 600 have devoted themselves to the Christian Ministry, and 35 to the work of Foreign Missions. The whole number of students who have attended the college is 4,000.

Horses valued at $3,000 have been stolen from Grant county, Wisconsin, in the course of ten days. There appears to be in Western Wisconsin a very successful gang of horse thieves.

The corner stone of a new Asylum for the Insane was laid on the 4th of July, at Northampton, Mass., in presence of a large concourse of people from all parts of the State. The Grand Lodge of Massachusetts was present, and there was a procession.

A police uniform is about to be introduced in Cincinnati, much against the wishes of the constabulary force. It will consist of blue coats and foraging caps, with the number of each policeman designated thereon.

Henry Hertz, one of the persons made notorious by connection with the British elistment difficulty, has been tried in Philadelphia on the charge of stealing a promissory note. The jury twice came into court stating that they could not agree, but the judge insisted on a verdict, and they finally rendered a verdict of not guilty.

Dr. Evans, of Evansville, Ind., on returning home on Thursday last, met a span of horses attached to a wagon loaded with produce, and the owner, William Smith, a corpse, although sitting erect and holding the reins. The Doctor stopped the team and had Mr. Smith immediately carried to a house, but life was extinct.

Mr. James Dudderidge, having mistaken the Boston Express cars for the Harlem train, by which he intended to proceed to Fordham on Friday, 4th July, jumped from the car at the Fordham station, and was killed. He was buried in Greenwood, on the 6th.

A wag went several times to an office, but never found his lawyer in, although the card on the door said: "In from 10 to 1." He accordingly altered it so that it read: "It's 10 to one—you'll never find me."

There was a sale of seventeen negroes, on the 16th inst., at Mecklenburg, Va., among whom were a number of children, for the gross amount of $11,627. The prices of men and women, singly, ranged from $1350 to $700.

The Washington Sentinel reappeared on the 28th ultimo, and will be issued weekly and tri-weekly as usual, until the 22d of July, when the publisher designs also resuming the daily issue.

The Rochester (N.Y.) Democrat gives the following as a certain cure for fleas on dogs: "Soak the dog for five minutes in camphine, and then set fire to him. The effect is instantaneous."

The wife of Mr. David Tueffly, a nailsmith, in Louisville, a few days ago, presented him with two boys and two girls at one birth. The boys have been named James Buchanan and John Breckinridge.

There is a Chinese in San Francisco, who was steward to Napoleon on the island of St. Helena in the year 1815. He is now engaged in importing from China, and in general merchandizing.

The parishioners of Rev. Mr. Wadsworth, of Philadelphia, on Thursday last, presented to him the title-deeds of the house and lot where he now resides, valued at eleven thousand dollars.

White, the messenger of the American Express Company, together with his confederates King and Ayer, have been convicted, in Detroit, of robbery.

Native born citizens are in a minority in some of our Western States, as statistics show that in Illinois only 39 per cent. of the population were born in the State; in Iowa less than 22, and in Wisconsin only 18 per cent.

"Mrs. Quigg, is your husband a Know-Nothing?" "I guess so; for he told me this morning that some person had been making a fool of him."

On the 30th ult., the thermometer at Corpus Christi, Texas, reached and stood at 101 degrees Fahrenheit.

Gov. Grimes, of Iowa, has called an extra session of the Iowa Legislature.

The Connecticut House of Representatives have appropriated $15,000 for a school for idiots.

The business men of Indianopolis, Ind., have organized a permanent Board of Trade.

John Turnbull, a planter, was killed lately in an affray with sheriff Lurty, at Bayou Sara, La.

The receipts of cotton in Mobile, for the week ending June 27th, were 871 bales, against 20,011 at the same time last year.

There is less cotton at the various ports in the U. S. at this time, by about 40,000 bales, than at the same time last year.

Colonel Withers has resigned the office of Mayor of Mobile.

Correspondence.

Trip from Enniscorthy to Cork.

BANTRY, JUNE 21ST.

I delayed writing until I had something worth the postage to send you. I flatter myself I have it at last. A week ago I left Dublin for a little excursion. The first town I stopped at was Enniscorthy. I stopped there a night only. A clean, soft bed, hearty supper and smoke, a breakfast equally agreeable next morning, have left on my mind the pleasantest impressions of Rudd's Hotel. Fifteen years ago I recollect being at the same place. Old Rudd, the proprietor, was then living. But he was very feeble, very asthmatic, and as cross as any old crone with the tooth-ache could be. He carried a long knobby stick (the same as a drum-major carries), and hobbled about with it, in and out of the hall-door passage, coughing and spitting, with his back bent in two. Long, wiry, streeling white hair, brown knee-breeches, steel buckles, white cravat, and heaps of bright yellow snuff all over his waistcoat, completed the picture of decent antiquity which his poor spindles, curved spine, hideous long nails and skeleton fingers commenced. Rudd was the terror of the town. He had served in the Yeomanry against the gallant rebels of Wexford. His bloody deeds at Vinegar Hill and Gorey were well known. Not a stranger ever stopped a night in Enniscorthy without hearing of them. He was a frightful Orangeman. He was so when young, and the bad blood dribbled through his veins till the day of his death. His effion must now be a honeycombed piece of wood. They put the pennies on his eyelids more than a dozen years ago.

Early in the morning I took a car for Kilkenny. It was a sweet morning. The Slaney, full of subdued light, gurgled and swept away under the old bridge, washing with many a silver sparkle and bubble the roots of the ivy which covers the arches with the greenest of drapery. No one was up. No one was to be seen in the streets. Not a soul. Not a dog, not a pig, not a policeman even. In the stillness and solitude, Rudd's shadow—the long knobby stick, gray hairs, knee-breeches, stooped shoulders and white cravat—passed for a moment vividly before me. It disappeared, melted off in the sunshine; playing, like the colors of the kaleidescope, on the walls of the Castle.

At Graigne-na-mana we stopped to give the horse a feed and a pull at the bucket. The boy, who was driving me, hadn't a word hardly to say. He was dull as a turnip. His stock of general information was small. He knew as much about O'Connell as he did about Archbishop O'Toole. Whilst he was feeding his horse, I strolled up the street in the direction of poor old Clooney's cottage. The General is dead since '51. This, of course, you know. His cottage is still to the good. Out of a thick broad ring of myrtles and other dark-green shrubs, the high-peaked thatched roof still quietly rises, throwing up its wiff of blueish gray smoke from a brick chimney right in the centre. My hand was on the latch of the little iron-barred gate, and I felt strongly disposed to lift it and have a closer look at the General's quarters. But my heart failed me. Everything within the gate was so still, so shadowy, so sacred in its dim tranquil look, that it might have been his grave was there. The gentle, dear old General! What a stormy youth and peaceful old age! But the shamrocks he won never lost their freshness. I never saw him, that a wreath of them did not appear to glisten, as if with dew, upon his gray hairs.

If young Irishmen were to visit the homes and graves of such men oftener, they would be all the purer, and all the stronger, and all the nobler. You remember the day (it was in Passion week, 1847) that you, O'Gorman, Mitchel, and I, accompanied Dr. Madden, the historian of the United Irishmen, into the locale of his heroes. First of all, there was the room in which Wolfe Tone was waked. Then, the loft off Thomas street, where the uniforms of Emmett's officers were made, and the pikes and other arms were stored, and from which the gallant fellow sallied the night of Lord Kilwarden's death. The next place was Murphy's—the feather merchant—where Lord Edward was captured. The marks of his blood, and that of the blood-hounds he wounded, were on the floor. Last of all, Madden brought us down to the vaults of St. Michan's. There we saw and touched the coffins, in which the headless corpses of the Shearses lie. Madden, your readers should know, found those bodies lying naked, with the heads upon the stomachs, upon the clay floor of the vault, and decently enshrined them. By-the-bye, you can't forget the little shrivelled old nun we saw in the same vault. There she lay, (with her coffin gone with the dry rot all to pieces about her), in her habit, and the leather belt about her waist, and the wooden beads hanging from it, stiff and black. I came back a better Irishman from that pilgrimage. Better in mind, and heart, and nerve, than I ever did from any "monster meeting"—not excepting Mullaghmast, to which I drove with John O'Callaghan of the Green Book, after breakfasting at Clongowes.

In Kilkenny I remained hardly more than an hour. Being in a hurry to Waterford, I resisted the temptations which Ormond Castle and the Black Abbey, and other points of attraction, magnificently held out. Having to take another car and horse on to Waterford, I stepped into Walsh's hotel, and sat down in the coffee room, whilst the vehicle and velocipede were strapped together. A delicious, delicate, light lunch (the crispiest ham, the tenderest, whitest boiled chicken, a print of butter scented with honeysuckles, bread such as only Kilkenny, with its limpid water, can bake) enchantingly helped the flight of time. I say nothing of the sherry, cold and golden, which swept down on a sparkling tide the heavier materials of the feast. A cigar, and the Kilkenny Journal of the 18th of June completed the happiness of the occasion.

Kilkenny and the neighborhood, and the country for miles round, it appears, is excited greatly at present with the case of a young girl, named Sally Hewitson. Sally was a cripple—a poor little cripple—who, for a long time past, has been seen crawling about, or riding on a donkey, begging alms for herself and her mother, the latter, also, a cripple. Mr. Dunne, the Relieving officer of the Kilkenny Workhouse, remembers well admitting her, when her useless limbs had to be bandaged to her body. The other day, the public were startled by the report that the girl had been instantaneously cured by Father Nolan, of Dunane, a good priest living a little beyond Castlecomer. The fact of her being perfectly restored to the use of her limbs, every body says, is beyond question. Hundreds have seen her walking about.

The circumstances have provoked the most ecstatic discussions. Some shout out hosannahs for the miracle. Others, of course, deny the whole thing. Between Infidels and Believers the valley of the Nore is threatened with a hurricane. The Journal, in three compact paragraphs, entreats the disputants on both sides to be calm. Puffing my cigar with an equanimity positively luxurious, I say the Journal is right. In the case of Father Foley's Extatica, a few years ago, a pious priest and a credulous congregation, were woefully deceived. The imposture discovered, Frederick Lucas, the St. George of the Catholic Press, was the very first to come out against it, hunt it down, and with his spear transfix the nuisance to the earth.

Of local interest I don't see anything else in the Journal worth mentioning. There are no deaths, no births, no marriage of any celebrity. Indeed, I should have to close up this section of my letter very abruptly, were it not that I find a marvellous fact reported by the Fireworks Committee of the city. At a meeting, held at the Tholsel, the 17th of June, this Committee, having audited their accounts, declared a balance in favor of themselves of £18 sterling. This, I say, is a marvellous fact. The first instance, I undertake to say, of any patriotic body escaping from debt. The first instance, certainly, of such a body concluding their labors, and knitting up their accounts, with a balance on the smoother side of the book. So, you see, in Kilkenny at-all-events, the loyal explosions and sputterings of saltpetre and brimstone haven't ended altogther in smoke. Eighteen pounds sterling isn't bad. The Committee, however, have unanimously resolved it won't last long. Kilkenny is to have eighteen pounds worth of crackers the middle of August.

Doyle, who edits the Journal, is an excellent fellow. A thor ough Young Irelander, he has the admirable and virtuous good sense not to obtrude the extreme opinions of the party on a community, which patriotically disposed, patriotic on all occasions, patriotic in heart and deed, has not as yet became, and perhaps never will be, thoroughly Young Irelandish. Young Ireland, heretofore, has been too inflexible, obstinate, and dogmatic. The honestest of men lose no dignity, compromise no principle, paralyses no strength, in being a little affable, temperate and sagacious. John B. Dillon, who has just returned from New-York, is to me the perfection of an Irish patriot. He is, to my mind, the beautiful and perfect realization of Davis' ideal.

Off to Waterford! As sound a road as ever you travelled! A brisk mare, a broth of a boy (full of chat and good-humor,) pretty picturesque villages, such as Stoneyford and Knocktopher to whip through, and what more would you want? At Ballyhale, I had a talk with Carroll, who keeps the inn there. This inn was the one, in your grandfather's day, they used to put up at the first night, when the journey from Waterford to Dublin was done by gentlemen on horseback, with their pistols before them, and their night-clothes and boot-hooks behind. In those days, Carroll's inn was famous for its claret. Divil a drop you get there now. Old Carroll, (father of the present proprietor) was out with the boys at Carrickshock. His son, in a confidential way, shows one the pike-head the old man carried on that great day of Judgment. He told me he well remembers seeing you the night you passed there, in your father's carriage, on your way to Dublin, the night of the day the Arm's Act was proclaimed in Waterford. 'Twas the last, he believes, you saw of poor Ballyhale.

The lamps were lit along the quay, as we jogged over the bridge into Waterford. By-the-bye, what a muffled dead sound the bridge has—what a rumbling, as if through thick blankets, it has—when hoofs and wheels pass over it? Mount Misery towered mutely and majestically behind me. The broad solemn river swept smoothly, and with a dense volume of brown waters under me, between the sturdy piers of oak which have rooted themselves in its bed. The long line of quay, fringed with the tapering spars of the floating forest chained to it, stretched away—a chain of gigantic glow-worms—from the dark base of Bilberry rock to the lofty old mills and stores, all built of the reddest brick, at the end of the Adelphi. We pulled up at Cummin's hotel. All in bed (except the unfortunate Boots) when we got there. Was shown to my room, at the end of a labyrinth. The bed was an old fashioned one. Four feet from the floor, it was hung round with curtains of an antique texture and pattern, the massiveness of which, augmented by the drowsy glimmering of the chamber-light, suffocated me nearly. Once asleep, however, I felt no inconvenience. I slept like a top. It was past ten o'clock when I awoke.

Half an hour afterwards, I was at breakfast. There were eggs, rashers, crubeens, buttered toast, black tea, a silver-plated cruet-stand, and the Waterford News of the evening previous, disposed on the gravy-stained and otherwise variegated damask before me. The Waterford News is as good as a round of spiced beef. It's full of peppery cloves, and other small stimulants. I find from it that one of the city Police has been wounded with a button. I wonder was it a Repeal button with which he was innoculated? Well, it appears that the Dublin militia were out on Mount Misery, little more than a stone's throw of Alderman Forristal's cottage, occupied in blank cartridge practice. A musket, mysteriously stuffed with a button, went off, lodging the aforesaid small bit of brass in the fleshy part of the constable's arm. James Power is the name of the martyr. The News calls him a victim. Dr. Cavit was on the spot, and dressed the wound. But the casualties didn't stop here, for the faithful journal from which I quote, informs me that another policeman had his breeches ripped open. Another button is supposed to have played the mischief with him. The News warns the police not to go looking after the Dublin boys again.

Waterford, I find, is to be the scene of great festivity next year. The Royal Agricultural Society has decided on having its next annual exhibition in your noble old city. Lord Cloncurry proposed, and Lord Clancarty seconded the motion, which brings the plethorific cattle to the Urbs Intacta next Spring. That's good. It's time for poor Waterford to have a share of the few good things going the round of the country. Apart from all other considerations, this aristocratic Society of beef-feeders deserves a cheer for the hilarity it evokes out of and concentrates abundantly, for three or four days, upon some privileged spot. I like to see Irishmen and Irishwomen, no matter what their politics or predilictions, lineage or social associations, brought together, joyously and brilliantly. It does a world of good. Your Friendly Sons of St. Patrick deserve the heartiest support for this very reason. Their annual dinner brings together men of common birth, who seldom meet—who, perhaps, would never meet but for the recurrence of the national festival, and the jovial dinner which commemorates it. None but the cranky or the stupid bigot has a word against it. None but some scurvy low bred dog, who can never get into any gentleman's society, and is ever scraping and scratching at the respectable gate from which he is very properly shut out, will snap his gangrened teeth against it.

Your father has his hands full of business, I see. He does his business most quietly. One would think he did nothing he does every thing so noiselessly. But, after all, what a strength there is in silence. How many reputations have been blasted by an ovation? What permanent fame has been established through the force of modasty alone!

From this same News, from which I've been quoting, it appears that the Bazaar, which was lately held in Dungarvan, in aid of the Sisters of Mercy, has been attended with the happiest results, two hundred pounds having been realized. John Francis Maguire, the Carberys, Kennedys, Sheehans, Mahonys, Codys and Dowers, all by subscription or otherwise, contributed to bring this about. Good again. There are no better creatures in the world than these same sweet Sisters of Mercy.

How the Irish and Americans mingle on every hand's turn! Looking over the last page of the News, and in the Poet's corner I find a bounding song, by Bayard Taylor, with this delicious stanza:

> "And Irish Nora's eyes are dim
> For a singer dumb and gory;
> And English Mary mourns for him
> Who sang of 'Annie Laurie.'"

There was, by-the-bye, great gossipping a week ago, about a turn-to between England and America. It's all over now, though a little grumbling, like a ground-swell, holds on to this moment. They daren't go to war with the stupendous Republic of the Stars and Stripes. That's all's about it. To be sure, they might at the onset, blow you all up on the sea-coast, but there it would end. Not an inch could they gain on dry land. This they know well. Besides, Ireland is still a reluctant member of the great British Empire. It's not absorbed in it, yet. It no more belongs to it than a glass eye does to a human head. In case of a war let a second Paul Jones come down on our coast (the South coast especially), and there will be a new chapter (the brightest of all yet written) in Irish history to read.

With this I break off for the present, promising sincerely to let you have the end of my trip by the next mail. Till then, and forever, believe me,

THE WANDERING GHOST OF DUNBRODY.

National Celebration in Augusta.

Augusta, Ga., July 5, 1856.

THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER, Esq.

Dear Sir:—The anniversary of our national independence passed off yesterday in the most spirited and happy manner. Notwithstanding the rays of a vertical sun, the military displayed full ranks, and the occasion was to almost every class of our citizens one of pride and glory, and patriotic congratulations.

The following is a brief sketch of the proceedings of the day. At sunrise, the "Washington Artillery" announced from the cannon's mouth the eightieth year of American independence. A more delightful morning I have seldom seen. The atmosphere was warm, though genial and invigorating, the unclouded sun pouring down his sweetest ray, infusing new life and vigor into the frame and filling the heart with joy. The Independent Battallion of Augusta, composed of the "Richmond Hussars," Capt. Wm. E. Dearing; "Washington Artillery," Capt. Daniel Kirkpatrick, jr.; "Irish Volunteers," Capt. Edward J. Walker; "Oglethorpe Infantry," Capt. E. Starns; "Clinch Rifles," Capt. Geo. W. Bryant, formed at half-past 7 o'clock, A. M., in front of the United States Hotel, on Broad street, where they were dressed in line by Adjutant Sharpe; after which Lieut. Col. Campbell, in command of the battalion, appeared at his post, and marched the battalion, to the sound of sweet music by the Augusta brass-band, down Broad street to Centre street, through Centre street up Greene street to the City Hall Park, where, after the usual religious services, the Declaration of Independence was read by Atty. Gen. Wm. R. McLaws, before a highly respectable assemblage of citizens, of whom quite a number were of the fair ones, who graced the occasion with their presence and smiles.

The oration was delivered by Hon. Wm. Gibson, with his usual force and eloquence. In style it was fresh and vigorous, and in language chaste, flowing, and lucid. After benediction, the battalion re-formed and continued the line of march up Greene to Campbell street, through Campbell to Broad street, down Broad to the United States Hotel, where the battalion was dismissed.

The Washington Artillery fired a federal salute at noon. The firemen contributed much to the amusements of the day. They paraded through the principal streets, with their engines in best style, all giving evidence of prosperity and efficiency. The mounted Fantastics, like chivalrous knights, were out in full blast, and occupied the most conspicuous and mirthful place in the moving panorama of the day. At sundown the Washington Artillery fired a national salute.

The young of both sexes were entertained late in the evening with a brilliant display of fireworks. Thus closed another of the pleasing events which the happy people of this country love above all to celebrate. Yours very truly,

THOMAS WHYTE.

Letter from Dublin.

DUBLIN, June 28th, 1856.

Judged by the effects it has produced in England, the dismissal of Crampton and the Consuls is undoubtedly, for America, a great diplomatic triumph. The act has paralyzed the Government, Parliament and Press of England. Accustomed for so long a time to American forbearance, this exhibition of American spirit astounds them. What most annoys them, however, is the fact that America is so clearly in the right, that the justice and propriety of her course cannot be questioned. Hence the London press—from the Times down to Punch—vent their spleen and vexation in unmeaning abuse and vulgar caricature. The only real question, though, at issue amongst others, seems to be, who shall bear the blame—Crampton or the Government? That the Government meant to sacrifice Crampton, there can, I think, be little doubt. D'Israeli, however, interposed in time, and protested against Crampton's being made the "scape-goat of diplomatic sins." Sir J. Packington declared in a late debate, that he regarded the state of our relations with America with "shame and regret;" while Moore, of Mayo, has a resolution on the books censuring Crampton and the Government. Meanwhile Clarendon is taking his time to the elaboration of a reply to Marcy's dispatch. No wonder. He cannot attempt to justify the conduct of Crampton without inculpating himself and the Government; nor can he censure Crampton without drawing down upon himself and the Government the indignation of the country—for it is very well understood that Crampton's conduct was dictated from Downing street. Awaiting Clarendon's reply, Parliament is silent; for such is Palmerston's regard for the Constitution, and such the subserviency of the present House of Commons, that the moment an attempt is made by any member to elicit an expression of opinion regarding "our foreign relations," he receives a note from the Minister, informing him that any discussion at present of the subject would be "detrimental to the public service." And so the Minister dictates and Parliament "postpones," and the question of peace or war with America is left to the decision of a ministerial clique. Such is the actual situation.

The position of America is at the present time grand and imposing. Entirely in the right, as she has been from the beginning, she has now placed England—or rather England has placed herself—entirely in the wrong. Having manifested her desire for peace by the exhibition of a moderation and forbearance amounting almost to weakness, she has shown also that she is not insensible to what is due to national dignity and self-respect. She must maintain this high position, and be firm—firm above all upon the question of Central America. Should England reject Marcy's offer of arbitration, I cannot see how America can honorably or consistently avoid adopting the suggestion, made I think by Mr. Seward, and give notice to England that she must withdraw within a certain specified time from the occupation of Ruatan, the Mosquito coast, and all other parts of Central America.

Rather a ridiculous affair seems to have occurred lately at the Queen's levee, in which Mr. Dallas and an attaché of the American embassy are involved. You will see the account in the London papers. I make it a rule, however, to regard as, prima facie, false, every thing relating to America which I read just now in the English papers. They cannot afford to tell the truth about America and Americans.

The Jesuits have lost one of their most distinguished men—Father Robert St. Ledger. He was interred on Wednesday last, in Glasnevin Cemetery. His brother John is, I believe, the only surviving member of a family distinguished for its piety and virtue and learning. The St. Ledger family belongs, as you are aware, to Waterford; and though your native city may have produced some names that have filled more of the world's ear, it has given birth to no more truly noble and illustrious sons than the Fathers St. Ledger.

Barney McCabe has retired from the editorial chair of the Tell-lie-graph. The cause of his retirement is a mystery, though I have heard it whispered that it proceeded from a difference of opinion between him and the proprietor (who that is, since Sadleir vanished, I know not, unless it be "my Brother James") regarding Dr. Cahill's letters. McCabe, it appears, did not deem the epistles quite orthodox; while the proprietor cared not whether they were orthodox or not, provided they paid, and so insisted on their insertion. This McCabe, you know, was scraped out of some garret in London, by John Sadleir, who wanted a convenient tool to conduct a portion of his political swindling transactions in Ireland. He answered the purpose admirably.

I have heard that Mr. M. J. Barry will in all probability be McCab'es successor. I do not believe this. Barry's abandonment of the national cause, as the time of trial drew near, cannot be justified; but yet he is a man of cultivated mind and gentlemanly tastes, and I think it impossible that he would stoop so low as to play second fiddle to McCabe, or connect himself in any way with the vulgar and illiterate Telegraph.

The country looks splendid, and there is promise of a magnificent harvest.

The Evening Mail announces that the Militia will be at once disbanded, with the exception of the Foreign (German) Legion. These are ordered to Canada. It will be convenient, facetiously observes the Mail, when our Yankee cousins who speak the language of Shakspeare and Milton, cry for "quarter" that the cry will be unintelligible to German ears.

I believe the Jarseys yet preserve the memory of the Hessians.

I am now about going down to Kingston to see the regatta, so excuse this hurried epistle from

KILMAINHAM.

Out West Correspondence.

ST. LOUIS, JULY, 1856.

On the same principle that the habitué of a Parisian Café or London Coffee-house may have had more correct information respecting life in the trenches before Sebastopol, than a resident at Balaklava, so it is possible that the voluminous correspondence from Kansas, which floods your "city dailies," may be a more correct transcript of the state of affairs in the Territory than the scanty and unexciting details which reach us here; therefore I will not for an instant attempt to dispel the halo of horrors which each issue of the Tribune, Times, &c., display to their readers under the head of "Kansas Correspondence." As to Indian depredations, it seems that the Cheyames and one or two other tribes are again on the war-path, and will doubtless provoke Harney to another campaign.

However much to be regretted are the evils that arise from Indian hostilities, yet in looking into the cause of this, the inextinguishable hatred of the truly Native American to the invading conqueror of his country, there is much to be admired in the unsubdued manhood and transmitted patriotism which neither time, persecution, bullocks, blankets, beads, or baubles, have been able to bend or bribe into passive subservience. Exterminated he may be, but subjugated never! There is, in fact, that dash of fire—healthy Tipperaryism—in the Red man, that has ever recommended him to the patriot above his natural faults and civilized demoralization. You remember that eloquent description by Erskine of the Sachem's plea for his country before its invaders. "Who is it?" said the jealous ruler of the desert encroached on by the foot of British enterprise, "who is it that causes this river to rise in the mountains and empty itself into the great sea? Who is it that causes to blow the loud winds of winter, and calms them again in the summer? Who is it that rears up the shade of those lofty forests, and blasts them with the quick lightning at his pleasure? The same Being who gave you a country on the other side of the great waters has given this country to us, and by this title will we defend it!" said the indignant savage, throwing down his tomahawk, and then raising the war-cry of his nation. And then Erskine enunciates a principle eternal as light, in saying, "such is the feeling of subjugated man all round the globe, and believe me, nothing but fear will control where it is vain to look for affection."

Hear the same principle from John Mitchel in 1848. "Until we have an Irish Legislature, I shall be irreconcileably disaffected towards the government of the country, and mean to excite disaffection in others, and think it a sacred duty to rear up my children in that sentiment."

Thus, you see, prate as we will expediently about Indian outrages, still the Red man, on whose soil I write, has one virtue at least peculiar to the highest manhood.

One of our citizens, the best rifle-shot in the West, a practical man, without a particle of imagination in his mental constitution, after a cogitation of eight years, has embodied his idea in a new cannon (not yet named). This gun is unquestionably ahead of anything at present used—Paixhan or Lancaster. Its range will be fifty per cent. greater than any gun now in use, combined with the accuracy of a rifle, and a less degree of wear than the pieces now used. Having seen the progress of the gun from the draught up, I've no doubt whatever that it will perform all its author claims; but I shall give details of its practice in due course, which is the grand proof.

We have been barbacued here for the past month, the thermometer ranging as high as 104 in the shade (a most plutonic degree), and under such circumstances is it not tantalizing to read such a letter as the "Metal-Man's," (a tip-top fellow no doubt), with his bracing canter on the breezy strand, and cool dip in the crisp billow; or hauling his mackerel line over the taffrail with a ten knot breeze? All this, I say, felt to be impossible to your correspondent, in the midst of sweltering prairies—a thousand miles from a cockle—visited only by the skeleton of a sea-breeze, that for hundreds of miles has been imprisoned, exhausted and fevered by the vast forests of the South. Alas! for the days off the "old head of Kinsale," "Lower Bay," or the "Fastnett," one of which would be cheap if purchased by a month of our present torrid time.

COSMOPOLITE.

The works of Schelling, the German philosopher, are to appear, for the first time, in a collected form. The publication is entrusted to a number of savans. About one-sixth of the matter to be given in this edition has never been published before. The first volume (beginning with the unprinted writings) has just left the press. It contains the "Einleitung in die Philosophie der Mythologie."

Rogers thought the stanza which Gray threw out of his "Elegy" better than some of the stanzas he retained. Here it is, and most people will agree with Rogers:

> "There, scattered oft, the earliest of the year,
> By hands unseen, are showers of violets found;
> The redbreast loves to build and warble there,
> And little footsteps lightly print the ground."

We learn, from the Weekly Register, that Gavazzi's Orations on the Errors of the Papacy, which usually sold at 2s. 6d. and 3s. 6d., turns out to be a failure as a commercial speculation. One thousand three hundred copies were offered for public sale at Mr. Hodgson's auction rooms in Fleet street, when, incredible as it may appear, the highest price obtained was one halfpenny per copy.

On the 19th a bronze bust of Peter the Great, cast at Florence, by Rauch, the Prussian sculptor, and presented by Prince Demidoff to the residents of Spa, was inaugurated by a festival.

Irish News.

Catholic emancipation, exclaims the Ulsterman, what a folly! What does the word mean? It means, as facts have cruelly proved, power to send to Parliament a Dillon Browne, who crawls from his pauper bed to vote for the Minister who supports him, and then returns home to die a dog's death; it means to elect a Somers who lives by the pay of his goverment masters, and obeys them as a dog would; it means to elect a Catholic Attorney-General who prosecutes a Catholic priest for daring to preach Catholic doctrine; it means to elect a scoundrel swindler, who sets up a base and infamous paper to debauch the country—who sells himself to the Ministry—who robs thousands of poor men, and makes them beggars, and who destroys his own life to escape the punishment of his crimes, or pretends suicide, that he may enjoy his plunder in a foreign land.

The half-yearly report of the directors of the Bank of Ireland is published. The management, between dividends and bonuses, gives no less than 14 per cent. within any one year. From Thom's Almanac it appears that the previous bonuses amount to £665,000 Irish; the date of the first being so far back as 1793, ten years after the Bank was established. The yearly dividends of the Bank have been at no time less than five and a half per cent., except in 1783–4, when they were five, and 1792–3, when they were two and five-eights. From 1800 to 1814, they were seven, seven and a quarter, and seven and a half; from 1814 to 1829, the rates have been eight, eight and a half, and nine per cent.

Colonel Waddy, of the 50th Regt., describes the interesting ceremony of investing with the French decorations the soldiers of the British army who had most distinguished themselves in the late campaign. The ground selected was the plain of Balaklava. On the 50th being paraded, Colonel Waddy selected as the most distinguished soldier in his fighting regiment Private Cooney, of John-street, Wexford, who received on one occasion no less than six bayonet wounds. Cooney's brother lost his life, pierced with bayonets, whilst fighting over the body of Major Frampton.

The Freeman's Journal, commenting on the new Arms Bill, says, that the only Irish member who approved of the whole bill was Lord Bernard. His Lordship is pre-eminent in his passion for additional police. If two peasants in the county Cork squabble about a farthing, his Lordship is alarmed for the public peace, and demands a reinforcement from "the depot." If crime declines so as to render a diminution of the standing force necessary as a relief to the tax-payers, his Lordship trembles for the future, and memorials for the status quo.

A meeting of the Catholic inhabitants of Cork has been held in the Chamber of Commerce, for the purpose of presenting the Rt. Rev. Dr. Delany with an address and testimonial on his return to Cork, after a sojourn in the Eternal City. The meeting embraced the leading Catholic merchants and traders of Cork. On the motion of Sir William Hackett, seconded by Mr. Edmond J. Gould, the chair was taken by the Right Worshipful the Mayor. At the close of the proceedings a subscription was opened, and in a few minutes amounted to nearly £200.

The Dublin Express believes there is every probability of her Majesty visiting Ireland towards the latter end of August. The occasion of the intended royal visit is understood to be a desire on the part of her Majesty to take leave of the Irish militia, prior to its disembodiment, in a grand military spectacle. The Curragh, it is rumored, will be the scene of the proposed farewell display.

Another meeting on the subject of postal arrangements between Belfast and Derry has been held in Londonderry, the Mayor presiding. There was a large attendance of merchants, and resolutions were adopted setting forth the delay and inconvenience connected with the carriage of the mails between Derry and Belfast, in connexion with the transit to England and Scotland.

At the last meeting of the Waterford Town Council, the Mayor observed, that as Mr. Butt's and Mr. Fagan's motions on the subject of ministers' money had been rendered nugatory for the present, and as corporate property could not be seized on, the law rendering the mere persons of the members liable, he recommended that the Council unanimously resolve not to pay this impost; and it was accordingly resolved nem. con. that the ministers are to have no money from the Corporation of the Urbs Intacta.

The profession of two young ladies, and also the reception of a third lady, took place recently in the chapel of the Convent of the Sisters of Mercy, Dundalk. The Lord Primate officiated. The ladies were Miss Murphy, of Dublin, and Miss Cahill, daughter of Mr. Laurence Cahill, merchant, Dundalk. The lady received is Miss Segrave, of the County Meath.

The visitors at the Queen's University—the Duke of Leinster, the Lord Chancellor, Baron Greene, the Presidents of the College of Surgeons and Physicians, and Sir H. Marsh—have inquired into the cause of difference between the college authorities and Professor Bullen. It is understood that the decision was in favor of the council, and that Professor Bullen withdrew his appeal.

Our own treason, says the Tablet, our own cowardice, our own dissensions have lost us all the benefits that the war with Russia might have borne; but a war with America is a very different thing, and we trust that, if it must come, we shall not be wrong in arguing as its consequence not only an increase of glory to our arms, but the redress of many of the grievances which now afflict both our religion and our country.

The Colonelcy of the 6th or Inniskilling Dragoons is vacant by the death of General Sir George Pownall Adams, an old cavalry officer, who attained the rank of General in 1851, and has held the Colonelcy of the Inniskilling Dragoons for sixteen years.

The same day, writes the Nation, on which Palmer made his exit, MacBirch, the noted poisoner of Irish politics and morals, was pushed off the public stage. Mr. McCabe has resigned the editorship of the Telegraph.

An action for libel has been entered in the Court of Common Pleas by the Rev. Moore O'Connor, of Culdaff, against the proprietor of the Londonderry Sentinel.

Newbridge barracks are to be enlarged for the purpose of holding cavalry, who are to be concentrated for exercise at the Curragh camp.

John Gibson, Esq, Assistant-Barrister for the county Antrim, is laboring under such indisposition as obliges him to proceed to the Continent for the benefit of his health.

The Independent Order of Odd Fellows' Friendly Society have held a grand reunion in the Pillar room and adjoining saloon of the Rotundo building. This is the first festive entertainment which has been held iu Dublin by the members of the Odd Fellows' Society, and it may be questioned whether in any other part of the United Kingdom an assemblage could be found representing more nobly the true respectability and dignity of the great middle class of society than the crowd of young people of both sexes collected on this occasion. Amongst the most pleasing features of the evening's entertainments were the performance of quadrilles, and polkas, by the Hungarian Bell-ringers.

Whilst the Longford rifles lay in Ennis, a young woman of that town was fascinated by one of the corps; he pretended to reciprocate her attachment, and, so long as he remained at Clare Castle, the "course of true love" ran smoothly enough. On the day on which the regiment was to march, she was in marching order too, having denuded her parents of more than £20. No sooner was the money spent, than she was informed her presence was no longer necessary. To return home, she could not think of, so, she determined on putting an end to her existence, and precipitated herself into the river.

It appears that the Crown, on the memorial of the creditors to the extent of £250,000, has agreed to appoint Mr. Anthony Norris, of Bedford row, London, to be administrator for collecting the assets of the late Mr. John Sadleir. Mr. Norris has consented to act, and will lose no time in realizing for the benefit of the creditors large sums stated to have been invested by the suicide in various securities at home and abroad.

At the dinner of the Belfast Medical Society, the healths of Dr. Patterson, the treasurer, and Dr. Drennan, the secretary of the society, were given, and received with great enthusiasm. Dr. Patterson returned thanks for himself and his colleague, Doctor Drennan, expressing the great regret he felt, in common with all present, at the absence, that day, of Dr. Drennan, "the worthy son of a worthy sire." This sentiment was rapturously received.

The special correspondent of the Farmer's Gazette in Paris writes that there is a great demand there for Irish beer and ale of light quality, and that such an article as Smithwick's Pale Ale of Kilkenny, would be drank in enormous quantities. Irish whiskey, also, is in great demand, but unfortunately, says the writer, a solitary bottle of "Murphy's best," of Middleton, is the only representative of the Emerald Isle in the whole exhibition.

There has been a row, we understand from the Evening Packet, between the Kerry Militia and the Royal Sussex, at Aldershot Camp. The Kerry Militia drove in the picket of the Sussex Militia, and damaged the heads of a number of their opponents. The following day the assailants again assaulted the Sussex Militia, by sending a shower of stones into their lines.

Three deserters have been arrested at Maryborough. One was Daniel Doolen, from the 21st Regt., a native of Armagh; the second Michael Birch, from the 68th Regt., a Limerick man; and the third Michael M'Donnell, from the 55th Regiment. M'Donnell is a native of Athlone, and had at the Crimea behaved gallantly, where he received a wound in the leg. He pledged his medal for 4s. at Roscommon.

A printed statement of the expenditure and receipts in reference to the cultivation of land by the inmates of the Newtownlimavady Union, shows that the guardians hold eighteen statute acres of land, and that for the year ending March, 1856, the sum of £161 16s. 3d. was expended upon the land. Against that outlay the receipts for the same period amounted to £379 12s. 5d., leaving a balance in favor of the Union £217 16s. 2d.

The Revenue Police, under the command of Commissioned Sergeant Robert M'Donnell, stationed at Rosnakille, county Donegal, have succeeded in discovering on the mountains of Knockella an illicit malt-house, situated two hundred and fifty feet from the summit of the mountain, in a spacious crevice, amidst a stupendous declivity of projecting rocks, surrounded by the surge of Lough Swilly.

A parliamentary return informs us that the following Irish regiments volunteered their services to her Majesty: the Royal Antrim, Armagh, North Cork, South Cork, Royal South Down, Royal Dublin City, Fermanagh, Limerick City, Longford, Roscommon, South Tipperary, Westmeath.

His Excellency, the Lord Lieutenant, intended visiting Limerick early in July, for the purpose of taking part at the opening of the Limerick and Foynes railway, and that of the Athenæum. During his stay he was to have been the guest of the Earl of Dunraven, at his splendid mansion, Adare Manor.

The Ulsterman observes, that the Americans, while they kick out the minister, offer, with mocking assurance, to take the question of arbitration into consideration. And England, fearing a war above all things—even above dishonor—eagerly grasps at the offer; and, while she pushes her ambassador overboard with one hand, she offers America the grasp of friendship with the other.

There can be no doubt of Sadleir's suicide, says the Leinster Express, and it is not too much to say that he lived rather too long in this world. Cardinal Wiseman is reported to have said of the unfortunate man—"As John Sadleir cheated the world, he hoped he would cheat the devil!"

In the Dublin Medical Press a letter has appeared from Dr. McCormac, of Belfast, in which it is suggested that the death of John Parsons Cook might possibly have been caused by cerebro spinal arachnitis, a rare form of disease, presenting many symptoms which agreed with, and might have been mistaken for, strychnine poisoning.

The Imperial Commission of the Paris Universal Exhibition of 1855, have sent to Mr. R. A. Murray, who acted as agent in Paris for the Royal Dublin Society and the Irish exhibitors on the occasion, a beautiful medal and a Brevet, stating that it was "a testimony of satisfaction for the services which he had rendered to the Exhibition."

Five vacancies have taken place in the Harbor Board, Cork, on retirement of James Cleary, Alexander Deane, Michael McNamara, and J. Harley, Esqrs., and the decease of John Robert Burke, Esq., whose death has also created a vacancy among the Trustees of Markets.

At the christening of the Imperial Prince in Paris the three Irish Bishops present, were the Right Rev. Dr. Walsh of Ossory, the Right Rev. Dr. Delany of Cork, and the Right Rev. Dr. Kelly of Derry.

The musical friends of Mr. John Vaughan, superintendent of the horse and carting department of the Ulster railway, Belfast, have entertained him in token of their esteem.

During the last three years the gross number of conveyances of land registered in Ireland were 7,082: of that number, in 2,281 conveyances, the consideration was under £500; in 362 the consideration was £500, and under £1,000; in 3,761 no consideration was mentioned, and in 191 the consideration was 5s. or 10s., or for "love and affection."

A meeting of the benchers of the Society of Kings Inns has taken place preparatory to the election of a librarian. Mr. Hague, deputy librarian in the library of the Faculty of Advocates, Edinburgh, is the only person who has been selected out of the numerous candidates for further consideration. He may be regarded as the librarian elect.

Some time past the sheep of Louis Anderson, Esq., county inspector of police, Armagh, were being worried by dogs. Strychnine was procured and put over the remains of a sheep which had been left in a dying state the night before. In the morning no fewer than five dogs were found to be affected by the poison.

A return of the number of passengers arrived at the port of Quebec, from the opening of the navigation to the 23d of May, and corresponding date 1855, informs us that from England there had been, in 1855, 1,916 emigrants, and this year 1,029, showing a decrease of 797. From Ireland the numbers were 967 and 234 respectively, showing a decrease of 733.

An accident of a very peculiar nature has occurred near Rush, county Dublin. A young girl, daughter of Sir Roger Palmer's gamekeeper, while striving to light a fire in the grate, the sticks being damp, sprinkled a little gunpowder over them. The flask ignited and blew the sticks through the house. Some portions of the sticks struck her in passing and entered her heart. She died from the effects in a few minutes.

We understand from the Tyrone Constitution, that Lieutenant Bromel, and the revenue police stationed at Plum-bridge, have lately made seizures in the Glennelly mountains, consisting of three vessels, sunk fully three feet under the surface of the road, and seven vessels and one mash kieve, concealed in the mountains, containing upwards of three hundred and fifty gallons of poteen.

The members of the several religious brotherhoods of Dublin assembled in the Metropolitan Cathedral to pray for the repose of the soul of O'Connell, on the anniversary of his death. In the centre of the aisle a catafalque was placed, surmounted by the cross, around which a number of wax tapers were lit. The interior of the church presented a most imposing appearance.

The following gentlemen have been appointed Barrington Lecturers on Political Economy for the ensuing year, by the Council of the Dublin Statistical Society:—Professor Moffet, LL.D., Frederick G. Evelyn, Esq., LL.B., David Ross., Esq., LL.B., and T. M. Busteed, Esq., A.B.

The Lady Superior of the Convent of the Sisters of Mercy, Kinsale, and a nun of the same order, have arrived in Dundalk, from the Crimea by the Earl of Erne. The ladies left on the same day for the Newry Convent, a branch of that established at Kinsale.

Dublin, with 300,000 people, has 1,200 police, seven paid magistrates, and three pensioners. Manchester, with a population of 420,000, has only 460 police and one paid magistrate, paying for their support about £25,000 a-year; while Dublin pays for the same purpose £72,000 a-year.

The electric telegraph is about to be extended to Kilkenny from Dublin. The directors of the South Eastern Railway have resolved upon the extension of the wires from Carlow, giving the public the full benefit of the enterprise.

The Treasurer of the Ulster Society for Promoting the Education of the Deaf and Dumb and the Blind, has received from Miss Shannon £50, which sum her father requested should be presented, after his decease, as a donation in aid of the funds.

The pretty little village of Newcastle, at the foot of Sleive Donard, is full of visitors. Amongst them are Lord and Lady Lurgan, from Lurgan Park; Capt. Richardson and party, from Monaghan; Captain Dames and the Rev. Robert Forde, from Katesbridge.

The depot of the 18th Royal Irish Regiment have arrived in Dublin, under the command of Major Freeman Armstrong, who served all through Crimean and the Burmese wars, and lately returned from the Crimea.

There is at present in the Dundalk gaol only fifty-eight prisoners of all classes. There is not a single prisoner for trial at assizes. There is only one insolvent debtor. The inmates of the work house are far lower in point of numbers than during any year since the famine.

The Dublin Telegraph records the death of Mr. John Cannon, of Leinster street. During a long period of his life he had been known in the commercial world as an upright trader. As a patriot he was ever foremost to contribute to the good of his country.

The Edinburgh Art Union are about to gratify the Irish public with a view of some twenty of their prize pictures, purchased from the annual exhibition, and to be distributed to the holders of tickets in their Art Union.

The Companies of the different Railways from Dublin, Derry, and county Down, into Belfast, made the return-tickets available for fourteen days, to all the Ministers and Elders who attended the meeting of the General Assembly.

The Rev. James Brown gratefully acknowledges a donation of £25 from Mr. James Hope Scott, of Abbotsford, for the chapel and school of Killawalla. Mr. Hope Scott has lately purchased some property in that locality from the Marquis of Sligo.

The number of persons who have left Cork for England, on their way to the United States and the colonies, since the 1st of June up to the present, is 872; and the number who left during the corresponding period last year was 945.

James Hamilton, Esq., has been appointed a Deputy Lieutenant for the county Cavan; and William W. Emerson Tennent, Esq., has been appointed a Deputy Lieutenant for the county Fermanagh.

James Owen, Esq., has been appointed to the office of Architect to the Board of Public Works in Ireland, in the room of the respected Jacob Owen, Esq. Mr. James Owen has hitherto filled the office of Clerk of the Works.

We learn from the Limerick Reporter that the Rev. Dr. Cahill has delivered in the Athenæum, Cork, a lecture on the Slave Trade.

Mr. Edward Crafton Kelly, the heir-at-law of the late Mr. Edmond Kelly, whose widow was murdered a few weeks since, has applied as a pauper for the benefit of the Insolvent Act.

The Catholic Bishops of Ireland have entered into a subscription for the relief of the distressed districts of France, to show their gratitude for the generosity with which the French people aided in relieving our poor countrymen in the past famine. We subjoin a list of the subscriptions:

His Grace the Archbishop of Dublin, £10; His Grace the Archbishop of Armagh, £5; the Archbishop of Cashel, £5; His Grace the Archbishop of Tuam, £5; the Bishop of Raphoe, £5; the Bishop of Kilmore, £5; the Bishop of Meath, £10; the Coadjutor Bishop of Dromore, £3; the Bishop of Down and Connor, £5; the Bishop of Clogher, £5; the Bishop of Derry, £5; the Bishop of Ardagh, £5; the Coanjutor Bishop of Raphoe, £3; the Bishop of Waterford, £5; the Bishop of Ossory, £5; the Bishop of Kildare and Leighlin, £5; the Bishop of Ferns, £3; the Bishop of Limerick, £5; the Bishop of Cork, £5; the Bishop of Cloyne, £5; the Bishop of Ross, £5; the Bishop of Killaloe, £5; the Coadjutor Bishop of Kerry, £2; the Bishop of Elphin, £5; the Bishop of Killaloa, £2; the Bishop of Clonfert, £3; the Bishop of Achonry, £5; the Bishop of Kilmacduagh, £5; Very Rev. Dr. Roche, Vicar Capitular of Galway, £3; Very Rev. Dr. Leahy, Secretary of the Episcopal Meeting, £3; and the Archbishop of Dublin has received £5 from the Most Rev. Dr. Walsh, Archbishop of Halifax.

It appears from the Daily News there are more mysteries in connection with Mr. John Sadleir. Immediately on the publication of the article in the Nation newspaper, setting forth historic doubts of the death of Mr. Sadleir, the suppositious corpse which had been interred was exhumed from Highgate Cemetery, and brought to Dublin where all trace of it has been lost, some persons affirming that it was buried in a metropolitan churchyard, while others allege that it was brought down for interment to the family burial place in the country. The object of the alleged disinterment of the corpse was, it is said, the removal of all means of detecting the fact of its not being the body of Mr. Sadleir.

The depot of the 18th Royal Irish have arrived in Dublin, under the command of Major Armstrong, who led the attack against the cemetery at Sebastopol on the 18th of June, 1855. Major Hayman and Captain Esmonde accompanied the depot. These three officers, Irishmen all, led the advance companies of the 18th, who carried the suburb of Sebastopol for fifteen hours on that day. The name of the "Royal Regiment of Ireland" was given to this corps by William III. for advancing farther up the breach than any other British or Continental regiment, at the siege of Namur, and planting their colors at the top of the breach, till recalled.

The 88th have left the Crimea. This gallant Regiment, says the Correspondent of the Daily News, has seen much service in the East and added some glorious names to the long list of victories emblazoned round the "Harp and Crown." In the brilliant attack and capture of the Quarries they lost no less than four officers. Twelve men were killed, and fifty-two were wounded, several of whom died of their wounds. On the 8th of September they formed a portion of the assaulting columns, and they had no less than eight officers severely wounded; they lost three men killed and had 105 wounded, many of them mortally.

We learn from the Tipperary Vindicator, that the queston of the representation of that County has become a matter of immediate consideration. Several candidates are spoken of. Among them is Lawrence Waldron, Esq., of Rathgar, who has considerable property in the county, and is esteemed an excellent landlord, and whose character is generally held in high esteem by all who are well acquainted with it. The Hon. George P. O'Callaghan, son of Lord Lismore, is also mentioned as a candidate.

Tenants, writes the Dublin Freeman, are presumed to have no rights. They are merely on the land by sufferance, tolerated so long as they do not displease the landlord, or some motive of personal advantage does not induce him to prefer another to the occupier who may have fallen under his displeasure, and who, having no right, may with impunity become the victim of injustice and wrong.

The late Diocesan Synod of the Archdiocese of Cashel and Emly was held in the Catholic church of Tipperary. The Archbishop presided. Between fifty and sixty priests from all parts of the united dioceses attended. The Synod was held pursuant to the statutes of Thurles.

Last week, Miss Morrissy, daughter of the late Mr. John Morrissy, of Kildangan, and Miss Flynn, daughter of Mr. E. Flynn, Killosera, have been received into the Dungarvan convent, by the Very Rev. Dr. Hally, P. P., V. G.

A member of the committee of the cathedral of Armagh acknowledges the receipt of subscriptions from America, through the Rev. John M'Shane, Brooklyn, amounting to £28 2s. This is independent of the large subscriptions through the appointed collectors in the United States, which amounted to between £3,000 and £4,000.

The Tipperary Artillery have sent a very handsome subscription to the Sisters of Charity, Sandymount Avenue, on the occasion of Canon Grimley preaching a charity sermon for them at Haddington road chapel.

Extensive improvements have been made by Mr. Bergin in the Atlantic Hotel, Milltown Malbay, Tipperary, which, for the last few years, has been the resort of the nobility, clergy, and gentry from various places in Ireland, England, Scotland, and the Continent.

The Dublin Nation, of June 21, says: Mr. Buchanan has received the unanimous vote of the Democratic Convention for the Presidency; and although the London Times affects to consider that his nomination is a less warlike indication than the re-election of General Pierce would be, we are of another opinion.

Another marble altar of which Mr. Kirwan, of Bolton-street, Dublin, has produced so many within the last few years, has been executed for Sir Thomas Esmonde, and will be erected as a side altar in the parish church of Gorey. The body of the altar is one of the finest specimens we have ever seen of the Connemara quarries.

The people of Collooney, county Sligo, have held a meeting for the purpose of obtaining the necessary funds for the completion of their beautiful church. The meeting was presided over by the Right Hon. the Lord Mayor of Dublin.

We have heard, says the Limerick Reporter, that two fashionably-dressed young men, said to be in the employment of a monter house in Limerick, have been busily engaged in the distribution of tracts in the houses of persons in Boherbuoy.

Miss O'Connor Morris, of Gartuamona, entertained lately about 150 of her tenants, and some of the other principal persons of the parish, at a ball.

Answers to Correspondents.

Here is the best translation of the late song attributed to Beranger. Many attempts, and some good ones, have been made to transfuse into English the spirit of the original, but none equal to that for which we must credit the U. S. Democratic Review.

TO THE STUDENTS OF THE ECOLE MILITAIRE.

Poor youths! and think you that the gag
Hath been removed from Freedom's lips?
Or that the old tricolored flag
Is now revived from its eclipse?
My rhymes, I fear, are much to blame;
Forget them! I their tones discard:
If this they teach, I curse my fame—
Forgive a poor, old, witless Bard!

What "times" are these they now "revive?"
Were such the days I once did sing?
I who have never ceased to strive
With flunkey, flatterer, bigot, King!
A soldier once inspired my songs—
A prisoner, crownless, under guard:
When St. Helene avenged our wrongs—
Forgive a poor, old, witless Bard!

Can Nisard's eloquence please mine ears?
Leverrier fill Arago's place?
Am I the friend of dumb, dark fears?
Or who shall Hugo's love efface?
And doth my God—so kind, so good,
Require the spy's, the jailor's guard?
And is't for HIM Rome reeks with blood?
Forgive a poor, old, witless Bard!

Aye! I have sometimes sung the sword,
The azure robes that Victory brings;
But 'twas when Freedom's first-born poured
Their blood to break the League of Kings.
But HIS—this cut-throat, bandit, spy,
Whose knife God's shrine could not retard—
With him hob-nobbing, what were I?
Forgive a poor, old, witless Bard!

To Poland's—to Italia's cause,
France owes a debt that blood must clear;
The cannon roars—let's on! But, pause!
Let Freedom not approach so near!
Go, bear her further—further yet—
The Turk! should we his prayer discard?
Behold! the League of Tyrants met!
Forgive a poor, old, witless Bard!

Passy, March 29.

The "Notes from the Nore" have called out the following letter:

Mr. EDITOR—

A "Kilkenny Man," who gives you his "Notes from the Nore," in last week's News, errs slightly in one or two particulars, amongst others in that of saying "Dr. Kelly was President of St. Kiernan's College." The late Bishop of Waterford was dead many years before the structure at present known as St. Kiernan's College was erected. Probably "Kilkenny Man" alludes to the old college of Birchfield, a few miles from the city, and the residence of one of the Smithwicks.

K. T. Buggy attended a "monster meeting" (and spoke for upwards of an hour, in your own eloquent, soul-stirring strain) in June 1843; two months later, (on the 19th August,) he breathed his last sigh, far from his home and kindred. "How vain are human hopes!"

Would "Kilkenny Man," who professes to be a "near relation" of K. T. B., inform me, a nearer relative, what has been done with his MSS., which were put into Dr. Cane's hands for publication, and what became of the money subscribed towards erecting a monument to him in his native city?

Yours, Mr. Editor, W. F. B.

We thoroughly agree with you, Phelim. We don't see the justice of the parties you mention constantly finding fault with the uniform of the 9th and 69th, and other military organizations, made up principally of Irishmen, whilst the Highland and English costumes, so conspicuously displayed in the First Division, are permitted to pass without the slightest criticism or reproof. The red coat and kilt were many a time seen making up against the top-boots and buff waistcoats—the green coat never. As for the uniform of the Volunteers of 1782, the scarlet cloth prevailed. There were a few companies, however, dressed in other colors. About half a dozen only wore green. The Blackpool Horse sported green jackets laced with gold, gold epaulettes, buff waistcoats and breeches. The Bandon Cavalry had dark olive green jackets, with crimson velvet cuffs and collar, and silver epaulettes. The Waterford Union, commanded by John Congreve, of Mount Congreve, wore pretty much the same uniform, the white buttons being the only feature in which they differed from the Bandon troopers. The Inchiquin Fusileers, commanded by the Earl of Inchiquin (Smith O'Brien's eldest brother is the present proprieter of the title) were superb in their appearance. In addition to the scarlet coat they wore in common with most other companies, they had braided wings and cocked hats with an immense plume of black feathers. These, and several other details, appear in the appendix to McNevin's History of the Volunteers.

We shall regularly send a copy of the News to any part of Ireland, on receipt of subscription at the rate of 16s. sterling per annum.

Mr. Sullivan, our California agent, desires us to state, that though we send the News to subscribers there, from here, at the rate of $8 per annum, he has to charge $5 to those who receive it through him.

We desire it to be perfectly understood, that our Agents are always provided with our written authority, and for them we believe we can promise uniform politeness and gentlemanly consideration.

Maurice is informed, that under Mayor Mickle's administration, the taxation of the city amounted to $2,348,926 28. At present, the taxation exceeds $6,000,000, per annum. Mr. Mickle's mayoralty lasted from May, 1846 to '47.

Bluenose.—You're quite right. Charles Kean, the tragedian, was born in Waterford. His father happened to be playing an engagement there at the time. Young Kean was educated at Eton. His tutor was the Rev. Mr. Chapman, afterwards Bishop of Ceylon. The last time he played in Waterford, if we recollect rightly, was the Winter and Spring of 1833. The old Circus right opposite the new Fish-market, was fitted up as a theatre, and the season was brilliant and prosperous. The former theatre stood a little off Lady's lane, fronting the street leading to the main door of St. Olive's Church. Miss O'Neill, we believe, played there. It is now the Church of the Franciscan Convent. We clearly remember the time of its conversion.

THE IRISH NEWS.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, JULY 19, 1856.

OUR TRANSATLANTIC COUSINS.

John Smith is young, intelligent, thriving. His trade flourishes, his children grow up and play around his knee. Good luck attends his speculations. He will, in due course, be rich, and Mrs. and the Misses Smith will ride in their carriage, like the rest of the aristocracy, and give balls in their mansion in Fifth Avenue.

John Smith may well be proud of himself. He has won his way through many struggles, by the strength of his own hands and the sweat of his own brain; and he does, no doubt, take pride in his success. Yet, for all that, the hearts of John, and of Mrs. and the Misses Smith, swell with a grander exultation, whenever, by a lucky chance, they meet in their walks the equipage of their cousin, Mrs. Wilfred Smythe, who lives among the fashionables of Upper Tendom, and obtain, from that fair and haughty potentate, a nod of recognition, as her Car of Triumph rattles by. Honest John Smith, in fact, sets a higher value on his family connection with that superb model for the exhibition and development of Parisian millinery, than upon his own inherent worth and hard-won victories in the Battle of Life.

This is very foolish, to be sure, but yet very natural; we usually esteem what we have not, and set small store on what we have. It is a folly common to men and nations.

When Americans, in their high oratorical flights, boast of their "Transatlantic cousins"—of the "great Anglo-Saxon race, of which they are proud to be offshoots"—of "Anglo-Saxon energy," and literature and freedom, Constitution, and what not—we are reminded of honest John Smith, bowing and smirking, and taking credit to himself, because he can claim relationship with the great family of the Smythes, who keep a coach and are high and mighty.

It is just the same kind of folly—mere flunkeyism, in fact—weak and unreasonable admiration of one no better, stronger, wiser, than ourselves. On this account, we suppose, the word "Anglo-Saxon" has of late become very odious to us. When we hear it uttered, we instinctively acknowledge the presence of a bore, and resign ourself to the torture. It is a word of modern invention, and sounds scientific.

In the good old times, when England was "Merrie England," the phrase was unknown. In those dark ages, when stalwart men and buxom girls tilled her rich fields, or vied with one another in joyous dance round the village May-pole, or in athletic sports on the village green, they knew no other name for their Island than England, and no prouder title for themselves than English men and English women. The world was then stupid, unlearned, and happy, before ever steam-whistle scared the partridge in the lonely wheatfields, while yet the whirr of the spinning-wheel made pleasant music by the cottage door, and spinning-jennies were not.

But ours is an age of progress. The schoolmaster is abroad. There is diffusion of knowledge now. Political economy has demonstrated that village greens are mere waste land, and village dances and sports mere unproductive labor. Man is promoted to be the slave of Steam, and he toils, and pants, and faints, and dwindles by the side of his grim, unresting, untiring master. In the general improvement, the word English has been scientifically transmuted into "Anglo-Saxon," and America picks up the sonorous nonsense and stores it for use whenever oratory is the order of the day, and thunders of applause are in demand.

What is an Anglo-Saxon? Is there upon the earth such an animal, any more than a Hypogriff in the air, or a Sea Serpent in the waters? Ethnologists may disport themselves in the inquiry. But whether such things be or no, the American of to-day has surely no more affinity with his "Transatlantic cousins," as they are called, than he has with the Medes and Persians. There is no similarity between them. Differences of climate, soil, historical associations, and manners of life, have made them different beings, with different physical and mental attributes.

The infusion of new races has produced a new stock. Young Sam is of less girth, longer head, longer arm, more restless brain, than that brawny, massive, overfed old giant, John Bull. Young Sam is more vehement, nervous, daring and dashing. There is more of the Celt than the Saxon in him. Neither is America in the least like England. Its cities, houses, fields—its habits of life and fashions of dress are all different. Its skies are of another tint, and the sun of the West, in its setting splendor, robes its majesty in grander hues, than it wears among the English clouds and fogs.

The same language, or nearly the same, is indeed spoken here and in England, and there begins and ends the similarity. And that is not much; for even though he does talk what Shakspeare might have understood—yet, the Bowery boy, running with the machine, is no more like Bill Sykes, of old Gravel Lane, London, Costermonger, airing his pet bull-dog, than a Bengal Tiger is like a Bull of Bashan.

The animals are not homogeneous; and if they were, some eighty years ago there occurred a notable quarrel between them, and solemn renunciation of all family ties; and the "cousins" have since then mutually given and received hard knocks, as if to give unmistakeable evidence of their complete dissociation.

England and America are distinct and rival nations—not loving, but jealous and fearful of one another. Their friendship is fed on Breadstuffs, and their family tie is merely of Cotton. Cousins they will be no longer, than they can make money of one another. No love is spent or lost between them. Nay, in spite of the strongest requirements of mutual interest, they can scarce withold their hands from one another's throats.

Now, indeed, there is Peace. But an insecure and painted peace; and a time will surely come, when all the preaching of selfishness will not avail to keep that peace unbroken, for all History tells the tale of national jealousy and passion overruling the dictates of reason, and dragging into disastrous war, countries whom the manifest claims of mere selfish and material interest would have knit together in the closest ties of eternal amity.

Between England and America, causes of quarrel will never be wanting. Yesterday, it was the Enlistment difficulty. To-day, a waistcoat obnoxious to Court etiquette, supplies an offence. Tomorrow, it will be the Bay Islands, or Nicaragua. The sullen growl that now is scarce suppressed on either side of the Atlantic will, sooner or later, swell into an angry roar, and cousinship and community of language will all be forgotten.

The Anglo-Saxon Rhodomontade, that we hear so much of in America, is, therefore, mere mellifluous nonsense. But it is pernicious nonsense in many respects. It encourages in weak minds an undue reliance on English literature and its teachings, as authoritative, and not to be questioned. It inclines men to look at the great questions of the day through English eyes—to adopt English prejudices and modes of thought, to the detriment of independent judgment.

For instance, America enthusiastically buys up all Babington Macaulay writes, and most potently believes all that is set down in that eloquent Whig pamphlet, which he and his publishers denominate a History of England; and all this because "our Transatlantic cousins" are charmed with that agreeable romance.

From them, too, we have caught the Abolition fever. Because they have performed the disastrous experiment of enfranchising the negroes in Jamaica, and have ever since continued to applaud their own mischievous magnanimity, New England must needs become all African. Boston takes the word from Exeter Hall, and can scarce acknowledge any human being as "a man and a brother," unless his complexion be black as night, and his descent be traceable to a Congo prince.

Anti-slavery societies on each side of the Atlantic comfort and correspond with one another. Faneuil Hall echoes back the declamation of Exeter Hall. Meek ambassadors, in neckcloths of spotless white, traverse the ocean on their mission of fanaticism, and import fuel to swell the flame, which consumes in men's hearts the ancient pride of patriotism and devotion to this Union. There is nothing more dangerous than morbid and unreasoning Philanthropy, and nothing more easily kept alive. With just enough of generosity in it to flatter and mislead the weak, and place them out of the reach of common sense, it has none of the force of solid and genuine Humanity.

For this aberration, we have to a great extent to thank our Anglo-Saxon cousins, and their Anti-Slavery gatherings, and the Mrs. Jellybys—the old women of both sexes, who there resort. But for these, and the weak, unquestioning faith New-England sets therein, she would see that Negro-slavery in the South is a misfortune—a woful necessity, to be thought on in sorrow, not in anger—a legacy of difficulty, danger, and disease, from which it needs time, wisdom calm and deliberate, to save this nation.

So much for one of the results of our excessive reverence for our trans-Atlantic cousins, and the great Anglo-Saxon race.

Though America declared her political independence eighty years ago, the impress of the fetter still remains, and another struggle still may, perhaps, be needed, before the mind of the nation is completely enfranchised, and a native Literature, the fruit of native Thought, expresses and sustains the self-formed character of the American people.

It would be better for our friend, John Smith, to live his life through, unrecognized by his fashionable relations, than to be for one minute the imitator of their follies, and the slave of their whims.

HEAR BOTH SIDES.

We publish two letters from California, just come to hand by the George Law. They are to us of serious importance. The writers are personally known to us. For their truthfulness, respectability, and patriotism, we hold ourselves responsible. The more we can hear upon the subject, the clearer and fairer will be the final judgment come to, respecting political affairs in California, on this side of the American continent. Our paper shall be ever open to the statements of such men as the writers of the letters we publish to-day. Honest men—honest to the backbone—gallant and intelligent—it is an honor, as it is a benefit, to hear from them, and be the medium to the public of their independent, searching, and fearless opinion. The two letters will be found on pages 236 and 237.

THE PATRIOTISM OF THE POOR.

Smith O'Brien and his comrades had not been more than a few weeks in Van Diemen's Land, before they were startled with the news that a formidable insurrection had broken out in Ireland. The Colonial papers published the rumor as it came to them. It grew to be a topic of exciting interest and discussion. Like all news at the outset, the circumstances were magnified. The police-barrack at Cappoquin, county Waterford, had been attacked by an armed party. A few shots, a short struggle, and it was over. When the smoke cleared off and lights were brought out, the stiff cold limbs of one poor fellow gave proof, that the conflict, abrupt and rapid as it was, had been fatal.

The whole affair was a mystery. Without the least notice—without a word of warning—it had burst upon that quietest and sweetest village of the Blackwater. Leaving hardly the faintest trace behind, it had passed off. The police, the priests, the magistrates were all bewildered. Sir Richard Kane, and the other nabobs of the neighborhood, recovering a little from their panic, scoured the country, and left no stone unturned in their search. Their labors ended in the arrest of fourteen young men—most of them mechanics and shop-keepers—who were brought to trial under the White-Boy Act, at the Waterford Assizes, and sentenced to be transported. One of them, John Lennan, died at Spike Island. A few were condemned to the hulks at Bermuda. The majority were sent to Australia.

The news has just reached us, that two of the number confined in Bermuda have returned home to Cappoquin. After a long and wasting agony, the dreariest drudgery, and a coerced companionship with the foulest scum of British scoundrelism, they are taken down from the rack. Sick, worn away, prematurely old, they return, it may be soon to die, in the shadow of Knockmealdown. Yet, even that will be to them a sweet happiness, and a blessing more fragrant than an offering of myrrh. Better to die, even in the summer days of life, by the fresh grand waters of the Blackwater, which Davis loved and sung of, even as no German student ever loved and praised the noble Rhine, than have pickpockets and cut-throats shrouding you in some loathsome sink, anchored in the Bermuda waters of the Damned.

Be it to their grave, or to a new lease of life, that these poor fellows now return, we could not hear of their release, without offering them our fond congratulations. They are the congratulations of a devoted brother. They come from a full heart, and are thrown out on the path of the homeward exiles with an open hand. If a true gallant spirit beat there, the bells of church and chapel should joyously ring out in Cappoquin and welcome back the generous brave boys, who clutched their pikes, and with a light step and proud heart faced death, when, at the last moment—at the moment when the sky was blackest, and Queen and Knaves had it all their own way—they were told there was still a chance for Ireland.

The story of that outbreak at Cappoquin has not yet been told. It shall be known one of these bright judgment days, the dawn of which sparkles in the West. Poltroons and rogues have sneered at it. Fastidious patriots—the aristocrats of revolution—have declined to sanction it. But it was the first, though solitary expression, of a vast organization skilfully constructed, nobly inspired, with the calmest courage and sternest fidelity sustained. The Swift did not transport the patriotism of the country. A very small portion was packed on board that pleasant Sloop-of-War, and consigned to Hobart Town. The young intelligent men of the country—artizans, literary men, the better circumstanced and educated of the peasantry, the young tradesmen of the Leinster and Munster towns—these remained to try another wrestle, with the veteran foe of Ireland.

The Sunday night the attack in Cappoquin took place, there was to have been a simultaneous rising in Clonmel, Dungarvan, Cork, and Carrick. The Cappoquin men stood true. They kept their oaths in the face and grip of death. One thunder peal, and all was silence. Why the other members of the glorious conspiracy held back, it is not at this moment at all necessary to inquire. Robert Emmet's plan failed to be carried out. There was a rattle of muskets and a thrusting of pikes in Thomas streets. Sagacity, science, the sacred power of oaths, every thing that was good and great, in an hour was wrecked. But a light burns on the wreck, drifting darkly there on the broad river sweeping towards eternity, and shows us still the land to which our true hearts turn, and the height on which heroism and genius should build it up anew.

As neither Emmet's name, nor the names of his faithful few, nor the lessons they left upon the scaffold and in their exile, for us to read, can never be forgotten, so too, should the names and lessons of a later period, and of a more clouded epoch, be now and for ever gratefully remembered.

Hundreds of young Irishmen, in humble social circumstances, modestly and silently dared and lost all for Ireland in 1848, and in the autumn of 1849, the period to which in these paragraphs we specially allude. Had they a carriage to lose, they would have stood high and big upon the roll of martyrs. Had they had a glittering brain or a golden mouth, their likenesses by Gluckman would have been prolifically multiplied, and their autographs courted at a premium. It is time that the Rank and File of the hard fight for Freedom should be voted their commemorative columns and crowns of laurels. It is time that when they die, the hymns of the harps in exile, and along the stream where Zion is remembered, should give their names to the whispering leaves, and the vocal woods, and the waters that for ever chaunt changefully through them, and the priests who have their altars in the groves, and the people who love to speak of the brave dead. It is time, that when, as in the case of Luke Lennon and John Donoghue, they return to the homes which with soldier's hearts they bid good-bye to—bid good-bye to, with the hope and prayer that their blood might prove of service to the country from whose holy womb they came, and be a ransom paid to Heaven for their beautiful mother's freedom—it is full time, God knows! that such men should be welcomed back with words of honor, and the glad notes of the young, and the blessings of old people, and that the remembrance of their chains and ignominies should be softened with hospitable cheer and proud welcome, and their roof-trees be wreathed with tributary roses, heart's-ease, and shamrock.

God bless! and may the People ever honor the Patriotism of the Poor!

LETTER TO JOHN MARTIN.

SOME TIME IRISH EXILE.

TUCALEECHE COVE, Tennessee, U. S., July 4th, 1856.

MY DEAR MARTIN—Most warmly I congratulate you, that your eyes have seen old Loughorn again;—but condole with you, for that you, and Smith O'Brien and Kevin O'Doherty are subjects for the clemency, the favor, even the praise, of the British government, a circumstance which, in the eyes of those who do not know you, must cast some suspicion over your characters.

This letter of congratulation and condolence I think proper to make the vehicle, also, of certain remarks which are intended for the public. The whole affair is public: our pretended crime, our pretended punishment, were public—your pretended "pardon," and my exception from it, are all public. Therefore I feel entitled to impart to the public also (if the public care) my modest sentiments upon all that.

Such publication may be construed by captious critics, as reflecting somewhat upon her Majesty the Queen of England, her crown and government. And if I were now, like poor Felix Pyat when he wrote his letter to that lady, dwelling in some of her Majesty's dominions, colonies or dependencies, undoubtedly the insolence of which I am going to be guilty, would be properly resented, and I should soon be made to feel, as Pyat and his friends were made to feel, her magnanimous vengeance. But living here, in the free Republic of America, a land which was wrested, by its right owners, out of the clutch of her Majesty's lamented grandfather, I feel myself altogether out of her power. So that she will treat my audacity with silent contempt.

The first remark is upon the exceptions from the gracious "pardon." Those who escaped to America—who "violated every tie of honor," by escaping to America—are informed that they shall have no pardon. Her Majesty and her advisers have not sufficiently adverted to the fact, that all of those who so escaped, did immediately on touching these shores, by an official act in an American Court of Justice, distinctly renounce obedience and allegiance to all Kings and Queens, and especially, by name, to her most gracious Majesty. Therefore, they are not her subjects, and can not be pardoned.

Moreover, her advisers are well aware (for on my behavior they have always kept a sleepless eye), that I have never ceased—in Ireland before any pretended trial, in Van Diemen's land while in the hands of her jailors, in America since my escape—never ceased to declare, to print and to publish, that she the said Queen is no Queen of mine: that she took possession of my person, and robbed my children, under a false pretence of law; and that she maintains her power over my country specifically and exactly by these several means—force, fraud, corruption, perjury and blasphemy. Therefore, even as I can never pardon her, so she can never, never, pardon me.

But further, the said advisers of her Majesty are also fully informed (for they do me the honor to read my writings) that here, in the United States, I have used all diligence to point out the real nature of the late war in Russia, with a view of preventing people in this country from so throwing away their sympathies as to waste them upon her Sacred Majesty, her cause, her disasters, or her humiliations—and perhaps that, I have even to some extent succeeded in this meritorious object. Therefore, while the Atlantic rolls, she can never pardon me.

And besides all this, her Majesty's ministers know well (for I enjoy the privilege of their distinguished attention) that I am one of those who, in America, look forward with enthusiastic pleasure, to some attempt of the British government to coerce, bully, or molest the Republic of the United States—in order that we may unfurl the banner of the Stars and Stripes on Irish ground, and try whether it will not again, as it has always done before, sweep the blood-red Cross before it into the sea. Ministers, I say, are aware of this; and therefore know that, to me, the offer of a "pardon" would be an insult, and would by me be answered with another insult. Such a reply would, I admit, be rude, ungracious, repugnant to my natural politeness: but then it would be a public duty.

Now these reasons seem tolerably sufficient for not extending the "pardon" to us, and perhaps especially to me. They were the true reasons:—which, of itself, put it out of the question that Lord Palmerston or Lord Clarendon should assign them. No British minister ever assigns the true reason for any official act:—a rule admitting of no exceptions.

And accordingly, they had to provide a false reason: no difficulty in this for the employers of Birch and the packers of the juries. So Lord Palmerston does not repeat boldly, but insinuates the old falsehood—that we broke a parole in escaping. He says we "violated every tie of honor by flying from our punishment." Breaking out of the hands of pirates, he calls "flying from punishment;" and assumes or suggests that any escape is in itself dishonorable—a theory which I do not remember to have met with before. But while the ancient diplomatist expresses himself thus cautiously, he wishes to be understood, and in England is understood to mean a renewal of the charge of breach of parole. He well remembers that when he ventured on the direct charge itself, some months ago, and complimented O'Brien at our expense, O'Brien flung his compliment in his teeth, and nailed his lie to the counter. So he equivocates, like an old—let me say, old diplomatist.

But I am not writing to refute the old viscount's lie—only to make some general remarks on the transaction. And it will naturally occur, even to the simple mind, that we are excepted from the pardon, not because we did, but exactly because we did not, break parole. (I am speaking of Terence MacManus, T. F. Meagher, and myself). If we had done that disgraceful deed, they could well afford to pardon us, and would fling us their pardon with contempt—deserved contempt; for in that case we would be impotent enemies to them indeed. Because we would not fly clandestinely, but broke from them with a high hand, therefore they cannot forgive us.

The simple mind aforesaid may marvel also to see these same Ministers who anxiously advise their Queen not to pardon men who broke their word, carrying that same poor Queen to Paris to sit at the board and clasp the hand of a man who really broke, not his word only, but his oath—and who never denies that he broke it; or to see them inviting that man, a mean murderer, perjurer and swindler, to the same unhappy Queen's house, amongst her children; and there setting her down upon her knees, before all the people, to buckle a garter round that murderer's, perjurer's, and swindler's leg.

Further, the simple mind cannot fail to have remarked, that just as her gracious Majesty's harsh doom of eternal banishment against us (on the false charge of breaking our word) reaches this side of the Atlantic, her gracious Majesty's Representative in this Republic is sent home in disgrace, a convicted liar (it is a hard saying) with whom, as being personally offensive, honorable men can no longer comfortably or safely communicate.

My last remark shall be this. Four years ago, the British Government refused to receive a petition of some Irish gentlemen for our release, because we "had expressed no contrition." Four years they waited for contrition, got none, and now discharge you three without contrition; discharge you impenitent and contumacious rebels; discharge you free from promise or other engagement or obligation that should prevent you from becoming, if so minded, open and active rebels again. You do not accept "pardon," but avail yourselves of the cessation of a false imprisonment to revisit the country of your birth; where you have a right to live, and from whence the Queen of England has, and had, no right to drive you away.

I intend this letter for publication; but shall not ask you to print it in Ireland, as I would not so soon compromise you again with your new protectors, and—forgive me—admirers, the British Government. Your faithful friend, JOHN MITCHEL.

THE LORETTO NUNS.

It affords us much pleasure to call attention to the establishment at Guelph, Canada, of a branch of the Loretto Nuns.

To say, that they are pupils of Mrs. Ball, Loretto House, Rathfarnham, is to point them out as most superior in their speciality—the education of young ladies.

We congratulate the parents of Guelph and its vicinity on their advent, while we regret the benefit was not accorded (as was first intended) to our neighbors in Brooklyn. Whenever the Superioress of the House at Guelph sees fit to carry out that long-cherished desire of hers, we offer her our most cordial support and assistance. She who was ready to devote her young life to aid the projected struggle of the loved isle of her nativity for nationality in '48, with all the fervor she has since employed in her sacred calling, deserves that, and more, at our hands.

Our best exertions are ever at her service.

Literature.

PERSONAL RECOLLECTIONS.

HIGH DUTCH AND IRISH GOSSIP—TWO HOURS ON THE ROAD TO NIAGARA.

The night train from Utica "brought up" at Rochester about five o'clock in the morning, and although the weather had been unusually warm and oppressive, and the month August, a very cold and cutting morning it was. Being bound for Niagara, on my way to the "Thousand Islands," on a pleasure and sketching tour, with two friends—literary and artistic—and our progress thither being brought to a stand still until seven o'clock, I took advantage of the time to stroll about the town, as much, I admit, for the purpose of keeping myself warm as of examining the locality. Neither the one nor the other of these inducements could tempt my literary friend to sympathize with my movement; the morning was too chill, and the town of Rochester too tame at that period, to afford either his visual organ or his "mind's eye" any recreation; so, stealthily bundling himself into one of the rail-cars, he closed the doors, swung a couple of seats into a suitable position, was very soon sound asleep, and if I might judge from the complexity and enthusiasm of the variations intoned by his nasal organ, was in all the rapture of a musical dream—such as, for instance, might have suggested the composing of the "Battle of Prague,"—at least that part of it in which the "volleys of musketry" mingle with, and are heard above, the clatter of the cavalry charge. My other friend, Jacob the painter, whose enthusiasm for something in the shape of effect nothing could chill, committed himself with me to the lonely pavements.

We sauntered this way and that, up this street and down the other, read the names over the stores, and reviewed the shop fronts and shutters with all the persistency of two general officers marching between the open columns of an army and inspecting their appointment, fully conscious that in a couple of hours' time the apparently immoveable and stolid mass would be raging with the heat and fever of the stormy and tempestuous Battle of Life. I will not imitate a great number of other travellers who, passing through any given or taken place, expend several chapters in recording its settlement, colonization, rise, progress, and destiny—its population and political influence—its manners, customs, chief diet, and commercial staple—its fancy stocks, and stock in trade—its births, marriages, and deaths—ts preponderance of male children over female, or vice versa—its probable amount of gas pipes laid down in miles—the circulation of its newspapers, or the quality of its water. I will not quote from Henry C. Carey, to prove that it needs "protection" or from Richard Cobden, to expound the blessings of "free trade," nor from Malthus, to show why its young women should not marry, nor from Joseph Smith, to show why every stage-driver should have as many wives as his fare. I will do none of these, no doubt, highly commendable things. I am not so philosophic at present, and will only say, that the most remarkable things I met were a Newfoundland dog, and a cup of tea; the former being very strong—the latter very weak—the first being made of cast iron, and found outside a hardware establishment as a sign—the second, also, a counterfeit, but found inside of a restaurant near the railway depot.

As we got back to the latter, my friend left me, and an emigrant train bound westward soon coming up, I found much occupation in making note of the picturesque crowd of fathers, mothers, sons and daughters, from the Vaterland, which formed its freight. As the train stopped, the windows in the long line of cars were thrown up, the doors opened, and from all proceeded such masses of round female faces, with stolid looks of fat inquiry—such fat male faces, with shaggy hair on their heads, and mute astonishment on their opening mouths—lean faces, with sunken jaws and reflective eyes—the hair on the head reduced to a mere stubble, and the lower jaw and upper lip several inches behind the profile outlined by the projecting moustache and profuse beard. And then, such a clatter and jabber poured out from the venting of female curiosity temporarily satisfied, that I almost imagined I was at the door or on the lobby of a Lowell factory, my ears surrounded with the jangle, whirr, and monotonously curious clatter of its belts, bolts, bobbins, wheels, and other machinery. Several groups of long-tailed and short-waisted coats, loose-breeched, heavily-booted, and skull-capped individuals were soon arranged in picturesque disorder along the platforms, and my eye striking on one of them, I was soon transferring some of the more prominent outlines to my Sketch-Book. I had proceeded somewhat before I noticed that a couple of persons were standing behind me, their heads bent over either shoulder, and their faces alternately looking at mine—following the direction of my eye to the group in the first instance and to the sketch in the second. On my looking at, now this side, then the other, the faces withdrew; but thinking, no doubt, some expression of feeling necessary to palliate or gratify their curiosity, the one over my right shoulder said:—

"Right clever picter, mister."

"As like as two pays," continued the one over the left.

"Jist so, like the Dutchman's figure head," returned the first.

"It's the born image of that chap's cap yondher, for all the world like an egg-saucepan, and a paque (a visor) to it as long as a handle," said the secoond.

"Say," said the first, poking his head straight over my shoulder in the direction of the group, and then over the sketch, "say, Mister, you hev too many buttons on that coat," and he turned his face up to mine with a look of triumphant inquiry.

I was about to make reply, but my friend at the left was before me.

"Whisht," said he, "don't ye think the gentleman knows how many buttons it ought to have to howld it together;" then turning to me, in a tone of congratulation he continued, "it's a complate thing, sir," and pointing his conversation again to my critic, he quickly said, "and more be token, how could it be a complate thing without all the buttons? D'ye mane to tell me it niver had any more buttons nor what's on it now? No, Sir. I see the button-holes myself on thother side, an' if there wasn't any use for them do ye think they'd be there? Hiven never opens a mouth but it purvides something to go into id. Besides," nodding at me, "he knows what he's about. It's not sich a shabby old velveteen as that, wid skirts like a flyin' jib, he'd be puttin' down in cypher widout all the buttons to make it hang dacent."

"But a picter's a picter," said the immoveable critic.

"Oh be aisy," said my defender, with a careless but self-satisfied inclination of the head.

"Say, now," cried the other, growing more eager to explain himself, "say, now, a picter is a picter, but a picter ain't a picter ef 'tain't 'zactly like the thing."

"An ain't that picthur as like that fellows face and whiskers as anything you ever see?"

"Well."

"Ov coorse 'tis very well, and ain't that windy curtain of a coat jist what it ought to be?"

"Ay, what it ought to be," quickly put in the Yankee, thinking he had fairly caught the Irishman, "but not what it is."

"Ha—ha—ha," laughed the other, "d'ye hear that, sir?—hear that man?—there's grammar and spellin' fur ye—the thing is'nt what it is—what else is it? It's little use in havin' free schools fur ye, if that's the binifit they are. Sure yer own raison, if ye niver took a primer in yer fist would tell ye that every single thing is exactly what it is. Ye might as well say that we ain't here, or that you arn't yerself, but that I'm you."

"I guess not," quoth the one spoken to, with a quiet grin.

"Ye may take yer oath of it, as sure as my name is Ned Kearney, and your's is ——"

"What?" said the Yankee, driving his hands far into his breeches pockets and looking drolly at the newly announced Ned.

"Is what?—is not this gentleman's to be sure."

This completely threw the Yankee off his ground, and ended the discussion about the button.

The Yankee, however, still looked at the sketch, and seeming as though he should say something, or that he took a fancy for sketching, and probably might take to that line himself, presently inquired if it was "a pleasant business?"

I informed him that it was a delightful profession!

"Make much?" was his next inquiry.

"I am not a professional artist," I replied.

"Don't folly it?"

I nodded assent to the same.

"I thought not," said he, drily, and turning to Ned Kearney—"I knew very well he wasn't an artist."

"An what are ye doing that for?" said Ned, pointing to the sketch.

"For fun," said I, "for our amusement."

"That bates Pat Falvey," said Ned, turning slowly round, while the Yankee persisted in knowing that I could'nt folly the business, or I wouldn't put a button on that Dutchman's coat for nothing.

The Emigrant train departing, I closed my book, and having still some time on hand, I interlocuted Ned Kearney in what respect either myself or my sketch beat Pat Falvey, and made other inquiry touching the individual Falvey, himself.

"Well," said Ned, "I never hear of one's doin' anything for amusement, but I think of Pat. I'm from the ould sod myself, sir, and I knew him there—knew him from the height of a stirabout-stick. He said himself that he kem into the world for fun; that he thrashed all his frins as well, and sometimes betther, nor his enemies, for amusement, and that he would shurely die wid laughther; an' shure it would split your sides betimes to look at his capers, always purvidin' he didn't first split your head for the fun o' the thing. Once he tuck an ould fighting cock belonging to the priest (Heaven rest him), and whin catechised by the ould gentleman about it, he sed he didn't mane to take it out an' out, only to make game of it, and the ould man, who loved a joke, forgave him. He med game o' me once too, that I remember to me cost. It was this ways. Pat and myself had been purty hard frins from our mother's knees; we were everywhere together, and grew up like two bean-stalks in the one garden a'most, an' we tuk each other's part on ivery occasion when we hadn't too much to do to take our own—now and then he tuk both his own an' mine—that was at the fair of Tralee, and was a capital thing—but I'll tell you that, whin I get through wid this. Well, luck id have it when I was risin' twenty-two I detarmined I'd get married."

"A very good determination, no doubt," said I, parenthetically.

"You're wrong there, sir; but I won't precipitate my story. As I was sayin', I determined, and I had in my eye one Winny Costigan, a young daughter of a neighbor, and I believe I heard my mother say a near relative of our own—yes, one o' the Costigans married a cousin of the Downses, which was the maiden name of my mother—well, as I was sayin', Winny Costigan was the pink o' the parish. She had an eye you could say your prayers to; it was as bright and as blue as Heaven; sometimes as calm as an evenin' in the harvest, and at other times as tricksy as the wind in the heel o' Spring; ay sir, as capersome as the "wind that shakes the barley" itself; but I'm afeerd her heart was like the young ash plant—it id bend every way—nothin' id break it, nor howld it any way. However, I got along mighty fast, and, as I thought, was cock-sure of my wife; and I thought I'd let Pat into the sayeret, as I might need his sarvice, besides he'd niver on airth forgiv' me for actin' unfriendly wid him. So, as we war coming home from market, one Sathurday night, I ups and towld him the whole story.

"An' that's what yer up to," said he, when I towld him.

"The divil a less," sez I.

"Faix an' it 'il be a long time before it's any more," sez he.

"What d'ye mane?" sez I.

"What I say," sez he.

"And what d'ye say," sez I.

"What put such a notion into yer head?" sez he.

"My own four bones," sez I.

"An' what made you allow thim to do any thing so comical?" sez he.

"Because I couldn't help it," sez I.

"Why didn't ye tell me afore this?" sez he.

"War-hawk," sez I; "then maybe it's coortin' her yourself, Pat, you'd be."

"An faix, between you and me, Ned, that's what I've been doing these six weeks," sez he. Well, if the airth had opened and swallyed me, or swallyed Winny and left me standing like a grave-stone over her, I couldn't hev got such a cowld all of an instant. My blood rushed up to my head, but it was as wake and as cowld as wather, and the perspiration rowled down my cheeks just like the steam on the copper bilers yondher. After that we never said a word then, but wint home. Afther supper I stole round to Costigan's. It was purty late, and the door was closed. I rapped at the kitchen—for there was a light in the windy—but I couldn't see through; for one of the little children's bibs was pinned on the inside across it. I rapped at the kitchen, and called, in a little wee voice, on Winny.

"Who's there?" said somebody, my heart would scarcely let me think who.

"Me," sez I. "Who are you?" sez I again.

"I'm meself, likewise," says he.

"What are ye there for?" sez I.

"For fun," sez he, "as the owld woman said when she galloped her cat. What are you there for?"

"For fun too," sez I.

"Aithen you'll have enough of it, may be, if ye stay there much longer," sez he; "I know you, my lad; you're Ned Kearney, and it's not becomin' o' you to be philanderin' round dacent people's kitchens at this hour." Here the light disappeared from the place.

"I know you, too," sez I.

"Faix if you don't be off quickly, or keep a civil tongue in yer head as long as ye stay there, you'll know more o' me before you know less," sez he.

"You're Pat Falvey," sez I.

"What if I am?" sez he; "but as luck would have it, I'm only his brother."

"Yer out there," sez I, "for ye can't be yerself and yer brother all at once."

"You stupid omadhawn," sez he, "aint we the one flesh and blood?"

"More's the pity for yer brother, then," sez I.

"Have ye anything to say against my brother?" sez he.

"About as much as I have to say in your favor, and that's little," sez I.

"Little or much, Pat Falvey can't stand to hear you abuse his brother," sez he; at the same time he sprang out and caught a howlt av me by the neck.

"See here," sez he; "I had lots o' your impidence coming from market, when you had the assurance to tell me you were in love wid Winny Costigan. Now I niver mind that, kase that's personal to me, and we are owld frins, but I can't let your abuse of my own born brother go wid you." An' wid that he ups and gives me a rap on the side of the head that stretched me jist like ingy-rubber.

"What did you do that for?" sez I.

"For fun," sez he. An' I was jist going in afther him when I heerd Winny tittering. That was too much for me. I couldn't bear to hear her laugh at me—I loved the thing too well. I would rather Falvey would a' killed me first. We niver became friends agin, sir—niver; for he married her in a week, and I left the place seven days afther, and came out to—hurry up, sir, there's the whistle!

"All aboard for Niagara!" cried the conductor, and I was already on the steps of the platform.

"Here, sir—here is your dutchy, sir, that jist fell out ov yer book," said Kearney, pulling me.

"Keep it, Ned—you deserve it."

"A pleasant thrip, sir," was the last I heard of the humorsome acquaintance I made while waiting for the train at Rochester.

At a late meeting of the Royal Irish Academy, the President read a paper on "The Ancient Irish Missal, formerly in the Stowe Library, and now in the collection of the Earl of Ashburnham." He showed that the silver box in which the interesting MS. is contained, was originally made about the middle of the Eleventh Century, by Donagh, King of Ireland, son of the celebrated Brian Borumba; and that it was afterwards repaired and new ornaments added, 300 years subsequently, by Philip O'Kennedy, King of Ormonde, who died 1381. Dr. Todd also showed that the MS. was one of the most venerable monuments of the Ancient Liturgy of the Irish or Scotic Church now in existence, the original MS. having been written probably in the fifth or sixth century, and subsequently added to and altered by a later hand in the beginning of the ninth century, by a writer who gives his name as Maolcaich, but who is otherwise entirely unknown.

The Frankfurter Museum brings a report on the publication of the posthumous works of Heinrich Heine, intermixed with capital remarks and anecdotes of the late poet. Heine's "Literary Remains" will be edited, according to his own wish, by his friend and relative Dr. Christiani—the same whom, many years ago, he celebrated in one of his most witty little poems, as the "Mirabeau der Luneburger Haide." It was always Heine's wish that his works should be published after his death, with as little alteration as possible. He himself has pointed out only three poems which are to be omitted in a future edition of his works.

* Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year 1856, by THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER, in the Clerk's office of the District Court of the U. States, for the Southern District of New-York.

A REVERIE.

"I tell the tale as told to me."

'Twas such an eve as this; the tide was making,
The fitful ripples on the shore were breaking;
The wind stole up the glen, soft angel-voices
Spoke through the trees, and low, unearthly noises
Filled the deep gloom,
As kindred spirits sorrowing round a tomb.

The twinkling stars, from heaven shone faintly o'er me,
The moon a silvery pathway spread before me;
But deep regret disturbed my spirit's rest;
'Twas but the exile's pathway to the West,
Which I must tread, unknown,
Far from the faithful heart that beat for me alone.

A soft, white hand was laid upon my shoulder;
'Twas Mary's, and I turned me to behold her.
Large pearly tears on her long lashes glistened.
I spoke, and to my tale of love she listened,
Till my untutored lay
Chased from her eyes the dimming tears away.

Whilst to her heart in earnestness appealing,
I felt a cold—cold more than mortal—feeling,
As, pointing the moon's pathway o'er the sea,
I said, "Will Mary tread that path with me?"
Her looks had answered "Yes,"
When Fate his dark hand drew 'twixt me and bliss.

She shrieked! her heartless sire stood there before us;
His clouded brow a world of sorrow bore us.
I saw her cheek in deadly anguish shaded—
I saw her white robe flutter as she faded:
I saw her never more!
Far from that form the wild Atlantic bore.

Years passed: I there returned: the tide was making,
The ripples on the pebbled beach were breaking;
The winds sighed low, but lifted in their sighing
The grass that over Mary's grave was lying!
With a heart-broken prayer,
I buried joy and life's ambition there.

Nought recked I then the fate that brought me hither,
More than the stricken bough, storm-cast, to wither.
And many a storm, and many a dread disaster,
Laid low that land, the tenant, and the master,
And in their surges bore
That sire, a shivering suppliant, to my door.

The heart, with nought to love, knows nought worth hating;
The fire of youth was in my breast abating.
I saw that sire in death's embraces lying;
I held to his parched lips the cup, when dying,
And labored to prolong
The life of him that wrought me all this wrong.

And on such eves as this, when the tide is making,
And waves upon the shelving shore are breaking,
Hither I come, to dream of days departed—
O'er her, the faithful, fair, and broken-hearted;
And gaze across the deep blue sea,
That rolls between my Mary's grave and me.

U. S. DEMOCRATIC REVIEW.

The U. S. Democratic Review for July is a more than usually well diversified number. The political articles increase in purpose with the presidential exigencies of the day, and the literary notices, of which there are several, exhibit vigor, critical acumen, and a commendable desire to be impartial. The opening article, on "The Conventions and the Candidates," pays a high tribute to the character and honesty of the men who formed the one, and the men who were selected by them for the latter positions. It embodies graphic sketches of Messrs. Buchanan and Breckinridge, "Beranger and the Second Empire." A brief and bitter article follows, introducing the brilliant stanzas we reprint elsewhere. Next we have a continuation of the "Chronicles of Persepolis," and a further instalment of three didactic (and pleasant though didactic) poems, by C. G. Rosenberg. The discussion on Webster's orthography has not ended; a June reviewer reviewed a March reviewer, and now a July reviewer, with a seasonably increased warmth, comes on the field and perspires several pages. We pity a man who writes on such a subject in these days. After a full swing at the American orthographical revolution, the editor, under the head of "The Modern Revolutionary History of Ireland," gives a very graphic and highly complimentary resumé of Mr. Savage's "'98 and '48." The reviewer regards—as far as he is able to judge—the Young Ireland party as "the only honest and patriotic party in Ireland," and commends the book as "the broadest and boldest challenge" yet published to the opposers of that party. We shall probably make further allusion to the article, and others on the same subject, when our space permits. In a paper entitled "Books and their Influences," the writer shows that in the way of originality our moderns have not much to boast of. Modern German philosophies, the writer traces to Plato, and English ditto he credits to Aristotle. Dr. Berkeley's "New Theory of Vision" is inspired by Zeno, Parmenides, &c. Hume, and Pope, and Shelley follow Epicurus, Plotinus, &c., and so on. The article in question is a clever hodge-podge or stew. It is like the witches' cauldron in Macbeth, in which there is a little of every thing under the moon. The "hell-broth" is tolerably well seasoned, and though the writer reviles all originality, he would doubtless not feel complimented if we told him that his stew was after an old fashion; therefore we will say no more about it, saving that it is tolerably tasty, if not sufficien tly well cooked.

NEW BOOKS.

Redfield has in press some new works which will be heartily welcomed. First and foremost is a volume of designs in outline by Darley, illustrating Judd's novel Margaret. For some time they have delighted the literary and artistic circles fortunate enough to get a glimpse of them. We have seen some of them, and think them superior to the artist's Rip Van Winkle. They are beautifully and delicately engraved by Konrad Huber. A translation (by Mr. T. Balch of Philadelphia) of Professor De Witt's Life of Washington, will also command attention, though we doubt if it will arrive at the same library standard as Washington Irving's work. De Witt is the son-in-law of M. Guizot, and has had probably the benefit of that historian's advice and reading. Redfield also has in press The Introduction of Printing into the Middle Colonies, which will contain much curious information relating to printers and the press in America from 1684 to 1750. It is from the industrious pen of Dr. R. W. Griswold, author of the Poets and Poetry of America, &c. Napier's Peninsular War, in 5 vols., with maps plans and portraits, will soon be issued from the press of the same publisher. With these works of varied interest on hand Redfield is not forgetful of what now may be well termed his Irish library, or gallery of Irish writers. We have lately had the fourth volume of Maginn's Miscellanies, embracing his Homeric Ballads, a fifth is in press—which we prophecy will be the most successful of the series—i. e. his capital, comical, critical and altogether brilliant papers contributed to Fraser's Magazine. Dr. Mackenzie, while he gracefully annotates, and graciously elucidates the text and the persons alluded to in the above, and other works—for instance Lady Morgan's national and political novels, the first of which, The O'Briens and O'Flaherty's, is just now breaking the shell—is not forgetful of that greater duty, which has fallen to his lot, in the collecting and editing of the Poets and Poetry of Ireland. Out of such materials as present themselves, it would be impossible not to make a good book, while it would require an almost "superhuman effort," to make a bad one.

The third edition of Mr. John Savage's '98 and '48: The modern revolutionary history of Ireland, will go to press next week. The text will be carefully revised, and the work otherwise improved, by the addition of a full and useful index.

William Ross Wallace is about to issue the third edition of his poems. This will be the most complete collection yet made, and will embrace a number of fine things not included in the Meditations in America, published some three years since. In that collection there was some of the truest poetry yet stamped with the impress of an American brain, as all who read his "Chaunt of a Soul," "Hymn to a Wind going Seaward," and the "Mounds of America," must acknowledge. The late Edgar Poe, William Cullen Bryant, John Neal, and others in the front rank of American Literature, have paid generous and hearty tribute to the genius of Mr. Wallace; and we cannot doubt but that his forthcoming book shall meet with that welcome his merits deserve. Of late we have read in the Journal of Commerce several characteristic productions from his pen. Among them the "Moonlight on Palestine," "Burial of Love," "The Cry of a Soul," "Resurrection Flower," "Sunless City," "Stuart Holland," ode "On the Death of Ogden Hoffman," and a "Hymn for the Fourth," are peculiarly noticeable, and will be deservedly rescued from the transitory columns of a daily journal into the more worthy form of the book. It will be recollected that Mr. Wallace some years back was excited by the wrongs and history of Ireland in a no less degree than Lord Byron was by the struggles of Greece, and Edgar Poe by the struggles of Poland. Mr. Wallace went to Ireland, and his republican speech in Conciliation Hall drew down the temporary ire of O'Connell, for which afterwards the "Liberator" made amends by an apology to the American sympathiser.

A most important work is announced. It is a history of emigration to the United States, exhibiting the number, sex, age, occupation, and country of birth of passengers arriving in the United States by sea, from foreign countries, from Sept. 30, 1819, to Dec. 31, 1855; compiled entirely from official data. The body of the work will be preceeded by a Review of the Progress and Extent of Immigration to the United States prior to 1819; and an appendix given containing the Naturalization and Passenger Laws of the United States, with extracts from the laws of the several States relative to Immigrants, the Importation of Paupers, Convicts, Lunatics, &c. This volume is compiled by William J. Bromwell, of the Department of State.

John O'Mahony's translation of Geoffry Keatinge's History of Ireland will, we understand, very shortly go to press. We run no risk in saying, that from the interest attaching to the original work, and the profound Gaelic knowledge of the translator, it will be one of the best books, in its way, which the Irish American public, and the Irish or American student have as yet been furnished with. We are glad to see that the publisher's announcement of the work brought an almost instantaneous list of subscribers, more we hope, than sufficient to defray the consequent expenses. It is a good omen, and only shows that readers are eager to possess themselves of the old historic and poetic memories of the Fatherland. But this is not sufficient. The translating and publishing of such a work should be made lucrative. It is the first venture of its kind, and both Mr. O'Mahony and his publisher should be encouraged to further good deeds in the same historic and antiquarian field. In Ireland, O'Donovan, Curry and others are kept with commendable devotion at the exhumation of the ancient history and poetry of the Island from the Celtic mantle which all but shrouds them from the great mass of the people. Here in America, our race has a greater number of readers than can be mustered in Ireland; our sympathies, we should hope, are not less strong—our literary desires not less worthy.

Mr. O'Mahony is not only not less efficient than those gentlemen we have such pride in naming, but his sympathies—his strong political affinities, peculiarly fit him to transfuse into the English tongue the best effusions of the heartiest Gaelic writers. Mr. Haverty will also, in the course of the next month, issue his edition of the Lives of Thomas Addis and Robert Emmet.

Dix & Edwards announce as immediately forthcoming a History of the Slavery Question from 1787 to the Present Day. They promise that the work shall present a perfectly impartial view of this all-absorbing question, and serve the purpose of a political manual for men of all parties.

Clara; or Slave Life in Europe, with a Preface by Sir Archibald Alison, Bart: Harper & Bros.

If the expression had not been applied so often to works of an inferior order, we should call this "a most delightful book." The interest never for a moment flags; every character is so distinctly drawn, yet so necessary to all the others, that at once a vivid individuality and a harmonious unity is sustained. One grand feature of the work is, the mind is not kept stretched and strained beyond the agreeable point. There is a high-toned equability throughout. It is a common error with most novel-writers (and deemed a master stroke by young ones,) to close a chapter just as some intense mystery is going to be revealed, and begin another as foreign to the last as possible. Now this sort of thing is very well, perhaps, in some flashy novel, appearing by the weekly or monthly instalment, when there is not enough merit in the work to induce one to get the next chapters that appear, unless through a morbid desire to know if the hero really in mistake ran away with his grand-mother, or whether the young woman, left for dead at chapter one, was not alive and kicking at the opening of chapter two.

Sir Archibald Alison, in the preface, quotes a previous opinion from his "history of Europe" which gives such a correct idea of this charming book that we will take the same liberty:

"M. Haklander unites in himself several of the most striking qualities of our greatest contemparary novelists. In graphic description of character in all grades of society, and occasional pathetic power, he recals Dickens; in the evolving of the story, when to all appearance hopelessly involved, he resembles Bulwer. His most celebrated work, the 'Europäische Sclavenliven,' is intended to exhibit a picture of all the stages of society, from the cellars through the entresol and the saloon to the garret, in order to prove that all classes have their own fetters, that the conventional chains of civilized life are even more galling than the rude fetters of the African, and that many a white slave would have something to envy in the lot of Uncle Tom. It it to be feared there is too much truth in this view of the effects of civilization; and in working it out, Haklander has evinced great dramatic power, and a thorough acquaintance with all the gradations of German society. His picture of the ballet-dancers, and their fearful subjection to the caprices of the public; of the ardent and impassioned Baron; of the restraints, dullness, and etiquette of the grand ducal courts, and of the licentious life of the robbers, cannot be exceeded in fidelity and force of drawing. The reputation and success of the work on the continent is unprecedented, and rivals that of Bulwer, Dickens, or Disraeli in this country, or Cooper in America."

The Old Corner Cupboard, or the Everyday Life of Everyday People. Truman & Spofford, Cincinnati.

This work does honor to the heart, as well as the head of the author, whoever that may be. We have little doubt but that a lady is responsible for the "Old Corner Cupboard," and it is clear she has lived in this world not as a mere automaton, but has thought and felt deeply and sincerely, and in a manner that too rarely finds expression. There is a kind of Margaret Fuller atmosphere through the book, if we may so express it, but more tangibility, more experience of what she felt than what she desired; and it is more truly womanly in its details. It speaks of the innermost thoughts of a noble and unselfish heart—of a life devoted to the happiness of others, without appearing as a martyr to the cause.

Gentilucci's Life of the Blessed Virgin Mary, of which we have received three numbers, is a very admirable specimen of typography and the illustrative art. The work itself is highly spoken of by those in whose capacity to form a just opinion on the subject we have the fullest confidence. Its devotion and enthusiasm is finely blended with the learning, as exhibited in an extensive knowledge of the fathers and Scriptural history, brought to bear on the deeply important theme. Every page is surrounded by what may be termed a modern style of illumination, of chaste design and delicate execution. The original Italian, which was published in 1848, was dedicated, by permission, to Pope Pius IX. The present translation is sanctioned by Archbishop Hughes. James B. Kirker.

We are grieved to be called upon to record the decease of Sir Wm. Hamilton, the distinguished Scotch metaphysician. He died of congestion of the brain. "For about twelve years," says the Athenæum, "he has suffered from paralysis, which did not affect his mental activity, and did not prevent, though it impeded, his exertions as a lecturer. He was educated at Oxford, and for many years held the Chair of Logic and Metaphysics in the University of Edinburgh. He was a descendant of one of the sternest of the heroes of Bothwell Bridge, and a Scottish herald would designate him as Sir William Hamilton, Baronet, of Preston. But to the educated world he will be known by thousands, who care nothing for his ancestry, as the most learned man of his time, and one of the most acute in the profound branch of inquiry which it was his delight to follow. * * In modern times, deep knowledge of the previous history of their pursuit has not been the characteristic of metaphysicians; certainly not of the Scotch School. And if there be any one of olden time who could compare with Sir Wm. Hamilton, it must be remembered that the learning of the departed Professor embraced all that was known to his ancient competitor, and all that has been written since. Its mass and its minuteness are beyond description; and it extended from before Aristotle down to the last German who has attempted to fathom the distinction between ego and non-ego. Men of such all-absorbing capacity generally become mere indexes; but Sir. Wm. Hamilton preserved his individuality, and was able to exhibit in his writings the freshness of an inquirer whose mind has never been satiated by borrowing knowledge."

"One is glad to know, however," observes the Leader, "that he has left his Lectures on Logic and Metaphysics fairly written out. When these are published, they will, perhaps, be the most perfect revelation of the man, in both his aspects—that of his colossal memory and acquaintance with the whole history of opinion, and that of his native vigor and subtlety of speculative thought. It was the union of vast erudition with vast intellectual strength in pure speculation, that made Sir William almost unique among his British contemporaries; and it is solemnizing to think that in one brief day such a brain may cease its thinkings, and such a memory, with all that lay gathered up in it, may be extinguished from the earth."

Reminiscences of Waterford.

BY AN OLD MAN.

I was reading some of your reminiscences of Waterford the other evening, and tho' I cannot handle the "gray goose quill" as eloquently, still I can use the privilege that old age gives—I can talk of by-gone times—of the Waterford of 1806, and from that to 1816, when I left it. The old Mall, the Parade Ground, Ring Tower, the Black Arch, my "boyhood's home"—my father's Shop, at the corner of Royal Oak Lane and Barronstrand Street—the Big Chapel, where with awe and a white muslin Surplice about my shoulders I used to serve Mass. The person who kept me in the greatest dread was old Tom Sullivan, the Clerk. My old school-companion was Dominick O'Brien, now I believe a high dignitary in the Church—his father kept a Silversmith's Shop in the narrow part of Barronstrand Street, and was reputed wealthy; Dominick occupied a garret in the upper part of his father's house, which with some assistance from me was transmuted into a Chapel. The small altar was there at one end, adorned by a silver Crucifix given him by his father, the candlesticks bought at a toy shop, the little wax tapers, the paper vestments, the cruets—in short every thing that our limited pocket-money could procure to enable the place to resemble the altar which we were in the habit of assisting at. We were once in the very midst of our celebration—Dominick who was sufficiently conversant with Latin to act as Priest, and I responding as the acolyth—when the door suddenly opened and in walked Father Tom Hearn. I shall never, if I were to live to the age of Nestor, forget the smile that irradiated his benevolent contenance, as he saw us with sedate and serious air engaged in our religious exercises. Alas! these days of innocence, where are they flown? "gone with those beyond the flood." What old Shops were in Barronstrand Street in those days. Poke, the tobacconist, with the Indian Chief over his door; Dudley, the chandler, with his wooden candles; Gleeson the grocer, with his chest of tea and loaf of sugar manufactured out of good white pine; higher up—the Blue school—Mackesey's apothecary shop. By the way, I knew a son of his in Halifax, Nova Scotia, a Surgeon attached to the 62d Regiment. On the same side, my mother's cousin, Dr. Foley; still higher up, Ned Maher, who was famed for his patriotism and punch! I must turn round and go down on the Quay; I was looking into Farrel's window, the Publisher of the old Waterford Mirror (this was in 1814) I saw among the rest of the books displayed in the window "Waverly, or 'Tis Sixty Years Since"—who could have looked then into the future and see from that beginning such a magnificent superstructure arise? You recollect with what intuitive penetration Miss Edgworth's "aut Scotus, aut Diabolos" even then conjectured who the author was.

Among my visions in the backward vista of time, come forth honest Jack Manser, the schoolmaster of New street, with your rusty black habilimants and top-boots. Your smile and courtly bow are as distinct in my recollection as if it was only yesterday, and yet it's fifty years ago, for I first went to him in 1806. St. John's College was my next. Father Foran, Mr. Carroll, and Mr. Murphy, and Father Fitzpatrick! What a sight it was for us, boys, when assembled in the grounds to play at foot-ball, after being properly divided as competitors, to see Father Fitzpatrick advance in our midst, holding the ball in his hands, "with Cervantes serious air." Then would come the vigorous kick which would send the ball almost out of sight; the eager, upturned eyes, to see where it would descend; the moment it rebounded from the earth the battle would commence. Look out, boots and shoes, to say nothing of shins—now Dillon—look out Hayes—stop her, stop her, Meagher—by Jove, she is over the wall! Boys, what will we do now? These exclamations would rise up on every side. Where are the young hearts that beat in that play-ground now? Some in the United States and Canada, some in Australia, but the majority in their quiet graves. Go into the school-room. You see a tall figure waving its arm, gesticulating, as if preaching—it's Father Sheehan; it was his "beginning." "I knew him well, and every truant knew." I got a smart caning from him, for striking Tom Quan with a castletop on the head, in the ball-alley. What great events were passing on the Continent while we were pursuing our studies. Some of us with a Latin dictionary before us, and Cesar's Commentaries, Sallust, Cornelius Repos, or Virgil beside each other; but under the cover of the dictionary would be stuck Robinson Crusoe, Tom Jones, or Joseph Andrews. I spoke of events passing on the Continent. With what eager anxiety even among us, boys, was the great Napoleon's career commented upon; every battle he gained was a source of gratulation; any reverse a source of sorrow. Hatred of England was our predominant passion, and it was no wonder our fathers were rebels to her tyrannical misrule. June, 1815, came at length. Oh! then, indeed, were not our feelings wound up to the highest pitch. The first news—the battle of Ligny—filled us with joy, but the news of the fatal 18th damped our hopes. Grouchy's treachery—the finale—the exile to St. Helena—all was over at that time for us, boys.

The story of the old farmer in the county Kilkenny, who when he heard the news, ashamed of exhibiting such weakness before his family, going out to the potatoe-garden to weep; many and many a tear was shed when the news came to Waterford. We had some consolation, however, during the time I was at St. John's College, from 1812 to 1815, the frequent tearing down of the flag of the so called proud mistress of the ocean by the Stars and Stripes, ending with the battle of New-Orleans. Another reminiscence rises before "my mind's eye,"—Drumdowney, the haunted and deserted house—at least it was so in 1810. I said before that my father kept a public house in Barronstrand street, and one of his best customers was a country gentleman of the name of William Cody, of Gurteen, in the county Kilkenny, about three miles from Waterford. In the summer months he invariably sent his jaunting-car and horse early every Sunday morning to bring my father and mother to spend the day with his family. Now, there were three boys of us. Two should stop at home, and one go. Who was to be the boy to partake of the pleasures of the day? My father, poor dear man, to prevent any jealousy between the competitors, took three straws of unequal lengths, put them between the leaves of a book, and whoever drew the longest was to go. I do not know how it was, whether being the oldest and favorite son, or some secret signal, but I was with few exceptions the happy boy. Cody had three children, and accompanied by them, after dinner, we sallied forth to Drumdowney. The path lay through a solemn thick plantation of firs, after emerging from which the mansion appeared; the surrounding offices and stables, with the house itself, falling to decay; the garden neglected and filled with weeds; the whole bearing an air of the most profound desolation; no living being to be seen, and nothing to be heard but the hum of the bee, or the flutter of the butterfly; the lower windows of the house were boarded up, but it struck me at the time that there might be an ingress in some part; therefore, while my companions were amusing themselves playing hide and seek in some of the dilapidated stables, I proceeded to try if any of the boards that covered the windows were removed or decayed; at length I found a board that had fallen from a window of what appeared to be a pantry; the sash was fastened down, but part of it was so rotted by time that it was not a moments work to remove all obstacles to my entrance into the haunted house. The floor was covered with pieces of plaster that had fallen from the ceiling; the shelves, mouldy or worm-eaten, were filled with dishes and other utensils covered with dust; cobwebs, like curtains, festooned the corners. The door of this room was open, and I advanced along a passage to what I supposed to be the hall—for two circular stair-cases were observable—but of all the dreary dismal objects that ever yet met my view, this was the most dreary; the rays of the sun shining through the dilapidated windows, and the fan-lights over the hall-door shedding light as if mocking the silence and desolation around. I mounted one of the stair-cases, traversed several lofty rooms with old-fashioned marble mantle-pieces. The part of the house above this floor was so exposed to the weather that decay had almost completed its task; the floors were so rotten that I felt a dread creeping over me, and I was glad to descend again and join my companions.

But enough. If you will favor me so much as even to peruse these few lines, it will be a gratification to your ardent admirer and the constant reader of your valuable journal.

AN OLD MAN FROM THE URBS INTACTA.

Congressional.

Thirty-Fourth Congress—First Session—Senate.

July 7.—A joint resolution appropriating $10,000 for the mail service between Charleston and Havana, during August and September, was passed. The bill providing for the improvement of the of the mouth of the Mississippi river, which was vetoed by the President, was then taken up. Mr. Slidell advocated the appropriation. Mr. Cass spoke in favor of the improvement of St. Mary's river and the St. Clair Flats, and charged the President with inconsistency with regard to his action on the subject of river and harbor improvements. On the question being taken on the Mississippi river improvement bill, it received thirty-one votes to twelve against it. The Chair decided the bill passed by a two-thirds vote; but Mr. Mason objected, and contended that the rule required the votes of two-thirds of all the members of the Senate. The decision of the Chair was sustained—thirty-four to seven. Subsequently the St. Mary's River and the St. Clair Flats bills were passed over the President's veto. The House Kansas bill was received and referred to the Committee on Territories.

July 8.—Mr. Douglas reported back from the Committee on Territories the House bill for the admission of Kansas, with an amendment striking out the preamble and all after the enacting clause, and inserting the bill passed on Thursday in the Senate. The proposition was debated by Messrs. Douglas, Collamber, Pearce, Hale and others, and various amemdments were rejected, including one to re-establish the Missouri Compromise line; when it was finally agreed to by a vote of 32 to 13.

July 9.—The Internal Improvement bills, passed over the President's vetoes, were ordered to be sent to the Secretary of State. On a motion to print twenty thousand extra copies of the Kansas bill as it passed the Senate, there was a debate lasting until 9 p.m. The discussion involved the whole Kansas matter, and was carried on with much spirit. The resolution to print was adopted, and the Senate adjourned.

July 10.—The Indian Appropriation bill, after sundry amendments, was passed. Mr. Mason, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported a bill to amend the Act of last Session to remodel the Diplomatic and Consular system. It was made the order for Monday the 14th. The bill to amend the Act to promote the efficiency of the Navy was taken up, and the section reviving the grade of Admiral, was striken out.

House.

July 7.—The bill providing for the settlement of the claims of Revolutionary officers and others were ordered to be engrossed. A motion to consider the Senate's resolution fixing the day of the final adjournment was negatived, the republicans voting against it in a body. The Senate's Kansas bill with the amendments offered in the House, were ordered to be printed. Mr. Campbell, of Ohio, asked leave to offer a resolution proposing a select committee to report a bill for the adjustment of the Kansas difficulties, embracing among other provisions, the restoration of the Missouri Compromise; but without further consideration of the proposition, the House adjourned.

July 8.—Mr. Campbell, of Ohio, said he had intended to call up the report of the select committee on the Sumner assault, but as Brooks' trial was progressing before the Court, he would not do so. After a debate on the enlargement of the public buildings at Milwaukie, a message was received from the Senate announcing the passage of the bills for the improvement of the mouth of the Mississippi, the St. Clair Flats, and the St. Mary's River, over the President's vetoes, and after a brief debate they were likewise passed by the House.

July 9—Ten thousand copies of the majority and minority reports on the Sumner outrage were ordered to be printed. The majority report proposing the expulsion of Mr. Brooks, was taken up for action. Mr. Cobb moved as a substitute, that the House had no jurisdiction. A long debate ensued.

July 10.—Mr. Ball's resolution asking for a select committee to inquire into alleged frauds in constructing public buildings, was taken up and passed. The consideration of the report of the committee on the Sumner assault was then resumed, and after an exciting and interesting debate the House adjourned without action.

LETTER FROM CALIFORNIA.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 19, 1856.

Editor of the IRISH NEWS, New-York:

Sir,—Since I last wrote you, our city has been in a state of siege The Vigilance Committee have resolved themselves into a permanent organization, and usurped the powers of government—have set the proclamation of the Governor at defiance—have an armed body of men in their pay—are nightly breaking into houses and making arrests, trying citizens in their inquisitorial chamber, without giving them the right of calling evidence in defence, and pronouncing on them either the sentence of death, or banishment.

Such is a brief outline of the state of society here at present, and strange to say, strange as it may sound to the American ear, the tools employed by this self-constituted body are principally foreigners, composed in members, chiefly of French, Dutch, and Germans. The MOVING POWER were antagonistic to republican institutions, and they have subscribed liberally, either out of their own or their consignors' funds, to keep up this excitement. It will afford many of them a good opportunity to settle their accounts as was formerly done in San Francisco by a good fire. I notice that the heads of the columns marching and counter-marching through the streets, are chiefly composed of French, on whom those disorganizers rely for fight. They (the French) think it a revolution, and are really bent on fight. The chief movers are safely ensconced in a large block of buildings on Sacramento street, the front flanks of which are fortified with sand bags. They are chiefly composed of men calling themselves merchants, but are in reality, with few exceptions, a set of bankrupts. They have allied with them, also, a number of bankrupt politicians, who, for the sake of getting into office at next Fall election, would not hesitate to risk the unity of this great republic, and raise on its ruins any form of Government that would ensure to them political power.

I sincerely trust that the authorities of Washington will take immediate action in the matter. One form of government cannot exist there, and a self-constituted and different one here. An order to General Wool, commanding him to suppress this rebellion, would settle the whole matter. I trust such an order will have arrived before our streets are deluged with citizen blood. Many of the members of the Executive Committee, and those contributing to its support, are well-known friends of the allied powers of England and France. As an American citizen, I am bound to bear testimony to the fidelity of our Irish adopted citizens to the oath of allegiance they have taken to this republic. They have, with very few exceptions, avoided this illegal combination, and are now found banding themselves into volunteer companies, in compliance with the Proclamation of our Governor, J. Neely Johnson, which I here annex:

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Sacramento City, Cal., June 2, 1856.

SIR—Information having been received by me, that an armed body of men is now organized in the city and county of San Francisco, in this State, in violation of law, and have resisted the due execution of the law, especially by preventing the service of a writ of habeas corpus duly issued, and is threatening other acts of violence and rebellion against the Constitution and laws of this State. You are therefore commanded to call upon such number as you may deem necessary of the enrolled Militia, or those subject to military duty; also, upon all of the volunteer or independent companies of the military, within the Military Division under your command, to rendezvous at such time and place within the county of San Francisco as you may deem necessary and proper to aid the civil authorities, especially the Sheriff and his deputies of said county, in enforcing the laws and rendering obedience thereto, and with such forces as you may be able to command, to aid and assist the enforcement of the laws, and the service of such legal process as may be required of you, by such officers of the law as may command your aid.

In the organization and equipment of such Militia force you will be governed by the law and regulations now in force.

Very respectly, your obedient servant,
J. NEELY JOHNSON,
Governor and Commander-in-Chief.

To WILLIAM T. SHERMAN,
Major-General Commanding
2d Division California Militia.

III. The officers commanding the Volunteer and Independent Companies of this city, will proceed forthwith to fill their companies to the highest standard, and will report in person the strength and names of the members of their companies to Gen. W. C. Kibbe, adj. and Q. M. General, at the Recorder's Court Room, City Hall. The companies will hold themselves prepared to assemble at such place as may hereafter be indicated. All enrolled members of these companies are hereby commanded to report to their respective captains, or commanding officer, who will report the names of all who refuse to obey, with such evidence of their disobedience as will bring them within the provision of Sec. 2 of the foregoing Act of the Legislature.

IV. All citizens of San-Francisco County, between the ages of eighteen and forty-five years, not members of the regularly enrolled Volunteer or Fire Companies of the city, or not otherwise exempt from military duty, are hereby commanded to enrol themselves into companies of from fifty to one hundred men, to elect from their own number a captain, one first lieutenant, two second lieutenants, four sergeants, and four corporals; and to agree on a place of rendezvous, in case their services are called for. The captain, or other commanding officer, will prepare a roll of the names of the members of his company with the place of rendezvous, and will deposit the same with Adj. Gen. Kibbe, at the Recorder's Court Room, City Hall. Parties refusing so to enrol themselves are brought within the provisions of Art. 20 of the act before-named. Citizens so enrolling themselves for future call are requested not to suspend their usual business, only to hold themselves prepared for service in case of further orders. Should they be called into the service of the State, arms and ammunition will be provided for them.

V. The Major-General Commanding takes this occasion to say that the troops to be organized under this call have nothing to do with the exciting issues of the past two weeks. The only question is, shall the laws of the State of California henceforth be sustained? All violence of act or language is to be deprecated, and no force or threats must be used without my orders. The good citizens of San Francisco should reflect that we all hold our lives and property of law, and that a forcible resistance of the law does not end with the case in point, but may rise up against ourselves in some other and less pleasing form, and may injure our reputation in other States, where the evils we complain of are not felt. Civil war, or the array of armed citizen against citizen, is too horrible in its consequences to be spoken of, and it is to be hoped that all good citizens will forthwith return to their business, and cease any display of force or resistance to the regular operations of our courts of law.

W. T. Sherman, Major-General.

PROCLAMATION OF THE GOVERNOR.

Executive Department,
Sacramento City, June 3d, 1856.

Whereas, satisfactory information has been received by me that combinations to resist the execution of legal process by force, exist in the County of San Francisco, in this State, and that an unlawful organization, styling themselves the Vigilance Committee, have resisted by force the execution of criminal process, and that the power of said County has been exhausted and has not been sufficient to enable the Sheriff of said County to execute such process: Now, therefore, I, J. Neely Johnson, Governor of the State of California, by virtue of the power vested in me by the Constitution and Laws thereof, do hereby declare said County of San Francisco in a state of insurrection, and I hereby order and direct all of the Volunteer Militia Companies of the County of San Francisco, also all persons subject to military duty within said county, to report themselves for duty immediately to Major Gen. Wm. T. Sherman, commanding Second Division California Militia, to serve for such term in the performance of military duty under the command of said Sherman until disbanded from service by his orders. Also, that all Volunteer Military Companies now organized, or which may be organized within the Third, Fourth and Fifth Military Divisions of this State; also, all persons subject to military duty in said Military Divisions, do hold themselves in readiness to respond to and obey the orders of the Governor of this State, or said Sherman, for the performance of military duty in such manner, and at such time and place as may be directed by the Governor of this State. I furthermore order and direct that all associations, combinations, or organizations whatsoever, existing in said county of San Francisco, or elsewhere in this State, in opposition to, or in violation of, the laws thereof, more particularly an association known as the Vigilance Committee of San Francisco, do disband, and each and every individual thereof yield obedience to the Constitution and Laws of the State, the writs and processes of the Courts, and all legal orders of the officers of this State and of the county of San Francisco.

(Signed) J. NEELY JOHNSON.

In cases of civil strife, there will be always differences of opinion, consequently nearly all the Militia Companies took their sides, and the result was, the breaking up and disbanding of the majority of them. The companies that stood true to their oaths and obligations to the Constitution were—

The National Lancers, Capt. Thos. Hayes; Marion Rifles, Capt. Riggs; Continental Guard, Capt. Ferm.

Broke up but immediately re-organized in the service of the State, the San Francisco Blues, Capt. Farren.

Broke up but NOT organized, and partially joined the Vigilance Committee—

The California Guard—light artillery, Capt. T. D. Johns; Eureka Light Dragoons, Capt. J. S. Reed; City Guard, Capt. John A. Clarke; National Guard, Capt. Pollock, and only a few more remaining true to their duty; Wallace Guard, Capt. McDonald.

As a specimen of the feeling existing among those companies, I give you, subjoined, the copy of a Card issued by them:

"☞ American Theatre.

BENEFIT OF THE

INDEPENDENT NATIONAL GUARD."

"At a meeting of the National Guard held at their Armory on the evening of June 18, the following action was had:—

"Whereas, recent events, well known to all, having placed this corps in a false position before the public, therefore—

"Resolved, That in consequence of our Arms having been taken from us by the Adjutant-General of the State, this corps do now disband, preferring this course to that of becoming slaughterers of our fellow citizens.

"Resolved, That this corps do now re-organize under the name of the INDEPENDENT NATIONAL GUARD, holding ourselves subject only to such rules and regulations in sustaining the cardinal interests of the community as our best judgment may dictate, hereby repudiating all connexion with the present State authorities."

On the issue, however, of the Governor's Proclamation, there instantly sprang into existence the following companies, who have declared their determination to maintain the Laws and Constitution, at all hazards:—

The Jackson Guard, Capt. Regan; Jefferson Guard, Capt. Hanna; Munroe Guard, Capt. John A. Munroe; Constitutional Guard, Capt. Benham; Union Guard, James Herbert; Hayer Guard, Capt. Jack Hayes; a splendid company, I cannot at this moment name, under Capt. Ashe.

From the interior of the State there is daily fresh assurances of the loyalty of the great mass of the people, and their determination to sustain the unity of the Republic.

Some blame the Governor for his dilitory action, which, no doubt, gave strength to the organization of the Vigilance Committee. Others say, that notwithstanding his election by, and affiliation with the Know Nothing party of which this Vigilance Committee is chiefly composed, that he means well, and will prove true to his oath of office; but we have this fact on record, that up to the present day, June 20th, he has not made any of the resources of the State available for the support or necessary equipment of the companies who have volunteered their service.

General Wool has also added considerably to their strength, by first promising the new companies arms, and subsequently withdrawing his promise. It is said to be a political move on the part of the ambitious old General.

For the acts of the Committee I refer you to the subjoined list of their victims:

Hanged by the Vigilance Committee—James P. Casey, Charles Cora.

Arrested by force and died in prison by being bled to death—Yankee Sullivan.

Forcibly arrested and smuggled off to parts unknown—Chas. P. Duane, William Mulligan, Wm. Carr, Martin Gallagher, Woolley Kearney, Edwd. Bulger.

Ordered to leave, under the severest penalties—J. W. Bagley, James Hennessey, John Crowe, Wm. Hamilton, James Cusick, John Lawler, Terrence Kelley, *Edward McGowan, *Pete Wightman, *Jim White, *Jim Burke alias "Activity," T. B. Cunningham, Bill Lewis, Bob Lipsey, Alex Purple, Tom Mulloy, Frank Murray, Philander Brace.

The last seven are now under arrest, and it is not known what will be done with them. It is safe to predict that they will never be allowed to go at large again in California.

Those marked with stars to their names have fled into the interior, and have resolved never to submit to this arbitrary junta.

Such, sir, is a brief outline of the high-handed and lawless acts of this unconstitutional and illegal body. The accompanying files of papers will give fuller details of their outrages and lawless acts—acts that have given a blow to the prosperity of our young State, which will require years on years for her to recover from.

In conclusion, I will refer you to my two last communications predicting the decrease of commercial remittances, and the withdrawal of foreign capital sent here for investment. If you will note the remittances by the last and present steamer, you will find I was correct. Capitalists are withdrawing the money sent here for investment. The few solvent merchants make their usual remittances, or thereabouts, and many of the "great guns," who keep large establishments, will send excuses, and make their preparations for a "Finality."

Yours Truly, Humboldt.

The Commonwealth in Danger—Warning Notes from California.

San Francisco, June 19, 1856.

So far as my observation and information extend, I can say that I do not think there is a single man in California, whether in San Francisco or in the interior of the State, who stands in the front rank for position and intelligence—one who had a distinct and elevated position prior to his coming here—who is not decidedly opposed to this illegal and irresponsible body of people known as the Vigilance Committee, or who does not believe that their action is disgraceful to the country, and will entail upon it deep and irreparable mischief. I know that it is claimed that the wealth and intelligence, and integrity of the State, are on the side of these people. Such is not the fact. They have numbers, it is true,—in this city especially—but no one man of distinct and distinguished position, or who had a marked rank in the place from whence he came, has any affiliation whatever with the Vigilance Committee. It may be said that Balie Peyton is such a man, and that he approves of their course. Mr. Peyton has notoriety, I admit, but he has been an ultraist always and everywhere, and is now a popularity hunter. Besides, his hatred of Democracy knows no bounds; and if this commotion originates a new party, if only for the time being, it may enable him to get to the U. S. Senate—the darling object of his heart. He is governed by no fixed principles in his present course, but hopes to gain political preferment by it.

This whole movement is looked upon by the class of men to whom I have alluded, as without excuse and without precedent, and as calculated to destroy California in the eyes of Europe, and of all thinking men in the Atlantic States. It had its origin in the breasts of men who could scarcely comprehend the effect and operation of such a proceeding upon the vital interests of the country, and who seemed to desire an excitement of this kind, for reasons which time alone can disclose. It is believed seriously that motives of personal interest have had a large share, if not in originating, certainly in perpetuating the excitement, and that creditors abroad will ere long have a practical realization of the whole affair.

My impression is, that California will feel for years the blighting effects of the movement, and that its immediate and certain effects are to be a suspension of emigration to the country, and a withdrawal of much of the capital which is now invested in this city and throughout the State. Scævola.

Celebration of the Fourth by the Shamrock Benevolent Society of St. Louis.

The leading columns of the Daily Missouri Democrat of St Louis, 7th inst., are devoted to a happy reminiscence from the editorial pen. Of the general good will and joy inspired by the day the editor speaks in hearty terms:

All evinced (he writes,) the genuine outpouring of American feeling in behalf of American liberality, and no better proof could have been given that in America the broad badge of citizenship makes brothers of us all, than was shown by the universally responsive and harmonious celebrations to which we have adverted.

A new and splendid organ has been inaugurated in the Catholic Church of Ballyshannon, County Donegal, under the auspices of the Right Rev. Dr. M'Gettigan.

The Count Frederic de Burggraff, the French Consul in Dublin, has been decorated by the Emperor Napoleon III. with the Cross of the "Legion of Honor," as an acknowledgment of his services.

IRISH MARRIAGES.

In St. Peter's Church, Dublin, Robert Arthur Morris, solicitor, to Esther Ann, daughter of the late G. Carroll, solicitor.

In St. Mark's Church, Dublin, Thomas Sweeny, of Lower Baggot street, to Ellen, daughter of the late Edward Atkin, Captain in the 50th Queen's Own regiment, and niece of the late Lieutenant Colonel Atkin, of Leadinton, county Cork.

In St. George's Church, Dublin, John Bagwell, to Agnes Sarah, youngest daughter of Frederick Lindesay, of Loughry, county Tyrone.

In St. Peter's Church, Dublin, Thompson M'Clintock, of Hampstead Hall, in the county Derry, late Captain in the 91st regiment, to Sarah Maria, daughter of the Rev. J. O. M'Causland, incumbent of Killylea, county Armagh.

In St. George's Church, Dublin, Charles F. Phillips, of Phillipsburgh, to Caroline Jane, daughter of the late Lodge Phillips, of Lodgefield, both in the Queen's County.

At Moira, the Rev. Charles L. Grant, Wesleyan Minister, of Lower Abbey street, Dublin, to Ellen, daughter of the Rev. John Armstrong, of Moira.

Joseph England, of Ballyorban House, county Cork, to Mary, second daughter of John Lawlor, of Castle Lands, in the same county.

At Tully, county Longford, the Rev. J. Mawhinny, of Athlone, to Mary Caroline, daughter of the late Captain Thomas Walsh, of the 5th Fusiliers.

At Rossory, Enniskillen, Lieut. Thomas Carre, of the Donegal Militia, son of the Rev. H. Carre, rector of Inver, to Emma, daughter of F. Oliver, bandmaster of the same regiment.

At Lowtherstown, county Fermanagh, the Rev. J. Carey, Wesleyan Minister, to Margaret, daughter of the Rev. William Douglas, of Lowtherstown.

At Passage West, Allan Morgan, son of the Rev. Hamilton Morgan, vicar of Dysart, to susanna, daughter of John Smith, of Castle View, Passage West.

At Mohill, county Leitrim, John, son of Robert Devenish, of Rush Hill, county Roscommon, to Elizabeth Frances, daughter of the late Thomas Jones.

In Athlone, Augustus Hillier, of the War Department, to Kate, daughter of Edward Larkan, of Larkfield, county Roscommon.

At Carne, county Wexford, Joseph, son of John Sealy, of Trane, Broadway, to Margaret, daughter of John North, of New Ross.

In London, William H. Harte, of Coolowley, in the Queen's County, son of the late Charles Harte, of Tenderry, county Tipperary, to Sophia, daughter of Samuel Driver, of London.

At Chesham, the Rev. James L. Gilborne, chaplain at Pembroke dockyard, son of the late Captain Gilborne, of the Royal Hospital, Kilmainham, to Maria, daughter of Mark Dewsnap, of Hammersmith.

At Spratton, Northamptonshire, the Rev. Henry C. Mitchenson, of East Retford, to Emma Maria, daughter of the late Major Franklin, of the 1st Bengal Cavalry, and niece of the late Rear-Admiral Sir John Franklin.

IRISH DEATHS.

At the Presbytery, St. Francis Xavier's, Upper Gardiner street, Dublin, the Very Rev. Robert St. Leger of the Society of Jesus.

In Dublin, the Very Rev. John Armstrong, Dean of Kilfenora.

In York street, Dublin, Susan, relict of Samuel Kathrens.

In Blessington street, Dublin, George Sherrard.

In Lower Gardiner street, Dublin, Emma Elizabeth Cope, wife of David Galbraith.

At her residence, Wesley place, Dublin, Margaret, the beloved wife of Richard Cashill, aged 31 years.

In North Richmond street, Dublin, Rebecca, relict of John Young, of Castlerea, Roscommon.

At 85, Camden street, Dublin, of disease of the heart, Wm. M'Grath, late of Wenthroop street, Cork.

In Eccles street, Dublin, Nicholas Kerron.

In Dundalk, Mrs. Granby, wife of G. W. Granby, of the Theatre Royal Hawkins street.

At 144, Townsend street, Dublin, James Clarke.

At Church avenue, Irishtown, aged 68 years, Eleanor, relict of George Macklin.

At Rathgar, Maria, daughter of Richard Worthington.

At Rathmines, Mary, daughter of John Smyth, late of Prospect Lodge, Roscrea.

At 7, Flood's Buildings, North Strand, Alicia, the wife of Thomas Flood. Also Hannah Lucy O'Neill, her daughter.

At Drumdaff House, county Roscommon, George Digby.

In Athlone, aged 90 years, William Joyce.

At Chapelfield, near Coleraine, Harriet Frances, daughter of the Rev. John Long, formerly vicar of the parish of Drummaul and Randalstown.

At Castleblayney, Charles Molley, formerly of Newry.

At Tullydonoga, county Clare, Margaret, daughter of the late John Sheehan, of Creagh Castle.

In Edenderry, the Rev. James Colgan.

At Spring Hill, Carlow, Richard H. Graydon, of Ballymorris, county Wicklow.

At Warrenpoint, Robert, second son of the late John Magill, of Tullycairn, county Down.

At Passage West, Cork, Mary, relict of T. Penny, Esq., aged 80 years.

In Limerick, Eliza, widow of M. B. Ryan.

At Frankford, King's County, Bessie, daughter of the late George Purdon, formerly Surgeon of the 88th Connaught Rangers.

At Derramore, Isaac Smyth, aged 74 years.

Sarah, relict of Andrew M'Clelland, of Ballygowan House, Bainbridge.

In Belfast, Leonora, wife of Adam Hill.

In London, Lydia Elizabeth, wife of Sir Thomas D. Acland, Bart., M. P.

At the Polombier, near Tours, Major-General T. Peacock, aged 81 years.

Amusements.

BOWERY THEATRE.

THE PEOPLES TEMPLE OF THE DRAMA.

Open every night,

WITH A POWERFUL

Star Company.

Lessee and Manager.....JOHN BROUGHAM

PRICES OF ADMISSION:

Boxes.....25 cents. | Pit.....12½ cents.
Gallery.....12½ cents. | Orchestra Stalls.....50 cents.
Private Boxes.....Five Dollars.
Doors open at 7½; commence at 7¾.

WALLACK'S THEATRE.

THE

SUMMER GARDEN.

MISS AGNES ROBERTSON

EVERY NIGHT.

Third week of

The Phantom.

Second week of Mr. Bourcicault's exciting and wonderful play, the Life of an Actress.

BOB NETTLES.

The Chameleon.

THE YOUNG ACTRESS.

MISS AGNES ROBERTSON, the "FAIRY STAR,"

In seven characters, introducing her inimitable

SONGS AND DANCES!

Mr. DION BOURCICAULT as the PHANTOM and GRIMALDI,

EVERY NIGHT.

PRICES OF ADMISSION.

Parquette and boxes.....50 cents
Family Circle.....25 cents
Doors open at a quarter past seven P. M.

BOSTON EMIGRANT SOCIETY.

OFFICE, CORNER OF SOUTH AND BEACH STREETS.

THE object of the Society is to protect the Emigrant from imposition. The Office is open daily from 7 o'clock A. M. to 6 P. M. Emigrants and others furnished with employment. The Society, having made the necessary arrangements, is prepared to furnish tickets of transportation to every section of the West. Persons procuring tickets at this office may rest assured that they will reach their destination by the best route, with the least delay, and the lowest cost.

MARTIN GRIFFIN, President.
James Ferguson, Rec. Sec. | James Dacey, Cor. Sec.
James Flynn, Treasurer.
M. J. FENELON, Agent.

Buchanan and the Press.

When, says the Washington Sentinel, we come to speak of any of the tickets of the various branches of the opposition, in comparison with the Democratic ticket, we feel impressed with the ridiculousness of the thing. It is as "Hyperion to a satyr." The thing is absolutely funny. James Buchanan on the one side—Colonel Fremont on the other! The first burdened with honors, glowing with antecedents, and ripe with experience; the other unknown to aught but frontier fame, without antecedents, and altogether green in experience. Who can for a moment doubt the choice of the American people?

The Rome Sentinel says every one should vote for Mr. Buchanan, because he is a gentleman of "learning, experience, and ability."

Caution to the Public.—To distinguish the genuine magnetic Powder, for the destruction of insects, from poisonous imitations, it is necessary to examine the wrapper. See that four national medals—those of England, France, Belgium, and the United States—are engraved thereon. Be ure also that a lithographic fac simile of Lyon's signature appears both on he wrapper and label. This caution is necessary to protect the proprietor from fraud and the public from danger and disappointment. The leading scientific societies, and the first chemists of Europe and America, have pronounced the magnetic powder the only poisonous insect bane in the world, as well as the most effective and fatal means for the destruction of bed-bugs, roaches, fleas, ants, flies, moths, &c., that was ever prepared or sold. The proprietors of the principal city hotels endorse it. Come and see the testimonials of Prince Albert, ex-President Fillmore, and hundreds of the nobility of Europe, as well as the sovereigns of America. The magnetic pills, for the extermination of rats and mice, are endorsed with equal emphasis by all who have tried them. Call and see the medals, diplomas, government orders, scientific certificates, letters, &c., at the Central Depot, No. 424 Broadway.

jun 21 3m EMANUEL LYON.

A perfumed breath.—What lady or gentleman would remain under the curse of a disagreeable breath, when by using the "Balm of a Thousand Flowers" as a dentrifice, would not only render it sweet, but leave the teeth white as alabaster? Many persons do not know their breath is bad, and the subject is so delicate their friends will never mention it. Pour a single drop of the Balm on your tooth-brush, and wash the teeth night and morning. A fifty cent bottle will last a year.

A Beautiful Complexion may easily be acquired by using the "Balm of a Thousand Flowers." It will remove tan, pimples, and freckles from the skin, leaving it of a soft and roseate hue. Wet a towel, pour on two or three drops and wash the face night and morning.

Shaving made Easy.—Wet your shaving brush in either warm or cold water, pour on two or three drops of the "Balm of a Thousand Flowers," ru the beard well, and it will make a beautiful soft lather, much facilitating the operation of shaving. Price only 50 cents. For sale by all druggists.

3mjly5 W. P. FETRIDGE & Co., Franklin Square, New-York.

Phrenology.—Examinations with charts, and written descriptions of character given daily by PROF. FOWLER, at the Phrenological Cabinet, Broadway, two blocks above the Park. Private rooms for gentlemen and ladies. 4t12jly

Now Ready.

REYNOLD'S POLITICAL MAP

OF

THE UNITED STATES.

Size 29 by 34 inches. Showing at a glance the whole country from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast.

Colored so as to desigdate the free and the slave states; also the vast territory which lies open to freedom or slavery.

It also presents a vast amount of statistical matter, showing the advantage of Freedom over Slavery, together with portraits of Freemont and Dayton.

Price in sheet form.....25 cents.
Price in pocket form.....50 cents.

Every person interested in the politics of our country, should possess a copy. Copies sent post-paid on receipt of price.

Address, Wm. C. REYNOLDS, Publisher, No. 195 Broadway, New-York.

N. B. Agents wanted to sell this map. 2t19jly

SARAH McFADDEN,

Maritime and National Flag Manufacturer,

198 Hudson street, four doors below Canal street, New-York.

Mrs. McFadden justly boasts of having made up for Thomas Francis Meagher, the Irish tri-color flag which he presented to the Confederate Club Men of '48, resident in New-York: also the beautiful U. S. Flag recently presented by Mr. William Kinsella to the Montgomery Guard of Bridgeport.

y21june

NEW-YORK CATHOLIC LIBRARY ASSOCIATION.

"The objects of the Association are, 1st. The dissemination of Catholic and useful knowledge. 2d. To forward the moral and intellectual advancement of its members. 3d. To create among its members a spirit of harmony and good feeling, that will be conducive alike to their interest and pleasure. These to be attained by establishing a Library and Reading Room, and by Readings and Lectures when practicable."

Contributions of either books or money received at the office, No. 107 Nassau street.

M. T. COZANS, President.
JOSEPH McGUIRE, Vice-President.

CORRESPONDING SECRETARY, D. Quinn.
RECORDING SECRETARY, James Fabb.
TREASURER, John Russell.
LIBRARIAN, T. S. Haughey.
DIRECTORS, R. T. Kelly, J. J. Mullen, M. B. Lynch, L. T. Cozans, P. J. McGuire.

m3jun14

HERRING'S

PATENT CHAMPION FIRE AND BURGLAR PROOF SAFES.

THE great interest manifested by the public to procure more perfect security from Fire for valuable papers, such as BONDS, MORTGAGES, DEEDS, NOTES, and BOOKS OF ACCOUNT than the ordinary SAFES heretofore in use had afforded, induced the subscribers to devote a large portion of time and attention during the past fourteen years in making improvements and discoveries for this object, and they now beg leave to assure their numerous friends and the public generally that their efforts have been crowned with complete success, and now offer the "IMPROVED HERRING'S PATENT WORLD'S FAIR PREMIUM FIRE-PROOF SAFE," as the

CHAMPION SAFE OF THE WORLD!

Having been awarded Medals at both the

World's Fair, London, 1851, and in New-York, 1853,

As superior to all others. It is now undoubtedly entitled to that appellation, and, secured with HALL'S PATENT POWDER-PROOF LOCKS, which also was awarded MEDALS as above), forms the most perfect Fire and Burglar Proof Safes ever offered to the public.

The subscribers also manufacture all kinds of Boiler and Chilled Iron Bank Chests and Vaults, Vault Doors, and Money Boxes or Chests, for Brokers, Jewelers, and Private Families, for Plate, Diamonds, and other Valuables, and are also Patentees (by purchase) and Manufacturers of

JONES' PATENT PERMUTATION BANK LOCK.

SILAS C. HERRING & CO., Patentees,
GREEN BLOCK, Nos. 135, 137 and 138 Water street, New-York. my10 tf

Important to the Ladies.

GLENFIELD PATENT STARCH.

FOR the dressing of Laces and all descriptions of fine goods.
This celebrated starch is unrivalled.
ONE TRIAL WILL CONVINCE.
For sale by all respectable druggists and grocers.

3m28ju ROBERT HOSIE, 8 Pine Street, New-York, Sole Agent for the United States.

DRILL ROOM GUIDE.

NINTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

TROOP A, (Irish Dragoons,) meet at the "Grape Vine Cottage," 45 Second Avenue, between Second and Third streets, on every Monday evening.
JAMES MURPHY, Capt.

Company B, (Fitzgerald Guard) drill each Monday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." THOS. MAGUIRE, Capt.

Company D, (Guyon Cadets) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." THOS. MURPHY, Capt.

Company I, (Jackson Guard) drill each Thursday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." W. O. MURPHY, Capt.

Company H, (Erina Guard) drill Thursday Evening at "Military Hall." R. CODDINGTON, Capt.

Company —, (Irish Grenadiers) drill each Thursday Evening at 22 White street. FELIX DUFFY, Capt.

Company C, (Mitchel Guard,) drill each Wednesday Evening at the "Eagle Rooms." —— KEARNS, Capt.

Company J, (Carroll Guard,) drill each —— evening, at —— GALLAGHER, Capt.

TENTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company —, (Emmet Guard) drill each Thursday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." JOHN KENNEDY, Capt.

ELEVENTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company E, (Montgomery Guard) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." THOS. S. MURPHY, Capt.

FOURTEENTH REGIMENT, N. Y. S. M.

Company E, (Carroll Guard,) drill each Tuesday Evening, at the "Adelphi," Brooklyn. GEO. B. MAGRATH, Capt.

FIFTH REGIMENT N. J. S. M.

Company C, (O'Brien Columbia Rifles,) drill on the 1st and 3d Tuesdays in each month at their Armory, "Willow Hall," Orange, N. J.
OWEN MURPHY, Captain.

SIXTY NINTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Troop A, (Irish Dragoons,) drill each Thursday Evening at "Montgomery Hall." Lieut. B. O'CONNOR, Com'dt.

Company C, (—— ——,) drill each Wednesday Evening at the "Eagle Rooms." Lieut. M. KEATING, Com'dt.

Company D, (Irish Rifles) drill each Monday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." JAMES QUINLAN, Capt.

Company E, (Fag a Bealac Guard) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." GILBERT RIORDAN, Capt.

Company F, (Shields' Guard,) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Milleman's Hall," 7th avenue, corner of 26th street. JOHN R. MURPHY, Capt.

Company G, (Mechanic's Guard) drill each Thursday Evening at the "Eagle Rooms." JOHN B. MADDEN, Capt.

Company I, (Irish Fuseleers,) drill each Monday Evening at 42 Prince street. M. CORCORAN, Capt.

Company K, (Brian Boroihme Guard) drill each Monday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." JAMES HUSTON, Capt.

Engineer Corps, (Emmet Life Guard) drill each Monday Evening at "Worth's Military Head Quarters," 22 White st. T. LYNCH, Capt.

70th REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company D, (Napper Tandy Light Artillery) drill each Thursday Evening at Brooklyn City Armory. WM. H. HOGAN, Capt.

SEVENTY FIFTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company A, (State Rifles) drill each Wednesday Evening at cor. of 11th street and 1st Avenue. Lieut. JAS. KELLY, Com'dt.

Company B, (Irish National Guard) drill each Friday Evening at "Centre Market Rooms." JOHN LANE, Capt.

Company C, (Young Ireland Rifles) drill each Friday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." JOHN BURKE, Capt.

Company D, (Wolf Tone Volunteers,) drill each Tuesday Evening, at the "Eagle Rooms." JOHN NUGENT, Capt.

Company E, (T. F. Meagher Rifles) drill each —— at cor. of 11th street and 1st Avenue. J. B. DONNELLY, Capt.

Company F, (Mich'l. Doheny Rifles) drill each —— at ——. J. F. MAGUIRE, Capt.

Company G. (Emmet Rifles) drill each —— at ——. JOHN BEGG, Capt.

INDEPENDENT COMPANIES.

Company —, (O'Mahony Guard, E. M. A.,) drill each Tuesday Evening at "North America Rooms," cor. of Bayard and Bowery. JAMES CAVANAGH, Capt.

Company —, (Sons of '98,) drill each Friday Evening at the corner of 11th street and 1st Avenue, N. Y. M. H. SMITH, Capt.

Company —, (Wolfe Tone Guard,) drill each alternate Monday Evening at the "Second Ward Hotel," cor. of York and Pearl streets, Brooklyn. JOHN J. CLANCY, Com'dt.

Company —, (Irish American Grenadiers,) drill the first and third Thursday of each month at "Montgomery Hall," 76 Prince street, N. Y. MICHAEL DOYLE, Capt.

Company —, (Montgomery Guard,) drill each Monday evening, at Bridgeport, Conn. MICHAEL O'CONNELL, Capt.

Company —, (Republican Guard) drill every Friday Evening, at "Worth's Military Headquarters," 22 White street. W. H. LYONS, Capt.

Company —, (Keystone Rifles,) drill every Monday evening, in Port Carbon, Pa. MATTHEW BYRNES, Captain.

TWENTY-FOURTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company —, (Columbian Guard), drill each Tuesday evening, at Washington Hall, Troy, N. Y. RICHARD S. QUINN, Captain.

TWENTY-FIFTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company —, (Emmet Guard,) drill each Wednesday Evening at Albany, N. Y. P. H. GRIFFIN, Capt.

SECOND REGIMENT—HUDSON BRIGADE.

Company —, (Montgomery Guard,) drill each week at the "Armory," Grand street, Jersey City. —— FARRELL, Capt.

SECOND REGIMENT PA. VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Hibernian Greens,) drill each Thursday Evening at 83 South Fifth street, Philadelphia. P. O'KEAN, Capt.

Company —, (Meagher Guard,) drill each Tuesday Evening at 104 Market street, Philadelphia. Lieut. PATRICK O'CONNOR, Com'dt.

Company —, (Emmet Guard,) drill each Friday Evening at "Ewen Hall," Hawley, Pa. M. W. MORRISS, Capt.

FIRST REGIMENT ME. VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Grattan Guard,) drill each Thursday Evening in Bangor, Me. JOHN CARROLL, Capt.

SIXTIETH REGIMENT ILL. S. M.

Company —, (Shields Guard,) drill each Thursday Evening in Chicago, Ill. CHAS. E. MOORE, Capt.

FIRST REGIMENT VA. VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Montgomery Guard,) drill each Monday and Friday Evenings in Richmond. P. S. MOORE, Capt.

SIXTEENTH REGIMENT S. C. S. M.

Company —, (Meagher Guard,) drill the second Thursday of each month in Charleston. GEO. SERGEANT, Capt.

SEVENTEENTH REGIMENT S. C. S. M.

Company —, (Irish Volunteers,) drill once a month in Charleston, S. C. EDWARD MAGRATH, Capt.

—— REGIMENT GEORGIA VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Irish Volunteers,) drill each —— evening, in the city of Augusta. EDWARD J. WALKER, Capt.

FIRST REGIMENT ST. LOUIS LEGION, MO.

Company—(St. Louis Washington Guard) drill each Tuesday evening, in the city of St. Louis, Mo. D. M. FROST, Capt.

FIRST WASHINGTON BATTALION OHIO S. M.

Company A, (Shields Guard), drill on each Thursday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati. DENNIS KAVANAGH, Captain.

Company B, (Sarsfield Guard), drill on each Monday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati. JOHN LEVY, Capt.

Company C, (Republican's Guard,) drill on each Saturday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati. JOHN ELITCH, Capt.

Company D, (Montgomery Light Artillery,) drill on each Wednesday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati. THOS. TIERNAN, Capt.

Company E, (Queen City Cadets, Rifles,) drill on each Tuesday and Friday evenings, at the "Cadets Armory," Pomeroy's Building, Third street, Cincinnati. JOSEPH H. BURKE, Capt.

N. B.—Commandants of Irish-American Military Companies throughout the United States, are respectfully tendered a place in the above "Directory," and requested to send such information as will enable us to represent them in it.

Continental Military Establishment.

J. PARKS,

195 FULTON, BELOW DUTCH, N.Y.

Hats, Caps, Ornaments, &c., made to order. 3m28ju

Special Notices.

If you wish a Portrait, call at Brady's Gallery, 359 Broadway. THE AMBROTYPE.—Some members of the daguerrean fraternity have represented the Ambrotype—the latest and best improvement in the art—as unworthy of public confidence. Mr. BRADY, the introducer of the Ambrotype in New-York, has found in them a combination of rare qualities, never approached by any other style of camera pictures. 3m28ju

Photographs and Ambrotypes.—50 Franklin street, New-York. Persons wishing to have a true life-like Photograph or Ambrotype taken, will do well to call at this place; the pictures there made are finished in the best style, and no trouble or pains will be spared to suit the most delicate taste.

The prices will be lower than in any other establishment in town, the proprietor not having the expenses of artists to pay for the coloring of the pictures, or salaries of operators, the work being done by the proprietor himself.

Persons having black plain photographs, and wishing to have them colored or re-touched in China Ink, can have it done at low prices. The proprietor will also re-touch for any establishment in the city or country, that will ask for it, and those he has been coloring for can have their work done at the same rates and prices.

Instructions will be given to pupils in Photograph and Ambrotype. Good collodion for sale, and all kinds of chemicals for the business prepared to order. (3m12jly) A. Cosmes.

Mayor's Office, New-York, June 16, 1856.

Notice to Owners of Dogs.—Notice is hereby given that on and after Wednesday, June 25th inst., the ordinance respecting dogs found running loose or at large in any street south of Forty-second street, without being muzzled, will be strictly enforced. The sum of fifty cents will be paid for every dog brought alive to the Pound, on the corner of First Avenue and Thirty-first street, which shall have been found in the streets, running loose or at large without being properly muzzled. on presentation of the certificate of the pound-keeper to the Chief of Police at his office in the Park. Owners of dogs may reclaim them at the Pound between sunrise and sunset on the day on which they are received, on payment of expenses.

FERNANDO WOOD, Mayor.

Raspberries, Cherries, Green Peas—Or any other fruit or vegetable, may be preserved in a perfectly fresh state, by the use of SPRATT'S PATENT SELF-SEALING CANS. Full directions for preserving all kinds of fruits, and vegetables accompany the Cans. Price for quarts, $2 50 per dozen; half-gallon, $3 50. N. B.—All orders, by post or otherwise, promptly delivered free of expense, to any part of the City or Brooklyn.

WELLS & PROVOST, Proprietors,
jy12 2t No. 321 Pearl street, near Franklin square.

MAYOR'S OFFICE, NEW-YORK, May 23, 1856.

NOTICE is hereby given, that the Complaint Book, opened at this office on the 1st of January, 1855, is still open for the reception of complaints of municipal abuses of all kinds. So far as the Mayor has the power, he will continue to exercise it for the abatement of any such evils, when brought to his attention through the Complaint Book, or otherwise. The Mayor invites all persons to take this method of reporting to him all violations of corporation ordinances, nuisances, or dereliction of duty upon the part of the officers of the Corporation, and he will, as heretofore, use all the legal means at his command to see the laws enforced, and the interests of the public protected. By order of the Mayor. ALEXANDER MING, Chief Clerk.

OFFICE OF RECEIVER OF TAXES, No. 32 Chambers street, New Court house

To avoid the risks that must inevitably occur from the crowd of Tax Payers who put off to the latest day the payment of their taxes, I have determined to adopt the following rule, which will be rigidly adhered to during my term of office. I shall receive no money after 2 o'clock p. m. Every officer in this department is STRICTLY PROHIBITED from receiving ENVELOPES containing money or checks for the payment of Taxes. By order, 3mjly5 HENRY H. HOWARD, Receiver.

New-York, June 28, 1856.

Ladies going in the Country, wishing their supply of Shoes, can find Linen Gaiters at 12s. Slippers, Ties, Buskins and Toilet Slippers, from 6s. to 10s.: India Rubbers, &c., with Boys', Misses', and Children's Boots and Shoes, of all kinds and prices, at 4t19jly J. B. MILLER & CO'S, No. 134 Canal St.

Information wanted of Patrick Ryan, late of Nenagh, in the county of Tipperary, Ireland, aged about 30 years, farmer, who left Limerick in the month of May, 1851, and who when last heard from was in Orange county, N. Y., but is now supposed to be living in Vandalia, Fayette county, Indiana. Any information of his whereabouts sent to the office of the Commissioners of Emigration, New-York, will be thankfully received by his wife. jly19

Notice.—New-York and Liverpool U. S. M. S. S. Co., 56 Wall street.—New-York, May 27th, 1856.—The rate of freight by the steamers of this line from Liverpool to New-York, is reduced to four pounds per ton measurement until further notice. jly19tf E. K. COLLINS.

Sewing Machine Depot.—Sewing Machines of all kinds sold, improved and repaired, on reasonable terms, in the most substantial manner. Superior Machine Oils for sale. A large assortment of Machine Silk Twist and Needles for sale at reduces prices.

my 24, 3 mos. F. S COATES & Co., 345 Broadway, New-York.

REMOVAL.

McConville & Murphy, Importers of Wide Silks

Shawls, Vestings, and Linen Goods, have REMOVED to No. 36 LIBERTY STREET, where all orders will be punctually attended to. tf

Wanted.—Good nands to embroider on linen. Apply at GENIN'S Bazaar (under St. Nicholas Hotel,) 513 Broadway. my17 3m

Hotels.

STEVENS HOUSE.

(LATE DELMONICO'S HOTEL.

21, 23, 25, & 27 Broadway, New-York.

THE undersigned avails himself of this opportunity of informing his friends and the public that he has leased the above named house for a term of years, and has made extensive alterations and repairs, and omitted nothing that will tend to the accomodations or comfort of guests. The house having been newly furnished throughout in the most thorough and modern style, with a view to convenience and comfort, and as it will be conducted on the European plan, and with an experienced caterer, and thorough cooks, he hopes to give satisfaction to those who favor him with their patronage which has never failed while in other Hotels in this city.

Catholic families and clergymen visiting New-York will find in the arrangements of this spacious establishment, elegance, convenience, and comfort, at moderate charges. JOHN O'GRADY, JR.,

3m5jly Formerly of Judson's Hotel and the Brandreth House.

NEW HOTEL.

LAFARGE HOUSE,

Broadway, New-York.

This new and beautiful First-class Hotel, is now open for the reception of guests. The location is the most pleasant part of Broadway, opposite Bond street, and in the immediate vicinity of the most fashionable places of amusement. The rooms are large and airy, and so arranged that they may be connected in suites for families, or used separately for single seasons. Th patronage of the public is respectfully solicited.

3m19jly STONE & BURROUGHS, Proprietors.

JAMES McPYKE,

James McPyke respectfully informs his friends and the public that he has leased for a term of years the spacious and elegant premises 90 Prince street, three doors west of Broadway, which he will open for the reception of his old patrons, friends, and those who will honor him with their patronage on the 4th inst. The house has been newly painted and furnished in a commodious manner, for the comfort of his guests. His bar will contain the choicest and most approved brands of liquor, and his larder will always be stocked with the finest luxuries and delicacies of the season. Rooms for private parties. Families supplied with meals at all hours. 4t12jly

Business Directory.

PIANOS, MELODEONS AND MUSIC

The Cash system adopted!—Prices greatly reduced.

HORACE WATERS,

No. 333 Broadway, N. Y.,

AGENT FOR THE BEST BOSTON AND NEW-YORK INSTRUMENTS.

The largest assortment of

Pianos, Melodeons, Musical Instruments,

AND

MUSICAL MERCHANDISE,

of all kinds, in the United States, Pianos from ten different Manufactories, comprising those of every variety of style, from the plain, neat and subtsantial 6¼ octaves, in Walnut or Rosewood Cases, from $150 to $200, to those of the most elegant finish up to $1000. No house in the Union can compete with the above in the number, variety, and celebrity of its instruments, nor in the extremely low prices at which they are sold.

Horace Waters' Modern Improved Pianos,

WITH OR WITHOUT IRON FRAMES.

possessing in their improvements of over-strings and action, a length of scale power, and compass of tone equal to the Grand Piano, united with the beauty and durability of structure of the square Piano. They are justly pronounced by the Press and by the first Musical Masters to be equal to those of any other manufacturer. They are built of the best and most thoroughly seasoned material, and guaranteed to stand the action of every climate.

Each Instrument guaranteed to give satisfaction, or purchase money refunded. Second-hand Pianos at great bargains, constantly in store; price from $30 to $140.

Horace Waters' Melodeons,

SUPERIOR INSTRUMENTS IN TONE, TOUCH AND DURABILITY OF MAKE.

(Tuned the equal temperament.) Melodeons of all other styles and makes. Price, $45, $60, $75, $100, $125, $140; double Reeds, $150; double Reeds and two banks of Keys, $200. Less a liberal discount. Clergymen and Churches, an extra discount.

Martin's Guitars, Brown's Harps, Flutes, Flutinas, Accordeons, Violins, and Musical Instruments,

OF ALL KINDS, AT LOWER PRICES THAN EVER BEFORE OFFERED TO THE PUBLIC.

A large discount to Teachers and Schools. The trade supplied on the most liberal terms.

MUSIC.

One of the largest and best selected catalogues of Music now published, comprising many of the choice and most popular airs of the day, and will be sold at one-third off from the regular prices.

Music sent by mail to all parts of the country, post paid. Particular and personal attention paid to all orders received by mail. Satisfaction guaranteed in every instance. Pianos and Melodeons for rent, and rent allowed on purchase. Pianos and Melodeons for sale on monthly payments. Second-hand Pianos taken in exchange for new. General and select Catalogues and Schedule of prices forwarded to all parts of the country by mail.

☞ Great inducements offered to agents in all parts of the country, to sell the Horace Waters' Pianos, Melodeons, and Catalogue of Music.

PIANOS AND MUSIC.—We learn that Horace Waters, of 333 Broadway, N. Y., agent for the sale of many of the most celebrated makers of Pianos and Melodeons, is offering them at prices which we advise all who desire to purchase to avail themselves of. He is also selling his large and well-known Catalogue of Music at one-third off from the regular prices, and will forward the same free of postage. His offers to the trade, teachers and schools, are of the most favorable character, all of which he will be able to fill to the letter, for having wisely adopted the cash system. The Horace Waters' Pianos are known as among the very best. We are enabled to speak of those instruments with some degree of confidence, from personal knowledge of their excellent tone and durabe quality.—N. Y. Evangelist. ap19tf

I. E. Tate's Pannus Corrium Boot and Shoe store, for tender feet. A large stock of Boots, Shoes and Gaiters always on hand, in great variety, and made to order at the shortest notice, for Gentlemen, Boys and Youths—wholesale and retail, at the lowest Cash prices. Particular attention is requested to the Pannus Corrium or Leather Cloth Boots and Shoes, for those troubled with corns, bunions or tenderness of the feet. Its qualities for summer boots or shoes, surpass anything ever got up in this country for real comfort, as it keeps the feet perfectly cool, and at the same time is susceptible of the finest polish; for a dress boot more so than any French calfskin, with one half the labor. ISAAC E. TATE.

my 24, 3 mos. 427 Broadway New-York.

Massachusetts Advertisements.

IRISH EMIGRANT SOCIETY,

Office, corner of South and Beach Streets, Boston.

THE office of this Society is open from 7 A. M., to 6 P. M., where Emigrants can apply to obtain situations for which they are fitted. Farmers, Mechanics, and others in want of labor, will apply at the office.

Orders from employers in the country, stating the services required, the wages given, and the cheapest mode of conveyance, and giving respectable reference, will meet with prompt attention.

The Society will be thankful for all circumstantial and early information of any fraud, imposition or outrage committed on emigrants, and will endeavor speedily to apply a remedy.

MARTIN GRIFFIN, ARTHUR M'AVOY, } Vice Presidents.

NICHOLAS J. BEAN, Cor. Secretary.
JAMES FERGUSON, Rec. Secretary.
WILLIAM HICKEY, Treasurer.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

John Hughes, William Keating, Daniel O'Rourke, Thomas Hughes, Owen Lappan, J. Ryder, | P. Holly, Christopher Plunkett, Jeremiah Ford, Hugh Duffy, M. Lennon, Charlestown, James O'Brien, do., Patrick C. Boyle, Roxbury.

MICHAEL HUGHES, Agent.

THE GREAT RUSSIAN REMEDY.

Pro Bono Publico.

"EVERY MOTHER SHOULD HAVE A BOX IN THE HOUSE HANDY IN CASE OF ACCIDENTS TO THE CHILDREN."

REDDING'S RUSSIAN SALVE. It is a Boston remedy of thirty years' standing, and is recommended by physicians. It is a sure and speedy cure for Burns, Piles, Boils, Corns, Felons, Chilblains, and old Sores of every kind.

For Fever Sores, Ulcers, Itch, Scald Head, Nettle Rash, Bunions, Sore Nipples, (recommended by nurses); Whitlows, Sties, Festers, Flea Bites, Spider Stings, Frozen Limbs, Salt Rheum, Scurvy, Sore and Cracked Lips, Sore Nose, Warts and Flesh Wounds, it is a most valuable remedy and cure, which can be testified to by thousands who have used it in the city of Boston and vicinity for the last thirty years.

In no instance will this Salve do an injury, or interfere with a physician's prescriptions. It is made from the purest materials, from a recipe brought from Russia, of articles growing in that country, and the proprietors have letters from all classes, clergymen, physicians, sea captains, nurses, and others who have used it themselves and recommend it to others.

REDDING'S RUSSIAN SALVE is put in large tin boxes, stamped on the cover with the picture of a horse and a disabled soldier, which picture is also engraved on the wrapper. PRICE, 25 Cents a Box. Sold at all the stores in town or country, or may be ordered of any wholesale druggist.

ap19tf Redding & Co., Proprietors, No. 8 State st., Boston.

WEEMAN'S IRON RAILING MANUFACTORY.

No. 26 Merrimac street, Boston, Mass.

Where he has been for the past thirty years.

ALL persons in want of IRON FENCES, suitable for cemetery, house, garden, Balustrades, &c., can, by calling on the subscriber, purchase a better fence at a lower price, than at any other establishment in the state, as he makes it his entire business.

jun14m6 EBENEZER WEEMAM.

B. S. TREANOR,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,

15 MASSACHUSETTS BLOCK, COURT SQUARE, BOSTON.

Particular attention paid to Conveyancing, and the examination of titles to Real Estate.

Medical.

THE CAUSE OF CONSUMPTION.

BRONCHITIS.—WHAT PRODUCES BRONCHITIS?

FIRST STAGE OF DISEASE.

COSTIVENESS is the first link that connects disease in the System. It creates, induces, feeds and supports Bronchitis; and is slightly or indifferently treated, as though it was of no serious tendency: nevertheless, it has laid the fonndation of that destroying disease, without the knowledge of the sufferers, undermining and sapping the very vitals of their constitutions.

Among the numerous class of diseases which afflict man, there is none more silent or treacherous in its approaches or more certain to triumph over its slowly consuming victim, than that formidable and insidious leveller of humanity—Bronchitis, which is produced by catching cold, through a neglect of regulating the state of the bowels when arriving to adult age. It seldom excites attention or alarm in the mind of any person, until it has sown the seed of disease and suffering in the human system, by checking the circulation of the blood; and it is to this source alone that we attribute the awful mortality of Consumption.

The following is a simple but correct illustration, namely:—If the culverts and sewers of the city were choked or clogged up, accidentally or otherwise, what would be the result? An overflow of accumulated filth and slush on the surface of the earth in its neighborhood, until it fills every hole, corner and crevice. This is quite similar to the human body, when the channel or sewer of life, as I may term it, which is the bowels, is checked or confined through constipation or some unnatural obstruction, which prevents the blood from circulating through the general system.

What, then, is the consequence? An accumulation of diseased matter and bile. Where will this bile and poisonous substance go to when it is prevented from taking its natural exit, through the bowels? It must surge itself back again into the blood, to be infused through the entire frame by the agency of the blood, bringing in its passage disease and suffering, and exhibiting itself by pain, nervous sensations and irritation all over the body—producing a bad feeling at the stomach, sourness of the food, a rush of blood to the head, catarrh, bronchitis, a short dry cough, dizziness, pain in the shoulders, and through or under the shonlder blades, cold feet, a peevish and irritable temper, annoyed by this hacking cough, and then gradually begins the expectorating from the throat of a lightish phlegm, resembling boiled starch or tough jelly of various colors, from a light to a darkish substance, and hawked up like a string.

SECOND STAGE.

From this period the patient is aware of some unusual and disagreeable feeling, though he seldom takes the hint till it goes from bad to worse. Catching cold from the slightest exposure, which he cannot avoid in consequence of the blood being in a diseased and corrupt condition for a long time previous to the appearance of those troublous symptoms, through the impure state of the blood, that at every breath the patient draws he inhales a similar quantity of fresh air by the nostrils and mouth, which keeps the tickling that exists in the throat and bronchial tubes in a ferment of irritation—this is the reason why some people complain of catching cold, even when confined to their room. Hence the sufferer is hacking, hawking, or expectorating a little at a time, with the impression that there is something in his throat that wants to come out; and which he desires to get out. There is a frequent desire for heavy sighing, with a dryness of the nostrils, which inclines the patient to pick or scratch them; sleepy, drowsy, dull, and heavy loss of appetite, and confused memory; a stuffing, tightness, and oppression of the chest, with a rawness and soreness of the gullet of the throat. This is caused by the silent enemy that has lurked in the system for months, and even years, and has at last aroused your fears, and well it might; for out of one hundred persons who die of Consumption ninety-nine are owing to disease of the throat alone; though simply called Bronchitis; and wretchedly treated by this self-pretended and dignified class of sheepskin physicians termed M. D.'s, who have proved a curse to the human family. They treat their patient on the following abusive principle, by cutting the tonsols and palate from the throat, as you might cut the gills out of a fish—next comes the solution or wash of nitrate of silver or caustic, and the whalebone swab, to wash and burn away the disease that has occupied the throat. Then comes the application of blister, and Croton oil externally to the throat and neck, to draw out the inflammation, as the physicians suppose (what blind philosophy.) Then comes the quack sheet of their MATERIA MEDICA—Calomel, Antimony, Morphine and Opium, to salivate and lull the feelings of the pafient, which adds to the disease and increases the suffering, by giving the disease an opporiunity of triumphing over nature. What a delusive idea to think the above treatment would be available in having recourse to those debilitating and irritating remedies of cutting, burning, blistering, purging and starving, which is of itself sufficient to lower and reduce the constitution of an ox.

THE THIRD STAGE

Confirms the above remarks. While undergoing this torturing treatment, the constitution is gradually failing and giving away, in giving rise to more alarming symptoms, evidently preparing its victim for the shroud, while the physician and friends fail to see the cause until those confirmed symptoms of consumption set in, but foolishly assign the cause to some other besides the genuine one, till the disease has reached its meridian, with a complication of fresh symptoms, breathing short and hurried, cough frequent, with an accumulation of corrupted matter, sometimes streaked with blood; profuse night sweats, emaciation and debility; cold chills in the forenoon, with a burning fever after; flesh soft and flabby, the limbs scarcely able to support the body; a susceptibility of catching cold on the least exposure, attended with a hoarseness and loss of voice, with a very heavy expectoration in the forenoon; flying pains in the chest, sides and shoulders, with a severe fit of coughing in the morning, or awaking from sleep. The painful crisis is fast approaching, with a swelling and puffing of the feet and ankles, and frequent attacks of diarrhœa. In females, the symptoms are more distressing at an earlier period than in the male, with a weakness in the back and loins, a sinking and exhausted feeling at the stomach, nervous and excitable, with gradual and frequent interruptions of the monthly flow, and as the disease progresses, a total or final cessation of it, with the harbinger of a broken down constitution' which is a discharge of whites, a symptom that proves very debilitating and irritating to females.

All the above symptoms and sufferings are the fruits of costiveness at an early period, accruing to the sufferer through neglect of keeping the bowels in gentle operation, which would circulate the blood, and prove as ventilation to the general system, from the age of 18 to 26, when this disease creeps on and grows on, until every organ in the body is totally disorganized.

My long experience and observations, and my unprecedented success in treating consumption, inclines me to devote the remainder of my life to the cause of suffering humanity. I have cured more consumptive patients in the last ten years than any other doctor in the world in that time, and not by steam, smoke or vapor, nor by smelling medicine through an India rubber or glass tube, but through the selection I make from the forest and verdant meadows. I can always determine on examination whether I can be successful or not, and I speak accordingly. I have made it a rule to treat no disease longer than three weeks. If I cannot check the fatal progress of the disease in that time, I give up the patient as lost, and lead the sufferer to no further expense.

☞ In compliance with the repeated solicitations of consumptive patients living in remote parts of the country, I have opened an hospital at No. 173 Bowery, for the exclusive treatment of those laboring under any species of the above disease, where I can bestow on them the unremitted attention which the seriousness of their cases require; where I can be able to regulate their diet and regimen according to circumstances. Three weeks under the supervision of my especial care is worth four months at a distance.

All persons desirous of medical information can obtain it by enclosing one dollar, when all information and communication will be forwarded on receipt.

D. Durkin, Chronic and Consumptive Doctor,

my31 No. 173 Bowery, New-York.

DR. B. F. ADAMS,

SURGEON DENTIST, (formerly of Barclay street,) feeling grateful for the patronage so liberally bestowed upon him for the last fourteen years, respectfully informs his friends and the public, that he has taken an elegant suite of rooms, at

NO. 122 CHAMBERS STREET,

(near the Sixth and Eighth Avenue Railroads,) where he may always be found, ready to perform all operations pertaining to his profession, in a manner unsurpassed, and on the most reasonable terms. Whole or part sets of incorruptible teeth inserted without pain, on gold plate or gutta percha, excelling nature in beauty and durability. No impure gold or dangerous amalgams used. Irregularities in children's teeth prevented, or of adults remedied. Cleansing, extracting, &c. &c., all at reduced prices. Sets of teeth inserted on Silver or Gutta Percha, for six shillings each. Teeth examined, and advice given free of charge. Please call.

8m7jun B. F. ADAMS, 122 Chambers street, New-York.

DR. J. VOORHIES,

MEDICAL ELECTRICIAN,

NO. 69 SANDS STREET,

Brooklyn.

Office hours from 9 A. M. to 4 P. M.

N. B. All chronic or nervous diseases cured by Electricity in some form. Electro Medicated Vapor Baths ready for operation. Dropsy can be cured by this treatment. Consultations free. m8jun14

WRITING INKS.

WE ask the attention of all who wish imperishable records,—a matter of great importance to State, County and Town Offices, Banks, and others, to Dr. Chilton's test of the prominent Inks in use, made with a view to show their different degrees of permanence by exposure. Engraved facsimiles of the test can be seen at our office.

Thaddeus Davids & Co.,

ap19 6m Manufacturing Stationers, 26 Cliff street.

Medical.

"Eye and Ear."—DOCTOR HENDERSON, Oculist and Aurist, 419 Broadway, corner of Canal street, treats all diseases of the eye and ear, without cupping, leeching, blistering or the use of calomel. Within the past two years upwards of thirty cases of blindness from inflamation have been restored to sight, to whom reference can be given, (hundreds of which can be seen in my circular,) by inclosing three postage stamps. Electro-chemical Medicated Vapor and Sulphur, hot and cold water BATHS. Office hours 9 A. M. to 5 P. M. Sundays and evenings by appointment. 419 Broadway, corner of Canal st., New-York. my17 3m

ARTIFICIAL EYES inserted.

H. G. LUTHER,

SURGICAL AND MECHANICAL DENTIST,

No. 698 BROADWAY, Second House above Fourth st.

HAVING enjoyed an extensive practice during the last twelve years, feels confident of his ability to give perfect satisfaction to all who may honor him with their preference. He is prepared to perform all operations connected with his profession, in the most faithful manner, and in strict accordance with scientific principles, embracing all the recent improvements of the day.

References of the most respectable character given if desired. Patronage respectfully solicited.

☞ N. B. Teeth extracted without pain. my17 3m

Dr. J. J. McGowan, Physician and Surgeon, Graduate of Harvard University, Fellow of the Massachusetts and Rhode Island Medical Societies, etc., has removed to No. 69 Canal street, New-York, a few doors from Broadway, where he will attend to calls in every branch of the medical profession. Dr. McG. will devote particular attention to chronic diseases, and those of women and children. m10 1t

New School of Medicine and Pharmacy. The last Unfolding of the ART of Healing. My daily practice proves that I CURE CONSUMPTION, in all its varied forms and most advanced states, as readily as any other disease. Therefore I desire to treat all Consumptives, but particularly those who have tried all other physicians without relief. Mrs. M. J. MARIN, M.D., No. 37. Lafayette place, N. Y. (First street east of Broadway, between 4th and 8th sts.) Office hours: from 10 A. M. to 1 P. M., exclusively for Ladies; and from 2 to 5 P. M., for Gentlemen, Wednesdays excepted. All other hours by appointment. my31 3m

THE GREATEST WONDER OF THE AGE!

A REMEDY WHICH CURES IN FIVE MINUTES.—M. LEROUX'S FRENCH CHOLERA COGNAC BITTERS.—This wonderful and scientific compound is recommended by the most eminent and learned physicians of all Europe and America, and enjoys the best reputation of anything similar ever offered. It is without doubt the best, most efficient and generally acknowledged remedy against Cholera, dysentery, diarrhœa, and complaints of the stomach in general. The numerous patients who have tried it according to directions, have invariably found relief in a very short time, and the best proof of it is, that since this standard remedy was introducee in the armies of the allies in the Crimea, the mortality of the soldiers from Cholera and similar diseases was reduced by over 75 per cent.; in consideration of which, the inventor was presented by the French and English governments with a gold medal, bearing the inscription, "Hail! M. LEROUX, the great Chemist and inventor, by whose knowledge our armies are preserved from Cholera."

This invaluable preparation is also a remedy for biliousness, indigestion, weakness, and general derangement of the stomach. Upon being taken, it creates appetite, and prevents the heaviness attendant upon eating, by persons who are dyspeptic.

In this city, also, this remedy has been tried with the most undoubted success, and the undersigned can produce the best testimonials of our most celebrated physicians, as to its immediate and complete success, which he will be happy at any time to show to any that may wish to see them. S. STEINFELD, sole agent for the United States, No. 70 Nassau street, corner of John.

P. S.—Those not having money to pay, may call at my place from 3 to 5 P. M. and receive this remedy gratis. my17 3m

TO NERVOUS SUFFERERS.

A Retired Clergyman, restored to health in a few days, after many years of great nervous suffering, is anxious to make known the means of cure. Will send (free) the prescriptions used. Direct to

Rev. JOHN M. DAGNALL,

my10 3m No. 59 Fulton street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Best Hair Dye.—DR. O. M. BALLARD'S new article received the highest premium at the World's Fair and American Institute, where it was examined by the distinguished Chemists, Dr. Chilton, and Prof. John Torrey, and pronounced the best. For sale by the best Druggists. Principal office and store, 498 Broadway, New-York. my17 3m

The undersigned announces to the legitimate faculty that he has opened a store for the dispensing of pure medicines, chemicals, &c. Having obtained a knowledge of the profession in the best schools in the world, during twelve years, he will be able to compound prescriptions precisely as they are ordered. JOHN. C. GILES, Apothecary, 21ju3m 285 Bleecker, two doors above Barrow.

Reed's Celebrated London Cordial Gin, having gained much popularity in this country, being distilled the same as that in London, as he was formerly a distiller of the same kind of Gin in England, under the EXCISE LAWS.

This article is used in every hospital in and out of England's great metropolis. Its medicinal properties are invaluable.

☞ This Gin is not an imitation or a mixture of raw materials, of which much is sold in this city, under the name of London Cordial Gin, but a genuine and pure article, equal to any imported.

W. R. takes the opportunity of thanking the public for their liberal support, support, and begs a continuance of the same.

DISTILLERY,
118 East 29th st., New-York, between 2d and 3d avenues.

LABORATORY AND CHEMICAL OFFICE,
18 Exchange Place, N. Y., March 4, 1856.

MR. REED: Sir—I have submitted to close examination two samples of London Cordial Gin, manufactured by you, and purporting to equal the English article. I find on comparison with samples of Hodges' and Burnett's previously examined by me, and which I know to have been imported direct, that the quality of yours is by no meansinferior to their celebrated compounds, while the perfect method you posess of rectifying, insures an article of a higher degree of purity and flavor, when it has the equal advantage of time to soften it, than much of the so-called imported London gin. As a medicinal agent and cordial, under proper advice, it may be depended upon, from the care with which you select the essential oils combined with it in the distillation. Yours, respectfully,

ISAIAH DECK, M. D.,
Consulting and Analytical Chemist.

Mr. REED'S Distillery, 118 East Twenty-ninth st., New-York. [my31 3m

MRS. HAYES' SYRUP.

For Dysentery and Bowel Complaints.

WARRANTED to cure the worst cases in less than twenty-four hours, if used according to directions. It has stood the test of thirty-five years, and has never been known to fail, even when the most eminent physicians had pronounced the patient beyond the reach of medicine. Over two thousand satisfactory references and certificates can be produced, sufficient to prove its superiority over all other preparations for these complaints.

The Syrup can be given to a child a week old with perfect safety. It is pleasant to the taste, and harmless in its composition, it being free from opium, alcohol, &c. Prepared and sold by Mrs. M. Hayes, 175 Fulton st., Brooklyn. Sold also by Joseph W. Hayes, 159 Atlantic st., H. Parker, cor. of Fulton Avenue and Cumberland street, M. Evans, corner of Myrtle and Classon avenues, Brooklyn. In New-York by F. C. Wells & Co., 115 Franklin street, C. H. Ring, 92 Broadway, T. T. Green, 862 Broadway, Guion, corner of Bowery and Grand streets, W. S. Dunham, 476 Broadway. In Williamsburg, J. D. Norvill, 26 Grand street. In Newark, by R. VanBuskirk, cor. of Market and Broad streets. 8m19jly

Billiards.

IMPROVED BILLIARD TABLES AND CUSHIONS.

MICHAEL PHELAN'S

MODEL TABLES AND COMBINATION CUSHIONS,

(Patented February 19, 1856,)

CORRECT in principle and perfect in action—so constructed as to insure mathematical correctness of angles when played upon, and warranted to possess the requisite elasticity in all seasons, having been tested by the best players in this conntry, and by them pronounced the most perfect of any hitherto constructed—are offered to the public as cheap as the ordinary tables of the day. Orders promptly attended to for fitting up private or public Billiard Rooms; new Cushions put on old Tables, &c.

Saloon and Salesroom No. 89 Chambers street, up stairs.

O'CONNOR & COLLENDER,

BILLIARD TABLE MANUFACTURERS,

53 ANN STREET, NEW-YORK.

Business Directory.

RICH CARPETING.

1856. SPRING IMPORTATION. 1856.

ARTHUR DONNELLY,

98 BOWERY, (West side,) BETWEEN GRAND AND HESTER STREETS.

IS now prepared to exhibit his New Spring Styles of

Foreign and Domestic Carpetings,

Comprising every grade and every description, from the Cheapest Fabric to the Richest.

☞ Importing his goods direct and thus saving the commission and interest which most dealers pay, he is enabled to offer them at prices highly favorable to consumers, who will find at his store, among other Carpetings adopted to all varieties of taste, the following elegant descriptions:

Medallions,	at	14s to 18s per yard.
Velvet,	"	10s to 16s "
Tapestry,	"	6s to 12s "
Brussels,	"	7s to 12s "
Three-ply,	"	7s to 10s "
Ingrain,	"	3s to 7s "
Common Ingrain,	"	18d to 3s "

English and American Floor Oil Cloths,

of every imaginable width, pattern and style.

A complete and choice assortment of

STAIR AND HALL CARPETS, RUGS, MATS, MATTINGS,

and of everything else appertaining to the Carpet Trade.

ARTHUR DONNELLY, 98 Bowery, (West side,)
ap193m Between Grand and Hester sts., N. Y.

NEW STORE

AND

NEW GOODS.

THE subscriber having leased for a term of years the premises

374 Hudson street,

and made exthnsive additions thereto, and having laid in a large stock of

Carpeting and Oil Cloths,

mostly bought at Auction, for CASH, is now prepared to sell them at the following extremely low prices:

Tapestry Brussels, 8s. usually sold at 10s.
Three Ply Ingrain 8s. usually sold at 10s.
Superfine do 6s. usually sold at 8s.
Fine do 5s. usually sold at 6s.
Common do All WOOL 3s. 6d. per yard, a price absolutely unheard of.

Ingrain, Cotton Warp and Wool Filling 2s. 6d.
Oil Cloths 3s. per yard, usually sold at 5s.
Mats, Matting, Table and Piano Covers, Venetian and Hall Carpetting, Stair Rods, &c. &c.
Clergymen and Churches furnished at wholesale prices.
Goods in all cases warranted as represented.

J. R. Landon, 374 Hudson street, New-York,
3mjun a few doors from Hamersly.

SMITH, BROTHERS,

ONE PRICE

CLOTHING WAREHOUSES,

122 AND 140 FULTON ST., N. Y.

The PRICE is marked on all the goods in

PLAIN FIGURES.

We have now on hadd a splendid assortment of Spring and Summer Clothing, together with our new styles of Spring

RAGLANS,

PELISSIERS,

AND CANROBERTS—

OR, SUMMER OVER-COATS.

ap263m SMITH, BROTHERS, 122 AND 140 FULTON ST.

TAILORS, ATTENTION!

If you wish to possess the best and most exact system of Coat and Jacket Cutting, procure HOLDWAY'S DIAGRAM AND SCALE, whereby you are enabled to cut for 30 dinerent sizes, varying from 20 breast measure (which, you know, is small,) to 54, which you also consider large, and whereby you will find a misfit next to impossible. See it and judge for yourself.

To be had of TILL & COOK, 299 Broadway; or of A. HOLDWAY, 29 Anne street, next door to the IRISH NEWS office. je14 tf

---

JAMES CAIN,

MERCHANT TAILOR,

AND

CLOTHIER,

NO. 129 FULTON STREET,

(HERALD BUILDING,) New-York.
my31y

THOMAS BRENNAN,

DRAPER AND TAILOR,

CANAL STREET, ONE DOOR FROM BOWERY, WEST SIDE.

NEW-YORK.

☞ I am prepared to serve my customers with the newest styles, and at the most reasonable rates. y28je

---

GEO. McDONNELL,

BOOT AND SHOE MANUFACTURER,

92 PARK ROW, NEXT DOOR TO LOVEJOY'S HOTEL, NEW-YORK.

☞ Boots, Shoes, and Gaiters of the best quality made to order.

3m.my10 Geo. McDonnell.

ROBERT IRWIN,

CHEAP BOOT AND SHOE STORE,

my10 156 Chatham street, opposite James' st., New-York. 3m

R. HOGAN,

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL

UMBRELLA AND PARASOL MANUFACTURER,

374 BOWERY, NEAR FOURTH STREET.

Repairing neatly executed. my17 3m*

M. GRADY,

27 FAYETTE STREET, LOWELL, MASS.

ju21 Agent for the IRISH NEWS and all the other choice literature of the day.

KNOX'S

OFFICE FURNITURE WAREROOMS,

59 BEEKMAN STREET, UP STAIRS.

DESKS! DESKS!! DESKS!!!

DOUBLE and Single counting-room DESKS, from 3 to 8 feet long. Office Desks from 3 to 6 ft., of Mahogany, blackwalnut and oak; cases for Books and pigeon-holes. Office chairs, cushions, lounges and Office Tables of every description. my17 tf

---

HAMILTON & JOHNSON,

NEWS AGENTS,

30 ANN STREET, NEW-YORK.

DAILY, weekly and Sunday papers, Magazines, and Cheap Publications. The trade supplied. Orders from the country solicited and promptly filled. JOHN HAMILTON, tf S. W. JOHNSON.

MEAGHER & CAMPBELL,

ATTORNEYS AND COUNSELLORS AT LAW,

NO. 82 BROADWAY.

NOTARY PUBLIC,

Commissioner for the U. S. Court of Claims.

THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER, having formed a partnership with MALCOLM CAMPBELL, for the general practice of the law, the firm will continue to devote their attention to such law business as may be intrusted to them, including conveyancing, practice in all the courts of the state of New-York and of the United States, and general collecting business in all parts of the world. Particular attention will be given to the prosecution of claims against the United States in the Court of Claims.

Mr. Meagher may be consulted daily, on law business only, at No. 82 Broadway, from three till five o'clock P. M.

THOS. H. HURLEY,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,

NO. 10 CENTRE ST., OPPOSITE CITY HALL.

WILLIAM E. ROBINSON,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR,

HAVING entered into partnership with ISAAC DAYTON, Esq., (author of the work on Surrogates,) and WILLIAM A. COURSEN, Esq., gentlemen long known, and of high standing at the New-York Bar, has removed to their new office at 267 BROADWAY, third door below Chambers street.

☞ All business either in the Criminal or Civil Courts, promptly and faithfully attended to. ap191y

---

JOHN O'ROURKE,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,

NO. 10 CENTRE STREET,

(Opposite the Superior Court Buildings,)

7jun NEW-YORK.

JAMES M. SHEEHAN,

Attorney and Counsellor at Law,

No. 13 Chambers Street, New-York.

2y1ju Collections promptly attended to, and Liens carefully filed, &c.

JOHN A. McSORLEY,

CUSTOM HOUSE AND SHIP BROKER, AND NOTARY PUBLIC,

7 BROAD STREET,

Clergymen, importing Vestments, Church Ornaments, &c., will be liberally treated with by calling on the subscriber.

REFERENCES:

Messrs. Thos. McClune & Co., C. Meletta, | Messrs. D. & J. Sadlier & Co., James Cook & Co. 6m

---

JAMES HARLIN,

WATCH, CLOCK MAKER, AND JEWELER.

236 HENRY STREET, BROOKLYN.

All watches and clocks bought or repaired at my establishment, warranted for twelve months. *

JOHN FOLEY,

WATCHMAKER,

JEWELER AND FINISHER OF FINE WATCHES,

NO. 202 BOWERY.

[Between Spring and Prince Streets, New-York.

Watches of a superior quality made to order, and warranted not to err more than four minutes a year. Cases jointed, works jeweled, and chronometer balances set in the best style. Jewelry of every kind repaired in a jul2m6 workmanlike manner. All orders punctually attended to.

J. McCARTEN,

WATCH AND CLOCK MAKER,

154 SEVENTH AVENUE.

Between 20th and 21st streets, New-York.

Watches, Clocks, and Jewelry carefully repaired and warranted. A good
7jun assortment of watches and clocks always on hand. 3m

JOHN FOLEY,

MANUFACTURER OF FINE GOLD PENS

BEST QUALITY ONLY.

GOLD AND SILVER PENCIL CASES.

my24tf No. 168 BROADWAY, NEW-YORK.

JOHN KENNEDY'S

STEAM MARBLE WORKS,

35TH STREET, NEAR BROADWAY.

Statuary and Marble Mantle-Pieces, Monuments, Grave Stones, Tombs, &c. All orders thankfully received and punctually attended to. *

THOMAS GAFFNEY'S

SOAP AND CANDLE

MANUFACTORY,

325 EAST SENECA STREET, BUFFALO,

NEW-YORK. 6mJune7

WILLIAM M. SMITH,

The Public Favorite, and only American Opposition

BILL POSTER AND DISTRIBUTOR,

THE OLDEST ESTABLISHED IN THE BUSINESS.

Work done promptly and faithfully—cheaper, quicker, and better than any other poster in the city. Work done either in New-York, Brooklyn, Williamsburgh, or Jersey City. Boards lent for concerts, or any kind of work.

OFFICE, 28½ SPRUCE STREET, NEW-YORK,
ap26tf (Between William and Gold streets.)

THE METROPOLITAN

FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY,

No. 108 BROADWAY,

(Cor. Pine Street.)

CASH CAPITAL $300,000.

JAMES LORIMER GRAHAM, President.

EDWARD A. STANSBURY, Secretary. my31y

CABINET FURNITURE AND UPHOLSTERY.

Established in 1827.

THE largest and cheapest assortment in the State of New-York. Every thing, from a Broom to the richest article, may be found, including Carpets, Oil Cloths, Mattrasses, Beds, &c., &c., at 1 yr R. J. TODD'S, 88 Fulton street, Brooklyn.

WILLARD, FELT & CO.,

MANUFACTURERS OF ACCOUNT BOOKS,

AND IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN PAPER AND STATIONERY,

NO. 14 MAIDEN LANE,

6mos (near Broadway.)

THE VIRGINIA TOBACCO AGENCY,

(ESTABLISHED IN 1836.)

45½ Water street, New-York.

CHARLES M. CONNOLLY,

Commission Merchant and Agent for the sale of Manufactured Tobacco.

Has always on hand, at the above agency, a full supply of

Manufactured Tobacco,

Of all brands and descriptions, direct from the Virginia Factories, for sale on liberal terms. jly5 y

---

MRS. J. McCARTHY,

FASHIONABLE MILLINERY STORE,

44 THIRD AVENUE,

Third door from 10th Street, NEW-YORK.

Cheap Straw Hats, Ribbons, Flowers, Ladies' Straw Goods.

Straw Bonnets cleaned and altered to the newest fashions.

LADIES' OWN MATERIALS MADE UP TO THE LATEST STYLES. tf

NICHOLAS WALSH.

SEXTON AND UNDERTAKER.

NO. 8 SIXTH AVENUE.

MATTHEW WALLACE,

25 CLARK STREET, CHICAGO, ILL.,

WHOLESALE DEALER IN NEWSPAPERS, BOOKS, &c.

☞ "The Irish News," on hand, by the earliest moment, each week. tf

---

McLOUGHLIN & McSHANE,

(Successors to THOS. ANDREWS,

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALERS IN

CHOICE TEAS, COFFEES, WINES, BRANDIES, AND GROCERIES,

61 FULTON STREET, near Cliff street,

NEW-YORK. 8m

☞ SHIP STORES SUPPLIED. ☜

CALL ON

THOMAS LYNCH,

OF the "FULTON SHADES," Fulton Ferry, Brooklyn, for the best XX and XXX ales, brandies, and segars.

JOHN J. STAFF'S.

WINES, LIQUORS, SEGARS,
LONDON, DUBLIN, PHILADELPHIA,
PORTER and ALE,
SCOTCH, BURTON, and EAST INDIA ALES,
CHAMPAGNE CIDER, in quantities to suit purchasers,
at 333 Broadway,
☞ tf corner of Anthony street, New-York.

J. MURPHY & SON,

IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN

BRANDIES, WINES, GIN, RUM, IRISH AND SCOTCH WHISKEY, SEGARS, ALE AND PORTER, CORDIALS, &c.

J. M. & SON would call the attention of City and Country Dealers to their EXTENSIVE STOCK OF LIQUORS AND SEGARS under CUSTOM HOUSE LOCK and in STORE.

☞ We do not claim any superiority for our goods over those of any other House, but customers may rely upon being honorably and fairly dealt with, and all Liquors warranted as represented.

J. M. & SON are SOLE AGENTS for this City of Messrs. BUNCHARD & HARRISON'S superior Creaming and Sparkling DOMESTIC CHAMPAGNE, which possesses the same qualities as Imported Wine, and is more agreeable to the palate. It can be sold as low as $7 the basket.

A Superior Quality of IMPORTED ST. JULIAN CLARET, in cases, at $2 50.

Orders from Country Merchants solicited, and shipped with dispatch, at 150 Pearl, and 113 Water streets.

☞ Office 138 Pearl street.

P. MONAGHAN,

IMPORTER of the various and best brands of HAVANA SEGARS, &c. &c. Country and city merchants supplied in bond or in store. Duties paid or unpaid. 121 PEARL STREET, New-York.

N. B.—Sole Importer of the J. M. Vichot, La Union, and La Primavera brands. ap261y

---

McLOUGHLIN & EVERARD,

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL GROCERS,

Keep constantly on hand a select assortment of

GROCERIES, WINES, BRANDIES, TEAS, COFFEES, &c., &c.,

AT THE OLD ESTABLISHED STAND,

ap263m 44 FULTON, between Pearl and Cliff streets, New York.

WISE'S IRISH MALT WHISKEY.

IMPORTED by J. & P. Hogan, Nos. 6 and 12 West street, and 257 Third Avenue, corner of 21st street, New-York, and corner of Vanbrunt and Sullivan streets, Brooklyn. J. & P. Hogan wish to inform their friends and the public that they have just received a large quantity of WISE'S CORK MALT WHISKEY, which will be sold at a reduced price, out of bond and at the above establishment. They are the only firm who import the same in New-York. ap261y

---

BURKE & MYLER,

IMPORTED WINES, LIQUORS AND SEGARS,

No. 42 SPRING STREET, NEW-YORK,
ap263m between Mulberry and Mott streets.

HOSEY & RILEY,

PACIFIC RESTAURANT,

600 BROADWAY, NEW-YORK.

Private entrance on the first floor, 134 Crosby street.

☞ Hosey & Riley invite their friends to give them a call.

my24 3m

DRY-DOCK DISTILLERY.

No. 291 East-thirteenth st., near Avenue B.

JAMES RUSSELL,

Rectifier and Manufacturer of Cordials,

IMPORTER AND DEALER

IN Foreign and Domestic Wines, Liquors, Cordials, &c. J. R. having had long experience in the liquor trade, he has facilities of selecting wines and liquors of the most superior quality, which he offers to dealers and families at the lowest market prices, and flatters himself that a single trial will be quite sufficient to secure custom.

Goods delivered free of expense in any part of the city, and country orders promptly attended to. 3m jun14

Analytical and Metallurgical Chemistry and Mining Geology.

DR. ISAIAH DECK,

No. 18 EXCHANGE PLACE, NEW-YORK.

MAY be consulted on all subjects relating to Practical Chemistry, Mining and Metallurgy. Assays of Ores, Analyses of Minerals, and Mining Products in general carefully and expeditiously conducted, and sound opinions delivered upon the most economical methods of working them, based on the latest chemical discoveries. Geological and Mining Surveys undertaken in any part of the world—Dr. DECK having had considerable experience in this branch of his profession. my31 3m

The Irish News.

THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.
JOHN SAVAGE, LITERARY EDITOR.

THREE DOLLARS PER ANNUM. SINGLE COPIES 6 CENTS
Publication Office, 29 Ann St., cor. of Nassau.

VOL. I. NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, JULY 26, 1856. NO. 16.

CONTENTS OF NO. XVI.

Editorial.

THE PRESS UPON THE PRESIDENCY.
IRISH LITERATURE IN AMERICA.
THE PATRIOTISM OF THE POOR.
OLD CLOTHES—CHATHAM STREET IN LONDON.
JOHN MARTIN—HIS VISIT TO AMERICA.
PRESENTATION TO THE CAPTAIN OF THE MONTGOMERY GUARD.

Correspondence.

Trip from Enniscorthy to Bantry, (Part II.,) by the "Wandering Ghost of Dunbrody."

Literature.

The Galway Election. More of it again.
Lion Hunting in Africa—Life of Gerard the Lion Killer.
Notes from the Nore, (No. II.)
City Courts.

Poetry.

The Three Students—by (R. D. Williams,) "Shamrock."
Disiderium—by F. O. R.

Miscellaneous.

European News—Irish Provincial News—Dreadful Disaster to a Catholic School Excursion, and on board a Steamer on Lake Erie—Gavan Duffy in Australia—Mystery and Murder in Broadway—Elections in Nicaragua, Walker President, Rivas a traitor—Buchanan and the Press—English News.

Answers to Correspondents.

THE IRISH NEWS,

EDITED BY THE PROPRIETOR,

THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER,

DEDICATED TO THE SERVICE OF THE

IRISH PEOPLE,

AT HOME AND ABROAD,

Will be published every Saturday, on and after the 12th of April, at 29 Ann street, corner of Nassau, New-York.

TERMS.

For subscribers, $3 per annum: 6 cents a copy.
For retailers and carriers, $4 per hundred.
For Clubs, 4 copies to one address, per annum, $10.
" 7 " " " " $17.
" 10 " " " " $20.

For advertising.—Each square of eight lines,

Transient	$1
Monthly	$2
Quarterly	$5
Yearly	$16

N. B. Four lines, or under, constitute half a square.

Agents or Postmasters who interest themselves in procuring and remitting subscriptions, may retain 50 cents out of each annual subscription of $3.

☞ Subscribers, Agents, and Advertisers will please send in their orders early, and observe that our terms are invariably, payments in advance.

Communications of a PRIVATE nature should always be marked so. Those connected with the editorial department are to be addressed to Thomas Francis Meagher, and those on business to Richard J. Lalor, Irish News Office, 29 Ann street, corner of Nassau.

☞ Subscribers, residing in New-York, Brooklyn, and Williamsburgh, who pay in advance, will have their papers neatly enveloped, addressed, and delivered on each Wednesday through Boyd's Express or some similar medium.

Wholesale Dealers.

DEXTER & BROTHERS, 14 Ann Street, New-York.
ROSS & TOUSEY, 108 Nassau Street, New-York.
SAMUEL YATES, 22 Beekman Street, New-York.
MIKE MADDEN, 22 Ann Street, New-York.
HAMILTON & JOHNSON, 30 Ann Street, New-York.
DE WITT & DAVENPORT, 160 & 162 Nassau Street, New-York.
HENRY TAYLOR, Baltimore, Md.
FEDERHEN & CO., 13 Court Street, Boston.
WM. HICKEY, 128 Federal Street, Boston.
REDDING & CO., 8 Court Street, Boston.
THOS. McLOUGHLIN, 42 South 4th Street, Philadelphia.
T. B. CALLENDER, 88 South-Third Street, Philadelphia.
DROVIN & CO., Philadelphia.
A. WINCH, 116 Chestnut street.
J. M. CRAWFORD, 30 and 32 Chestnut Street, St. Louis, Mo.

Printed by Watters Brothers, 47 Ann street,
POWER PRESS OF J. B. WILLIAMS.

BENZIGER BROTHERS.

Publishers and Booksellers,
MANUFACTURERS AND IMPORTERS OF
Church Furniture,

Einsiedeln, Switzerland, and 172 William street, corner of Beekman, New-York.

BENZIGER BROTHERS beg leave most respectfully to call the particular attention of the Right Rev. and the Rev. Clergy, the Religious Communities, Educational Establishments, and of the Trade, to the large and varied stock they have just opened in their new store, 172 William street.

Their Book Trade.

The old established house of Benziger Brothers, Eisiedeln, well known to many of the Hierarchy and the Rev. Clergy of the United States who have visited Switzerland, established this house in New-York four years ago, and they trust they will receive for the greatly increased advantages they offer, a continuance of that support, which for a period of over forty years has enabled them to build up, at the Pilgrimage of Our Lady of the Hermits (Einsiedelen) an establishment in which over four hundred persons are daily employed in the fabrication of the various articles that are used in the Church.

They desire particularly to call attention to their publications of PRAYER and DEVOTIONAL BOOKS, in German, French, Italian and Latin, consisting of over 200 different sorts. Being in immediate and constant intercourse with nearly all the principal publishers of Europe, they are enabled to offer a large assortment of standard THEOLOGICAL and LITURGICAL WORKS, among which are, the editions of Mechline, Paris, Ratisbone, &c., at exceedingly low prices.

They are also prepared to supply any of the English Catholic Books published in the United States, at publishers' lowest prices.

An assortment of Dutch and Flemish Prayer Books, and of German School and Story Books.

2. They very respectfully invite an inspection of their extensive assortment of

Vestments and Church Vessels,

and, in doing so, feel confident that their stocks is more varied and of superior fabrication than any of the kind heretofore introduced into the United States, and from their facilities for purchasing in Europe, are enabled to sell at a lower price than any other house in the country.

3. Engravings, Beads, Crucifixes, &c.

ENGRAVINGS.—An immense variety of their own manufacture, including Altar, Baptismal, Confirmation, First Communion and First Confession Cards, Holy Water Pots, and

BEADS—Pearl, Garnet, Cornelian, Cocoa, Ivory, Wood, and Glass.

CRUCIFIXES, MEDALS, and RELIQUARIES, &c., in great variety. Also, STATUARY, in porcelain, biscuit, plastique, &c., &c.

4. Together with the above they have a large number of

Beautiful Statues,

suitable for Churches and Oratories, imported from Germany, France, and Belgium; amongst which are "The Immaculate Conception," "Virgin Mother" or "Our Lady of Victories," "St. Peter," "St. Paul," "Ecce Homo," "St. Joseph," "St. Aloysius," "St. Patrick," "The Resurrection," "Angel Guardian," "Angel Adoring," "The Infant Saviour in the Crib," "The Crucifixion," and many others. Any figure made to order, from design.

☞ Catalogues describing the Church Ornaments, Books, Pictures and Beads, can be had on application. jy19 3mos

PRESIDENT WALKER AND LIBERTY.

Just Published.

A COMPLETE HISTORY
of the
NICARAGUA EXPEDITION,
With a full and complete Life and Portrait of GEN. WM. WALKER,
Illustrated by CAREFULLY PREPARED MAPS

of Central America, Isthmus of Panama, the Nicaragua route, Aspinwall City, City of Panama, harbor of San Juan, &c., including the late news by the Orizaba—forming a complete handbook for the emigrant, miner, politician, or agriculturist.

BY COL. W. V. WELLS.

In one 12mo volume, of 300 pages.

Price 50 cents in paper; in cloth 75 cents.

Stringer & Townsend,
Publishers,
No. 222 Broadway.

N. B. Mailed, free of postage, on receipt of price. 1t26jly

KEATING'S IRELAND.

A NEW TRANSLATION OF THE

FORAS FEASA AR ERINN;

OR, GENERAL HISTORY OF IRELAND.

From a Manuscript Copy of the Original Irish of the Rev. and Learned GEOFFREY KEATING.

With Notes, Historical, Topographical, and Explanatory,

By JOHN O'MAHONY, Esq.

The work is now in course of preparation, and will be speedily published, in one large octavo volume of about 600 pages, with plates. Price to Subscribers, $2,00.

The book will be got up in superior style, and furnished to the address of Subscribers giving their names to a duly-authorized canvasser, or to

A list of subscribers will be printed in the work.

P. M. HAVERTY, Publisher,
110 Fulton street, N. Y. tf

Study the Life of Mary!

THE OLD ESTABLISHED CATHOLIC HOUSE

OF

EDWARD DUNIGAN & BROTHER,

(JAMES B. KIRKER,)

151 Fulton street, New-York,

Are now publishing, in monthly parts, at twenty-five cents each, and with the express approbation of the

MOST REV. JOHN HUGHES, D.D.,

ARCHBISHOP OF NEW-YORK,

The Life of the Blessed Virgin Mary,

By the

RIGHT REV. ROMUALD GENTILUCCI,

Chamberlain of Honor to His Holiness,

Dedicated to and honored with the suffrages of His Holiness

POPE PIUS IX.,

ILLUSTRATED with fine steel engravings, and vignettes, borders, and initials, designed expressly for this work. This Life, published at Rome in 1848, by a Prelate high in the esteem of the Holy Father, is approved by the Master of the Sacred Palace, and has already been translated into other languages. Amid the many lives that have appeared, Gentilucci's will ever be remarkable for its unction and beauty of style, no less than for the deep knowledge which it displays of the writings of the Holy Fathers, and all the monuments of Ecclesiastical History that can in any way throw light on the Life of the Immaculate Mother of our Lord, as handed down in the loving traditions of the faithful from the age in which she lived.

It is a book for the studious as well as for the fervent Christian; a book for every one who seeks to rouse in his heart feelings of devotion for Her, whom the unerring Judge selected for the greatest honor which the human mind can conceive.

Conditions of the Work.

Gentillucci's Life of the Blessed Virgin Mary will be published in semi-monthly parts of 48 pages each, with a steel engraving in every number, and several fine woodcuts. Printed on fine paper, from new type, it will, when complete, form a most unique and beautiful volume of six to seven hundred and fifty pages.

OBSERVATIONS OF THE PRESS.

No other work of our day, on the same subject, can be compared to it. It is unrivalled for beauty of style and depth of erudition. It is the offering of a learned and devoted son of the blessed Virgin, who enjoys the confidence and friendship of our most Holy Father, to whom the work is dedicated. We are not more edified at the piety of the author, than astonished at the wonderful erudition displayed in the book. The translator has performed his task admirably.—Pittsburg Catholic.

We cannot too highly recommend it to the consideration of our readers, whether we regard the intrinsic value of the work itself, or the beauty and exquisite ensemble of its getting up.—Truthteller.

Profusely illustrated with engravings and vignettes, this work is brought out in such an elegant style, as to make it, exclusive of its literary merit, a fitting library companion to the Bible of the same enterprising publishers.—Detroit Vindicator.

This work is one of devotion and merit. We do not know who translated it, but it seems better than average translations.—Freeman's Journal.

This work, translated from the Italian, and apparently well translated, is by an eminent author, is dedicated by permission to his Holiness Pius IX., and is spoken of in very high terms by competent judges. As far as we have seen it, we like it very much, and think it must prove a great favorite with the children of Mary and all devout Catholics.—Brownson's Review.

Inducement.

Each subscriber to this splendid work will receive with the last number a magnificent steel engraving, suitable for framing, of the

MOST. REV. JOHN HUGHES, D.D.,
ARCHBISHOP OF NEW-YORK.

Canvassers will find it to their advantage to address the publishers.

8t12jly EDWARD DUNIGAN & BROTHER.

HAMILTON & JOHNSON,

NEWS AGENTS,

30 ANN STREET, NEW-YORK.

DAILY, weekly and Sunday papers, Magazines, and Cheap Publications. The trade supplied. Orders from the country solicited and promptly filled.

JOHN HAMILTON,
tf S. W. JOHNSON.

SCARCE BOOKS RELATING TO IRELAND.

STUART'S HISTORY OF ARMAGH. 8vo. $3.
MONASTICUM HIBERNICUM. By Stevens. 8vo, calf, plates. $8.
J. K. L.'s LETTERS (Rt. Rev. Dr. Doyle). 8vo. $3 50.
SMITH'S HISTORY OF CORK. 2 vols., 8vo. $6.
CONEY'S IRISH DICTIONARY. 8vo. $3.
McGREGOR'S HISTORY OF LIMERICK. 2 vols. $6.
MISS BROOKES' RELIQUES OF IRISH POETRY. 8vo. $3.
IRISH QUARTERLY REVIEW. 5 vols., 8vo, containing Gilbert's Streets of Dublin—Life of John Banim—Celtic Records of Ireland—Memoirs of Irish Celebrities—Lady Blessington—Maturin—Dr. Maginn—Chief Justice Bushe—Rev. S. Madden—Tom Moore—Barry, the painter—Macklin, &c., &c. $16.
IRISH PENNY JOURNAL. 1 vol., quarto. $3 50.
DUBLIN PENNY JOURNAL. 4 vols., very scarce. $16.
ANCIENT IRISH HISTORIES. By Spencer Campion Hanmer and Marlborough. 2 vols., 8vo. $7 50.
PACATA HIBERNIA. $6.
IRISH PENNY MAGAZINE. Edited by Lover. $3 50.
WYSE'S HISTORY OF THE CATHOLIC ASSOCIATION. 2 vols. $6.
ANNALS OF THE FOUR MASTERS. Translated by Connellan. 4to, cloth, map. $6 50.
HARDY'S LIFE OF CHARLEMONT. 2 vols. $3.
KEATING'S HISTORY OF IRELAND. 8vo. $4.
TAAFFE'S HISTORY OF IRELAND. 4 vols. $8.
THE CITIZEN, a Dublin magazine. 4 vols., with a collection of ancient Irish music. $12.
O'BRIEN'S ROUND TOWERS. 8vo, half calf. $10.
MUSGRAVE'S IRISH REBELLIONS. 2 vols., 8vo, half calf. $4.

And a large collection of miscellaneous Irish books.

For sale by P. M. Haverty, Bookseller,
110 Fulton street, New-York.

VOLUNTEERS ASSEMBLED IN COLLEGE GREEN—A copy of this rare engraving (described in No. 10 Irish News) for sale. Price $5. jy12 tf

The Trade supplied on liberal terms with
MITCHEL'S JAIL JOURNAL.
MOORE'S LIFE OF LORD EDWARD FITZGERALD.
DAVIS'S POEMS, with an introduction by John Mitchel.

NOW READY.

Smucker's Life of Fremont.

Accurate steel Portrait and other illustrations. 500 pp., 12mo.

PRICE ONE DOLLAR.

WHY IT IS THE BEST.

1. It is the most carefully prepared Life. The proofs have been submitted to, and the work is approved by its distinguished subject and his friends.

2. It has the best portrait, by Buttre. "Very handsome small portraits of Col. Fremont and Mr. Dayton have been engraved on steel and published by J. C. Buttre, of this city."—[Tribune, July 11.

3. It is also the best, as it gives Col. Fremont's principal REPORTS, UNABRIDGED, thus enabling the public to judge of him not only by his WORKS, but by his eloquent and classical WORDS.

"The Reports are in themselves replete with striking incident. They are written with the enthusiasm of an explorer, yet with the modesty of a man of science.—[N. Y. Independent.

4. It is the best, as it contains

THE MOST COMPLETE RECORD of the Life and Doings of

THE STANDARD-BEARER OF FREEDOM.

"A word to the wise is sufficient."

Finally, it is the best, as it discusses and refutes the slanders of his political enemies, and is thus particularly

ACCEPTABLE TO REPUBLICANS.

Single copies sent by mail, postage paid, on receipt of price.

THOUSANDS OF AGENTS WANTED

To sell the above. Very liberal terms given. For full particulars address

Miller, Orton & Mulligan, Publishers,
1t26jly No. 25 Park Row, New-York, or 107 Genesee street, Auburn.

An able work of Genius!

"COUSIN NICHOLAS,"

By

THOMAS INGOLDSBY,

(Reverend Richard H. Barham,)

Author of .. .. "The Ingoldsby Legends."

One volume, 12mo., handsome cloth, with six fine illustrations. Price One Dollar.

"COUSIN NICHOLAS" is not a mere compilation of ludicrous situations and startling effects; it is not the embodying of the exaggerated imaginings of a literary caricaturist; it is the well digested, carefully written, natural and most pleasing scenes of every-day life, woven into a matchless tale, whose greatest beauty is its quiet unpretending vein of humor and sentiment, sense and sarcasm, which steal over our senses, and entrance us in a dream, so pleasant that it is with deep regret an arrival of that inevitable "End" compels us to part with characters so well understood and appreciated.

A Burke, Publisher, Buffalo.

For sale in New-York by Ross & Tousey, 108 Nassau, and by all Booksellers. 1

A VALUABLE BOOK OF REFERENCE.

Will be published in July,

In one volume, 8vo. cloth, price $1 50,

HISTORY OF IMMIGRATION

TO THE

UNITED STATES,

EXHIBITING THE

Number, Sex, Age, Occupation, and country of birth,

OF

PASSENGERS ARRIVING IN THE UNITED STATES,

By sea from Foreign Countries, from September 30th, 1819, to December 31st, 1855.

COMPILED ENTIRELY FROM OFFICIAL DATA.

With

An Introductory View of the Progress and Extent of Immigration to the United States prior to 1819.

And an appendix containing the

NATURALIZATION AND PASSENGER LAWS

Of the United States, and extracts from the Laws of the Several States relative to Immigrants, the Importation of Paupers, Convicts, Lunatics, etc.

BY WILLIAM J. BROMWELL,
Of the Department of State.

tf28jy J. S. Redfield, 24 Beekman street.

Shipping.

THE NEW-YORK AND LIVERPOOL

United States Mail Line.

The ships composing this line are the following:

The ATLANTIC .....Capt. Eldridge.
The ADRIATIC .....Capt. West.
The PACIFIC .....Capt. Eldridge.
The BALTIC .....Capt. Comstock.

These ships have been built by contract, expressly for the government service. Every care has been taken in their construction, as also in their engines to insure strength and speed; and their accommodations for passengers are unequalled for elegance and comfort.

Price of passage from New-York to Liverpool in first cabin, $180; in second do., $75. Exclusive use of extra size state rooms, $325. From Liverpool to New-York, 80 and 20 guineas.

An experienced surgeon attached to each ship.

No berth can be secured until paid for.

PROPOSED DATES OF SAILING.

FROM NEW-YORK.		FROM LIVERPOOL.
Saturday	Aug. 2	Wednesday	July 23
Saturday	Aug. 16	Wednesday	Aug. 6
Saturday	Aug. 30	Wednesday	Sept. 3
Saturday	Sept. 13	Wednesday	Sept. 17
Saturday	Oct. 11	Wednesday	Oct. 1
Saturday	Oct. 25	Wednesday	Oct. 15

Edw'd. K. Collins & Co., No. 56 Wall street, New-York.
Brown, Shipley & Co., Liverpool.
Stephen Kennard & Co., 27 Austin Friars, London.
B. G. Wainwright & Co., Paris.

The owners of these ships will not be accountable for gold, silver, bullion, specie, jewelry, precious stones or metals, unless bills of lading are signed therefor, and the value thereof therein expressed.

Shippers will please take notice, that the ships of this line cannot carry any goods contraband of war. ap26 6m.

C. H. MARSHALL & CO.,

Old Black Ball Line of Liverpool Packets.

CERTIFICATES

Furnished for Passage to and from Liverpool, on the 1st and 16th of every Month, by the following splendid ships:

James Foster, Jr.	Capt. J. W. Porter.
Neptune	" E. W. Peabody.
Harvest Queen	" E. Young.
Isaac Webb	" J. M. Bayer.
Great Western	" W. G. Furrier.
Manhattan	" T. Dixon.
Isaac Wright	" E. Abeel.
Columbia	" C. Hutchinson.
Fidelia	" W. A. Macgill.
Yorkshire	" C. A. Marshall.

REMITTANCES.

Drafts, for £1 and upwards, on the Royal Bank of Ireland, and on Messrs. Baring Brothers & Co., Bankers, Liverpool and London, payable on sight.

C. H. MARSHALL & CO.,
88 Burling Slip, N. Y.

Agents in Liverpool, Baring Brothers & Co.,

OLD LINE PACKETS,

Pier 23 East River, foot of Beekman street. 6m

WILLIAMS & GUION'S

Old Black Star Line of Packets. 1856.

Passage from any part of Great Britain and Ireland, secured at the lowest possible rates by this old-established line, sailing from Liverpool to New-York every five days, comprising the following magnificent Ships:

Ships.	Captains.	Tonage.
AUSTRALIA,	Smith,	2,000
BRIDGEWATER (new),	Barstow,	2,000
CULTIVATOR (new),	Austin,	2,000
CYNOSURE,	Bray,	2,000
CORNELIA LAWRENCE (new),	Knapp,	2,000
DE WITT CLINTON,	Funk,	1,800
ENTERPRISE,	Davis,	1,200
GUY MANNERING,	Dollard,	2,000
JACOB A. WESTERVELT,	Hoodless,	2,000
IRENE,	Williams,	1,400
JOHN BRIGHT (new),	Cutting,	2,000
MARMION,	Hanley,	1,200
NORTH AMERICAN,	Clark,	1,800
OSWEGO,	Stevens,	1,400
ROBERT KELLY,	Barstow,	1,500
SILAS WRIGHT (new),	Freeman,	2,000
SOUTHAMPTON,	Furlong,	1,600
THORNTON (new),	Collins,	2,000
TICONDEROGA,	Boyle,	1,400
UNIVERSE,	Cave,	2,000
VANGUARD,	Norton,	1,800

The ships of this line are the largest and swiftest in the trade, their accommodations for passengers are unequalled, and the frequency and punctuality of their departure offer advantages to the emigrant not to be had by any Line of Packets. Such passengers as decline coming out, the money paid for them will be promptly refunded without discount.

Provisions of best quality are provided for passengers; rations, consisting of Bread, Flour, Rice, Oatmeal, Tea, Sugar, Molasses, Salt, &c.

The increased patronage received by the proprietors of the Old Black Star Line has induced them to add to the Line several New Ships, which have taken their place this season; no expense has been spared to render the facilities for Emigration equal to the times, and add to the renown of these celebrated Packets.

The regular Sailing days are 1st, 8th, 11th, 18th, 21st, and 26th of each month; this will give passengers opportunity for embarking more frequent than by any other established Line, to which the attention of the public is respectfully called.

No Certificate of Passage will be issued for children under 12 years of age unless accompanied by an adult, who must be paid for on same certificate; for persons over 60 years of age, or with any impediment, without a Permit from Commissioners of Emigration.

REMITTANCES.

Persons wanting to send money to their friends can obtain drafts for any amount, which will be cashed at sight at the following Banks:

Ireland—National Bank of Ireland; Royal Bank of Ireland; Ulster Banking Co., and their Branches.

Scotland—National Bank of Scotland and Branches.

England—Messrs. GLYNN, MILLS & Co, Bankers, London; GUION & Co., Merchants, Liverpool.

For further particulars apply, if by letter post-paid, to

WILLIAMS & GUION,
40 Fulton street, New-York.

GUION & CO.,
115 Waterloo Road, Liverpool.

AGENTS—JOHN WHITNEY, Providence, R. I.
EDWARD RYAN, 2 Albany street, Boston.
THOMAS RATTIGAN, Pittsburgh, Pa.

BLACK BALL LINE

OF LIVERPOOL PACKETS,

Sailing to and from Liverpool on the 1st and 16th of each Month.

THE following ten magnificent clipper Packet Ships comprise the "Black Ball Line, viz:—

James Foster Jr.,	Manhattan,
Great Western,	Neptune,
Harvest Queen,	Columbia,
Isaac Webb,	Yorkshire,
Isaac Wright,	Fidelia.

DRAFTS AT SIGHT for any amount payable in every town throughout England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales.

Persons returning to the old country, or those sending for their friends, will find it to their interest to select the "Black Ball Line," as the accommodations in the above clippers for Cabin, Second Cabin, and Steerage Passengers, are well known by the travelling public to be far superior to any other.

☞ Appiy or address by letter, post-paid; no letter will be answered unless a postage stamp is enclosed to pre-pay postage.

Jacob Wilson, 103 South street, New York,
Who is the only authorized Passenger Agent for the "Black Ball Line," which lay at Pier 23 East River, opposite this office. my3 3m

Shipping.

LIVERPOOL AND PHILADELPHIA

STEAMSHIP COMPANY,

Intend despatching their splendid Iron Screw Steamers as follows:

FROM LIVERPOOL		FROM PHILADELPHIA
Kangaroo	30 July	City of Baltimore	7 August
City of Manchester	18 August	Kangaroo	21 August
City of Baltimore	27 August	City of Manchester	4 Sept.
Kangaroo	10 Sept.	City of Baltimore	18 Sept.
Kangaroo		2 October.

Steerage passage from Philadelphia, $30; from Liverpool, $40, including cooked provisions. Persons wishing to visit Europe or to send for friends from Great Britain and Ireland, by the above line of splendid Steamships, or by first-class sailing Packets, can purchase passage tickets on application to

Sabel & Cortis, 177 Broadway, New-York.

Or to their Agents in

Albany—A. T. Holmes.....Dubuque—Jas. C. Rattray.
Baltimore—Foard & Rodgers.....Hartford, Ct.—A. Rose.
Boston—F. S. Saxton.....New-Orleans—Jenkins, Williams & Co.
Buffalo—Robt. Hager.....Pittsburg—John Thompson.
Chicago—Lull & Mayer.....Pottsville—R. Edwards.
Cincinnati——.....Toronto C. W.—D. K. Feehan. tf24my

J. F. Meline & Co.

Bankers.

GREEN & SEWELL,

BANKERS,

No. 29 Wall Street, New-York.

DRAFTS on the Belfast Banking Co., available in any part of Ireland, for sale.

REMITTANCES from the interior, promptly forwarded to any address in Ireland, and receipt therefor returned to the sender. General Banking business transacted. my17 6m

---

BREWER & CALDWELL,

20 OLD SLIP, CORNER OF WATER STREET, N. Y.

ISSUE BANK OF CHARLESTON BILLS

ON

BANK OF LIVERPOOL,

In sums of one pound sterling and upwards, payable at any of the Banks in ENGLAND, IRELAND, SCOTLAND, AND WALES. jun14

REMITTANCES TO IRELAND.

IRISH EMIGRANT SOCIETY,
Office, 51 Chambers street.

NOTICE.—The recent failures, by which a large amount of Bills remitted from this country to friends in Ireland, has been returned unpaid, afford to this Society the opportunity, and at the same time impose upon it the duty of informing the public, that such losses would have been prevented if the parties purchasing Bills had availed themselves of the advantages offered by the Society.

For the purpose of entire protection a fund is constantly kept on deposit in the Bank of Ireland, against which this Society issues its drafts, payable at sight (from sums of £1 sterling and upwards), on the Bank and all its branches, and has thereby for the last Ten Years afforded a mode of remittance perfectly safe and unquestionable.

New-York, December 29, 1851.

ANDREW CARRIGAN, President.

JOHN MANNING,
ROBERT J. DILLON,
HUGH KELLY,
} Vice-Presidents.

EDWARD C. DONNELLY, Corresponding Secretary.
PETER CREAR, Recording Secretary.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

Felix Ingoldsby,	John Nicholson,	William Redmond.
William Watson,	Hugh Kelly,	James Olwell,
John Manning,	Cornel Sheehan,	Daniel Devlin,
Terence Donnelly,	Romaine Dillon,	John McMenomy.

EMIGRANT INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS BANK.

No. 51 CHAMBERS STREET.

THIS Institution has been established for the purpose of affording to Emigrants and others, a safe place of deposit for their funds, to protect them from robbery and fraud.

It is conducted with the strictest economy—neither the Officers and Trustees, receive any compensation for their services. The entire profits belong to the Depositors, and will be divided amongst them, having due regard to the safety of the funds.

The last dividend was six per cent. upon all sums of $500 and under, and and will be continued or increased as the profits may justify.

Bank open to receive Deposits, daily, from 10 A. M., to 2, and from 5 to 7 P. M.

TRUSTEES.

William Watson,	John P. Nesmith,
John Nicholson,	John Milhau,
Andrew Carrigan,	Edward W. Tiers,
James Kelly,	Charles M. Connelly,
James Kerrigan,	Cornelius H. Sheehan,
Hugh Kelly,	Edward Bayer,
Charles O'Connor,	Daniel Devlin.
James Olwell,

JOSEPH STUART, President.
FELIX INGOLDSBY, 1st Vice-President.
JOHN MCMENOMY, 2d Vice-President.
TERENCE DONNELLY, Treasurer.
LOUIS B. BINSSE, Secretary.
PETER CREAR, Accountant.
JOHN MANNING, Comptroller. tf

REMITTANCES TO

ENGLAND, IRELAND AND SCOTLAND.

STERLING BILLS for sale on Messrs. Prescott, Grote & Co., Bankers, London, from £1 upwards, payable on demand, and negotiable in any part of the United Kingdom; also Bank of England Notes and Drafts of any of the English Banks or Bankers, bought and sold.

ap19 1y Prime & Co., 54 Wall street.

DRAFTS FOR £1 AND UPWARDS,

ON THE ROYAL BANK OF IRELAND,

(Expressly authorised by the Bank,)

FOR SALE AT THE BANKING HOUSE OF JOHN B. MURRAY,

No. 44 Wall street, (over Bank of North America,) New-York.

PERSONS wishing to send money to their friends in Europe, can remit it as above, by letter, post-paid, and upon receipt, a draft on the Royal Bank, will be forwarded without charge, to the person designated. 3m*

☞ To prevent loss, every Draft is registered here, and a copy of the register forwarded to the Bank by every mail steamer.

Coal.

COAL.

THE subscriber respectfully informs his friends and the public generally, that he has opened a new Coal Yard, cor. 27th Street and 9th Avenue, where he is prepared to sell the best quality of Red and White Ash Coal, at the lowest market price for cash. Weight warranted, or forfeit coal.

6mos* JOHN MACDONALD.

COAL of the very best quality both Anthracite and Bituminous, for family and manufacturing purposes, for sale by the subscriber from his Yards, 682 Washington, 128 McDougal, and 146 West Thirty-second streets. Also, Coal by the cargo.

ap19 1y Thomas Maher.

Business Notices.

HERRING'S

PATENT CHAMPION FIRE AND BURGLAR PROOF SAFES.

THE great interest manifested by the public to procure more perfect security from Fire for valuable papers, such as BONDS, MORTGAGES, DEEDS, NOTES, and BOOKS OF ACCOUNT than the ordinary SAFES heretofore in use had afforded, induced the subscribers to devote a large portion of time and attention during the past fourteen years in making improvements and discoveries for this object, and they now beg leave to assure their numerous friends and the public generally that their efforts have been crowned with complete success, and now offer the "IMPROVED HERRING'S PATENT WORLD'S FAIR PREMIUM FIRE-PROOF SAFE," as the

CHAMPION SAFE OF THE WORLD!

Having been awarded Medals at both the

World's Fair, London, 1851, and in New-York, 1853,

As superior to all others. It is now undoubtedly entitled to that appellation, and, secured with HALL'S PATENT POWDER-PROOF LOCKS, which also was awarded MEDALS as above), forms the most perfect Fire and Burglar Proof Safes ever offered to the public.

The subscribers also manufacture all kinds of Boiler and Chilled Iron Bank Chests and Vaults, Vault Doors, and Money Boxes or Chests, for Brokers, Jewelers, and Private Families, for Plate, Diamonds, and other Valuables, and are also Patentees (by purchase) and Manufacturers of

JONES' PATENT PERMUTATION BANK LOCK.

SILAS C. HERRING & CO., Patentees,
GREEN BLOCK, Nos. 135, 137 and 138 Water street, New-York. my10 tf

---

Important to the Ladies.

GLENFIELD PATENT STARCH.

FOR the dressing of Laces and all descriptions of fine goods.
This celebrated starch is unrivalled.

ONE TRIAL WILL CONVINCE.

For sale by all respectable druggists and grocers.
3m28ju ROBERT HOSIE, 8 Pine Street, New-York,
Sole Agent for the United States.

S. CAHILL'S

BOOT AND SHOE STORE,

NO. 377 BROADWAY,

(One door below White street), New York.

S. CAHILL respectfully informs his friends, customers, and the public generally, that, having made an extensive addition to his Store, for the better accommodation of his customers, he has now the largest and most extensive BOOT AND SHOE STORE in the world, and is prepared to exhibit the most extensive assortment of

LADIES, MISSES, AND CHILDREN'S, GENTLEMEN'S, BOYS, AND YOUTH'S BOOTS AND SHOES

EVER BEFORE OFFERED TO THE CITIZENS OF NEW YORK.

His facilities for manufacturing on an extensive scale, together with his superb assortment of FRENCH BOOTS and SHOES, received direct from Paris by every steamer, enable him to sell a much better article at much lower prices than can be purchased at any other house in the city. BOOTS AND SHOES OF ALL DESCRIPTIONS MADE TO MEASURE AT THE SHORTEST NOTICE. je28 3mos

Monday, June 16th, and during the week—

LATEST FASHIONS.

THE New Hat Company would here lay before their readers a few of the advantages to be derived from their system of doing business, which is ONE QUALITY, ONE PRICE, AND NO ABATEMENT. In the first place, any gentleman, whether he be a judge of the article or not, can rely upon receiving our first and only quality. Secondly, our price is so low, that the man of the most limited means is enabled to procure a fine and fashionable hat, (at the same time we wish it to be distinctly understood that our hats are not to be excelled by those sold at four dollars by any other establishment,) and lastly, we strive to please. If any gentleman desiring a hat differing from the usual style, will call and leave his order, we shall endeavor to suit him in every respect. The inducements which we offer to wholesale purchasers, and the trade in general, are not to be exceeded by those of any other establishment.

Also, a large assortment of CLOTH CAPS, CHILDREN'S FANCY HATS, UMBRELLAS, &c., constantly on hand at the lowest rates. Nos. 146 and 148 Nassau st. ap26 3m

---

FASHIONABLE HATTER, 223 THIRD AVENUE.

COWHY'S Spring style of Hats, now ready, are superior to anything hitherto offered in Beauty of Shape, and Elegance of Finish. Being a practical hatter himself, Cowhy is enabled to sell A SUPERIOR HAT AT A VERY MODERATE PRICE.

His young gent's hat is one of great beauty, and his assortment of children's fancy hats and caps cannot be surpassed by any other establishment in the city.

N. B.—Hats and Caps made to order, and warranted to fit, by COWHY, 223 Third Avenue, between 19th and 20th streets. my3 1y

---

Edwin A. Brooks, wholesale and retail Boot and Shoe Store, Nos. 575 Broadway, and 150 Fulton street, New-York. Constantly on hand French Calf Skin and Patent Leather Boots, Shoes and Gaiters, made with Dick's Patent Elastic Shanks, and Congress Gaiter Boots; also a large assortment of Ladies' and Children's Gaiters and Shoes, Waterproof and Cork Sole Boots, Perpetual Gloss and Leather Over Shoes.

Boy's and Youth's Boots, Shoes and Over Shoes. my3 3m

Furniture.—F. FITZSIMMONS respectfully calls the attention of his customers and the public to his stock of elegant and substantial FURNITURE, (not made for the auction room) consisting of rich Parlor Suites in rosewood; oak Dining and Chamber Sets of every description; Upholstery in all its branches executed in the best mechanical manner. Prices unexceptionable. Warerooms No. 8 Astor place, near Broadway. my24 3m

---

Lumber and Timber for Export and City Trade.—THOS. RIGNEY & Co. offer for sale AT THEIR YARD FOOT OF THIRTIETH-STREET, North River, a general assortment of LUMBER AND TIMBER, suitable for export and the city trade. SHIPPERS AND BUILDERS will find it to their advantage to examine their stock previous to buying. Apply as above, or to J. PICKARD, Agent, 26 Bridge street. my17 3m*

"TERRA COTTA"

CHIMNEY TOPS,

PLAIN and Ornamental. Drain Pipes of all sizes, superior manufacture lowest rates. LONG ISLAND POTTERY. Depot, 82 Nassau street New-York. my10 3m

---

JAMES O'FLYN.

HOWARD HOTEL,

176 BROADWAY, NEW-YORK.

Advertising Envelope Manufacturer, Embosser, Die Sinker, and General Engraver. Notarial and Lodge Seals, Crests, and Coats of Arms. Seal Presses of every description constantly on hand. 14ju3m

Employment.

EMPLOYMENT OFFICE FOR SERVANTS.

275 BOWERY, NEW-YORK.

MALE and Female Servants can be promptly suited at the above number, with any situation in the city or country, at good wages, in first-rate families, without delay.

N. B. Employers quickly supplied.
3m may 31 ALEXANDER F. RUNGE, Agent.

Wanted, at 766 & 648 Broadway, (near 8th st.) Places procured for conductors, Bookkeepers, Clerks, Salesmen, Firemen, Brakemen, Barkeepers, Porters, Waiters, men on Steamers and Railroads, boys for trades, and girls of every description. 21my3m

French, English, and German spoken. LOUIS KAUFMAN, Agent.

EMPLOYMENT OFFICE for Servants, 129 Waverley Place, two doors from Sixth avenue, New-York.—A large number of competent help can be suited with good situations, in city and country, without delay. Employers in the city and country supplied with the best of female help. [my17 3m] WM. O'BRIEN, Proprietor.

NEW-YORK EMPLOYMEMT OFFICE.

480 Broadway.

HONEST, capable, and faithful servants can at all times find good situations at this office. Protestant and Catholic have equal privilege. Established in 1844 by [3m21ju] T. P. SAUNDERS.

European News.

The screw steamship Canadian arrived from Liverpool at Quebec on July 15, bringing Liverpool dates to 2nd inst. The Niagara arrived at Halifax (on its way to Boston) on the same day, with three days later intelligence from Europe.

Great Britain.

The "American Difficulty" continued to be the chief topic of talk. Mr. Moore had moved in the House of Commons that the conduct of her Majesty's Government, in the differences that have arisen between them and the United States, on the question of enlistment, have not entitled them to the approbation of the House. This led to a warm debate. Messrs. Brown and Ewart, of Liverpool, and Cheeham and Spooner, of Birmingham, appealed to Mr. Moore to postpone his motion, but he refused. The Attorney General defended the Government. Sir F. Thesiger supported the motion, and contended that the British agents had violated equally the law of the United States and of nations. Mr. Phillimore went for the Government. Mr. Baillie declared that England dishonored herself by attempting to seduce the citizens of the United States from their allegiance. Sir Geo. Gray asked the House if they could venture to condemn the Government after they had stopped the enlistment, even on British ground, rather than give offence to the United States. Sir J. Walsh said that by not dismissing Mr. Dallas, the British Government confessed that they had done wrong, and their defence rested upon special pleading. The debate was here adjourned, and the next evening was resumed by Mr. Milner Gibson, who complained that Lord Clarendon's conduct was insulting towards the United States, and the British people did not support their minister therein. Mr. Baxter would not censure, although there were points in Lord Clarendon's conduct that no one could defend. Mr. Peacock supported the censure. Mr. Spooner would express no opinion. Mr. Gladstone said the most blameable feature in the matter was the concealment observed toward the United States Government; for this Lord Clarendon and Mr. Crampton were equally to blame. The Solicitor-General attacked Mr. Gladstone, and also the United States Government. Sir J. Packington eulogized Mr. Gladstone. Lord Palmerston replied at length, defending his conduct and denying that deception had been practised towards the United States, or that their laws had been violated. Mr. McGregor here attempted to address the House but was coughed down. The House then divided on the motion for censure, and the Government was sustained by 194 majority.

Thus Parliament approves the course of Clarendon and Crampton. Negotiations for the settlement of the Central American difficulty were resumed on the 30th ult., and it was believed, with a favorable prospect of a successful termination.

Professor Mahan, the gentleman refused admittance to the Queen's levee, writes to the papers that he took every precaution respecting his costume.

In a reply to a query put by Mr. Bailie in the Commons, Lord Palmerston said it was understood that Mr. Dallas has full power to discuss with her Majesty's government the Central American question. Mr. Buchanan had no instructions whatever on this subject.

There has been an immense demand for American Securities since the political aspect of affairs between England and the United States had changed.

The Earl of Shelburne is appointed under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, and will be raised to the Peerage by his present title. Sir W. Williams of Kars, will succeed him as Representative in Parliament.

Cape of Good Hope advices to April 24 bring unfavorable accounts respecting the tranquillity of the frontier. Another Caffre war seems imminent. New Zealand dates to May 3 had been received by the Ship London, and the colonies were progressing favorably.

The weather continued magnificent for the harvest and another fortnight of the same would secure the farmers here from all danger of a change in their prospects. The Grain Crops were all harvested and abundant. The Potato Crop will fall short in consequence of the heavy rains.

FRANCE.

Reports have been for some time current that unpleasantness existed between the courts of France and Russia, and that Count Morny's departure for St. Petersburg was delayed in consequence. As Morny was about ready to embark, the difference is probably arranged. The report of the Committee of the Corps Legislatif, refusing to accord to the Emperor the power of granting pensions, is published. It is respectful but firm, and is considered the severest check Napoleon has yet met from his Government.

The bill granting pensions to the Orleans Princesses was voted unanimously, although Count Montalembert wrote a strong letter against it, and the Duchess of Saxe Coburg indignantly refused the money. The juvenile Count of Paris has written a letter to M. Roger, repudiating the fusion, and saying that himself, his mother and brother do not recognize the interference of the other members of the Orleans family, and that he reserved himself for the future. The letter has made considerable sensation in Orleanist circles, and the Orleans Princes have written angry letters respecting the juvenile's interference.

Accounts of the weather and the crops throughout the country, even in the lately inundated districts, are favorable. Harvesting had commenced in the South the vineyards also look well.

RUSSIA.

An imperial ukase orders the issue of twelve millions of silver roubles. Immense preparations are making at Moscow for the Czar's coronation.

The Emperor continues his severity against defaulters and contrabandists. Letters say that the government seems inclined to modify the Customs tariff, particularly as regards its raw produce employed by foreign manufacturers.

SPAIN.

The papers give accounts of the recent riots at Badajos, Valladolid and other cities. They seem to have been of serious magnitude, and of an insurrectionary character. The high price of food was the ostensible cause of the riots, but the people really were excited by political emissaries. Numerous arrests were made, and many of the prisoners shot. Tranquility was finally restored, when the Government announced that the crops presented a good prospect, and that there was ample supply in store until the harvest set in. The export of Breadstuffs was prohibited,

It was announced that a second squadron of ships of war, with troops for disembarkation in Mexico, was ready to sail from Havana should Mexico refuse to satisfy the demands of Spain

ITALY.—Affairs in Parma were becoming worse, and insurrection was feared. The clerical journals of Turin say, that France has addressed a note to Sardinia, counselling moderation on the Italian question.

GERMANY.—The ministerial journal, the "Zeit," publishes the Customs proposition submitted by Prussia to the Zollverein. It proposes that breadstuffs, wheat, beans, peas, lentils, millet and vetches, shall be admitted at a duty of two pence halfpenny per Prussian bushel; and rye, barley, oats and buckwheat at 3s. 6d., with the provision that the Zollverein shall renounce the demand for the free entry of rye, when it shall attain the price of two dollars and a half to four dollars the Prussian bushel.

GREECE.—King Otho is in Vienna. It is rumored that a diplomatic conference will be held in London on the succession to the throne of Greece. Austria and Prussia, although not protecting powers, will be represented. The Count of Flanders is mentioned as being likely to be nominated on King Otho's death.

DENMARK correspondence states ahat Denmark has fears of renewed troubles in Schleswig-Holstein, and is taking military precautions against them. Austria and Prussia are preparing proposals on the subject to lay before the German Diet.

THE EAST.—Letters from the Crimea to June 4, mention nothing but the continued embarkation of the troops. General Rudger was dead.

The Moldo-Wallachia Commission advances but slowly, topographical difficulties completely neutralizing the intention of the treaty. Ali Pacha during his stay at Vienna succeeded in settling that the Danubian Principalities should remain separated.

General Intelligence.

The Russians are fitting out an emigrating fleet at Cronstadt for the river Amoor.

A letter from Athens, says, that during the present month a conference of the three protecting powers will be held in London to settle the affairs of Greece.

A bill has been introduced by the Government into the House of Commons to permit distillation from Rice.

The Sunday music controversy continued to expand.

Sir Colin Campbell has been entertained by the City of Glasgow.

The King of Belgium and family were visiting Queen Victoria.

The Queen and the people of London are to give the Guards from the Crimea a public reception.

Dyce Sombre's celebrated will in favor of the East India Company has been set aside and his immense fortune goes to his widow.

The prospectus of the New-Brunswick and Canada Railway and Land Company, to purchase and complete the St. Andrews and Quebe Railroad, has been issued.

It was reported that Percy Doyle, British Minister at Mexico, will be removed to Hanover.

The projected meeting between the Emperors of Austria and France is confirmed.

New docks for a steam navy are to be built at Brest.

The weather had at last become fine in Portugal, but it was feared that the crops had already suffered from too much rain. Breadstuffs had been purchased in England for Portuguese account.

A general meeting of tobacco manufacturers, from all parts of Zollverein, had assembled at Hanover. The object of their conference was to ward off the menaced increase of imported and indigenous tobacco, specially pressed by Bavaria and some other States.

The harvest throughout Prussia will be rather above than below the average.

Sweden has officially confirmed the fact that she adheres to the declaration of maratime law laid down by the Congress of Paris.

An Italian paper publishes a telegraphic report that Mr. Dallas and all his suite, attired in frock coats, demanded admission into the presence of the Queen of England, and that being refused, they went away in a flaming passion.

Amongst the marriage stipulations of Donna Amelia and Prince Adelbert of Bavaria is one to the effect that the wedding shall take place at Madrid, and another that the princess shall not be followed into Bavaria by any Spanish lady—all her present attendants being destined to leave her on the frontier.

The French Minister of War has decided that the 93,000 soldiers about to be discharged on furlough shall consist of 65,640 infantry, 13,914 cavalry, 9,552 artillery, and the rest from the engineers and the baggage train.

The King of Sardinia has sent a sum of 20,000f. from his private purse for the relief of the sufferers by the inundations in France.

Twelve boulevards are now in course of construction in Paris—the boulevard de Sebastopol, the boulevard from the Pont de l'Alma to Chaillot, the Boulevard du Nord, that parallel to the Seine, on the left bank of the river, and seven boulevards starting from the Triumphal Arch at the top of the Champs Elysees.

Count George Esterhazy, Austrian Minister to Prussia, died at Berlin on the 24th ult., of inflammation of the lungs.

The value of a cargo of silk landed at Southampton lately, from the Indian mail steamer Pera, is estimated at £250,000.

The importation of gold into France, during 1855, was 310,000,000 francs, of silver 120,000,000 francs; the exportation of gold was 162,000,000 francs, of silver 318,000,000 francs.

The new act of Parliament regarding crossed checks is now in force; a check crossed with a banker's name is payable only to or through some banker.

The London subscriptions for the sufferers by the inundations in France now amount to some £20,000.

Central American News.

NICARAGUA.

The intelligence brought from Nicaragua by the Orizaba, with dates to the 31st ult., is of a deeply important and interesting character. General Walker, after quelling an attempted insurrection by Rivas and others, was elected President, no doubt, by a tremendous majority, on the 24th instant.

Whole districts went to the polls for Gen. Walker, with only a very few opposing votes. The official returns had not been made at the last dates from Granada, but there was no doubt that Gen. Walker was elected by an overwhelming majority—the common people looking upon him as their deliverer from the oppression and injustice of the native leaders. The army has received large reinforcements, numbering now about 1,800 men and two fine artillery companies, with six field pieces.

Many of the soldiers who enlisted for a short term of service have received their discharges, taken up land, and gone to farming.

A silver mine in Chontales, owned by Major J. P. Heiss, of Washington, has been opened, and twenty tons of ore were shipped to England by the British steamer Clyde, which sailed from San Juan on the 6th inst. It is estimated, from primary assays made at the mine, that this ore will yield from $700 to $800 per ton.

The following extracts and documents embrace the most interesting details of late movements in the spunky Republic :—

DISSOLUTION OF THE LATE PROVISIONAL GOVERNMENT.

From the El Nicaraguense, June 21.

Patricio Rivas and his Cabinet have deserted, bag and baggage! Last week we published from the pen of his Excellency a proclamation of the most intensely patriotic description. Three days afterwards he fled, frightened at his own guilty conscience! We breathe freer! The treason, which all expected, has transpired, and the government has no further necessity to divide its counsels with those in whom it has no confidence!

On Wednesday, the 11th day of June, General Walker left Leon, after a most affecting parting with his Excellency at the barrier. At this time Leon was guarded by native soldiers. The Americans interfered with nothing, that the city might feel perfectly safe under the guardianship of troops drawn from its own vicinity. The day after General Walker left, Colonel Escobar, commander of the native garrison, informed Colonel Bruno Natzmer that the native force was not sufficient to keep guard, and requested a detail of Americans. Compliance was signified, and an American soldier stationed at the entrance of the Principal, or Government House. Senor Salizar, Minister of War, thereupon mounted his horse and rode down to the barriers bareheaded, where he informed the rabble, in an official harangue, that the Americans had seized the Principal, and were about to murder the President and his Cabinet. In his speech he also took occasion to advise the people that the Americans were going to burn down the churches and destroy the religion of the country. A great excitement was the result, during which the President and his advisers took flight for Chinandega. The Americans in the meantime were innocent in knowledge of what was proceeding; and although they knew there was a hubbub about something, they very naturally thought it was some public day among the people, when they had a right to be excited.

Don Patricio Rivas, President of the Republic; Don Sebastian Salinas, Secretary of State; Don Maximo Jerez, Secretary of War; and Don Francisco Baca, Minister of Public Credit, all fled to Chinandega, leaving Don Fermin Ferber, the only true and loyal Democrat connected with the late administration, in this city.

From Chinandega, Don Maximo Jerez, in his capacity as Minister of War, sent word to Realejo to suspend the public work of fortifying that place, and directed that the place be dismantled of its present armament. Orders were also sent to Col. Natzmer, in command at Leon, to withdraw his sentry from the Principal, and allow each of the two towers of the Cathedral to be garrisoned by fifty soldiers of the country. The frontier picquets were all called in and a very general order carried out to leave the State open to the army of invasion, which was known to be advancing on Leon. The President expressed great fear of his life, and stated that the above regulations were necessary for his safety.

The order sent to Colonel Natzmer was not obeyed until it was submitted to General Walker, who immediately ordered the American commander in Leon to comply with the mandates of the Minister of War; and further, to withdraw with his whole force from that city.

At the time General Walker gave the above command, he was in Nagarote, at the head of 250 troops, marching on Leon; but after giving that order, he stopped at Managua until the Rifle Battalion, under Lieut. Colonel Anderson arrived, when he left for Granada, accompanied by the Rangers.

President Rivas and his Cabinet, with the exception of Don Fermin Ferber, are now in Leon; but the commander will have no further communication with them. They are known to have made propositions to the enemies of the country, inviting them to invade Nicaragua, and General Walker intends to leave them with their new friends.

The above is a succinct account of one of the strangest revolutions on record, and we leave the world to draw its own conclusions as to the motives that probably controlled the President in his conduct. We can only account for it on the ground of fear, both from the external enemies of the State and from the fact of an approaching election. It is well known that whenever an election has taken place in this Republic, the defeated candidate either fled or was summarily executed. It is probable his Excellency remembered this failing of the State, and knowing that an election was about to transpire in the country, he accordingly concluded to follow the example of his predecessors and save himself by flight. It is also known that while the Costa Ricans were in Rivas, and timid men doubted the result, Senor Rivas attempted to make his peace with President Mora, by submitting propositions to that gentleman.

This circumstance convinces us that the approach of an election and an invading army at the same time so frightened President Rivas that he hardly knew what he was doing; and in a moment of partial insanity and chronic deceitfulness, he left the Presidency and thus lost all hope for the future.

After the flight of the President from Leon, the people of that city became uneasy at the speech of Senor Salizar, and anxiously inquired of the Fathers of the Church if there was any truth in the statement that the Americans intended to destroy the religion of the land. The Vicar of Leon, a good and faithful man, instantly denied the calumny, and ordered all the priests to declare on Sunday that the report was untrue. The people again became reconciled, and the revulsion sets strongly against President Rivas and his advisers.

A provisional government was immediateiy appointed for the Republic, during the interregnum between the flight of Rivas and the new election. The following formed the Executive :

President—Don Fermin Ferrer.
Secretary of State—Gen. Manuel Carrascosa.
Secretary of War—Gen. Mateo Pineda.
Secretary of Treasury—Don Manuel Loredo.

DECREE.

William Walker, General-in-Chief of the Army of Nicaragua, considering :

That, by the treaty of the 23d of October last, Don Patricio Rivas was named as the Provisional President of the Republic, and that the power with which he was invested was an emanation of the powers conferred upon me by the Supreme Government as Expedientary General :

That, on the Provisional President removing from the city of Granada to Leon, in March last, he delegated to me all the powers which had been intrusted to him to maintain order in the Eastern and Southern Departments of the Republic, and to guard in each against foreign invasion, proclaiming from that time martial law :

That the Provisional President appointed as Minister of Hacienda Licentiate, Don Fermin Ferrer, Commissioner in the Departments referred to, with all proper powers to aid me in my administration on suitable occasions.

That the Provisional President, Don Patricio Rivas, betraying his duties to the prejudice of the rights and well-being of the Government, has absconded to Chinandega with the object to disarm all the frontier of the West and deliver the country to the forces of Carrera, who have invaded it ; for which object he has commissioned Mr. Mariano Salizar.

That, on the 14th of this month, Mr. Rivas has issued a decree which repeals a decree which was issued four days previous, by which the people of Nicaragua are to choose a successor to him in office.

That, by the treaty of the 23d of October, it was explicitly guaranteed by the two contracting Generals that the Provisional President should maintain peace and order in the Republic, and that Don Patricio Rivas not only has endeavored to excite anarchy within, but has called the enemies without to invade the same.

In order to preserve the integrity of the Republic and the sacred duty to save the country from anarchy, and from its enemies foreign and domestic, I have deemed it proper to decree, and do

DECREE :

I. The Commissioner of the Government and Minister of the Hacienda, Don Fermin Ferrer, is appointed Provisional President of this Republic until the people shall elect a President, in obedience to the orders of the decree of the 10th inst., which is in full force and virtue.

II. In consequence, all the acts and decrees issued by order of Don Patricio Rivas, since the 12th inst., are null and void, in consequence of his desertion of all the trusts confided to him by virtue of the treaty of the 23d of October aforesaid.

III. The civil or military authorities of this Republic who lend obedience to Mr. Rivas in these matters, natives or foreigners who may render to him any kind of aid, by loans or mercantile contracts, shall be considered as traitors to the country, and punished according to martial laws.

IV. Let this be communicated to whom it may concern, and published in all the towns of this Republic.

William Walker.

Done at Granada on the 20th day of June, 1856.

Address of General Walker

TO THE PEOPLE OF NICARAGUA.

I came to Nicaragua to secure its peace and prosperity. With this view I signed the treaty of the 23d of October last, and assisted to uphold the Government organized under its provisions.

But the Government, far from aiding me to carry out the agreement of that treaty, has thrown obstacles in the way, and has ended by endeavoring to stir up civil strife within the Republic. Strange as it may appear, the late Rivas Administration has attempted to create troubles and difficulties and war between the people and the Americans they have invited hither.

It was not enough that the Americans should endure the pestilence at Granada for the purpose of consolidating the late Provisional Government, and receive no compensation for the services they rendered at the expense of so much suffering and so much death. It was not enough that they should pour out their blood at Rivas, in order to maintain the peace and honor of the State, and then have the Government refuse to provide them with the bare necessaries of life. Ingratitude was not sufficient to satisfy the craving for infamy which consumed the vitals of Government, and treason became necessary in order to furnish fresh food to the appetite for obloquy and contempt. They seek to repay their debt to the Americans by exciting the people against their benefactors.

It is thus manifest that the late Provisional Government has not only failed to fulfil its promises to the Americans, and its duties to the people, but is guilty of the enormous crime of instigating its citizens to civil war. And to aid in these objects, it has coalesced with the armed and declared enemies of the Republic—with the forces an illiterate savage attempts to pour over the plains of Nicaragua.

In addition, the Government has attempted to prclong its existence, by taking from the people the privilege of electing their own rulers. And as if farther to mark its hatred for freedom, it has banished from the State a Cuban patriot, who, despairing for the present of his own country, has sought in this land the honor of using his sword in defence of liberty and progress.

With such accumulated crimes—conspiring against the very people it was bound to protect—the late Provisional Government is no longer worthy of existence. In the name of the people I have, therefore, declared its dissolution, and have organized a Provisional Government until the nation exercises its natural right of electing its own rulers.

William Walker.

Granada, June 20, 1856.

Address of Gen. Walker

TO THE ARMY.

Soldiers! Since you have been in Nicaragua, you have endured privations and passed through dangers, not only without murmurs, but even with cheerfulness. Veterans might be proud of the prowess you have exhibited; and patriots fighting for homes and firesides have seldom shown more self-denial than you have in the service of a foreign Government; and you have done all without having as yet received any compensation for what you have undergone.

It is true that the country has just emerged from a disastrous civil war, and therefore we did not expect to pay promptly the obligations it contracted; but we had a right to expect, at least, gratitude for our services. Far from receiving even this reward, the late Provisional Government has attempted to excite the prejudices of the people against their benefactors.

A Government thus bankrupt in credit, faith and honor, has no title to the confidence or respect of brave soldiers. Duty to ourselves as well as to the nation requires us to construct a new Administration, which will more faithfully execute the object of its creation. I have, therefore, organized a new Provisional Government, until the people can select their own rulers, when, it is to be hoped, we will have an Administration more mindful of its duties and more jealous of the honor of the State.

William Walker.

Granada, June 20, 1856.

GUATEMALA AND SAN SALVADOR ON THE MARCH.

By advices from Guatemala and San Salvador to the 5th inst., says El Nicaraguense, of the 31st ult., we are in possession of the the fact that, without any official declaration of war, the governments of these two States had combined in a hostile league against this Republic, and the vanguard of an invading force was already in the field and on the road hither. From Leon, the present seat of government, we have the official proclamation of this government, directed against Guatemala, that unless that State recognised the existing government of Nicaragua, this Republic would be forced to the extremity of a declaration of war, to vindicate its honor. Thus both States have assumed an attitude of hostility ; and already the anxiety consequent on a condition of war agitates the people's minds.

It is useless to comment on the wrong and folly of the movement thus initiated by the illiterate tyrant who holds the reins of power in Guatemala. Carrera is the front of this offence ; and by the time he has finished with it, there is a strong probability he will discredit the strength of his brutal despotism over the hearts and properties of the people whose power he has usurped and abused for twelve long years.

We have no positive advices as to the proceedings of the army of invasion further than that on the 5th of May one thousand men left the city of Guatemala, as the vanguard of the invading army. This force was to march into San Salvador, where it would be joined by the forces of that Republic, and thus augmented, march on to Leon. An army of reserve was to be sent from Guatemala, probably under the command of Carrera himself. The vanguard as detailed by both States, was to consist of two thousand men, and the actual army of three thousand more.

This was the plan of the campaign, but unfortunately for the enterprise, on the arrival of the vanguard at San Miguel, out of the thousand men with which he started, only four hundred men stood by the expedition, the balance making it convenient to have private business in the mountains. In San Miguel, of the first two hundred volunteers pressed into the service, over one hundred deserted ; and when Gen. Mora, the President of the Republic, made an exciting speech to the citizens and soldiers, the majority expressed their sympathies for the old Democratic principle by crying "Vive General Walker!" All these mentioned circumstances reduce the aspect of the Northern invasion to a shadow of strength ; and if anybody is frightened, it must be somebody whose cowardice is a settled disease.

By way of information we may state that the Northern Departments of this Republic are well defended. The last eight months have been devoted to fortifying Leon, and that city is now in a condition to withstand any force the Northern States may send against it. Realjo is also well fortified ; and when the rifle battalion is safe within the walls of the former city, we may content ourselves with the satisfactory belief that the country is safe! The General and his staff, together with the rifles, will start to-day for the North ; and if Carrera wishes to see a free fight he had better come down.

Costa Rica.

We have dates from Costa Rica to June 12. The cholera was fast disappearing from the country.

A very strong revolution had broken out against the Government, and there appeared a probability that President Mora would be taken out and shot by the insurgents. The revolution has been brought about by a party of the Costa Ricans who were opposed to the invasion of Nicaragua by the Mora army. Business was entirely at a stand still at Punta Arenas, provisions scarce and high, and the prospects very poor. A British vessel of war is in port.

Panama.

The United States Commissioner, Amos B. Corwine, Esq., is almost through with his labors. The Panama Star and Herald says, that after the most scrutinizing investigation and unremitting exertions, he has placed himself in possession of such an amount of evidence respecting the outrages committed on our countrymen here on the 15th April last, as proves most fully that the natives and authorities of this place are alone to blame for that horrible massacre. Mr. Corwine will probably proceed to Washington by the next or succeeding steamer.

Further disturbances have taken place, an account of which may be abridged as follows, from a Panama letter, dated May 29th :

On the evening of the 21st instant a report got started in town that the Sierra Nevada had arrived in the Bay of Panama, and had on board five hundred and fifty fillibusters ; in a few moments eight hundred armed negroes were at the call of the Governor Fabrega, to pitch into them and the Americans generally. The Plaza Santa Anna (the rendezvous of the negroes who murdered and robbed the Americans on the nignt of April 15) was covered with negroes anxious for an excuse to pitch into the few Americans in Panama and rob them before assistance could be rendered from the St. Mary's. Fortunately we had a few Americans who had some influence over the natives, and through their exertions a repetition of the massacre of April 15 was prevented. Things were quieted down the next day by an article in the Star and Herald, which stated that the St. Mary's would not allow fillibusters to land, and so we kept quiet until Sunday.

On Sunday morning, a crowd of sailors and firemen (discharged by Consul Ward from the Uncle Sam) were going through the streets creating a great disturbance, and exciting the natives. About nine o'clock one of the coal-passers (very drunk) of the Cortes went into a drinking-house on Main-street, and called for a "cock-tail," which the bar-keeper refused to give him, seeing that he was drunk, upon which the coal-passer pulled out a Colt's revolver and snapped three barrels at the bar-keeper. Just as he let his hand drop down, the pistol went off, and the ball went through the floor.

In a moment the streets of Panama were crowded with natives, "armed for the strife," a report having got in circulation that an American had shot a native. The coal-passer ran for the Plaza, pistol in hand, and bidding the police defiance. The French Consul, anxious to quiet the excitement, ran in to close with him, and after a severe struggle, in which the coal-passer shot off his pistol at the Consul, he succeeded in throwing down the drunken fellow and taking away his pistol ; he was then arrested and locked up. The excitement was so great that the American Consul threw up three rockets, the signal for the St. Mary's to land her marines, and in twelve minutes Captain Bailey had his boats, armed and manned, at the beach—ready to protect the lives of the Americans ; the troops, however, did not land ; and after the excitement wore off, Captain Bailey returned to his ship. Thus passed Sunday night.

On Monday, all day, things were quiet, although every American in Panama was aware that there was an organized troop of eight hundred natives, well armed and having plenty of ammunition, outside the walls, in the "Cienega," around the Plaza de Santa Anna and the Plaza de San Jose.

City News.

Mystery and Murder in Broadway.

Bartholomew Burke, porter at Mr. Joyce's tailoring establishment in Broadway, at the corner of White street, was found murdered and mangled on the morning of the 18th inst. The circumstances created a deep excitement.

The building No. 378 Broadway, corner of White street, in which the murder was committed, is three stories in height. In the basement Mr. Klawder keeps a saloon. The first floor is occupied as a saddlery and harness shop, the second floor by Mr. Samuel Joyce as a tailoring establishment, and the third floor by Mr. Cevallo as a residence.

Burke, in the employ of Mr. Joyce, slept in the store every night as a watchman. His bed, a cot, was situated in the rear of the store behind the cutting-board.

On Thursday evening (17th) the store was closed, the proprietors, salesmen, &c., went away, and Burke was left behind, as usual. He was perfectly sober.

The next morning, Mr. Watson, Mr. Joyce's foreman, was the first person to arrive at the store. Finding the door locked he knocked several times, and receiving no answer, had the door locks picked. When he entered he beheld a shocking sight. Blood was thickly besprinkled on the floor, cutting-board, and on the cot in which Burke slept. Everything in the room seemed displaced, and betokened a dreadful and bloody struggle. A sword-sheath lay on the bed, half hid among the clothes, and about twenty feet distant lay a naked sword, while a flat or pressing iron, a hammer, and other blunt instruments were scattered around, besmeared with blood.

The deceased, without any clothing except a linen shirt, lay in a cramped up position in a corner formed by a set of bureau drawers and the side wall of the building. The legs, arms, and in fact the entire body was covered with blood. The hands were closed, as if death had not taken place without some violent struggle. The throat was cut in a most shocking manner. The gash inflicted must have been at least six inches in length and about an inch and a half in depth. The flesh over the left collar bone and in close proximity to the neck was cut in several places with some sharp instrument. The wounds appeared to have been inflicted with a razor. Across the entire forehead, about three or four inches above the eyes, was a fracture of the skull, produced by the edge of some sharp instrument ; as the "goose" was covered with blood, the presumption is, that the blow upon the skull was given with this iron.

The face of the deceased was somewhat contorted, but, strange to say, there was a smile, as it were, upon the ghastly countenance of the murdered man. It is quite evident that the death struggle took place here, for everything betokens the presence of violence. The left hand of the deceased was cut in different places with a knife, showing conclusively that he made a desperate effort to preserve his life, but, unhappily, without effect.

The family of Mr. Cevallo, although occupying the floor directly above the one where the murder was committed, knew nothing of the affair till the morning.

Burke was unmarried, a native of Ireland, aged 35, and had a steady and temperate character. He had been for ten years in the employ of Mr. Joyce, by whom he was well liked. Furthermore, he was economical, and had over $900 in the Seamen's and Chambers street Savings Banks. His book on the former Bank was in that institution to be examined and arranged. The one on the Seamen's Bank was in his trunk, and was taken away by the murderer. He was also in the habit of keeping in the same trunk more or less money to meet any sudden calls. The trunk was emptied of everything valuable. These things would seem to indicate that the deed was done in part for the sake of plunder.

On the Coroner's inquest, Honora Leahy, servant to Mr. Cevallo, deposed to having seen, about half-past 9 o'clock, a short man in a drab coat and straw hat give three knocks at Burke's door ; she thought the man was the same with whom Burke spent 4th of July.

Ellen Pollman, who was sitting opposite the windows fronting White street, "saw two men sitting in Mr. Joyce's room ; deceased was the left hand side of the window, with a glass of beer in his hands ; Burke had told her "he had angry words with a boarder."

William Mars, barkeeper in Klawder's saloon, deposed as follows :—About eleven oclock a man came into the bar ; he was about (?) feet high, rather stout, a red face, red whiskers, which did not reach near the ears ; he wore a light-colored coat and a straw or Kossuth hat ; he asked did I trust ; I told him not ; gave him a drink, and he came back and paid ; he then said, "treat me now ;" told him I never treated behind the bar, only when I was out of the house ; he then said, "give me some ham ;" I told him to take some, which he did, and he then took the knife with him ; if I saw the man I would be able to recognize him.

The witness then gave a description of the knife taken by the unknown man. It was a large cheese knife.

American News.

Dreadful Disaster!

A CATHOLIC SCHOOL EXCURSION WRECKED.

A terrible affair occurred on the morning of the 17th inst., on the Northern Pennsylvania Railroad, a short distance from Philadelphia, by which from thirty to forty lives were lost.

It is sickening and terrifying to read the horrible particulars of this most lamentable event; and the horror it excites is heightened by the thought that all this suffering and wretchedness, all the precious lives that have been sacrificed and the wounds that have been inflicted, were the result of the most reckless carelessness, the most criminal want of ordinary caution on the part of the officials to whose care the lives of so many human beings were entrusted. Early on the morning alluded to, there went off a happy and cheerful company, composed chiefly of little children, who had with them their parents, pastors and teachers, to spend the day in the innocent pleasures of a pic-nic. They were the children of a Roman Catholic Sunday School, and, altogether, numbered Eleven Hundred persons! Their destination was but a short distance from their homes—only fourteen miles—and yet this great cargo of human beings were sent off upon a railroad without the slightest precaution having been taken to guard against accidents; and scarcely had the train been got under way, when there came dashing along at a fearful speed, another train, from an opposite direction. The collision was terrible beyond the power of language to describe. In an instant the ground was spread with desolation. More than a hundred human beings lay crushed, bleeding, burning, dead, mutilated and dying, and the happy holiday party was converted into the most distressed assemblage that the sun ever shone upon.

The down train escaped without serious damage, but the scene presented by the excursion train was fearful. The three forward cars of the train were crushed completely to pieces, and the wreck, mingling with that of the locomotive took fire, and the flames communicated to the other cars of the train. The two next cars after the three that were wrecked outright took fire, and were entirely consumed.

The inmates of the three forward cars were completely mixed up with the wreck, and a large number of them were killed outright. There were probably fifty persons in each of the three cars, and the lowest estimate we heard, fix the number of killed at fifty, while it was feared the dread aggregate would reach one hundred.

LIST OF WOUNDED.

John Divine, cut in the head.
Barney Green, right leg cut off.
James McDonough, right arm cut off.
John Ryan, both legs cut off.
John Kelly, hand badly cut.
John Branker, right leg broken.
James Mahony, left foot crushed.
Aaron E. Hallowell, slightly bruised.
Bernard Ronahan, both legs cut off.
Joseph Edwards, the baggage-master of the down train, leg broken.
Bernard Masterson, his head and legs crushed badly—cannot survive.
Peter Curran, 14 years, left foot crushed.
Patrick Hickey, skull fractured.
Peter Harvy, engineer of up train, dreadfully crushed—not expected to live.
David F. Kelly, ear cut off and head bruised.
Albert Hopple, conductor of up train, badly injured.
Aaron Jacoby, head bruised and ribs broken.
James Conlin, head dreadfully lacerated and both legs broken.
Thomas Kelly, 10 years of age, leg broken.
Bridget Quinn, head dreadfully cut.
David Marlow, 12 years of age, cut about the head and limbs crushed.
Michael Bedford, badly burned about the legs and head. Not expected to recover.
James Mahoney cut over the eyes and legs crushed.
Timothy O'Leary, legs badly injured.
Margaret Quin, 15 years of age, cut about the head.
Elizabeth Gun, cut severely about the head.
Patrick McIntyre, badly cut about the head.
John Day, 7 years of age, right ancle sprained.
Mary Dougherty, badly cut about the head.
John Mahony, leg broken.
Wm. Street, both legs broken.
David Foley, cut about the body.
Michael O'Brien, legs crushed, and sides and back dreadfully injured.
James Bradley, ankle sprained.
James Early, one leg broken and seriously injured.
Mary McAleer, both legs horribly crushed. She cannot survive.
Julia Streehan, badly bruised and somewhat cut.
Charles Sheick, 15 years, leg injured.
Catherine Neelis, bruised about the head.
Francis Sharp, crushed about the stomach and legs. Fatally injured.
Wm. McQuigan, both feet crushed, and badly bruised about the head and body.
Alexander Allen, legs broke and cut about the head.
Agnes Donovan, left arm broken and back bruised.
Catharine Donovan, back badly bruised.
Casey Craner, badly bruised.
John McClaren, badly bruised about the breast, and ribs broken.
John Campbell, badly cut about the head.
John Bagens, fireman of the up train, awfully cut and bruised.
John Ryans, both legs broken, cannot recover.
Elizabeth Corr, 12 years, cut about the head.
Mary Ann, hand crushed, head badly cut.
William Dugan, dreadfully cut and bruised about the back.
Daniel Dugan, 18 years of age, right leg broken and left leg crushed.
Francis Fluery, right leg and left collar bone broken.
John Callohan, back supposed to be broken and legs bruised.
Henry O'Brien, both legs broken, and dangerously injured.
Ellen McElroy, right leg broken.
Catherine Cokely, badly cut about the head and arms; legs dreadfully bruised.
Michael Cokely (six years), cut over the eye.
Michael Cokely, dreadfully bruised.
Jane Devlin, cut very badly and leg burned.
Anne McGurke, right foot dreadfully crushed.
Mary O'Daniel, back and hip bruised.

THE DEAD.

1. Hugh Campbell, residing in Jefferson street, between Cadwallader and Washington, aged fifteen.
2. Mary Kelly, residing in Charlotte street, burned up in the cars.
3. James McIntyre, sixteen years of age, dead; residing in Washington street, above Jefferson.
4. Mr. ——, unknown white man, burned up; nothing left but a few bones and his shoes.
5. Mrs. ——, unknown white woman, dreadfully mangled.
6. Miss ——, unknown white girl, dressed in white, head crushed.
7. John Duggan, residing in Master street, below Germantown road.
8. —— ——. unknown white man, head crushed.
9. John Rivers, dead. Resided in Cadwalader street, second door below Oxford.
10. James Hickey, dead. Resided corner of Philip and Jefferson streets.
11. Rev. Daniel Sheridan of St. Michael's Church, dead. Resided in Second street, above Master. He was crushed in a dreadful manner between two cars.
12. William Barnard, residing in Cadwalader street, near Master. Was burned up before he could be rescued.
13. Henry Harris, engineer, aged 21 years, died on the way to the cars; his injuries were of a dreadful character.
14. John Dutson, resided near Frankfort road and Washington avenue. Employed in a machine-shop.
15. James Rey, residing in Cadwallader street below Oxford. Body dreadfully crushed.
28. Eleven bodies of men and women and two children were burned to death in one car. The names are unknown. They were caught under the side of one of the cars and roasted alive! When we saw the remains they presented a horrid spectacle.
33. The mutilated remains of four men and women and a child were dug from beneath the engine and tender.
34. The remains of a small child were found under the ruins of the engine, in the ash-pan.
40. The remains of six other bodies were raked out of the ashes and placed on the grass opposite to where the accident happened.

These numbers will probably be increased, as some of the wounded will probably die, and there are some whose injuries are not known.

A further dispatch gives the following as the names, as far as can be obtained, of the sufferers:

Daniel Sheridan (body not recovered); Henry Harrison, engineer of the up train; Hugh Campbell, Mary Kelly, James McIntire, John Dogan, Edward Hall, John Rivers, Jas. Hickey, Wm. Barnard, Henry Harris, Mary McDrain, Catherine McGurk, Ellen Clark, Catherine McGurgan, Kate McGirr, John Brady, Margaret Meany, John McGuire, Jas. Carney.

In addition to these, seventeen bodies were counted beneath the ruins of the cars, mostly consumed. Eleven men and women and two children were consumed in one car. The total killed is thirty-nine, and wounded, sixty-nine.

SUICIDE OF THE CONDUCTOR.

Wm. Van Slavren, the Conductor of the down train, has committed suicide by taking arsenic. Wm. Lee, the Engineer of the same train has been arrested and committed for examination. The evening train (17th inst.) brought down four bodies burned to a crisp. They were those of John Dillon, two brothers named Boyce, and one unknown. All the human remains were gathered up, and brought to the city. Twenty-seven bodies have not been recognised, and they are so badly burned, it is feared they never can be.

Another Calamity.

We learn from Buffalo that on the same morning as the above took place the steamer Northern Indiana took fire about 11 o'clock, while on her voyage to Toledo, and burned to the water's edge. Thirty to forty of the passengers are reported as being lost.

Captain Pheatt, commander of the Northern Indiana, was not on board of her, being sick and confined to his room in Buffalo. W. H. Wetmore, first officer; A. Dolendon, second; C. E. Marsh, clerk, J. Godwin, steward; Frank and John Farrar, first and second engineers; Philip Houghton, third engineer; and 38 others of the crew were saved.

There were 15 or 20 missing who were known to be on board, but it is supposed they were saved by the propeller Republic and a schooner that assisted in picking up the passengers. A committee appointed for the purpose collected from the passengers of the Mississippi between $200 and $300 in aid of the sufferers.

A native of the Rhineland and a son of la belle France met at "the Oaks" lately, says the New Orleans Delta, to settle a difficulty which had its origin in a transaction connected with "filthy lucre," according to the laws of honor. The weapons used were smallswords. The only damage done was a slight wound received by one of the parties. That the result was not more serious, we are credibly informed, isn't to be wondered at, as a strong objection on the part of the duellists to closing in "deadly strife" was plainly observable. We are told that an officer of the law came upon the ground as the combatants fronted each other, but at a very respectable distance. He retired upon receiving a kind of assurance that matters would be arranged amicably; but it was used probably as a ruse, for the belligerents again faced each other, and got near enough to see the whites of each other's eyes. After a few passes, blood was drawn, and the gentlemen retired well satisfied.

Joseph Williams, a slave at Mobile, escaped in the brig Growler, which arrived at Boston on the 16th inst. The Captain, on entering the harbor, attempted to secure him for the purpose of taking him back, but Williams jumped overboard and was picked up by a boat, and the Vigilance Committee being immediately notified, a writ of habeus corpus was issued. He was brought before Judge Metcalf, of the Supreme Court, at 3 o'clock, and no one appearing as a claimant against him, he was told to go free. An outburst of applause greeted this order, which the officers and Court in vain tried to check. In the meantime the colored man was seized by his friends and hurried out of the court-room, taken to the house of a colored citizen, and thence put on board the first train of cars for Canada. The affair caused great excitement.

Mr. Hadscom, the correspondent of the New York Tribune, was assaulted on the evening of the 16th, by Capt. Pate, for a refusal to retract a statement made by him, that the latter showed the white feather in surrendering his Missouri company of 25 men to 15 Free State men in Kansas.

The schooner South Shore, Capt. Edward Otis, arrived at this port from Cape Breton last night, says the Boston Transcript of the 12th, having on board many memorable instruments of war, and other articles, buried in the deep at the capture of Louisburg by the English in 1745. At that time five French armed vessels were sunk, and since, several attempts more or less successful have been made to recover ordnance, balls, &c., which were then engulfed. The crew of the South Shore have obtained 18 iron cannon, some of them of large calibre, and one reaching the weight of 9,200lbs. The ordnance, remaining in the water for more than a century, is covered with rust, and has no legible marks to stamp it as once belonging to Louis XV. Besides the cannon, a variety of shot of different sizes, iron knees, pieces of cable, rope-yarn, and mementoes of the French defeat, of divers shapes, were also secured, all possessing a peculiar interest, as recalling that interesting ante-revolutionary era when our fathers acquired the discipline which enabled them subsequently to cast off British thraldom. The value of the material raised from the French wrecks is estimated at $2,500. The company, consisting of five men, have been absent only two months and a half, and as they chartered the South Shore on their own account, will reap a profitable reward for their toils. This is the second trip they have made to the scene of the French disaster, as they visited the spot last summer, but their success—in the pecuniary view—was not so decided then as it has been the present season.

The Almshouse physician of Albany lately received information that a man called "Jim," who was employed about the Hospital as a nurse, had proposed to another man in a similar capacity to poison one of the small-pox patients, and then possess themselves of his money, amounting to only some twenty dollars. The physician informed Superintendent Hurst of the matter, when, upon inquiry, it was ascertained that the fellow had already possessed himself of $7 and the clothes belonging to a man who had died a short time previous of fever in the Hospital. The Superintendent, upon asking the man where the deceased patient's money and clothes were, was told that it was none of his business. Mr. Hurst ordered him to leave the premises, and he refused to do so. Mr. H. then undertook to put him out, when two convalescents came to the assistance of the man, and joined in an assault upon the Superintendent. The Superintendent freed himself, and "Jim" escaped. One of the others who assisted in the assault was ironed, and placed in close confinement. He and his confederate are a couple of the most desperate characters—athletic and utterly depraved. They have been, says the Albany Statesman, in service in the British army at the India station, and are possessed of a recklessness fitting them for any kind of villainy.

Here is another Britisher in trouble, loving, probably, not wisely but too well:

Strange reports are published in the New-Orleans papers concerning a summary process served upon Mr. Muir, the British Consul in that city. It appears he was traveling on board the steamer Niagara, bound for Cairo, in company with a French lady, when the other ladies took exception to their conduct, and sought redress from the captain. The Briton and the fair daughter of France were requested to leave the boat, and on their refusal to do so, the parties were put ashore at a wood-yard in one of the most desolate and inhospitable bends of the river, above Memphis. The ladies of New-Orleans intend to present a testimonial to the captain of the Niagara.

A lamentable affair occurred in Rising Sun, Indiana. On Wednesday last a party of friends were invited to take tea with the family of James Steele. During the night the party, including Mr. Steele's family, were taken seriously ill, and sent for their respective physicians. Since their first attack, they have all undergone the most intense suffering, and give positive evidence of having been poisoned. As yet, the nature of the poison, nor the manner in which it was taken, has not been ascertained. In all, fifteen persons suffered from the poison.

Theodore Parker calls the New-England Kansas emigrants, who lately surrendered their arms to the "border ruffians," cowards, and adds, "Six half-horse, half-alligator men from Kentucky, or Missouri, will put to flight all the loud talking, spread eagle free soilers and abolitionists of New-England."

The health of Norfolk continues remarkably good. There were only 38 deaths in all during the past month, including 16 colored persons. Two thirds of the whole number were children under two years of age, business is brisk, and the city rapidly improving.

It is said that the steamboat Lexington, which was burned on Long Island Sound, in 1837, had $18,000 on board, which has never been recovered. An effort is to be made to raise the treasure, if possible. The wreck lies in ninety feet of water, and the specie is in an accessible place. John Green, the diver, who went down to the Atlantic, is to operate on the wreck.

It is rumored that the Government has purchased the property of the Bank of Pennsylvania, on Second street, Philadelphia, running through to Dock street, for a Post-Office. The Bank proposes erecting a banking-house on Chestnut st., on a part of the old United States Hotel property, which has been purchased at a cost of $120,000, for seventy feet on Chestnut street.

The Unitarian Association of Boston has recently received three liberal contributions in aid of its "book fund," one of which—a gift of $2,000 from the Church of the Messiah in New-York—was accompanied with the request that it might be appropriated for the publication of the works on Channing and Ware. The other gifts were one of $1,000 from the Society of Rev. Dr. Farley, in Brooklyn, N. Y., and one of $1,120 from Rev. Dr. Barrett's Church, in Boston.

The Chippewa Indians have held, on Minnesota Point, their anniversary known as the "Medicine Dance," a feast usual after planting their spring crops. A long wigwam was erected for the purpose, and under it the ceremonies were performed. According to custom, a large cauldron of soup was boiled, well seasoned with several of the canine species of the animal kingdom.

Two of the inmates of the House of Refuge in Rochester, attempted to burn it down by setting fire to some shavings in a cupboard. The fire, however, was discovered and extinguished before any great damage was done. The boys that committed the deed were detected and placed in confinement.

The Syracuse Standard says the break in that vicinity has been repaired, and boats commenced pushing through at five o'clock on the 14th.

Correspondence.

Trip from Enniscorthy to Bantry.

JUNE 21st, 1856.

You've a capital correspondent in Waterford. He tells you everything, and tells it with great life. I'm not at all willing to trespass on his ground. Consequently I'll leave all that part of the country just as I found it. I won't say a word about Tramore even, though greatly tempted to let myself out on its beautiful strand. That, too, belongs to the Metal-Man. Long may he tower above it!

I left Waterford for Dungarvan on one of Tom English's cars. We had oats and a drink at Kilmacthomas. What a miserable village it is! The proximity of Curraghmore to it doesn't better it much. Kilmacthomas, I believe, returned a Member to the Irish Parliament. Nothing surprising in that, when the Bushes and Floods used to contend for the odd one of the five voters who made up the constituency of Callan. O'Connell used often and often talk about the old stump of an oak tree at Halverstown, which returned two members. If Kilmacthomas wasn't better eighty years ago than it is now, it was just as well entitled to parliamentary representation as Halverstown or Callan.

I didn't stop more than an hour in Dungarvan. The only one I know there is Mahoney, the great Repealer, dealer in hardware, and most popular man in the town. I called at his house. He had started for Clonmel the evening before. It was a considerable disappointment. I should have had all the news of Dungarvan and its vicinity from him. I used to meet Mahoney pretty often in the Committee of the Repeal Association. But I never saw him to speak to him until the evening of the great dinner to O'Connell and the other "Repeal Conspirators" in the Lancasterian school-rooms. Smith O'Brien presided. It was far away the grandest public dinner I ever sat down to. There were five Mayors present, and nearly a dozen Members of Parliament. As for Parish-priests, Curates, Town-Comncillors, and Lawyers, there was no use in counting them.

Mahoney, of Dungarvan, sat opposite me. Young Musgrave, Sir Richard's son, alongside of him; and Dan Meagher, the Clerk of the Cork Town-Council, 'longside of me. Mahoney was in high spirits.

"They may put me in prison," exclaimed O'Connell.

"Never!" said Mahoney.

"I say they may," the Liberator repeated.

"Never!" cried Mahoney again.

"You havn't the key of the prison," said Dan.

"Never!" shouted Mahoney, waving his hat.

As I drove over the Youghal bridge, I was greatly touched by the lonesomeness of the look which Muckridge House seemed to wear. Poor Albert Fitzgerald made it a pleasant place whilst he lived. It is now shut up, his widow being in France these months back. Fitzgerald, decidedly, was one of the very honestest men we have had in public life these years past. He was so gallant, too, and so courteous. Davis deeply trusted and loved him.

Youghal, I should say, is just as you left it. There's not been a new house put up there these years. The Devonshire Arms, where I stopped for the evening, is as dismal almost as the big empty hotel at Sallins, though a good deal more comfortable, of course. The Sallins hotel hasn't a whole pane of glass in it, and it's six stories high. It's a complete wreck, in fact, and a deserted one into the bargain. It often struck me that the vast windy hotel described in Jack Hinton, was the picture of the one in the Main street of Sallins. Nearly all the hotels built by the Grand Canal Company, are just as monstrously forlorn. They would furnish abundant materials for a good History of Ghosts.

Isaac Butt appears to give satisfaction to his Youghal constituents. He attends industriously to their local affairs. There's no small amount of thorough good Irish stuff in Butt. He has a large heart and a wealthy brain. He has fire, and honest pride of country, and a jealous love for all the men who have made her famous. But he thinks it a grander privilege to be a member of the Imperial Parliament, than to have a seat in an Irish one. He thinks, also, that Ireland is better known and respected abroad by being a department (as it were) of the empire of Great Britain, than she would be were she to stand alone. I haven't time to discuss the question just now with Mr. Butt. One of these days I will. In the meanwhile, I cannot help thinking that Mr. Butt would prove of infinitely greater service to Ireland, were he sitting as a legislator in the glorious hall sacred to the memory of Grattan and his compeers. Nor can I help thinking, moreover, that Mr. Butt's fame would be higher and brighter, and wider in the heavens, were his genuis to soar from Irish soil, instead of beating the thick air which overhangs the Thames.

Early next morning I was on my way to Cork. What a magnificent old place, Castlemartyr, the Earl of Shannon's place, is! What a vast army of veterans and giants those aged towering trees look like, with that gray belt of heavily ivied wall about them! And what a beautiful name both domain and village bear!

Middleton is lank and tame. It is a long back-bone of a street, without a stir in it. Nothing is heard from cock-crow to cock-crow—from one dawn round to the other—but the dull, sombre, deep whirr of the great water-wheel of Murphy's distillery. The weather-cock on the top of the market-house is still bent. It was so twenty years ago. That it hasn't been straightened since, speaks volumes for the public spirit of Lord Middleton's village. Dick Donovan, my old school-fellow, used to live here. But Dick died in London seven years ago, and so I had no one to call on. The distillery is doing well. A bottle of it was awarded a prize at the late great Exhibition in Paris. Driving past the market-house, three or four turf carts were all the signs of business I saw. The jackasses belonging to the carts were unyoked, and standing in a row, facing the wall of the Market-house, were frisking their tails and frightfully snorting.

At the end of two hours we were kicking up the dust through King street. Fifteen minutes after, I was sitting in the coffee-room of the Imperial Hotel. With a slice of a Sunday Wells salmon, a print of Cork butter, a flowery potato or two, and something quite light to slip them down easy, a lunch can be pleasantly made. Heigh-ho! many a one, I dare say, you yourself had in the same room. You were always fond of Cork. In a letter of yours, read at the trials at Clonmel, I remember, you called it "your darling city." It was full of sunshine for you a few years ago. I fear it would look dark to you now, were you to visit it. Very many of your old dear friends are gone. Belleville, on the middle Glanmire road, your second home, is a quiet house now. All the boys are dead. The old man is dead. The old woman is dead. John Murphy, the eldest son, is there by himself. He, poor fellow, has lately arrived from New-Orleans, where, I understand, he had been occupied some time back managing the affairs of the Donnegans of Alabama, a branch of the Donnegans of Cork. John was once very well-to-do in the world. He owned a large sugar plantation in Trinidad. The crop failed two or three seasons, and Murphy had to give it over as a bad job. He is a noble fellow by all accounts. But noble fellows, as a general rule, are always unfortunate.

Of course you're aware that Tommy Lyons (as poor and rich used to call him) is with the dead also. His memory is affectionately and tenderly preserved by the people of whom, for so many years, he was the ornament and oracle. In every town and city of Ireland, O'Connell had some decent conspicuous man who, more or less intellectually, represented his views, sustained his influence, and stood by him in every change of weather. In Dublin, he had such men as Keshan, McLoughlin, Jeremiah Dunne, and Sir Timothy O'Brien. In Wexford, he had the Devereuxes. In Galway, the Roches and Irelands—though Dan, by-the-bye, once said that "Galway didn't contain a hat-full of honesty." In Kilkenny, he had the Smithwicks, the Potters, and two or three stirring attornies like Hyland. And so, likewise, in Limerick and Waterford, and every place else. In Clonmel, to be sure, he was badly off in the mercantile line, unless Charley Bianconi be placed in the category. But to compensate for the deficiency that way, O'Connell had Hackett, of the Tipperary Free Press, the Very Rev. Dean Burke, the great Parish priest, and other active and eloquent patriots. In Cork, alderman Tom Lyons was the man, and a good man he was. Simple and noiseless, he was steadfast and sure. To the Repeal movement, and every other movement of which O'Connell was the leader, Tom Lyons brought the force of his sound commercial celebrity, and all the admirable qualities of a charitable pure citizen, to aid and commend it. His nephew (whom you must have known at Stonyhurst) succeeded to his business and property. Without any great talent, he is destined to figure respectably in the local affairs of the chief city of Munster. A young man, placed on a solid pedestal of guineas and dry goods, without any wonderful effort or exploit, decently conducting himself—temperately and gracefully balancing himself—is able in a little while to attract considerable attention and the favorable opinion of the public. Young Tom, no doubt, will be in Parliament one of these days. The peculiarity of his genius will enable him to be a good silent member.

The Tuckey-street Club enjoys a jovial old age. A new generation reads newspapers and magazines, smokes, sups, and plays billiards there. The celebrities you knew have vanished. Dan Callaghan, the Prince of them, no longer looks out of the windows, eyeing the girls, or presides in full bloom, like a capacious white dahlia, at the monthly reunions. Still, they tell me, there's a bright atmosphere and a fruitful soil of good-fellowship there, though the old birds may have flown, and the old trees have been cut down and sawn into coffins.

In a future letter I shall give you an account of the Queen's College. In company with your friend Sir Robert Kane, the President, I went through it leisurely and made some inquiries, the answers to which pleased me considerably. Since my visit there, I feel confirmed in the opinion I have held all along (the opinion I held from the day the College's Bill was discussed in Conciliation Hall, and the first passage of words between Young and Old Ireland took place,) that Ireland would have been all the stronger and nobler—all the better able to achieve national independence, and all the better able to maintain it advantageously to herself and the world—had those Colleges been standing and at work fifty years ago.

You may be sure I didn't forget to take a look in at the old museum, where the Ogham stones (over which old Windele used to pore and doat so lovingly) are gathering the dust and cobwebs due to their antiquity, and where those superb casts are negligently stowed, from which Maclise and Hogan derived the divine instruction which has made them the loftiest masters of the human form. The Cork Library, too, had a visit from me. The owls, in the small oval-shaped niches in the corners over the door-way, express the high opinion which Cork holds of itself. Every Cork man maintains that Cork is the Athens of Ireland. Minerva's pet bird, accordingly, has been transferred from the groves of Ellis to the banks of the Lee.

The last place (of any consequence) I visited was the hall of the Desmond Confederate Club. With sorrowful remembrances I mounted the broad staircase I had mounted more than once when there was a red sky over Ireland, and golden beams flashed out all over the crimson curtain, promises of the day long prayed for, sung and prophesied. It was in this hall, if I mistake not, that John Mitchel (New-Year's week, 1848) first met Joe Brennan, and was introduced to Isaac Varian, the Lyons, and the other Confederates of Desmond. As well as Belleville, it's a silent place now. Varian is selling bristles and brushes in London. Denny Lyons and his brother have settled somewhere in the States; one of them in Louisiana, I believe. Poor Denny Lane has had his reverses. Others have become "sensible" All who have dipped into the Castle dictionary know the meaning of that word in Ireland. It simply means the gentlest submission to the rule of the London commissioners. Michael Joseph Barry led the way. You were hardly abreast of the Cape Verd Islands, on your weary way to the British isle of exiled sinners, before this accomplished patriot pensman acknowledged the errors of his manhood, and, inclining his bald head devoutly, kissed the foot of Victoria. All the enthusiasm, the genius, the self-sacrificing truth of Young Ireland, he criticised with the calmness of a hardened dissector. He laughed simperingly, like Carker in "Dombey," showing his white teeth over the memories he should have tenderly honored. Could he have broken through his coffin in the cemetery of St Jerome, Heavens! how Davis would have shaken his shrouded hand at him in an agony of proud anger and the bitterest reproof. Barry went so far as to propose that the Cove of Cork should be christened "Queenstown" on the occasion of Queen Victoria showing her bonnet and skirts in that quarter.

There has been much doubt and discussion about this. All his political friends denied it at first. You, I've been told, to the last refused to believe it. But it's the fact. Michael Joseph Barry, the Young Ireland rebel of '48, stood sponsor at the baptism of debasement and apostacy, which, in 1849, effaced one of the most noted immemorial names on the map of Ireland. He's now in Dublin, sitting in the editorial crevice of the Telegraph office—supplying the place of McCabe, the paid client of Sadleir.

From the reflections suggested painfully by such a career, it's refreshing to dash away (as I hastily did) to Dunmanway, on my way to the deep grand waters and green-wooded mountains of Bantry. I passed through Ballinhassig. This little village, you reco'lect, was the scene of a savage massacre of a number of country-people by the police, in the summer of 1845. The blood is still fresh there. The Irish never forget a blow given them foully.

In the neighborhood of Dunmanway, the driver (a sharp lad—all Cork boys are so) pointed me out with his whip the seat of the O'Connors. Late in the evening I got into Bantry. The moon was in its full, and a piper was hard at work at the door of the hotel. He had a crowd of fishermen, and boys and girls in naked legs, round him, through which to his bedroom passed

THE GHOST OF DUNBRODY.

Irish News.

Parliamentary business is hurrying with rapid strides to a termination for the present session. What, exclaims the Tipperary Vindicator, has been done? Nothing! What has been attempted? Nothing! What has been exhibited in the tone and temper of both Houses in reference to the claims of the millions at home and abroad—to the furtherance and consolidation of the principles of civil and religious liberty—of equal toleration—of justice and truth—wherever the Parliament of England exercises a paramount influence? Nothing has been shown except rabid bigotry. Nothing has been manifested except an earnest desire to chain down the Catholic wherever he raises his head—or to make him the bondsman of systems inimical to every generous emotion by which he is actuated. The spirit of the Emancipation Act is driven from the House of Commons.

The fair day of Dromahaire, Sligo, some three or four countrymen were engaged in a drunken row in that town which called for the interference of the police. On the parties being brought to the barrack, a document was found in the pocket of one of them, of which the following is a copy: "We expect to have peace, yes; to England a sad disgrace. She is reduced to a sad state. Her till is but third rate. Don't be vext, I am not inclined, may France and Austria and Russia like the Shamrock, and the Enemeys of the Cross be put to their flight." Since the foregoing came into the hands of the authorities, there is strong reason for believing its contents to be the last Ribbon pass-words issued from head-quarters.

In the new public departments, the Dublin Evening Post writes that increase of salaries at the public expense, and superannuations leading to fresh patronage, appear to be the rule; but in the old departments, such as the Excise and Customs, where there is hard work and comparatively small pay, increased allowances and profitable remunerations are seldom or never allowed.

The body of the soldier of the 9th regiment who was drowned lately in the Abbey River, Limerick, has been found. A gentleman from Irishtown saw the body lying at the bottom; he reported what he had seen, and, with the assistance of some sandmen, the body was raised. It turned out to be that of Galligan, who had been some time missing.

A very lamentable circumstance has taken place at Newtown, county Kildare. A woman, named Dolly Grant, was afflicted with epileptic fits, and the family having left her in charge of the house while they were attending to some outdoor business, on their return were horrified to find her burned to a cinder.

The Lord Lieutenant has appointed the Venerable Michael J. Keating, Archdeacon of Ardfert, to the vacant deanery of Kilfenora. The appointment, says the Dublin Evening Post, will afford much gratification to the friends of the National System of Education, of which the new Dean has been a steady supporter.

Mrs. Captain Gavin has presided at a meeting of the Catholic ladies of St. Michael's Parish, Limerick, held in the chapel. Resolutions were adopted, pledging the meeting to use their best efforts to provide for the parish chapel the requisites and ornaments indispensable to the several functions of public worship.

On the 4th of this month the West Norfolk Militia left Cork in the transport Germania. The regiment was under the command of Colonel Custance. All the officers and a great many of the men wore the Russian helmet. The regiment is to be conveyed to Portsmouth to be disembodied.

The number of persons who have left Cork for England, on their way to the United States and the Colonies, since the 1st of June up to the present, is 802; and the number who left during the corresponding period last year was 945.

There is a great quantity of salmon captured this season on the river Shannon and its tributaries. Three tons each day leave for the English and Dublin markets.

A full-dress conversazione has taken place in the Exhibition Rooms of the Royal Irish Academy, Dublin.

The monthly meeting of the committee of the Society for the Promotion and Improvement of the Growth of Flax in Ireland has been held in Belfast. Letters were read reporting favorably of the appearance of the growing crop of flax. The medals awarded to the society, at the Great Exhibition of 1855, were laid on the table. The silver medal was awarded to the Royal Flax Society. The other medals were given for specimens of flax straw and fibre the Society had forwarded from the counties of Armagh, Antrim, Cork, Londonderry, Limerick, Down, Roscommon and Tipperary. It was arranged that these latter prizes should be presented to the Chief Agricultural Society of each of the counties named. It was also stated that a gold medal had been awarded to the Society at the Great Industrial Cattle and Agricultural Show, held in Paris, for a case of flax specimens.

There has been a large attendance of the Irish members, Conservative as well as Liberal, called together by Mr. Horsman, Under Secretary for Ireland, to consider the proposed measures for the payment of petty sessions clerks and county surveyors in Ireland. A bill to remunerate petty sessions clerks by salary instead of fees, is to be brought in forthwith. The fund for their payment is to be provided in each county from the fees, stamps, and fines. If a deficiency arise, it is to be made up by a rate on the county.

An advertisement from the Court of Chancery has been going the round of the Irish papers, in which it is stated that by an order of the Lord High Chancellor, made in reference to the will of Thomas Charlton, deceased, a marriage portion of £6 6s. to each couple will be given on the occasion of the marriage of the sons of day-laborers resident in the King's county, and the counties of Louth, Dublin, Kildare, Westmeath, and Leitrim, with the daughters of day-laborers resident in the counties of Meath and Longford. The order further states that there is a considerable accumulation of funds for this purpose, and that it is to dispose of this that the privilege has been extended beyond the boundaries of Meath and Longford.

Within the last three weeks, several gentlemen interested in the prosperity of Passage West, have instituted a Savings' Bank to afford the residents of the town and neighborhood an opportunity of investing small sums weekly. The amount at present exceeds £29, and many of the working classes have shown an anxiety to avail themselves of the opportunity afforded them, by depositing one, two, or more shillings weekly, to ensure a provision in sickness and old age.

The annual exhibition of the students of Carlow College took place in the Academy Hall of the College. The Hall was elegantly decorated. Visitors were present from Dublin, Cork, Waterford, Limerick, and several other cities and counties. The premium for good conduct was conferred on Master John O'Connell, son of the late Maurice O'Connell, Esq., M. P., who was loudly applauded as the chaplet of roses was placed on his brow by the Lord Bishop of Bombay.

The Rev. Paul Bradley, late P. P. Lower Badony, has been changed to Donagh, a small parish in the centre of Inishowen, "O'Doherty's realm." The people of Badony intend to present him with a suitable address and a snuff-box, as an index of their feelings, with the following inscription—"Long, long may he flourish in old Innishowen."

All the Irish papers announce the death of the Earl of Cork. His Lordship is succeeded in his title and estate by Viscount Dungarvan, M. P. for Frome. The late Earl was distinguished for his excellent qualities as a landlord, and for the liberality with which, through the intervention of his agent, the late Mr. Leahy, he assisted every charitable institution, without regard to creed.

At the Annual Meeting of the Drogheda Steam Packet Co. it was carried unanimously, that a subscription of £75 be forwarded to relieve the distress caused by the inundations in France. One of the Drogheda steamers was engaged in the Crimea conveying French troops.

The excavation of the site for the O'Connell monument has commenced. Mr. Hogan and an assistant have been in Limerick, and have brought the Wicklow granite on which the statue is to be placed. The statue promises to be the noblest of Hogan's productions.

On the last day of the fancy bazaar, held in the Corn Exchange, Belfast, in aid of the schools connected with the Nunnery of the Sisterhood of St. Paul's Convent of our Lady of Mercy, in that town, the room was densely crowded. The bazaar realized the handsome sum of £350.

The Mayor of Clonmel has received from Captain John O'Connell a letter in reference to the subject of Clonmel being made a district military garrison. Captain O'Connell, it appears from the local papers, is determined not to lose sight of the matter.

An accident recently occurred on the departure from Cork of the Bristol boat. A woman residing near Clarke's bridge, whose name was ascertained to be Mrs. Hallissy, accidentally fell between the ship and the quay, and but for Constable Edwards would probably have lost her life.

The Nation gives us some fashionable intelligence. Mr. MacBirch, of the Telegraph, has returned to the practice of stenography. Father Maher is still as silent as a spiked gun. Mr. John Reynolds has retired from public life in disgust with the liberty of the press.

Mr. Sergeant Berwick, Assistant Barrister for the Eastern Division of the county of Cork, has decided, in an appeal of the Superioress of Youghal Presentation Convent, that convents are exempt from rating under the Poor Relief Act.

Mr. James O'Hea, Cork city, has been appointed by the Lord Chancellor to act as locum tenens for Mr. Gibson, Assistant Barrister for the county Antrim.

The Very Rev. Doctor O'Brien appealed to the inhabitants of New-Ross on Sunday, the 6th of July, in behalf of the sick and afflicted poor of the town and vicinity.

The Provost and Senior Fellows of Trinity College entertained the Lord Lieutenant at the Commencement Dinner, in the College Hall, on Tuesday, the 1st of July.

The Mayor of Kilkenny has won a superb chair, valued at ten guineas, in the June Ladies' Raffle, for the support of the Cork branch of the Society of St. Vincent de Paul.

His Excellency the Earl of Carlisle has contributed £10 per annum to the funds of the Royal Agricultural Improvement Society.

Major Henry W. Massy, South Tipperary Artillery, has contributed £20 towards the building of the new Roman Catholic Chapel in the town of Tipperary, and has promised a subscription of £20 yearly until the edifice is completed.

Before the Assistant Barrister of the county Limerick, the Knight of Glin lately applied to be discharged as an insolvent. The application was postponed until October, as many of his English creditors were not noticed in his schedule. The Knight of Glin states in his schedule that he is tenant for life to a property yielding about £3,000 a year, subject to an annuity of £300 to his mother, £600 for younger children, the issue of his father's marriage; £200 a year in money for his wife, and £600 separate maintenance; £2,000 raised under power in his father's settlement, £2,000 under the Drainage Act.

The regatta of the Royal St. George Yacht Club was followed by a grand Corinthian sailing match in Dublin Bay. Upwards of forty yachts lay at anchor, dressed out with all their colors, and the revenue cruiser, Wellington, carrying a crew of 130 men, had on board the band of the 16th Lancers. All the vessels were most skilfully handled by the gentlemen composing the crews, it being an indispensable preliminary of the Corinthian sailing matches established by the club that the competing Yachts shall be so manned.

The Kilkenny Journal, from which we quote largely elsewhere, observes that apart from all other elements, an intense feeling of hatred to England has for years being growing up among the Americans themselves; and the Irish Nemesis simply guides and intensifies the national sentiment beyond the Atlantic. When the anti-English feeling has become so strong under the moderate rule of President Pierce, what, asks the Journal, may we not expect from the administration of James Buchanan, the son of an Irish Exile?

A farmer named William Curran has been shot dead in his own house, about a mile from Roscrea, while sitting at supper. The shot was fired through the parlor window and the gun was loaded with slugs. It is not supposed the murder has arisen out of any difficulty concerning land. The deceased, who was a tenant on the estate of Colonel Lloyd Gloster, was in the prime of life and in very comfortable circumstances.

An address and sword have been presented in the Fellow's Hall of Trinity College, to Lieutenant Massey, by his fellow-students. Mr. Massey delivered a reply in the course of which he said:—"I went into action as a captain, but in the moment I was borne back wounded to my tent—that rank ceased. I became again a subaltern, and having neither wealth nor influence among the great, I suppose I shall for many years so remain."

A correspondent of the Waterford Chronicle tells us that two Herculean fellows mounted the rigging of the steamboat Mars, as she was leaving the quay of Waterford last week for Liverpool and declared in the most positive manner to their relatives, sweetened by a multitude of oaths, that "if Ireland ever was to be free, they would free her when they'd get to America!"

The Town Commissioners of Cavan invited the Directors of the Midland Great Western Railway Company to meet William Dargan, at a dejeunner given to him on the day the Railway into that town was opened. The dejeunner took place the first of this month.

The London Times, says, that the circular of the Minister of the Interior of Greece to the local authorities concerning a tour of Mr. Smith O'Brien in that country, as published in the Athena, Greek paper, is not genuine, and criminal prosecutions have been already resorted to for forgery.

A poor soldier, just returned from the Crimea, went to bathe at the strand contiguous to the Pigeon House, Dublin, and was drowned. Doctor Butler assistant-surgeon of the South Tipperary Artillery, was promptly in attendance. The poor fellow was only married a few days, and the first instalment of his pension came due the day of his death.

Petitions have been presented in the Incumbered Estates Court for a sale of a portion of the estates purchased by the late John Sadleir. The yearly rental of the estates included in the petitions exceeds £4,000. They are situate in the counties of Cork, Galway, Mayo, Limerick and Tipperary.

The term of Mr. Carden's imprisonment in Clonmel gaol, for the attempted abduction of Miss Arbuthnott, expired on Thursday, the 3d of July. He will leave the prison in which he has been immured for two years, for Barnane, his residence in the North Riding.

A riot has occurred in Enniskillen between the people and the militia. The provocation proceeded from some persons around a church decorated with orange flags bearing offensive mottoes, and the bells of which were kept in full swing to party tunes. Several were wounded.

We learn from the Kilkenny Journal that Queen Victoria is not going to Ireland this summer; and if the Italian and American questions do not interpose, the militia are to be disembodied the first week of August.

The same paper informs us that Sir William Somerville's new plan of "extermination-made-easy," has been ratified by the House of Commons. It is a model of the cruel, cold-blooded statesmanship of the Whigs. It enables the landlord to evict after a summons and three day's notice.

It is said that the Archbishop of Arras, who has recently returned from Rome, is about to travel through England and Ireland to excite the Catholics to a co-operation in support of the temporal dominion of the Holy See.

Negotiations are going on between the Government and the Chester and Holyhead Railway Company for extra mails; and Sir Cusack Roney's plan for cheap excursion trains to Ireland will probably be revived, which will benefit most of the Irish Railways.

The Rev. Michael Buckley informs the Cork Examiner, that Lieutenant Jackson of the West Cork Militia, in the most courageous manner has saved the lives of two boys who were drowning at the quay of Kinsale.

The Drogheda Board of Poor-law Guardians has petitioned in favor of Tenant-right. The Dundalk Board has also petitioned; and Mr. Balfe has given notice of a motion that he will ask the Ardee Board to follow their example.

On the farm of Goulaune, the property of Mr. Thomas M'Donough, Killarney, an old woman, a tenant of that gentleman, has died at the age of 117 years.

The Lord Lieutenant has appointed James Hamilton, of Castle Hamilton, Esq., a Deputy Lieutenant for the county Cavan.

Mr. George Hardy, one of the clerks at the Limerick terminus, has been appointed station-master at the Rathkeale terminus of the Limerick and Foynes Railway.

Joseph Barry, Esq., M.D., Midleton Lodge, county Cork, has been appointed to the Commission of the Peace, on the recommendation of the Earl of Bandon, Lord Lieutenant of the co'y.

GAVAN DUFFY IN AUSTRALIA.

The Sydney Freeman's Journal, March 8th, contains an interesting account of Mr. Duffy's reception there. A steamer was engaged to proceed down the harbor for the purpose of receiving and welcoming him. The weather was unfavorable, and it continued raining all the morning. Notwithstanding this disadvantage there were 200 persons on board, and among them a fair sprinkling of the fair sex. The green flag, with Irish emblems, was hoisted amidst loud cheering. The committee, on the steamer reaching the wharf, landed and proceeded to the Telegraph, where they congratulated Mr. Duffy on his arrival in Australia. A large concourse of people was assembled on the wharf, who loudly cheered Mr. Duffy as he, in company with the committee, passed from the Telegraph to the Illalong.

Having mounted a bench, Mr. Duffy addressed the assembly as follows:

Ladies and gentlemen, I present myself before you as one of the most sea-sick men in the new world—(laughter)—having suffered for the last twelve hours from that exhausting complaint, there is nothing I need so much as a little rest. Notwithstanding this, I see so many kindly Irish faces beaming welcome around me, that I am almost well again. I have one complaint to make of you, however; you have spoilt my view of the magnificent harbor of Port Jackson. When I turned my eyes to the green banner which floated above you, I was unable to look on anything beside (loud cheers.) I thought that flag had been left buried in the old country, embalmed in the tears of the few faithful of the land; but here I see it still waving before me as in days gone past. Gentlemen, I do not rejoice to see it as a symbol to separate us from the other races of the country; but I rejoice to see it planted upon a new soil, because wherever it streamed it was a sure emblem of the fidelity of the Irish people, binding them to the land that gave them shelter and protection (cheers). In France the green flag had waved triumphantly over many a battle-field. In Belgium the same. In America, when that great country sprung to resistance, and fought for that liberty which is now the pride of the world, that banner waved in the front rank of the army of the United States. I hope in seeing it here it means that Irishmen would distinguish themselves as the most faithful and best-conducted citizens in Australia. You will not readily forget the country of your birth; and why should you? but you will love also your adopted country, and endeavor to distinguish yourselves by truth, personal independence, and political fidelity (cheers). I wonder, gentlemen, to find myself here. When I left Ireland it was not with the idea of plunging again into the tide of politics from which I had so recently escaped. I thought on coming here I should have retired into private life. I did not come here to seek a political career, nor have I sought it; it has sought me (loud cheers). Since I came to the colony of Victoria, in less than five weeks five constituencies of that fine country offered to return me as one of their representatives in the free and independent parliament which would rule that state. I have also had political overtures made to me here which I need not specify. I left home because the cause I served and fought for had not prospered as I wished, and because there were eminent deserters faithless to it. When I left Ireland I considered I was bidding farewell to public life for many years; if I now reappear—for I suppose I am talking politics now—(cheers and laughter)—you and those in Melbourne who have so generously extended your hands to me when I landed must bear the blame of it (cheers). Gentlemen, I really thought, till I saw your noble ship heaving in sight—I was so sick and exhausted after the voyage—that I should scarcely have been able to meet you to-day; but I am refreshed and rejoiced to see so many kindly faces wherein I can trace the blood of my own country. I trust that on some more fitting and proper occasion I will have the opportunity of making personal acquaintance with you all (cheers). I want to see you not in crowds, where I can scarcely distinguish a face, not merely shake hands and see you no more. I want to talk to you, to inquire how you like the country which you know so much about, and to gather what a new chum wants—colonial experience (cheers). I have been told many times since I arrived, and an old and esteemed friend on my left had twitted me with being a new man, and having everything to learn, and knowing nothing of Australia. Now I intend to pump you all dry before I leave, so that I may know as much of the colony as these objectors (laughter). I take a deep interest in everything that will tend to promote the prosperity of this, one of the finest countries in the world (cheers.) Let me again thank you for your great kindness in welcoming me amongst you (loud and continued cheering).

A grand banquet followed the reception in the harbor, of which the Sydney Empire and Herald gives us a glowing and picturesque account:

The Prince of Wales Theatre was the arena selected for this manifestation of feeling. The pit was boarded over in a line with the stage, the tables extending equi-distant the whole length of the edifice. The side-scenes were decorated with an effusion of eucalypti, so that the stage presented the appearance of a magnificent arbor. The north end was graced by the "Harp of Erin," wrought in bright green foliage, and gayer flowers, and in front of the national instrument hung the national flag, with its "Erin go bragh," and "cead mille fuilte," in golden garb. Two beautiful festoons of brilliant foliage were suspended in front of the stage, immediately under which, on the north-eastern side, was the seat raised above the rest for the guest of the evening, Charles Gavan Duffy. The dress boxes were adorned with beautiful specimens of native vegetation, including the palm, the cabbage-plant, and the fern. The dress circle being reserved for ladies, Mr. Torning threw open for their accommodation the large saloon adjoining, where refreshments were laid out. From the ceiling, upper boxes, and gallery, were suspended a large number of flags. The four splendid glass chandeliers by which the theatre is usually illuminated were lowered nine or ten feet, and gave a very brilliant effect to the whole arrangement.

The dress circle was crowded with ladies, and the upper boxes were also well filled with spectators. The guests numbered about 500, among whom were a number of the magistracy, all the popular candidates for the Legislature, many members of the bar, and leading mercantile men of our city. On the arrival of the "guest of the evening," the company rose and received Mr. Duffy with continued demonstrations, welcoming him with enthusiasm. The chair was taken by William Pennington, Esq. During the banquet, the Hungarian band performed a variety of concerted pieces, and the stewards were deserving of great praise for their attention to the comfort of the guests. Mr. Duffy delivered an admirable speech, which nobly sustained his reputation for enlightened liberality and cultivated genius.

Answers to Correspondents.

DECLINED.—We have at last got a moderately cool half-hour to dispatch a bundle of our industrious correspondents. JACK SPRAT. (Your little treatise, as you call it, on Epidemics among Fish, is rather scaly and not in our line. Your effort may be, as you say, after the Finnish, but we are inclined to think it is with a hook. We cannot measure our columns by the rod, in order to let you reel out your tackle by the yard. Take our advice, Sprat; dive into something else—you are evidently a fish out of water at present). NIOBE'S new version of No Song no Supper is a very dismal affair. Your only resource is to laugh and grow fat, for certainly you'll starve if you depend on your songs for your suppers. SHANGHAI'S Memories of a Bachelor are not over pleasant, at least to himself. The unevenness of his temper is clearly written in his "first attempt:"

"She bid me vanish, and my blood did curl
With red vexation at the faithless gurl.
I said, "Have pity," but she only sm'iled.
Ah, wretched smile! to think she'd riled this child.
"She's one of 'em," I said; I knew it now,
And, fiercely scowling, made my final bow.
The door I reached—she faintly said "Be cool!"
"I won't!" I said—"Then don't!" she said. It's just like you men; always expecting the grapes will fall of their own accord into yer mouths. You darn'd old fool!"

Enough is as good as a feast. Our readers won't condemn us for cutting Shanghai's doleful tale, when his lady-love so roundly "trimmed his jacket." WILHELM'S Apostrophe to Woman is conceived in a different vein:

"Lovely Woman! When I see you
My first notion is to flee you;
Though my heart so longs to catch you,
Yet my head knows it can't match you."

ANAPOLIS. (We answer your postmark, for we cannot make out anything else readable about your communication. It would be a decided improvement if you only let one fly at a time walk out of your ink-bottle and on to your whitey-brown paper.) EPHRAIM DOTY, also from Anapolis, writes to say that he sent the other, and begs us not to read it, as he transmits a clean copy of his first draft for Proposals to start a People's Bank. (Pshaw! no bank could stand such drafts. The second is much more unintelligible than the first communication.) ENGINE DRIVER sends us a ticket for a breakdown. (Much obliged, but we would rather not be sitting on a rail during the performance.) TORLOGH'S Wail for Desmond. (Very like a wail—no use of blubbering). FREDERICK L. You will thank us to-morrow for not having printed what you wrote so foolishly yesterday. ELEANOR, through politeness, we give a stanza:

"I pine for the fleecy blue
Where the rainbow takes its hue,
When the storm has done its worst
And the sun shows us to view
The bright path through which he burst."

Mr. P. H. McCawley has no authority to collect subscriptions for us, at present; nor has he had for two weeks past.

THE IRISH NEWS.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, JULY 26, 1856.

THE PRESS AND THE PRESIDENCY.

A PARAPHRASE OF LEADING ARTICLES TOUCHING THE CLAIMS OF CANDIDATES FOR THE WHITE HOUSE:

Being a Chapter dedicated to Young Men ambitious of Political Distinction.

The glory of a public life, indeed, is tempting, when in such solemnities as the obsequies of Henry Clay or Daniel Webster, we behold its revelation. It is glorious to be carried to the grave with all the pomp and circumstance a commonwealth can decree. It is glorious to have one's golden sentences graven on the walls, on monumental slabs, and banners which fan the dusty thoroughfare. It is glorious, with the magic of a deathless name, thus to concentrate the thoughts of thousands, and be—for a day—an hour—the absorbing memory in the light of which the tempest and the surge of life subsides. But beware, young men, of the perils through which these honors are achieved. Beware of the strifes and vigils, the conspiracies and libels, the wounds and agonies, of which this death—made fragrant with votive flowers, and luminous with the swords of the Civic Guard—is but the glad cessation. You, who would serve the State; you, who would be the champions of the people; you, who would be borne to the Capitol, beware of the Penalties of Public Life!

Fresh from college, with a pure and generous nature deeply touched with some great wrong, the young collegian enters the public hall. In the presence of countless citizens, he stands up, and conquering the diffidence which first unmans him, pours forth his sympathies with the wronged; and, rising with the spirit of his theme, launches from out a storm of words, against the guilty, the lightnings of exasperated genius.

He has silenced—he has moved—he has kindled—he has won the multitude. The buzz which ever pervades a crowd, when no old favorite or celebrity is announced, and which the unknown stranger is ever sure to meet, subsides. The words of the young speaker fall clear, and full, and copious. They are not the dregs and leavings stolen from the exhausted shell of some old Triton, who, for years, in some public place, has quenched the public thirst. They come from a new fountain, gushing up and overflowing from a pregnant soil. The frank face; the manly form, erect and staunch; the bold bright eye, which flashes as the soul within it heaves; the red lip which quivers, hardens into flint, relaxes into pity, or grows white with rage; the heat, the beauty, the storm, the splendor which bursts like a summer's day with thunders on the crowd, all entrance the listeners, and the voice and vision is to them a spell which lifts them from the earth.

It is over! The glowing boy descends with a firm tread the steps up which he mounted with distrust to triumph. The Tribune has been to him a Tabor. The suppliant is now the conqueror. With radiant cheek and bounding heart, he goes home, there in the full flush of hope to count the victories, repeating themselves along the great highway of the future, on which, this day, with the Excelsior banner in his grasp, he has set his foot.

Beware, young dreamer! The road you tread is not of granite, nor free from danger. It lies through swamps; and sometimes overhangs the precipice; and at other times, leads through fair plains, where the snake is in the grass, and the wolf is on the track, and the poisoned arrow from some lurking foe, deadlier than the snake, may reach you even as you bless the sunshine. Your success, if it has called forth cheers, has awakened envy. Pah! He's no orator. The papers say so. The editor of one says he expected to be thrilled, and, to his consternation, wasn't. The elegant supernumerary of another—who has one shirt, and remains in bed the second day of the week until it's washed for the third—reminds the young aspirant of the fate of Icarus, and predicts his inevitable fall. Some fat practitioner of the law-courts, whose brain can only germinate writs and affidavits, declares it took the orator six months to write that one oration, and the incubation of the second would necessitate a sitting of twelve months. He's not worth hearing, croak the ravens. But God is with him. He proves himself an eagle amongst the ravens; and whilst they limp about the shambles and feed on refuse, he drinks from the cup of Hebe—the cup of eternal youth—and soars against the sun. He makes good his first success. There's a triumph for him the second, the third, the fourth, the fifth time. No longer a novice in public life, he rules when he declaims. The passions of the people obey his winged word, as the waves obey the breath of the thunder-cloud. Still, however,—even still—the ravens croak. Lucifer hates the light. They detest it, too. First, it was, he had no eloquence. Then, the eloquence was too flowery. It was Irish eloquence they said. The dainty pedagogues!

But jealousies, when over-ridden, ripen into enmities. The enmities resolve themselves into conspiracies. The conspiracies pursue you night and day, coil about you even in sacred places, and if they do not destroy you with their sting, disfigure you with their slime. It is no longer your eloquence they disparage. That you have proved; and where the world applauds, the bitterest critic holds his tongue, and like a whipped hound huddles himself away. It is your patriotism they impeach. They write you down a "demagogue." They ransack the history of the most riotous times and rabbles for parallels to your shame. You are as surly and intractable as Thersites. As reckless as Cataline, you are as licentious as Lentulus. Lacking the ferocity of Marat, you compete with Danton in your avidity for a bribe. Like him, they say, you only open your mouth to have it stopped with gold. Throwing aside the classics, or the analogies of modern history, since these somewhat moderate the expression of their rancor, they dive headlong into the foulest pool of vituperation, and, plunging about there, defile you by the handful. You are a schemer! A libertine! A swindler! Worse than all, young patriot! Worse than schemer, by ten thousand times! Worse than libertine, as the leper is more odious than the cripple! Worse than swindler, as the slave who spit in the face of the Saviour is accounted viler than him who pierced him with the lance. Worse than all—hearken to it and shun the light—thou art an adventurer!

To the public cause you have given all. For that cause you have done the best and dared the worst. Time, fortune, heroism, genius, life itself has been dedicated to it. It has not made you rich; nor fashionable; nor a member of Congress; nor a city Judge; nor a General of Brigade. It has not put a penny in your pocket nor a feather in your cap. It leaves you in your manhood, poor but honest; brave but desolate; without a salary, without sycophants, without a stain.

But this is to be an adventurer! Personal success—no matter how achieved—alone redeems you from the infamy of the designation. Rise; better your condition; put money in your pocket; sell your opinions and sell the people; turn out a carriage on the proceeds; plant an Ethiopian on the box with a boa round his neck; paint an ape or boar with bloody tusks upon the door, to illustrate your ancestry; buy a house up-town; mortgage it for the furniture and the opening ball; get yourself appointed chairman of an association for the drainage of Lake Huron or a canal across the plains of Patagonia; run for the Presidency, and be bought off with a quarter of a million, and the appointment of Secretary of the Navy, the day before the Convention sits; do this, and you will be no adventurer, but a highly respected member of the best society.

Thus it is, as I have said before, when a gentleman changes his lodgings for the better, by a pleasant fiction of polite society, it is presumed, that his morals as well as his wardrobe undergo a propitious alteration. Thus it is, the vagabond of Bologne is baptized anew in the fountains of Versailles, and chastens into a neophyte amid the frescoes of St. Cloud. A drop or two of coronation-oil whitens the key of Bluebeard, and the imperial bees build honeycombs in the throat of the dead lion of December.

But it is not that the defeat of this good cause entails upon the public man—especially if that cause has assumed the magnitude of a revolution—as it was in Poland, as it was in Hungary, as it was in Italy, as it was in Ireland—it is not that this defeat entails upon him the ignominy and proscription which the worshippers of success, and their name is legion, can inflict. It is not this alone which the young man, entering public life, has to look to, and against which, if he determines to be true to the end, he has unflinchingly to steel himself. There is something far more severe. There is something far more galling to his heart—far more exasperating to his pride. When one has entered public life, his name, and everything belonging to him, proceeding from him and converging towards him, becomes the property of the public. The day of his first speech, he might as well have written it over the doorway of his bed-room, and have chalked it across his hat, as we have seen it on the Tuilleries in the days of the republic—la propriete nationale—the property of the nation! Everything—the most trivial—becomes notorious and exaggerated. Should he cross the Brooklyn ferry, ten to one! but the news will be telegraphed to Harlem. He takes a dozen of oysters with a friend in an Elysian grot at Hoboken, and the next morning it is announced that the distinguished Mr. Blank entertained a numerous and brilliant party at a sumptuous dinner in the big tree from California, under the dome of the Crystal Palace. Should he sneeze in a proscenium box at Niblo's, they'll hear of the event at the other end of Minnesota before the frost sets in. A perfect stranger—a Hoosier from Terra Haute or a Buckeye from Toledo—confronts him in a stage, says he's proud of his acquaintance, slaps him on the back, and invites him to a drink. He finds it impossible to refuse. That is, finds it impossible to escape. Out of a certain place, not on the map of either hemisphere, Scripture says, there's no redemption. He submits to the invitation. He descends into the exchange of the Astor House, or some other popular and populous resort, and takes the drink. He bobs to the Hoosier or winks to the Buckeye. From that moment out, it is reported in the highest circles that he's a confirmed sot, and periodically sleeps in the Tombs. A skulking shadow, in the pay of some low-bred conspirator, magnifies the glass into a gallon. And this, because he has provoked envy by his eloquence, and hatred by his honesty.

But it stops not here. They dog him to his home, nor goodness, nor love, nor death itself, is sacred to them. Of the oppressed Catholic of Ireland it was sublimely said: "Pains and penalties stood at his cradle, stood at his bridal-bed, stood at his coffin." The same is true of the public man. No festival of his—no festival of the Household Gods—however pure—however solemn—is safe from the intrusion of those slimy spies, who worm themselves into the beautiful mysteries of life, and make their living by the confidence they have betrayed, or the thief-like propensities they have, in spicy items and special correspondence, turned, in consequence of their obscurity, with impunity to account.

This is no exaggeration. Take up the memoirs of any public man, and you will admit, that what we have said, imperfectly depicts not only the penalties, but the coarse profanities to which he is exposed. And a code of public decency and justice defends the infliction of these penalties and the perpetration of these profanities. Let a man who has signalized himself on platforms in the Park, in the Legislature of the State, or elsewhere, incur some domestic visitation. Let his child upbraid, or his coachman bully, or his wife abscond, or the bailiff threaten, and immediately it is in print—the attractive heading of an extra—the appetizing bitter of the bar-room. Expostulate with the publishers of the scandal; protest against the heartlessness and indecency of thus, from the sanctuary which should be inviolable, stripping off the roof, tearing down the doors, breaking in the windows, and exhibiting the inmates to the rude gaze and criticism of the crowd; do this, and you will be told—the proprietor is a public man! You will be told there is no help for it. You will be told, it is in the natural course of human events! You will be told, that the public anxiety demands it, and that with the burglary and sacrilege the public appetite can alone be satiated! You will be told, that the public man can have no inviolability, no immunity, no repose, no shelter; no consideration, no charity, no mercy shown him; and that his woes, his joys, his infirmities, by a reversionary law which cannot be set aside nor mitigated, become the prey, the playthings, the damaged goods, which, after due advertisement, the public may bid for and appropriate.

Home, then, which in every time, with every people, in all vicissitudes; home, which with the poorest as with the richest; with him who has but a crust to mumble, as with him, who clad in purple and fine linen, has banquets of the choicest dishes furnished forth; home, which, be it in the sunny islands, where the orange dyes the air with its golden hue, and the palm-trees, like priests with outstretched arms, propitiate the sun, and life becomes the softest slumber, or be it in the eternal snows, where neither flower nor herb has root; home, of which the sea-boy, clinging to the mast at midnight, dreams until the sea dwindles to the brook which ripples by his cradle, and the star he looked on last becomes the ember on the hearth-stone; home, for which, wherever he may be or whatever be his fortune, the exile sighs, and for the good name of which his word and arm is ever prompt, and the tie that binds him invisibly to which no storm can break; home, dearer to him than altar, throne, triumphal car; home, the garden of his innocence, the temple of his faith, the monument of his fathers, the fountain-head of life; home is but a drifting wreck to him who ventures into public life.

Then should no man enter into public life? Is that the meaning of the parable we have spoken? Is that the conclusion to which these penalties should conduce? It were a selfish and a cowardly conclusion. No duty should be shirked for the perils which encompass it. That a bold appearance in public life, even with those who desire it least, sometimes becomes a sacred duty, is what the experience of every man asserts. Even modesty degenerates to sloth, or something of a kindred guilt, when the Republic is in danger, and demands in open court the voice and presence of the citizen. When such things come to pass; when some great question is submitted to the people; or some great wrong cries out for judgment; or some great project for the common good is broached; it becomes, if we mistake not, with every citizen, an eminent obligation to make known his opinion with an effect proportioned to the strength of mind and influence he may possess. It is a despicable prudence, which, for fear of being lampooned or hooted, at a moment of great public interest, crosses its legs, picks its teeth, and subsides into the insipidity of private life.

If then, as we have assumed, he be so called, so gifted, so inspired, let the candidate for the Capitol or the White House go forth! To his conscience, his courage, and his genius, let him trust. They are stronger than the critic, the slanderer, the assassin, or the spy. Calmly, proudly, defiantly, let him proceed. Envy, as we have seen, grows pale in the splendor of his intellect, and dumb in the music of his eloquence. Calumny falls like the bloated leech from the arm it wounded, but, with the full measure of its mean capacity, was unable to prostrate. What though the worst should come? What though his favorite people should fall away from him? Calmly, proudly, defiantly—we say again to him—let him proceed. Mutability is the supreme law of nature. We see it in the caprices of the wind, the fall of the leaves, the eclipse, the storm, and the sunburst. We read it in the course of the mightiest river; and, looking down into the mouth of the extinct volcano, and seeing there trees of the oldest growth, we read it in the history of the loftiest mountain. The waters which thunder into the abyss, where the River God each year demands his victim, as they recede, inch by inch, age after age, into the basin from whence they come, proclaim it in a voice louder than that which pealed from Sinai. Even so, the heart of a people changes, and its pathways are uncertain. Even so, the favorite of the people, and he that spoke to them the truth and rendered them good service, may be deserted. Yet even so, he shall stand on the holy height, and from thence shall not be cast down.

IRISH LITERATURE IN AMERICA.

It is exceedingly gratifying to behold the interest so generally manifested by men of intellect and position, concerning the labor of love which at present occupies Mr. O'Mahony. It was but natural that the large political emigration of '48 and '49, the assiduous students of that great mine of instruction opened up by the varied zeal and ability of the new soul that came into Ireland, should hail the announcement of Mr. O'Mahony's publication with pride and anxious expectation. But we are happy to state that all the honor of sustaining such a work will not fall to them. Much older citizens are worthily jealous of the avidity for works on Irish history displayed by their younger and more impetuous brethren; and the remarkable success of works relating to Ireland, published here, is chiefly owing to this noble feeling. Such decision on the part of the adopted citizens, naturally recommends the books in question to American students and readers who desire information on the history and literature of a country with which—Know Nothingism to the contrary notwithstanding—there are so many ties of blood, and brain and muscle.

Fully two-fifths of the purchasers of Irish works are Americans; and in some instances, such as "Maginn's Miscellanies," where the publications are of a purely literary character, the American support is quite two-thirds. Irish works of a semi-political, or completely historical hue, naturally interest the Irish bred, or the sons of Irish born people; but owing to the enterprise and taste of a leading American publisher, the demand for such books by native intelligence is steadily increasing and most encouraging.

The vast amount of Irish readers renders the reviewal of such works a necessity to every journal devoting any space to the literature of the day; and thus they are brought prominently before the public. Curiosity incites some, and taste leads others, to purchase them. American scholars and students read them for their worth and in a spirit of inquiry. American politicians seek their acquaintance "to post themselves up" on the affinities of an element they so desire to command. Thus, from a variety of causes, the works of dead Irish authors, or living ones, who have become citizens of the Republic, are a prominent contingent of the literature of the States.

The audience is extensive, and the varieties of literary food prepared for it embrace many topics of temporary and lasting interest. Yet it is due both to the former, and the fellowship of the latter, that the Celtic literature itself should be represented. In fact, the case or shelf devoted to "Irish literature" cannot be perfect without a specimen at least. We shall soon be enabled to install such a representative, in a new dress to be sure, but in the full possession of his own characteristics. He shall not alone be literally translated, but minutely interpreted to his transatlantic friends, in a manner to justify his introduction to them.

We have received many inquiries from friends and correspondents respecting Mr. O'Mahony's translation of Geoffrey Keatinge. The publisher, also, has been the recipient of several similar favors, of which he holds the following note in chief esteem, coming as it does from one so eminently qualified to give an opinion in the first place, and for the opinion he gives in the second, on both the original work and the translator.

"Knoxville, Tenn., July 10th, 1856.

"Dear Haverty: I wish you to put down my name as a subscriber to Mr. O'Mahony's translation of the Foras Feasa ar Erinn.

"That is a book long wanted, and which the 'Celtic Society' ought to have given us long ago. If William Elliot Hudson had lived, it would have been accomplished. And it will be no small credit to you if you can bring out here in America a work long acknowledged to be a desideratum in Ireland; executed, too, by a scholar so competent both to translate and to illustrate it with notes, as Mr. O'Mahony.

"I hope it is well advanced in its preparation.

"Faithfully yours, "JOHN MITCHEL."

Our note on the literary page last week was intended as a reply to those who made a similar request to that which Mr. Mitchel makes of the publisher. In answer to the conclusion of the above note, we may reiterate, that the work is "well advanced in its publication;" and remark, that any slight delay will be for the great benefit of the subscribers; Mr. O'Mahony, with a devotion only to be appreciated by the most sensitive scholars, having kept back the publication, in order to compare the manuscript copy of the Foras Feasa ar Erinn in his possession with another, kindly lent him by an educated gentleman in the West.

The conscientious scrutiny, patient collation, and loving care bestowed on the text, so that the allegorical traditions preserved by the poet-historian may be the more broadly and readily graspable to us in these days of railway reading, will render this "long wanted" book acceptable no less to the casual reader, than of serious usefulness to the historical student. That portion referring to the tribes of Ireland, will be copiously and clearly illustrated; and of itself ought to recommend the work for large circulation.

THE PATRIOTISM OF THE POOR.

We head a sentence or two with the same words we prefixed to a column, which, in our last number, made public the return of two gallant young Irishmen to the land of their birth, and the sacrifices they incurred in her cause. The modest generosity of American workmen suggests to us the propriety of repeating the phrase. As in the former case, a noble act has been done without a word of applause.

The Fourth of July saw the equestrian statue of Washington, appropriately placed in Union Square, with military honors, and commended to the respect and tutelage of this city by a distinguished divine. The ceremony received from the daily papers its commensurate publicity. Behind the glowing features of the pageant, however, there was a circumstance which should have been noticed. The bronze, we have been told by the Daily Times, was carted to its destination by one who had no payment for his labor. The pedestal was built up, and the statue set firmly upon it, by men who sought no recompense for their toil, the anxieties and expenses of their great task. The fund, raised for the grand and sacred decoration of the city, in the erection of this statue, was exhausted. Merchants designed the work. Poor men came forward, and with their generous hearts and hands consummated and crowned the splendid scheme.

Who are these workmen? Who is that cartman who brought down the bronze to its lasting destination?

The names of the merchants who proposed the statue have been made known. They thought and acted nobly. Such a work, devised by them, reflects a more radiant credit on their houses, than a thousand sail of clippers and mountains of cotton bales. That glorious link of bronze, so simply, yet so boldly wrought, indissolubly binds them to their country, to the memory of its first soldier and statesman, and the Union he fought for, counselled, and as an inestimable legacy bequeathed.

But the men who carried out the plan—who with their strong hands gave perfection to it, and in its staunch reality stationed it there, for all ages, before all eyes—these men should be known. They did not give their gold pieces to swell the bronze. They had them not. But all they had—the sweat by which they earn their children's bread—brain and nerve—heart and arm—they devoted to the work. Such is the modest patriotism of the noble poor.

We call, in the name of thousands, for the names of those gallant chevaliers of labor. In golden letters their names should be graven on that pedestal in Union Square. Without those names, it is an unfinished work.

OLD CLOTHES—CHATHAM STREET IN LONDON.

The world is full of strange inconsistencies. Principles appear occasionally to be only the attendant genii on the accident of place, and are changed as often as the raiments necessary to a change of climate. Sometimes we see a Lord Edward Fitzgerald, heir to all the monarchic ills that hang around the death-beds of British nobles, casting his family antecedents as a heavy garment from him, and adopting the more treasonable one, which changes his entire appearance in the eyes of the world, and ultimately wraps him as a shroud.

He leaves his native country and its prejudices, in the society of American Indians puts off the mantle of monarchy, and adopts those simpler mental garments which dignify him as a republican neophyte. Then again we behold Americans go to Europe, and through a miserable idea that fashion rules everything, (save Europe who rules fashion,) meekly and servilely accommodate themselves, in the face of all national pride, to the grovelling liveries that fringe society, and dangle their mean-spirited bodies round the political weaknesses or fashionable strength of the circles into which they humbly seek an entrance, which is vouchsafed in sneers and ratified by continued sarcasm. Many enjoy this denationalizing entree at the full and thoughtless abnegation of individuality, national honor, and personal pride. For the wretched and parvenue license of meeting men who laugh at their country and make fools of themselves, these Americans sacrifice both their past history and their future position for present association.

We have read with unmitigated contempt a letter in the London Times, touching the late bowing out of Professor Mahan, of West Point, from the Queen of England's levee. The letter is signed, "An American," and we would willingly believe that it never emanated from a child of this continent, but that it was the product of the Times itself, the signature being but an evidence of that barefaced effrontery for which that unscrupulous sheet is noted. The letter aforesaid is characterized by a solid impertinence worthy of the paper in which it appears. There is not the shadow of an argument in it, while it is profuse in snobbish assertion and a wilful forgetfulness of the individuality of the nation from which the writer borrows his signature. The writer has the "London assurance" to insinuate that Professor Mahan did not pay that attention to his dress, "without which he would not think of presenting himself at even a private party in his own country." Now, the "expelled" gentleman has given his own word on the subject; and moreover it is not to be supposed for an instant that Mr. Dallas would have accompanied him, or left with him, if he at all points was not raimented as became a gentleman.

The "American" letter-writer then protests against the wholesale charge of "ill breeding" brought against the American people by the English press, because, as he states, in "an isolated instance" an American has been found capable of "bad taste and want of common courtesy." This snobbishly ill-bred interference of the letter-writer is sustained throughout. Without in the first instance knowing what he talks about, or if knowing which, he mistakes with all the humbleness of a toady, and the care of a flunkey, he proceeds to make a laughing stock of himself, both to his friends at home and his enemies abroad.

JOHN MARTIN.

Our dear friend of Loughorne in a few weeks visits America. We state so on confidential authority. Having cast a loving eye on his old homestead near Newry, he cannot feel happy until he clasps once more the hand of John Mitchel. He shall find the hearts of his countrymen here as warm as the weather. More couldn't be said. More he would not wish us to say.

Terence McManus cannot be here earlier than April next. His letters to us, received by the last mails, state so.

PRESENTATION OF PLATE TO THE CAPTAIN OF THE MONTGOMERY GUARD, 11TH REGT.

On Thursday, the 17th instant, the Montgomery Guard had their annual Parade, upon which occasion they presented to their Captain, Thomas S. Murphy, at his residence in 28th st., a magnificent set of silver plate, consisting of a massive salver and tea set.

Lieutenant Clark, in a few appropriate remarks, presented the Captain with this chaste and valuable testimonial of the Company's esteem for his long and faithful services as Captain of the Guard. Captain Murphy responded in a very happy speech, recounting the history of the Guard.

Several other speeches were delivered on the occasion, interspersed with some excellent music by Shelton's Brass Band. A sumptuous entertainment was provided by Captain Murphy for the occasion.

Literature.

PERSONAL RECOLLECTIONS.

THE GALWAY ELECTION—MORE OF IT AGAIN.

The pawnbroker, staring through his cracked spectacles, sat up straight in his bed, and exclaimed—

"Well, then, to business, since it's that you're on."

The spectacles were cracked. They were cracked in the shape of a star, or a sun-fish with an extra allowance of legs. They were cracked as a smooth, clear sheet of ice happens occasionally to be, when a gentleman in broad pantaloons, being swept clean off his heels, falls plump backwards upon it. Set in the palest silver, they blended fearfully with Mr. Cassidy's complexion. 'Twas a ghoul in a night-shirt that sat there before us. A copy of the World newspaper lay crumpled amongst the hillocks and furrows of the quilt, close to the wall. The quilt was of patch-work. A dingy brown color prevailed. The smell of stale mustard was strong.

"Mr. Cassidy," said the stranger who first addressed him, "the exciting circumstances of this moment may at once suggest to you the purport of our visit."

"Ever read the World?" was Mr. Cassidy's pleasant interruption.

"Your'e aware, sir," resumed the diplomatist with the airiest benignity, taking no heed of the question the pawnbroker propounded, "that a great—a serious—a vital question, in short, is now being decided in your town. An election—a furious and deadly election is raging. On the one hand, we have, sir, the nominee of a foreign government."

The pawnbroker, during the first part of the foregoing sentence, had turned his back on the speaker, and busied himself violently, rummaging under the bolster and mattress for something. Wheeling suddenly with a stern movement into his former position, he faced his visitors, with a flute under his lip, his fingers upon the keys, and his night-cap thrown back from his forehead. The night-cap looked as if it were made out of cobwebs. It looked as if peopled with spiders. It looked as if the spiders were frantic, and were twisting and jerking it (holding on by the tassel) back from the pawnbroker's head. The flute was a German one, made of dark cocoa wood, mounted in ivory and silver. The ivory was cracked. The cocoa wood was cracked. So was the pawnbroker. The silver had the distemper. It was the color of soot, with a slight infusion of white-wash.

"Ever hear Away with Melancholy?" the musician inquired.

"Seldom under such circumstances," was the temperate reply.

It was gracefully tendered. My friend rose with the occasion. His sweetness increased as the difficulties of his patriotic diplomacy grew to be more close and entangled. The eccentricities of the miserable elector in bed, were enough to exasperate the blandest of spirits. The impediments his capricious intellect, movements, and tastes, threw in the way of a prompt settlement of the question in point, were more than enough to repel the hardest of hearts. Diplomacy, after all, is the superlative of art. In no other business, does heart or brain, physical endurance or Christian patience undergo such excruciating tests. In no other business, do they so wonderfully demonstrate their elasticity. In no other business, do they so exquisitely harmonize theft with honesty, and the turmoil of Erebus with the placidity of Elysium. It is the Andean altitude of Art. There is no ascension on this earth beyond it.

My friend was master of it. The scene, in which he proved himself on this occasion, was confined. The issue of his controversy was insignificant. But in the classic days, we're told, one made himself famous for his physical achievements—famous for carrying with the jauntiest air and ease the weightiest loads—having begun with carrying a calf, and continuing to carry it until it became a ponderous ox. It grew on his back, and he strengthened with its strength. So, too, the Irish game-keeper became the first of shots in his neighborhood, and for miles and miles round. The gun he used, he knew it, he said, ever since t had been a pistol. And so, too, my friend in this Galway election practised on small things in the narrowest spheres. But in the obscure practice he disclosed an exhaustless wealth of temper, genius, language, urbanity, ingenuity, duplicity and delicacy, which—set in motion on a loftier stage—set to control the ambition of princes—set to upset the schemes of Metternichs or Talleyrands—would have immortalized him in the pages of the Macaulays and Machiavellis of a century greater than the Nineteenth. Had Ireland been a nation, he should have had the mission to Japan.

Mr. Cassidy poured his dull soul into the cracked cocoa-wood, and, looking over his spectacles, burnt his blood-shot eyes, as if with a pair of red-hot knitting-needles, into his audience. A grotesque and imaginative thief, there was method in his madness.

"He's as mad as a hatter," whispered the Repealer to me, winking one eye to flatter the maniac, and the other to intimate he understood it completely. The maniac was partly misled. Partly. For a look through the spectacles, fiercer than usual, gave notice he was watching us sharply. Mr. Cassidy, evidently, in the depth of his own mind determined to have the best of the joke. He came to the conclusion he could tire us out with his comical tricks, into his own way of thinking. Some men close up a bargain, considerably to their disadvantage, to get rid of the trouble and vexation the huckstering discussion entails. Cassidy, who knew the value of the emeralds of New Granada, from the labor their discovery necessitates, was well aware of this weakness. He inwardly resolved to be obstinate. His eccentricities and pranks were but the expression of his secret oath to achieve the highest price for his vote.

My friend's name has not been as yet mentioned. I felt some delicacy in giving it. In the course of the narrative, I have warmed (as one does with rich wine, briskly sent round) and becoming confidential, disclose it. James O'Hea is the name. An attorney by necessity and profession—had he the fine linen and full purse to sport, his tastes would have seduced him into the more gilttering regions of Government, and been satisfied exuberantly with the knee-breeches and small sword of the mission to Naples. Providence unequally dispenses the gifts of the world. Stupidity and proud flesh are paramount, whilst genius huddles itself away from the blaze of diamonds, and the flaunting of sky-blue Garters, and the cloudy grandeur of Golden Fleece honors, into a dim cell with a broken bedstead and window, where with the stump of a pen, as if with a Prospero wand, it gives to the world the Vicar of Wakefield, or Gissipus, a tragedy, which covers the grave of the author as with the towering and arching magnificences of a cosmopolitan Pantheon. Instead of bamboozling a Bourbon at the foot of Vesuvius, James O'Hea, a Carrickfergus attorney, was doing his best to out-wit an obscure pawnbroker of Galway. It was not a throne, but a vote that was at stake. Such are the mistakes of Fortune. Such, it appears to me, are the infelicities which humiliate genius and impoverish mankind, being the main cause of the ugliest quarrels between nations, and all the evils which, like toads and lizards from an overturned fountain, in the slimiest abundance issue therefrom.

"Admirable!" the gentle attorney exclaimed, as Mr. Cassidy solemnly dwelt on the last notes of the piece he had selected, and unfolding his eyelids to the tattered roof of the bedstead, expanding his shirt bosom and fainting back on the bolster, blew the most solemn and sorrowful wind through the dark tunnel which forwarded to the wall the varying moods of his soul.

"Beautiful!" I plaintively murmured, ravenously wishing for the death of the comical rascal, or that his flute and himself might be blowed.

Mr. Cassidy laughed as he took down his flute, and smoothly shoved it in under the blankets and quilt. It was like sheathing a rapier in velvet. The sensation produced by it was perfectly delicious. When buried completely, Mr. Cassidy, slipping himself after it, and leaving nothing but his teeth, cracked spectacles and night-cap of cobwebs in sight, for a second time laughed. 'Twas the laugh of a hyena. Had it come from the mouldiest vault in which dead people were stored, it could not have sounded more horrible.

"Oh! let's go," I emphatically said; "he's a frightful old scoundrel."

"To beguile the time, look like the time—bear welcome in your eye, your hand, your lip"—

Mr. O'Hea went on in the sweetest style with the quotation, waving and curving his right hand to the silent musician, who with his keen red-hot knitting-needles of eyes pierced him through and through almost, until he came to the end of it, when the diplomatist turned to me, impressively repeating the words—

"Look like the flower, but be the serpent under it."

"I'm sick," says Cassidy, observing that the attention of the speaker was drawn away from him for a moment, and not wish-to be a second neglected.

"I'm sick," says the flutist, wriggling under the quilt, working his spectacles up and down his nose, from eyebrows to nostrils, digging the flute deeper into the blankets at the foot of the bed, so as to make the keys very audibly shake, and then seizing the World with his left hand, crumpling it savagely, working it spasmodically with his fingers into a huge wrinkled ball, waving it furiously in the air, and finally pitching it against the window, from which it rebounded, falling into a basin of suds, which had been lying, in a sickly white frame, under the shadowy window for more than a week. Mr. O'Hea was no wise dismayed. Not the least. He was confident of his strength, ingenuity, and patience. He knew that Cassidy was anxious to be bought. Knowing this, he knew Mr. Cassidy's weakness. Knowing his weakness, he knew how to manage him. He had the secret o his success. Determined to tire him out, he was resolved to be patient. In fact, with the consciousness of his own strength, the weakness of his victim, and the certainty of conquest, it cost him nothing to be calm, complacent, affable, and abiding. Thus it is that the largest salmon are sloped quietly ashore. Thus it is that even the sternest rock will become a sponge.

"That flute must be a great comfort to you," the gentleman all the way from Carrickfergus observed.

"Nothing to you," growled Cassidy, slipping deeper under the bed-clothes, and snuffling, as if suffocating, as the tip of his nose went under.

"Come, now, Mr. Cassidy."

"Never mind Mr. Cassidy."

"Like a good fellow."

"You're mighty soft—aren't ye?"

"But you know?"

"But I don't."

"There's nothing like a man having a little money beside him."

Mr. Cassidy came up, drawing the flute after him, It was exposed to the third joint. The patient himself was visible to the waist. A smile was perceptible. It filled up the holes left by the small-pox, and played through the cracks of the spectacles. Then there was a rubbing of hands, and another laugh from the hyena, as if the hyena had just made a good match, and had a great fortune secured him. I was thoroughly tired all this time, and several times implored my friend to drop the Three Balls, or else excuse me for going alone. He was not to be touched. Stick to him, I should. See it out, he appealed to me by the loftiest considerations to do. I felt bound to him by links of iron. But the links were covered with honey, and gradually his wit and suavity were transforming the sick reprobate into an interesting case, from the contemplation of which I felt myself, every moment, less and less disposed to steal or tear myself away. It was Titania in love with poor Bottom.

Bottom lay in bed, enchanted partly by his own conceit (he was sure he'd win his own terms), and partly by the attorney of Oberon, who, even by this time, had so played upon his delicate imagination, that the bed-posts glittered like thick sticks of gold, and the whitewash on the walls melted into golden showers, and the cobwebs in the corner of the window-frame tightened themselves into stiff nettings of fine gold. The illusion became so beautiful, the pawnbroker felt his night-cap harden into a crown of the precious metal. He was in ecstacies.

"You're a good fellow," he cried out—"a right good fellow—the best fellow I've met this many a day"—he shouted, slapping the quilt with the flute, which he had pulled out the full length from its scabbard—"good luck to the girls, and three cheers for Cassidy!"

His delight became riotous. He jerked off his night-cap, pitched the flute over the foot-board of his bed, threw up his spectacles, launched the bolster out on the floor, whirled one of the pillows over his red hair, kicking up his toes, and beating the mattress and sheets with his heels, as if swimming for life and death in a horse-pond on the broad of his back. But the fit didn't last long.

"That's right, Mr. Cassidy," said Mr. O'Hea, patting him confidentially on his left shoulder, and whispering to him that all should be right.

"Where is it?" asked Cassidy.

"You'll have it the moment your up," whispered O'Hea.

"A bird in the hand is worth two in the bush," the pawnbroker observed with a frown, a cough, a scornful twitch of his lip and left shoulder, and his whole manner subdued.

"Oh! get up, Mr. Cassidy—get up, if you please—we're in a hurry you know."

This request was urged with the sweetest earnestness of gesture and voice. It was not half through, when the bed-clothes became perfectly still. Nothing but a dull waste lay flat and noiseless between the four posts of the bed. Nothing was visible but the brown quilt, and the quilt was unruffled. The pawnbroker was below. He had disappeared—like his flute on a former occasion.

"Mr. Cassidy?"

Not a word, not a stir, not a ripple on the surface.

"Mr. Cassidy?"

The name was called in a louder tone this time, but to no purpose. It might have been a corpse was under the quilt.

"Mr. Cassidy, here's what you want."

Mr. O'Hea had forced his hand deep into his trowers' pocket, and drawn from out there a hand-full of crispy banknotes. He squeezed them. They rustled. He took one, holding it up to the light, and rattled it sharply and cunningly. It rattled like the newest and brighest of tin-foil. It gave out, like a chorus of crickets, the liveliest of notes. It was brisk enough to have started a miser, a hundred years dead, from his shroud. Cassidy awoke.

"Now, won't you come?" said his tempter.

"Would you like any beef?" asked the pawnbroker, half with a smile and half with a leer.

Mr. Cassidy got on the floor. His movement in doing so was rapid. It was a wild slide and descent. Lightly clad in his loose cotton tunic, he threw himself on his knees in front of a green box, which stood near the window, close to the foot of his bed. Inserting a key and twisting it in the lock, with a grin and a squint at his visitors, he lifted the lid, looked into the box eagerly, gave a cough and snuffle, smelt about for a second or two, laughed like a hyena, shook his head sharply, laughed again, grinned and squinted again at his guests, and then shut down the lid. Quickly retracing his steps to the head of the bed, he tossed up the blanket and quilt in search of his spectacles. The search was productive of many queer treasures.

First of all, he drew up a pamphlet. It was as brown as a tobacco leaf dried. Loosely stitched, it flew with a hundred disjointed wings, as the pawnbroker pitched it away from him, and fell with disordered plumage on the mouth of an earthenware pitcher in the corner close to the door. Taking it up, I found it to be an odd number of Watty Cox's Magazine. An embroidered waistcoat, very much worn and stained, was the next thing which came to the top. This, too, the diver flung from him. A razor-strop followed. Then a japanned toasting-fork. After that a volume of Josephus, in a contemptible state of decay. An umbrella, with a goose's head carved in white bone on the handle, tumbled out on the back of Josephus. A case of surgical instruments, a pair of middling-sized tin scales, a flannel waistcoat, an old Leghorn bonnet, two or three blue worsted stockings, a purple morocco portfolio, nail-brushes and boot-hooks—a promiscuous collection of comical yarieties rewarded his subsequent labors. At last he got to his spectacles. They were the things—the very things—he just wanted. Putting his ears through them, and picking up his night-cap, he returned to the green box. Once more on his knees, he lifted the lid. Once more with his nose deep in the interior, he scented keenly for something in its perfumed recesses. One by one he drew out and laid on the floor the following articles—a teapot, a sugar-bowl, a toast-rack, a bundle of tea-spoons tied with thin twine, a mahogany time-piece, a shaving-case, and two old fashioned egg-cups of silver. Every article was set down on the floor with a laugh, a squint, and a grin. A shout or a shriek, with a brief dance in the short tunic, varied occasionally the monotonous process. It was, on the whole, a grim exhumation of forfeited deposits.

"That," he cried out, holding up the electrotyped teapot and rattling it, "has belonged to one of the Blakes."

His explorations went on. By-and-bye he came to a razor. Opening it carefully, he passed it up and down the ball of his left thumb.

"Good!" says he, with a wink like that of a fiend, "one of the Frenches owned that."

An ivory enamelled card-case made its appearance on the dish of a brass candle-stick. The dish was discolored and foul. It was as green and as damp as a grave in the churchyard of Kilbarry. The last treasure exhumed was a piece of stale corned beef, as tough as an ash-root, about the size of a brick. A thick rag of fat clung to it, and a broken bone forced its way through it. The bone was decayed. Spotted with something like verdigris, it was punctured all over.

* Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year 1856, by THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER, in the Clerk's office of the District Court of the U States, for the Southern District of New-York.

"Take a bit," Mr. Cassidy, with the most winning voice said, smiling at his guests, holding the beef in one hand, and with the razor, which belonged to one of the Frenches, slicing the meat dexterously.

After this, I concluded we were done for. I gave up the game in despair. Cassidy couldn't be wheedled. 'Twas no use in trying. He was obstinate, dogged, incorrigible. Nothing could coax him. Nothing could bend him. Nothing could reason or tempt him out of his pretended insanity. He was determined to beat us. We should have to conclude with him on his own full terms, or we might go home. That was his determination. The variety of his treasures—those countless forfeited goods—boothooks, teapots, saucepans and razors—above all, that package of beef—enabled him, with considerable relish to himself, to prolong the experiment. I couldn't stand it any longer. Mr. O'Hea was still patient and hopeful.

"Good day, Mr. Cassidy."

"Good day," he laughed out—"won't you have a bit?"

And as I drew the door after me, I saw the pawnbroker, staring fiercely at me through the cracks of his spectacles, stretching the boiled beef in his skinny hand towards me, and with his yellow teeth set and his stump of a nose curved in a grin, inviting me to take a bit, if it were ever so small.

The Three Students.

[From the German.]

"Drei munt're Burschen sassen gemuthlich bei dem wine Und Schenkten ihu gar waker in thre glaser ein."

I.

Three jovial students, merrily, were seated o'er the cup,
And ever, still more stoutly, they filled their glasses up.
Then spoke the first: "A bumper, boys, of Rhinewine's golden wealth!
I have at home a sweetheart dear, come, let us drink her health!
Dark-eyed is she, and ebon-haired, and slender as the fir;
With glowing lips whose nectar dew I often stole from her."
Then clink'd the ringing glasses and gave a joyous clang,
And like a song of triumph the clear vibrations rang!

II.

"And I," outspoke the second, "I also know a lass,
With whom, right often, sportively the rapid hours I pass.
Brown-eyed is she, and brown her locks, no fawn ere stepped so light;
And clear her voice as cloister-bells upon a mountain's height."
Then clink'd the ringing glasses, and rose a mirthful clang,
Like joybell chimes of victory the clear vibrations rang.

III.

"Hark!" cried the first, with sparkling eye, "these happy omens show
Our sweethearts still think of us, and of our kisses' glow."
"I too," the third said, bashfully, "a gentle maid adore,
We love each other tenderly, and shall for evermore.
Blue-eyed she is, and flaxen-haired, all mildness, love, and grace;
But, ah! I cannot picture it, that angel form and face."
Then clash'd the glasses jarringly, the third's asunder sprang;
A cry of grief! long echoing and piercing was the clang.

IV.

The first two started up amazed, but, bowing down his head,
The youngest, weeping bitterly, a show'r of sorrow shed.
And that same hour was tolling, in a distant homestead dell,
A spirit's heav'nward welcome—the solemn funeral bell.
But one, late peerless, heeded not the sacred choral now,
For slumbered still and peacefully that angel form and brow.
The mild blue eyes, like stars, had set in Death's mysterious wave,
And through the flaxen hair was wreathed a garland for the grave.

Louisiana. SHAMROCK.

The Literary Gazette says, Shakspeare's house, if report speaks true, it would seem, after all, is to have a crystal palace to itself. Our readers may perhaps remember that, during the year of the Great Exhibition, 1851, an idea was first started, by some considered an importation from America, but one, we believe, that really emanated from Leamington: namely, of enclosing the house in which Shakspeare is reputed to have been born, at Stratford-upon-Avon, in a large structure of glass, isolating it at the same time from surrounding buildings by removing them, in order to ensure its preservation from fire, even as the former arrangement was calculated to protect it from the effects of the weather. This proposal was submitted successively to the American Minister, Sir Edward Bulwer, Mr. Charles Dickens, Mr. Foster, Mr. Macready, and others; but the Guild of Literature monopolized the literary mind of the epoch, and it fell to the ground, although the suggestion was warmly approved of by some of those gentlemen. Within these few weeks, however, a certain Mr. John Shakspeare, who claims relationship (of course very remote) with the family of the immortal bard, has been in Stratford making inquiries and arrangements preparatory to carrying out a plan similar in all respects to the one we have described. The sum, we understand, he intends spending in thus gratifying his feelings, is about three thousand pounds; and we learn, moreover, that whenever the preliminaries are arranged, Sir Joseph Paxton and Messrs. Fox and Henderson are to be consulted as to the deed.

The overture to Don Juan was written by Mozart the night preceding the first representation; that of Montano the same morning. Rossini commenced the overture to William Tell one morning and finished it the same hour the next.

DESIDERIUM.

Vast are the cities on the shores of the West;
Bright are the palaces that spangle their breast;
Broad are the rivers which they crown by the sea;
Noble the monuments and halls of the free!
Yet are we wandering back from them all—
Back to the sorrows and the pains of our thrall:
Rather, we brood o'er the hopes they enshroud,
Hopes which the efforts of our hearts make proud.

Last night did I venture, on the full tide of sleep,
To the island of our love through the waste of the deep;
And I passed o'er the places of its fame here and there,
Like a watcher of the dead who half thinks of his prayer.
On Inis Mac Nessan did I rest for a while,
To look upon the sea from the height of its pile;
But e'er I could ascend, I was trembling with joy,
Sitting in a cloister of old Knockmoy.

Afar where Destruction flung his flag on the gale,
O'er the weed-covered monuments in Glendalough's vale,
As I made a petition by the shore of the lake
A Kingly O'Byrne came his orisons to make.
And while we were kneeling, there were drums in the Pale;
And while we were rising, there were shouts from Imaile;
And from out St. Kevin's bed a tall bishop step'd,
His hand towards the capital: so pointing he wept.

Then a stream seemed to ripple where my rapt glances flew,
And I saw the bright Slaney in its wavelets of blue;
But a spirit made a sign with his wand o'er the flood,
And the clouds roll'd above it while the banks spouted blood;
And up from the purple wave there sailed in the sky
A meteor distracting to my sore puzzled eye—
'Twas the banner of our fathers which I knew not at first,
So steeped were its glories in the blood whence it burst.

In a soft vale of Munster, by the well of St. John,
I numbered the pilgrims—they came one by one.
I looked in their faces from the shade of the yew—
The number was scanty, and the faces were new.
There were faces on the upland, my eyes had not known;
In the vale there were voices, how strange in their tone.
Not a spot that I cherished but change had passed o'er,
Yet my love for that vale was more deep than before.

Onward I hurried, with the swiftness of light,
Through the bright colored fringes that hung round the night;
Through the deep purple borders of clouds rolling back,
Where the pinions of Thought made a fast-fading track.
Oh! but the spectacles that thronged to my view,
The castles that I clambered and the hills that I knew;
The spires and the meadows of my dear younger days
And house-loving peasant-men strolling o'er the ways.

The old stricken piles that so reverently spread
Their gray holy fragments round the tombs of the dead;
The monuments that pleaded for the days of creaght and camp;
The towers grimly scowlingly at the antiquarian's lamp;
The wild-storied mountains, where musically clear
Came the bugle-voice of Freedom on the heart and on the ear;
The rivers, raths and ruins—over all the arching skies,
That like our heart surrounded all that held our throbbing eyes.

Soon came the ending, for the beams of the day,
With lordly spoliation did my bliss take away—
Away did they banish it, pitilessly bright;
But my heart kept the darkness while my eyes saw the light.
'Twas thus, when half-summoned from the dream-land I cried—
"You who take scandal that the past is our pride,
Not on us lay your anger, not to us give your blame;
Let them rest, let them center on the land whence we came."

F. O'R.

LION HUNTING IN AFRICA.

THE ADVENTURES OF GERARD, THE LION-KILLER; comprising a History of his ten years' Campaign among the Wild Animals of Northern Africa. Translated from the French by CHARLES E. WHITEHEAD. Derby & Jackson.

Jules Gerard is no Van Amburgh. He is no lion-tamer, who pounces on a cub and rears him up in a Tom Thumb state of stupid mechanism to appal the parquette and glorify the gallery with the stunted thunder of a pet lion's roar before the footlights and behind the iron bars of a cage. He is not the jailor of "wild beasts" reduced to a state of cultivated civilization; but master of the royal savagery of the jungles and deserts. His work is masterly in its way, and one of the most interesting we have read for some time. It has all the freshness of a first-rate novel, at the same time that it is an important contribution to the archives of natural history. Full of life, vigor, and incident, told in a clear and highly characteristic manner, flowing over with knowledge of the subject, it is quickened by descriptions, the peculiar ease and coloring of which, to us—who never gave a real lion the "top o' the morning," nor as much as asked a hyena the "time o' day"—appears the most natural in the world. Truly, the book cannot fail to lead the reader, with all the intense devotion of "a looker on" at dangerous sports, through every scene of the Lion Killer's triumphs.

It was said that some morbid individual followed Van Amburgh all round the world, visiting every performance, being possessed with a hope or an idea that the great Tamer would be minus his head some day that he put it into his great Lion's mouth; and was excited to an almost unnatural desire to be present when that event (and the head) should come off. Metaphysicians can account for the feeling that thus made a very extensive and matter-of-fact traveller out of a morbid maniac. It is not so difficult to give a reason why the reader, like the above person, will follow Gerard through his many adventures, having an anxious idea that his next will be his last. For, although the editor tells us in his introduction that he saw the wonderful Jules himself, looking like a "Mississippi scout," in the shooting-gallery of Monsieur Devisme in Paris, after he had gone through his ten years' campaign, still, the incidents are so startling, the situations so hazardous, the movements so breathless, and the encounters detailed, in many instances, so disastrous and deadly to all else than Gerard, that one cannot overcome the anxiety formed as to each succeeding expedition.

The chase of the Panther, the Wild Boar, the Hyena, the Jackal, the Fox, not to mention such creatures as the Antelope, Gazelle, and Porcupine, are flat, stale and unprofitable to the deadly Gerard. Nothing less than the lion is fit to face him, and woe be to the tawny head that does. He will never shake a mane again. His thunder is only a memory for aye and ever after. He shall never again roar into his cubs' ear, that the Grand Duke, the young imperial Prince of the wild, may learn to fear no lesser sound. His day is done. When he meets Gerard, he faces eternity. This Frenchman is prone to solitude, strange to relate, but who can say but that the calm death-giving eye of his has memories of other rapture than sending, with a click of his rifle, great Lions of Mahounah into the ghostland of quadrupeds? Mayhap those very memories drove him to the crag and jungle, calmed his heart, steadied his arm and eye, and made him a greater Lion than any he has killed. Well, we must not, (because we cannot) pry into his secrets; but we can, with his permission, inspect minutely his other self—his weapon:

"Before I left Paris I received from M. Adolphe d'Houdetot, a superb rifle, that he had ordered, made by Devisme, expressly for the chase of the lion.

"This remarkable gun had two chambered barrels twenty-five and one-half inches in length. The bore was of number fifty-two gauge, cut with a progressive twist like the carbines of the Chasseurs of Vincennes. The manner of loading it is the same. The ball is canonical in shape, and pointed with steel for about half its length. This gives it great power of penetration, and it will pierce the hardest substances. The rifle weighed seven pounds and twelve ounces.

"At the same time Devisme gave me a beautiful double-edged poinard of pure steel, with a blade a foot long, and a hand's breadth in width. In his turn, Mooutier Lepage gave me a double-barrel rifle, as carefully finished as the other, and made expressly for my use. It was twenty-two inches in length, of number sixty-two guage, and of the same pattern as has since been chosen for the Hundred Guards of his Majesty the Emperor. The nine spiral grooves make one turn in twenty-seven and one-half inches, and the ball is cylindrical canonical, and weighs two hundred and twenty-five grains.

'When I tried these guns for the first time with Monsieur Devisme and Monsieur Lapage, either in their galleries or at Vincennes, I was astonished at their power of penetration. The ball with a steel point pierced a cast iron plate a third of an inch in thickness, while the leaden bullet pierced an oak plank nine inches thick. With these weapons, the best that could be made for lion hunting, I returned to Africa in the year 1848, to resume my old course of life, that seemed to me the pleasanter from its contrast to Parisian gaieties."

Here is a picture of a Lion of Constantine,

SNUFFING THE BATTLE.

"If by chance it is an old lion that they have roused, he awakens from his lethargic slumbers at the first sound, and, yawning, stretches himself like a lazy dog that has been awakened to soon. Then catching the full cry that comes with the morning wind, and knowing from his own experience, or by family tradition, the meaning of the tumult, he rubs himself backward and forward against a tree, stopping from time to time to wrinkle his broad forehead, or raise his tawny mane, ever and anon throwing up his head and catching the tainted breeze that stirs among the underwood. Then he slowly quits the cover, and selecting some high flat rock that overlooks the country, and from whence he can watch the tactics of his enemies, he stretches himself down, and examines the approaching hordes that the mists of early morning half conceal, half disclose."

"There he goes"—cries the Arab who first beholds him, and that voice stills all the others, and turns all eyes towards the monarch's throne. The Arabs within sight halt to behold him. Others hurry on to the point. A long silence follows, and the Arabs calmly examine their guns, look to their primings, and "the Lion with his huge paws combs out his mane, and makes his morning toilette." Finally, says Gerard, an Arab comes out from one of the groups, and says:

"You don't know us, or you would not remain seated there. Rise and fly, for we are of such a tribe, and I am so and so, son of such a warrior!"

"The Lion, who has probably stripped the skin off of many a native while talking such nonsense, scarcely regards the speaker, but continues to smooth down his face with his paws, and make himself handsome."

Other orators abjure the Lion to fly, but he is not much impressed with their "hyfalutin'" lingo, nor with the names of their tribes or fathers. They call him "Jew," "Christian," and "Infidel." He does not care if they were to call him a Mormon, although it would be more libellously untrue than either of the other epithets. His stolidity arouses their lungs, they make a tumult, and the Lion, like a schoolmaster in the midst of his noisy boys, loses patience, but rises coolly, lashes his flanks with his tail, digs the knob of it into his short ribs, and marches right at his foes. The men retreat to where their cavalry await them. There is a brandishing of arms, and waving of burnous, and neighing of steeds and battle cries, but "suddenly the horses that but a moment before were flying like sand-clouds, come to a halt, with dilated nostrils, and quivering ears, while the great voice of the Lion rolls down the hill: they catch his wind, and stand shivering for fear." Seeing the crowd, the lion is full conscious of his advantageous position, and determining to keep it, stretches himself and refuses to advance:

"The cries and provocations are disregarded; something stronger must be tried to make him move. The hunters consult, and hesitate, until at last an old man steps out, who, if he has not been wounded in some former battle, at least has some relative to revenge, and he speaks:

"'Young men—all of you who care for your fortunes, your families, or your heads, you can go to your tents.'

"Although there are a great many who value these necessaries of life, and would much prefer to be safely under their tents, yet no one moves. The Arab who would leave at such a moment would be dishonored forever. The old man then takes a few steps in advance, he proudly throws back his burnous, and, after taking aim for about five minutes, fires. The ball goes skipping along wide of the mark, but the lion, now thoroughly indignant, springs to his feet; he no longer walks, but charges headlong.

"The rout of the Arabs is immediate and universal. Some of those posted in the trees send their balls at him in his pursuit, the cavaliers advance, and the lion again crouches down, holding some unlucky wight, whose legs were not as quick as his fears, under his gigantic paw. Another shot, and another charge, until the lion, finding himself fatigued by this desultory mode of warfare, takes a position that he will not quit but with his life.

"He pays no attention to the balls and insults that they hurl at him from a distance, but when the crowd gradually approach—when, shoulder to shoulder, the long lines of Arabs march up to closer quarters, while the snorting horses are following close behind, when the iron tubers are all levelled at the one target, and the single foe finds his enemy within reach, he makes a prodigious bound at the living wall. The guns belch forth their flame and ball, and under the canopy of smoke that hangs in the still air, the royal beast rages and tears, until he lies down on a pile of human flesh, and struggling horses, and dies like a king, as he lived."

NOTES FROM THE NORE.—II.

BY A KILKENNY MAN.

"What's in a name?"—SHAKESPEARE.

"Softened by atmospheric zeal," I gratefully appreciate the kindness of T. L. and W. F. B. in correcting one or two slight errors in my first batch of "Notes from the Nore"—errors which escaped my attention until my earliest contribution appeared in your paper, when I detected them, but deemed them too trifling to justify me in troubling you about them:

"O wad some power the giftie gie us,
To see oursels as others see us!
It wad frae monie a blunder free us,
And foolish notion."

Burns sang thus. Ought I not now justly estimate the wisdom of his words?

T. L. rectifies a mistake which I committed only because I relied less upon my own memory, than on the express statement of a newspaper I recently received from Kilkenny. It was thus I was led to substitute the title of "Mechanics' Institute" for that of "Citizens' Club Rooms."

W. F. B. is right in supposing that, in saying Dr. Kelly was President of St. Kieran's College, I alluded "to the old College of Birchfield, a few miles from the city, and the residence of one of the Smithwicks." I was aware of the fact that the college, of which Dr. Kelly was President, stood in Birchfield, but I was not aware that the said college did not bear the venerated title of St. Kieran. Indeed, I had the assurance of a clergyman educated therein, that he never heard it denied the designation made use of in my "memorandle." I did not forget the fact that "the late Bishop of Waterford was dead many years before the structure at present known as St. Kieran's College was erected." This new institution is located near Patrick street, on the once fashionable promenade known as the "New Road." It was incomplete when I last visited it, in the summer of 1847. The college building proper was in an advanced state, but merely the shell of the chapel adjoining had been erected. When completed, it was anticipated that the new college and the grounds surrounding it would form one of the chief objects of attraction in "the City of the Confederation."

The "old College of Birchfield," I may add, is or lately was, the residence of Richard Smithwick, Esq., a spirited, cordial, clever, fine fellow, of whom Kilkenny need not be ashamed. "Edmund Smithwick, Mayor"—for this gentleman is so tableted on Kilkenny's walls—resides in Kilcrene, a charming little homestead about a mile and a-half outside of the city, off the road to Callan. On the Kilcrene estate, there are two small mansions. In 1848, Lieut.-Gen. McDonald occupied one of these. He was commander of Her Majesty's forces in the city of Kilkenny. They comprised about 650 men, rank and file. The 83rd Regiment was the principal constituent. Gen. McDonald was very fond of military displays, and knew well their awing influence on the popular heart. He held frequent reviews, and had many field exhibitions. These were mainly intended to impress the people who beheld them with an enervating sense of the terrific power of the British Government. Nothing could surpass the skill, discipline, and trim of the soldiery on such occasions. However, a day soon arrived when any preconceived notions of superior and invincible prowess were to be dispelled. At the time of the abortive Ballingarry rising, Gen. McDonald received orders to march his force against the "rebels." Ballingarry, I think, was about nine or ten miles distant from Kilkenny. Late of a Saturday afternoon, in the month of July, 1848, the whole of the effective garrison of Kilkenny city started from its barrack ground, on the eastern side of the Nore, under its veteran commander, for the scene of "the rebellion in embryo." It left the city at the mercy of the populace, a few old pensioners alone occupying the barrack buildings and fortifications. The constabulary force was also very weak. I well remember how the Kilkenny confederates exulted at the opportunity thus presented by the enemy's imprudence, to secure a popular triumph, and how strongly they urged upon their leaders the necessity of availing themselves of so auspicious an event. But by the extreme cautiousness, or culpable cowardice of some of these "leaders," the opportunity was let pass, and the people's hopes were nipped in the bud. Not long after Gen. McDonald's command had begun their march, a rain-storm set in, which continued from Saturday evening to an early hour on Sunday morning. The soldiery were completely drenched. Without meeting the "insurrectionists," they returned to their head-quarters. Having been opposed, subdued, and scattered by hostile aerial elements, their appearance in marching, or rather straggling through Irishtown towards their barracks, was wretched, ridiculous, and pitiable. Fifty stout pikemen, well posted and wisely guided, would have been sufficient to capture the entire force. The populace felt this, but their "leaders" were remiss and motionless, and the English garrison of Kilkenny escaped. This furnishes a bitter memory and an instructive lesson.

During the mayoralty of Edmund Smithwick, the city of Kilkenny was much improved, in cleanliness and general attractiveness; for all which it has long been proverbial. Mr. Smithwick was proud of his birthplace, and effectively employed the means under his control to enrich and adorn it. In this way, he rendered himself exceedingly popular, and he has never forfeited one good opinion. Each of the brothers, Richard and Edmund Smithwick, is a J. P., in the employ of H. B. M. Daniel Smithwick resides on High street, in the city of Kilkenny. He finds plenty to do in managing his extensive mercantile business, and in helping to regulate municipal affairs. Edmund and Daniel Smithwick were members of the celebrated '82 Club, whose pompous pledge of unceasing labor for the "Repeal of the Legislative Union" cannot be forgotten. You have immortalized it, in words which suffer in recording it. Would that all such violated or neglected resolutions could be erased from our history! They serve but to humiliate. The Smithwicks have measureably been the architects of their own fortunes. Their father began life honestly, yet humbly, and somewhat cheerlessly. He, however, was industrious, enterprising, and thrifty. He died in independent circumstances, honored and lamented. No one knew "Jack Smithwick," as he was familiarly styled by the generation to which he belonged, that did not esteem and revere him. The Smithwicks and the Sullivans are the leading capitalists of Kilkenny.

The Sullivans, like the Smithwicks, are self-made men; thoroughly democratic in origin, yet not a whit inferior to the aristocracy in power. Richard Sullivan was one of the earliest modern Catholic parliamentary representatives of the county of Kilkenny. I believe he is now no more. He was a married man—upright, generous, and hospitable—the father of a large family, and the owner of an extensive, but unremunerative property. He also was a J. P. in H. B. M. service. Michael Sullivan is at present M. P. for the city of Kilkenny. He is unmarried, impulsive, stubborn, wealthy, haughty, and not over popular. I think he first offered himself in 1847 as a candidate for the representation of his native place. It was then generally believed he would be opposed by John O'Connell, and he had resolved to contest the election with the latter, when a very intimate friend of mine induced him to modify his views of his own ability and influence, so far as to bring him to admit that he could not hope to defeat "the son of the Liberator," whose popularity in the "Faire Cittie" was then very great. Sullivan reluctantly, but openly, made this concession—qualifying it, however, with the remark, that any other rival candidate should meet with his inflexible opposition. He gave utterance to this opinion, as he apprehended the antagonism of the Smithwick interest; and he declared that if "Jack's sons" ventured into the contest, they should have to pay heavily for their hardihood. A short time elapsed. O'Connell was voted for and elected, to represent each of the cities of Kilkenny and Limerick. He expressly declined the former, and formally accepted the latter, honor. Kilkenny was forced into a new election. Sullivan alone appeared as a candidate. He had the support of his own adherents, those of his brother Richard, and, because of his previous giving way in favor of John O'Connell, a majority of the voters of Kilkenny. He likewise possessed the earnest advocacy of Wm. F. Finn, Esq., brother-in-law of the Liberator, and one of the noblest, though least successful, of the public men of his time. Richard Sullivan, as High Sheriff of the city, presided at the hustings. Michael Sullivan was duly nominated, and formally elected, without opposition. When this result became known, he was called on for a speech, but speech-making was not his forte, and he very presumptuously, yet shabbily, responded to his constituency's request. Mr. Finn advanced to his relief, and nobly acquitted himself. As I previously stated, Michael Sullivan still represents the city of his birth in the Imperial Parliament. He is a dumb, and extravagantly vain, yet not dishonest, public servant. Popular rumor will have it, that he once indirectly proposed for the daughter of his neighbor, Sir Wheeler Cuffe, but the mother of the young lady rejected his offer, as she could not permit her daughter to marry even a "rich plebeian!" The young lady's family were as poor as paupers, but their pride was "prodigious," and the vanity of class proved greater than the attraction of competence. This is one of Ireland's greatest miseries. Self-made men are looked upon with "envious contempt" by worthless noodles, whose only use on earth is to serve as a caution to the gifted, the active, and the ambitious, against the folly of an effortless and effeminate reliance on musty family traditions of "noble origin," and "ancient renown."

"What though on hamely fare we dine,
Wear hoddin' gray, and a' that;
Gie fools their silks, and knaves their wine,
A man's a man for a' that;
For a' that, and a' that,
Their tinsel show and a' that;
The honest man, though e'er sae poor,
Is king o' men for a' that."

Sir Wheeler Cuffe was doubtless an honest man, but his poverty often obliged him to dodge and to dissemble. As a debtor, he was most permanent and provoking. A Kilkenny tradesman once sent him a bill for work performed for him. The worthy knight demanded of the collector what he wanted? The collector replied that he wished to have "his honor" discharge the debt he had contracted with his employer. The valorous baronet instructed him to tell his employer to go to hell, and if his employer declined acting on his advice, he himself might adopt it.

James Sullivan is the youngest of the three brothers,—the most accomplished, yet the least fortunate. He was in every sense a noble-man,—but, of late years, he has unhappily been the victim of a most appalling calamity, and his life is now dark, barren, and burdensome, even to himself. No one acquainted with his remarkable business talents, and his high-mindedness, can help bewailing the great misfortune that deprives Kilkenny of a most enterprising citizen.

But I am wandering. W. F. B. knows not who I am, and as I presume he is indisposed to learn, let me assure him he need not dread that I will invade his obscurity. I may be a ghost, or a goblin, but it is of no consequence to him; to me, it is a matter of equal indifference whether he be a Briareus or a Zoilus. Yet I cannot understand why one, who, without knowing me avers that he is a "nearer relative" of Ken. Buggy, should be under the necessity of asking me "what has been done with his MSS., which were put into Dr. Cane's hand for publication, and what became of the money subscribed towards erecting a monument to him in his native city?" On neither point can I satisfy W. F. B. I know nothing whatever of or about the MSS. or monument funds. Would you be kind enough to ask your friend Dr. Cane, or your Kilkenny correspondent, St. Canice, to answer his inquiries? Do try to enlighten him, and appease his anxious cogitation.

In order that you shall not be annoyed with any more corrections of slight errors in my notes, would it not be advisable to say that they are written from memory, hurriedly and roughly? Your printer has already made me assert that Banim was interred in Madlin street chapel. I stated in my MS. that his grave was in Madlin street chapel-yard. I know that such errors cannot be regularly avoided. I murmur not at fate. I merely point out and correct this one, in order to save you from another revisor's infliction.

I must conclude. The shaded thermometer within a yard of me is inexorably fixed at 92 deg. A lusty, briery, kindly, thirsty, sweltering servant-maid breaks in upon my retirement, to apprise me of the anxiety of my messmates for my presence at the hospitable board of a very dear friend. You possibly wish I were otherwise employed than in scribbling "Notes from the Nore." My course is, therefore, obvious. Roll up my "bit 'o writin'," and off to dinner.

New-York, July 19, 1856.

CITY COURTS—SUITS AND SUITORS.

It is always a matter of no little interest to visit our city courts. The investigations relate to the right of property, or personal injuries. They are varied in character; sometimes instructive, and frequently amusing. A trial of any matter in dispute, is an examination into the truth of the statements made by the parties. It requires astuteness and tact on the part of advocates, patience and firmness on the part of judges. No matter how trifling may be the cause of litigation, the parties concerned are always hostile to each other. Great indeed is the disappointment when the result of a trial determines the judgment against a suitor. The damages, the costs of suit, the witnesses, the jurors, and officers' fees, are all to be paid. Besides which, time has been lost and feelings exasperated for which nobody ever can or will pay.

But the parties appeal to the Courts, as though they were infallible tribunals, certain to vindicate their real or imaginary wrongs. Oftentimes evidence is weak and the explanations of the parties themselves obscure. To determine a suit, it sometimes happens, the litigants themselves are sworn to testify. This, however, is not adopted, unless no other evidence can be obtained. The party sworn is invariably subjected to a rigid cross-examination. The bias of self-interest is always presumed to color his statements. A legal Expert has little to say beyond a clear and concise exposition of the facts. When not able to conduct a cross-examination with that analytic power which establishes the true value of evidence, a dull lawyer is apt to carry it on in such a way as to indicate that he considers the witness to be a desperate villain, not apt to tell the truth unless by accident, or when entrapped into it. This occasions a great deal of useless badgering.

In the main, witnesses are honest, and speak what they believe to be true. At times, however, the reverse is the case. It then requires all the adroitness of a skilful advocate to expose falsehood, detailed with craft, and adhered to with boldness. A short time since we witnessed a notable instance of the kind.

The Plaintiff, who resided in a distant place, claimed from an Express Company, a sum of money alleged to have been placed in their hands, and for the non-delivery of which he brought suit. To prove the placing of the money in the hands of the Defendants, the plaintiff's Counsel called as a witness a German woman named "Getty." She gave her testimony on oath, and testified:—She had gone one morning to the office of the Company, delivered the letter containing the money to a clerk, and obtained from him a receipt for it. The receipt was produced and admitted to be correct.

A young man, an acquaintance, she stated, had requested her, the night before, to call in the morning for the package, that she might take it to the Express Office, in Broadway. She was a pedlar in china, and intending to go to Brooklyn, she was asked to take the package on her way. She called in the morning and obtained the package. She had seen the letter written, and heard it read by the young man. It was a German letter. It read—"I send you $26, for goods sold." It was addressed to the Plaintiff. She saw the young man put the money in the letter and seal it up. She did not know what bank the bills were on, but she had one bill in her hands, the others she did not have. The bill she had was a one dollar bill. She could not read English, but she could tell numbers.

After the young man had given her the package, he accompanied her to the corner of the street next to the Express office. He then left her. He went away on some business of his own. She did not see him again until night, when she gave him the receipt produced in court.

The young man alluded to was then sworn. He deposed, he had written the letter; placed the money inside, sealed and delivered the package to the woman. He was certain as to the sum of money. He described the bank bills, and the manner the package was folded.

He gave his testimony in a positive and confident manner.

He was cross-examined. He said—"I am 19 years old. I have been three or four years at the segar-making business. I made up the package containing the money; marked the amount on the cover outside. The woman could not speak English very well, and I thought I would make everything plain by putting the amount enclosed on the outside. The money I put in was to pay the Plaintiff for geese he had sent to his sister-in-law in this city to sell for him. A good many folks—about two persons—had sold the geese and gave the money to me. I then put the money in the letter. I put in four five-dollar bills, one three, one two, and a one—in all $26. When I had got the money I wrote the letter. I spoke to 'Getty' and she told me she was going to Brooklyn, I told her she might take the letter for me on her way. She gave me some of the money the day I put it up. She gave me four or five dollars or a three and a one. I got the other money the day before from a woman in Eldridge street. I do not recollect how much. My mother also gave me some." The witness was here asked to name the precise sum given him by his mother, when he stated that he did not intend to say that any body else than his mother had given the money to him. "I only got the money (he said) from my mother. It's matter of fact; I got the money only from her. She gave me $26, all ready to put in the letter. The woman in Eldridge street did not give me any—I was only told so by my mother. 'Getty' knew that her money was in the package as well as the rest. I cannot tell what banks the bills were on. The $1 was on an Elmira bank. All the rest was city money. My mother gave me the money the night before.

"I do not recollect—Yes, Getty was present when the money was given to me. The $3 bill she gave was city money. I wrote the letter that night and put the money in. "Getty" was present. I did not read the letter to her. I did not read any of the letter to her. I did not read all of the letter to her. She told me to put some words in it. She did not tell me to put any words in it. She might have said so. I do not recollect. I also directed the letter the night before. I did not put the money in at night—I made a mistake—I put it in the next morning. My mother did not give me the money at night, but the next morning."

The witness now so often contradicted himself and continued to repeat so many different statements, it was considered unnecessary to pursue the inquiry further. Before being dismissed, he was asked why he had not delivered the package himself, as he had gone to within a few doors of the Express office. He stated, he had gone off in search of employment. "As I went down town after 'Getty' had got the letter in her hands, I left it with her, as she was as much interested in it as I."

The defendant's Counsel stated he judged it was apparent from the contradictions in the story, on the part of the Plaintiff, there was a conspiracy to obtain money from the Company. To show the fraud, he introduced the clerk who had received the package and had given the receipt to Getty, "for one package said to contain Bank-notes valued at $26." He put the package in a drawer without any particular examination, and afterwards handed it over to one of the despatch-clerks, with other packages received. After he had given the package, he was asked by the despatch clerk if he had receipted it as a money package. He replied he had. The fact of its being a money package was then questioned. It was then closely examined, and no enclosure could be discovered. The letter was then produced in Court, and identified by the witnesses, as the one for which the receipt had been given. The company withheld the delivery of the package, determined to abide the result of any investigation concerning it. The Counsel for the company intimated he would first give evidence the letter had not been opened while in custody of the company, and then wished the seals to be broken, that the matter might speak for itself.

The counsel for the Plaintiff then intimated he would withdraw from and discontinue the suit.

It was accordingly withdrawn, and a bold attempt at fraud evidently discomfitted.

IRISH MARRIAGES.

At the church of St. Andrew, Wesland row, Dublin, Robert D. Lyons, M. D., son of Sir William Lyons, High Sheriff of Cork, to Marie Pigot, daughter of the Right Hon. the Lord Chief Baron.

At Leominster, James Finch, of St. John's Bedwardine, Worcester, to Anne, daughter of Wm. Vaughan, Leominster, and sister of Mr. Vaughan of the Queen's Theatre, Dublin.

At Magourney, Edward H. Rubie, of Kinuckane House, county Cork, to Margaret, daughter of Herbert Gillman, of Clonfeadmore.

At Lisburn, county Antrim, R. Jefferson, of Underwood House, Cumberland, to Catherine, daughter of George Stephenson, of Lisburn.

At the Catholic Chapel, Holme, Yorkshire, Sir James Fitzgerald, Bart., of Castlelshen, county Cork, to Blanch Mary, daughter of the Hon. Philip Stourton.

At Ballycuslane Church, William Sandes, of Morgans, county Limerick, to Lucy, daughter of the late James Magill, of Tralee.

At Carne, county Wexford, Joseph, son of John Sealy, of Trane, Broadway, to Margaret, daughter of John North, of New Ross.

At Enniscorthy, James P. Sheridan, LRCSI, to Margaret T. daughter of P. O'Rourke.

IRISH DEATHS.

At Springvale, county Mayo, aged 101 years, Thomas Coyne, father of the Rev. E. Coyne, the respected priest of Aughamore.

At Capel street, in the 80th year of his age, Richard Coyne, publisher and bookseller.

At Drumcree, near Portadown, Baptist Gamble, aged 87 years.

At Redmondstown House, Elizabeth, relict of Henry Cochrane, of Dublin.

At Cabra House, county Down, Mary, wife of George H. Gartlan.

At Dunganstown Castle, county Wicklow, Mathew Wright.

At Castle Cottage, Cahir, aged 89 years, Susan, reliet of William Vowell, late of Coole, county Tipperary.

At Philsborough, Richard Landy.

At Wesley place, Dublin, John Daly.

At Castle Durrow, Edmond S. Delaney.

At Mitchelstown, county Cork, Isabella, wife of T. Carroll.

At Kingstown, Jane, daughter of the late Francis West, of Cloon, county Leitrim.

At Ortocomund, on the Neilgherry Hills, India, Frances Elizabeth, wife of William Fraser, C. E., HEICS., and daughter of Thomas G. Stoney, of Kyle Park, county Tipperary.

At Rathmines, Mary, daughter of the late John Smyth, late of Prospect Lodge, Roscrea.

At Shepperton, county Clare, Anne, relict of Philip Smyth, of Cherrymount, county Meath, aged 87 years.

At Castlecomer, John Butler Wandesforde, eldest son of the Hon. C. Wandesforde.

In London, Emily, wife of General Hawkins, and daughter of the late Henry Kellett, of Cork, barrister.

Congressional.

Thirty-Fourth Congress—First Session—Senate.

July 12 (Saturday.)—No session.

July 14.—After the passage of several private bills, the bill amendatory of the act to promote the efficiency of the Navy, was taken up, and after some desultory discussion, and an unsuccessful motion to adjourn, Mr. Toombs obtained the floor and proceeded to speak at great length, giving a history of the rise and progress of the Navy from the foundation of the Government.

July 15.—The House bill appropriating $50,000 to construct a road from Fort Ridgeley, Minnesota, to the South Pass of the Rocky Mountains in Nebraska, was passed. Mr. Toombs then concluded his remarks on the bill amendatory of the Act to promote the efficiency of the Navy, condeming in strong terms the action of the Naval Board, and the bill was finally passed by a vote of 26 against 11.

July 16.—The bill to amend the Copyright Laws was passed. Mr. Jones, of Tenn., spoke on the Armament (Three Million) bill, but no vote was taken. The President's nominations in the Navy Department then came up, and Commodores Pendergast and Nicholson were confirmed as Captains by a vote which indicates a pretty thorough restoration of the parties aggrieved by the Retiring Board.

July 17.—Mr. Toombs introduced a resolution that the finding of the late Naval Board in the case of Lieut. Bartlett was a violation of his constitutional rights, and therefore void. One hundred and ninety-five Naval appointments were then confirmed in Executive session.

July 18.—Engaged on private bills. A bill providing for the compulsory payment of postage on all transient printed matter was reported.

House

July 12.—Mr. Grow gave notice that he would soon call up the motion to reconsider the vote referring the bill to annul the laws of Kansas to the committee of the Whole. A bill was introduced, authorizing the Postmaster-General to enter into a contract with Christian Hanson of Brooklyn, to carry the United States mail in a line of steamers, between New-York, Gludstadivia, and some English port. Consideration of the report on the Sumner assault was then resumed, and the debate was not concluded when the House adjourned.

July 14.—Mr. Clingman asked that the adjournment resolution be considered, but the House refused to suspend the rules. Mr. Campbell, of Ohio, asked for a further consideration of the report on the Sumner assault until Wednesday, (16th.) Objection was made, and a motion for the previous question prevailed. Mr. Edmundson made a statement affecting himself and against the action of the committee, and a discussion followed between Messrs. Orr and Campbell; after which the House voted on the substitute of Mr. English, that "the House declares its disapprobation," &c. It was disagreed to, 174 to 37. A vote was then had on the substitute of the minority of the committee, that "the House has no jurisdiction," &c., and it was also rejected, 145 to 66. The majority resolution to expel Brooks was then voted on, and the result was, Yeas 121, Nays 95, not two-thirds, as required to carry it. Mr. Brooks, after some opposition, spoke in his own defence, and concluded by informing the House that he had resigned his seat. The next resolution of the majority declaring the disapprobation of the conduct of Edmundson and Keitt, was taken up and pending its consideration the House adjourned.

July 15.—After considerable debate, the resolution censuring Mr. Keitt was adopted by Yeas 106, Nays 96; and that censuring Mr. Edmundson was rejected by Yeas 60, Nays 136. Mr. Keitt announced that he should ask the House to hear him to-day.

July 16.—Mr. Keitt, of South Carolina, spoke his valedictory, and tendered his resignation. In his speech, he belabored Massachusetts and the North and eulogized the South. He boasted that he knew the assault was to be made, but not the time, and held that he could not with honor inform of the fact. Mr. Keitt retired with considerable eclat.

July 17.—The contested seat of Archer vs. Allen (VIIth district of Illinois) was the subject of debate. The majority of the Elections committee gave Mr. Archer two majority; the minority gave Mr. Allen one. No vote was taken.

July 18.—The Illinois contested election case was disposed of, by declaring the seat vacant, and sending the whole matter back to the people.

DIED,

Of Scarlet Fever, in this city,

THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER BYRNE, on 7th July,
EDWARD JOHN BYRNE, " 8th "
JAMES BYRNE, " 15th "

infant children of Samuel Byrne, late of Cork, Ireland.

Michael O'Callaghan, a boy of seven years of age, who resided at 584 Water street, was accidentally drowned on the 16th inst. while playing with other boys on the dock foot of Clinton street, East River. His body was recovered next day under a bridge in the same dock by Mr. John Reirdan, boatman, and Mr. J. G. Henderson, of 104 East Broadway, after a diligent search, and a great risk to their own lives.

Now Ready.

REYNOLD'S POLITICAL MAP

OF

THE UNITED STATES.

Size 29 by 34 inches. Showing at a glance the whole country from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast.

Colored so as to designate the free and the slave states; also the vast territory which lies open to freedom or slavery.

It also presents a vast amount of statistical matter, showing the advantage of Freedom over Slavery, together with portraits of Freemont and Dayton.

Price in sheet form.....25 cents.
Price in pocket form.....50 cents.

Every person interested in the politics of our country, should possess a copy. Copies sent post-paid on receipt of price.

Address, Wm. C. REYNOLDS, Publisher,
No. 195 Broadway, New-York.

N. B. Agents wanted to sell this map. 2t19jly

☞ Post Office Notice.—The MAILS FOR EUROPE, via Southampton and Havre, per U. S. steamer Fulton will close at this office on SATURDAY, the 26th day of July, at 10½ o'clock, A. M.

Special Notices.

The Meagher Guard, of Philadelphia, intend celebrating the Birthday of THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER—in consequence of its falling on Sunday this year—on Monday, the 4th of August instant. The celebration will consist of an evening parade, &c. &c.

If you wish a Portrait, call at Brady's Gallery, 359 Broadway. THE AMBROTYPE.—Some members of the daguerrean fraternity have represented the Ambrotype—the latest and best improvement in the art—as unworthy of public confidence. Mr. BRADY, the introducer of the Ambrotype in New-York, has found in them a combination of rare qualities, never approached by any other style of camera pictures. 3m28ju

Holloway's Pills.—Perfect digestion and pure bile produce healthy blood, and if the functions of either the stomach or the liver are disordered, Holloway's Pills will assuredly repair the mischief and enable them to supply the channels of circulation with an uncontaminated fluid. Sold at the manufactories, 80 Maiden Lane, New-York, and 244 Strand, London; and by all druggists, at 25c, 62½c, and $1 per box. 26jly

Photographs and Ambrotypes.—50 Franklin street, New-York. Persons wishing to have a true life-like Photograph or Ambrotype taken, will do well to call at this place; the pictures there made are finished in the best style, and no trouble or pains will be spared to suit the most delicate taste.

The prices will be lower than in any other establishment in town, the proprietor not having the expenses of artists to pay for the coloring of the pictures, or salaries of operators, the work being done by the proprietor himself.

Persons having black plain photographs, and wishing to have them colored or re-touched in China Ink, can have it done at low prices. The proprietor will also re-touch for any establishment in the city or country, that will ask for it, and those he has been coloring for can have their work done at the same rates and prices.

Instructions will be given to pupils in Photograph and Ambrotype. Good collodion for sale, and all kinds of chemicals for the business prepared to order. (3m12jly) A. Cosmes.

Mayor's Office, New-York, June 16, 1856.

Notice to Owners of Dogs.—Notice is hereby given that on and after Wednesday, June 25th inst., the ordinance respecting dogs found running loose or at large in any street south of Forty-second street, without being muzzled, will be strictly enforced. The sum of fifty cents will be paid for every dog brought alive to the Pound, on the corner of First Avenue and Thirty-first street, which shall have been found in the streets, running loose or at large without being properly muzzled. on presentation of the certificate of the pound-keeper to the Chief of Police at his office in the Park. Owners of dogs may reclaim them at the Pound between sunrise and sunset on the day on which they are received, on payment of expenses.

FERNANDO WOOD, Mayor.

Ladies going in the Couutry, wishing their supply of Shoes, can find Linen Gaiters at 12s. Slippers, Ties, Buskins and Toilet Slippers, from 6s. to 10s.: India Rubbers, &c., with Boys', Misses', and Children's Boots and Shoes, of all kinds and prices, at 4t19jly J. B. MILLER & CO'S, No. 134 Canal St.

Information wanted of Patrick Ryan, late of Nenagh, in the county of Tipperary, Ireland, aged about 30 years, farmer, who left Limerick in the month of May, 1851, and who when last heard from was in Orange county, N. Y., but is now supposed to be living in Vandalia, Fayette county, Indiana. Any information of his whereabouts sent to the office of the Commissioners of Emigration, New-York, will be thankfully received by his wife. jly 19

Notice.—New-York and Liverpool U. S. M. S. S. Co., 56 Wall street—New-York, May 27th, 1856.—The rate of freight by the steamers of this line from Liverpool to New-York, is reduced to four pounds per ton measurement until further notice. jly19tf E. K. COLLINS.

Sewing Machine Depot.—Sewing Machines of all kinds sold, improved and repaired, on reasonable terms, in the most substantial manner. Superior Machine Oils for sale. A large assortment of Machine Silk Twist and Needles for sale at reduces prices.

my 24, 3 mos. F. S COATES & Co., 345 Broadway, New-York.

Wanted.—Good hands to embroider on linen. Apply at GENIN'S Bazaar (under St. Nicholas Hotel,) 513 Broadway. my17 3m

Amusements.

BOWERY THEATRE.

THE PEOPLES TEMPLE OF THE DRAMA.

Open every night,

WITH A POWERFUL

Star Company.

Lessee and Manager.....JOHN BROUGHAM

PRICES OF ADMISSION:

Boxes.....25 cents. | Pit.....12½ cents.
Gallery.....12½ cents. | Orchestra Stalls.....50 cents.
Private Boxes.....Five Dollars.
Doors open at 7½; commence at 7½.

WALLACK'S THEATRE.

THE

SUMMER GARDEN.

Fourth week of

MISS AGNES ROBERTSON

19th, 20th, 21st, 22d, 23d, and 24th nights of her extraordinary career of attraction and success!

Tuesday—

The Phantom.

YOUNG ACTRESS.

Wednesday—

BOB NETTLES.

THE INVISIBLE PRINCE.

Thursday—

The Life of an Actress.

Friday—

BOB NETTLES.

THE INVISIBLE PRINCE.

Saturday—

THE PHANTOM.

THE INVISIBLE PRINCE.

PRICES OF ADMISSION.

Parquette and boxes.....50 cents
Family Circle.....25 cents
Doors open at a quarter past seven P. M.

Billiards.

IMPROVED BILLIARD TABLES AND CUSHIONS.

MICHAEL PHELAN'S

MODEL TABLES AND COMBINATION CUSHIONS,

(Patented February 19, 1856,)

CORRECT in principle and perfect in action—so constructed as to insure mathematical correctness of angles when played upon, and warranted to possess the requisite elasticity in all seasons, having been tested by the best players in this conntry, and by them pronounced the most perfect of any hitherto constructed—are offered to the public as cheap as the ordinary tables of the day. Orders promptly attended to for fitting up private or public Billiard Rooms; new Cushions put on old Tables, &c.

Saloon and Salesroom No. 39 Chambers street, up stairs.

O'CONNOR & COLLENDER,

BILLIARD TABLE MANUFACTURERS.

53 ANN STREET, NEW-YORK.

BUCHANAN AND THE PRESS.

The Washington correspondent of the Puritan Recorder thus writes of the Democratic candidates:—James Buchanan seems to be their chosen man, a bachelor of sixty-five, not mixed up with the modern strifes, long the candidate of Pennsylvania, lately pushed forward with determined resolution, and with signal success. He has good habits, a clear head, a steady firmness of mind, large experience, and a high and impartial spirit. He is a Presbyterian, denominationally, and a regular church-goer, kind to ministers, and a firm believer in the necessity of religion as the conservative element in the prosperity of the republic. John C. Breckinridge is a young man, of a noted Presbyterian family of Kentucky; a grandson of a former Attorney-General of the United States, and the nephew of three Presbyterian ministers, a member of the last Congress of Mr. Clay's district, voted for by many Whigs. He has barely obtained the constitutional age (35) for the office of Vice-President, to which he has been nominated. He is no office seeker, but a man of excellent dignity, strong domestic attachment, steady habits, and sound abilities. He would even adorn the Presidential chair. It is a good sign, amid all the threatening ones of the times, that a great excited political convention should so cordially select two such men for the first offices of the nation. Calumny will find little to feed on in the characters of these men.

The Boston Courier, an Old-line Whig paper, which, in his life-time, was the organ of Mr. Webster, has an article upon the Presidential election, in which it says:

Thus Mr. Buchanan enters the field with the whole Southern political force in his favor; he is as certain of the electoral vote of Pennsylvania—if any dependence can be placed upon the previous and well-known action of Pennsylvania with regard to her politicians and her interests—as the sun is to rise on the day of the Presidential election—and he then wants but two electoral votes to make him President. California has never shown any peculiar favor toward Colonel Fremont—he was refused a re-election to the United States Senate about a year after she came in as a State—his claim for her four votes has acquired no recent strength, and California has shown less disposition to sympathise with anti-slavery than any other Northern State in the Union. He has then to look to Iowa, Indiana and Illinois in the West—to New-Jersey, Connecticut, New-Hampshire and Maine in the North—all of which are debatable States, even with the anti-slavery furore, now dying out, which is expected to be brought into action among their voters, and his chances of success with them are no better, if they are as good, as those of the Democratic candidate. There are other Northern States which might be put into the same category, and there is, besides, the great State of New-York, with her thirty five electoral votes, which, in the present state of the canvass, the "Republicans" cannot claim with any surety of success. The friends of Mr. Fillmore will, without doubt, run an electoral ticket for him, and as they carried a plurality in the last State election, though they may be weakened by dissensions now, they constitute a force which is not to be despised, and they have a large body of men in their ranks who can never be brought to the support of the "Republican" ticket.

We are of the opinion, says the Menasha, Wis., Advocate, that the ever doubtful State of New-York, will give her vote for the Democratic Ticket. In the State Election last Autumn the Know Nothings carried their ticket over the heads of the Democrats, who supported two different tickets. Had the Hards and Softs united under one banner they would have carried the State high and dry, as their united vote exceeded both that of the Know Nothings and Republicans. In the coming contest the two factions will be seen fighting side by side for "Old Buck and Young Breck," and we might safely claim New-York as democratic. Moreover, New-York is the native state of the regular Know Nothing candidate, and he will poll a comparatively heavy vote there, though in our opinion, not enough to carry him ahead of his Republican competitor, but enough to damage his chances. New-York is also the native State of Gerritt Smith, and although his vote will be small, he yet will be a stumbling block in the way of the Fremont party.

Under all these circumstances, we think we can safely count New-York as for Buchanan by ten or fifteen thousand majority. Delaware is; it is true, a Know Nothing State, but though differing in politics, Buchanan is all powerful there. As for Tennessee, we think the Know Nothings will not be able to muster a sufficient number of votes to carry the Fillmore ticket through. In the last Gubernatorial Election the democratic candidate, Andrew Johnson, defeated his Know Nothing competitor, M. P. Gentry, by from 2,000 to 3,000 majority. At that time the Know Nothing party had reached the acme of their power, and they pitted against the democratic nominee the strongest man in their ranks. We think Tennessee venerates too highly the memory of that great man—the Sage of the Hermitage—to endorse by her vote, such a man as Donelson. It is well known that Gen. Jackson never had any confidence in the man, and why should Tennessee?

Giving our opponents, however, the benefit of every doubtful point, we will be able to carry the ticket high and dry, maugre all their efforts to defeat us.

We believe, says the Pittsburg Daily Union, that all the decent men belonging to the Black Republican and Know Nothing parties have abandoned their Ten Cent slander in relation to Mr Buchanan. It was a most unfortunate attempt on the part of those who first got it up, as it enabled our friends everywhere to show how firmly and undeviatingly Mr. Buchanan has ever been the workingman's friend.

With peculiar point the Madison (Wis.) Democrat says:—The federalism of Mr. Buchanan first appeared in 1813, when he shouldered his musket and marched to the defence of his country.

The Valley Spirit has the following:—When Mr. Buchanan was on a visit to this place some six or eight years ago, a fellow with more brass than brains "put the question squarely" to him "whether he really thought ten cents a day was enough for a laboring man?" Mr. Buchanan replied that he would not like to give ten cents a day for the labor, physical or intellectual, of any man who would ask such a question. The Know Nothing Baltimore Clipper can stow this answer away in the vacant chambers of its ten cent cranium.

The Syracuse Standard says "the thirty-five electoral votes of New York will be cast for James Buchanan."

The conspiracy against the temporal power of the Pope, the Limerick Reporter believes, is likely to develope itself much more significantly through the Mazzini agency now than it has done hitherto.

Captain Croker has been elected Secretary of the Royal Irish Agricultural Society.

FROM THE RIO GRANDE.

The Brownsville Flag, Texas, of the 18th publishes the following extract from a letter dated Rio Grande City, June 12. It confirms a report we had, via San Antonio, of some lynching on the Rio Grande.

We have had a little hanging at this place. A few days ago two robbers—one a white man and the other a Mexican—were hanged. They had robbed the church at Guerrero, and attempted to steal the horses from a detachment of Rifles, and were caught in the act. The white man fired at the sentinel, the ball passed through his cap. Some say that he is Kellogg. He gave his name as Kingsley, from St. George's Island, Fla. And to be even, the Mexicans hung four or five white men yesterday, near Camargo, for horse stealing, said to be drummed out soldiers and deserters. The affair on this side has kicked up quite a stir, in consequence of the Rifles taking the matter into their own hands. The civil authorities tried very hard to get the property stolen by these men, amounting to near $2,000, into their hands, but it would not be given up to them. They tried the men and liberated them—then the Rifles gave them justice under a tree. It is said that among the men hung by the Mexicans are the two who were run off from here in March last.

The Collossus of the Advertising World.

THE PRESS AND THE PEOPLE.

It is estimated that the entire newspaper press of the world reaches about two hundred millions of its inhabitants, and as the advertising system of Professor Holloway covers the whole of this extensive medium for the communication of intelligence, we may safely presume that one fourth of the adult population of the globe are familiar with the properties of his medicines. The annual cost of maintaining an unremitted intercourse with so large a portion of mankind, through the agency of the press, is necessarily enormous; and we can state from the data laid before us that it equals the combined revenues of two first class States of the Union. From these facts some idea may be formed of the consumption of his remedies. Wherever they become known by advertisement, and thus obtain a trial, a demand for them is created which soon produces immense returns, thus affording new capital for their further diffusion. In this way, with gigantic strides, these grand specifics are traversing every region of the earth, raising thousands of hopeless sufferers from their sick beds, curing disease in all its terrible forms, strengthening the weak, relieving agony, and infusing new life and vigor into multitudes of decrepit human beings, bowed down with despondency and woe. The wonderful progress of these medicines has been without a check from their introduction to the present day. Of the millions to whom they have been administered not one has questioned their efficacy. They stand unimpeached before the world. The feeble opposition raised against them in some quarters by professional envy and selfishness, has been borne down by the overwhelming weight of public opinion, and they have passed over all impediments alike into the palace, the private mansion, the hospital, and the dispensary. The backwoodsman and the busy citizen, the farmer, the traveller, the sailor, the soldier, in short, the representatives of every class—invalids of both sexes and of all ages—regard HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT as the most reliable of all medicines in every stage of disease. A popularity so universal, a faith so firm and undoubting, can only be founded on a veritable basis, and this popularity and faith, be it remembered, has been extending with marvellous rapidity for more than twenty years!—Cincinnati Daily Columbian.

Card from Edward Dunigan & Brother.

James B. Kirker, the present representative of the firm of Edward Dunigan & Brother, learns with regret that an attempt is being made to persuade the public that a circular issued by Mr. John Gilman Shea, with regard to his correspondents, is a malicious attempt of the house to injure another.

Mr. Shea continues to enjoy the highest esteem of the firm, still it has not and will not interfere in his private concerns.

The House of Edward Dunnigan & Brother has as yet issued no circular whatever, relative to the forthcoming History of the Catholic Church, by Mr. DeCourcy and Mr. John Gilman Shea.

New-York, July 17th, 1856. (8t) 151 Fulton street.

Caution to the Public.—To distinguish the genuine magnetic powder, for the destruction of insects, from poisonous imitations, it is necesary to examine the wrapper. See that four national medals—those of England, France, Belgium, and the United States—are engraved thereon. Be sure also that a lithographic fac simile of Lyon's signature appears both on the wrapper and label. This caution is necessary to protect the proprietor from fraud and the public from danger and disappointment. The leading scientific societies, and the first chemists of Europe and America, have pronounced the magnetic powder the only poisonous insect bane in the world, as well as the most effective and fatal means for the destruction of bed-bugs, roaches, fleas, ants, flies, moths, &c., that was ever prepared or sold. The proprietors of the principal city hotels endorse it. Come and see the testimonials of Prince Albert, ex-President Fillmore, and hundreds of the nobility of Europe, as well as the sovereigns of America. The magnetic pills, for the extermination of rats and mice, are endorsed with equal emphasis by all who have tried them. Call and see the medals, diplomas, government orders, scientific certificates, letters, &c., at the Central Depot, No. 424 Broadway.

jun 21 3m EMANUEL LYON.

A perfumed breath.—What lady or gentleman would remain under the curse of a disagreeable breath, when by using the "Balm of a Thousand Flowers" as a dentrifice, would not only render it sweet, but leave the teeth white as alabaster? Many persons do not know their breath is bad, and the subject is so delicate their friends will never mention it. Pour a single drop of the Balm on your tooth-brush, and wash the teeth night and morning. A fifty cent bottle will last a year.

A Beautiful Complexion may easily be acquired by using the "Balm of a Thousand Flowers." It will remove tan, pimples, and freckles from the skin, leaving it of a soft and roseate hue. Wet a towel, pour on two or three drops and wash the face night and morning.

Shaving made Easy.—Wet your shaving brush in either warm or cold water, pour on two or three drops of the "Balm of a Thousand Flowers," ru the beard well, and it will make a beautiful soft lather, much facilitating the operation of shaving. Price only 50 cents. For sale by all druggists.

3mjly5 W. P. FETRIDGE & Co., Franklin Square, New-York.

Phrenology.—Examinations with charts, and written descriptions of character given daily by PROF. FOWLER, at the Phrenological Cabinet, Broadway, two blocks above the Park. Private rooms for gentlemen and ladies. 4t12jly

---

SARAH McFADDEN,

Maritime and National Flag Manufacturer,

198 Hudson street, four doors below Canal street, New-York.

Mrs. McFadden justly boasts of having made up for Thomas Francis Meagher, the Irish tri-color flag which he presented to the Confederate Club Men of '48, resident in New-York; also the beautiful U. S. Flag recently presented by Mr. William Kinsella to the Montgomery Guard of Bridgeport.

y21june

DRILL ROOM GUIDE.

NINTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

TROOP A, (Irish Dragoons,) meet at the "Grape Vine Cottage," 45 Second Avenue, between Second and Third streets, on every Monday evening. JAMES MURPHY, Capt.

Company B, (Fitzgerald Guard) drill each Monday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." THOS. MAGUIRE, Capt.

Company D, (Guyon Cadets) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." THOS. MURPHY, Capt.

Company I, (Jackson Guard) drill each Thursday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." W. O. MURPHY, Capt.

Company H, (Erina Guard) drill Thursday Evening at "Military Hall." R. CODDINGTON, Capt.

Company —, (Irish Grenadiers) drill each Thursday Evening at 22 White street. FELIX DUFFY, Capt.

Company C, (Mitchel Guard,) drill each Wednesday Evening at the "Eagle Rooms." —— KEARNS, Capt.

Company J, (Carroll Guard,) drill each evening, at —— GALLAGHER, Capt.

TENTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company —, (Emmet Guard) drill each Thursday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." JOHN KENNEDY, Capt.

ELEVENTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company E, (Montgomery Guard) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." THOS. S. MURPHY, Capt.

FOURTEENTH REGIMENT, N. Y. S. M.

Company E, (Carroll Guard,) drill each Tuesday Evening, at the "Adelphi," Brooklyn. GEO. B. MAGRATH, Capt.

TWENTY-FOURTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company C, (Columbian Guard), drill each Tuesday evening, at Washington Hall, Troy, N. Y. RICHARD S. QUINN, Captain.

TWENTY-FIFTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company —, (Emmet Guard,) drill each Wednesday Evening at Albany, N. Y. P. H. GRIFFIN, Capt.

SIXTY NINTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Troop A, (Irish Dragoons,) drill each Thursday Evening at "Montgomery Hall." Lieut. B. O'CONNOR, Com'dt.

Company C, (—— ——,) drill each Wednesday Evening at the "Eagle Rooms." Lieut. M. KEATING, Com'dt.

Company D, (Irish Rifles) drill each Monday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." JAMES QUINLAN, Capt.

Company E, (Fag a Bealac Guard) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." GILBERT RIORDAN, Capt.

Company F, (Shields' Guard,) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Milleman's Hall," 7th avenue, corner of 26th street. JOHN R. MURPHY, Capt.

Company G, (Mechanic's Guard) drill each Thursday Evening at the "Eagle Rooms." JOHN B. MADDEN, Capt.

Company I, (Irish Fuseleers,) drill each Monday Evening at 42 Prince street. M. CORCORAN, Capt.

Company K, (Brian Boroihme Guard) drill each Monday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." JAMES HUSTON, Capt.

Engineer Corps, (Emmet Life Guard) drill each Monday Evening at "Worth's Military Head Quarters," 22 White st. T. LYNCH, Capt.

70th REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company D, (Napper Tandy Light Artillery) drill each Thursday Evening at Brooklyn City Armory. WM. H. HOGAN, Capt.

SEVENTY FIFTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company A, (State Rifles) drill each Wednesday Evening at cor. of 11th street and 1st Avenue. Lieut. JAS. KELLY, Com'dt.

Company B, (Irish National Guard) drill each Friday Evening at "Centre Market Rooms." JOHN LANE, Capt.

Company C, (Young Ireland Rifles) drill each Friday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." JOHN BURKE, Capt.

Company D, (Wolf Tone Volunteers,) drill each Tuesday Evening, at the "Eagle Rooms." JOHN NUGENT, Capt.

Company E, (T. F. Meagher Rifles) drill each —— at cor. of 11th street and 1st Avenue. J. B. DONNELLY, Capt.

Company F, (Mich'l. Doheny Rifles) drill each —— at ——. J. F. MAGUIRE, Capt.

Company G. (Emmet Rifles) drill each —— at ——. JOHN BEGG, Capt.

INDEPENDENT COMPANIES.

Company —, (O'Mahony Guard, E. M. A.,) drill each Tuesday Evening at "North America Rooms," cor. of Bayard and Bowery. JAMES CAVANAGH, Capt.

Company —, (Sons of '98,) drill each Friday Evening at the corner of 11th street and 1st Avenue, N. Y. M. H. SMITH, Capt.

Company —, (Wolfe Tone Guard,) drill each alternate Monday Evening at the "Second Ward Hotel," cor. of York and Pearl streets, Brooklyn. JOHN J. CLANCY, Com'dt.

Company —, (Irish American Grenadiers,) drill the first and third Thursday of each month at "Montgomery Hall," 76 Prince street, N. Y. MICHAEL DOYLE, Capt.

Company —, (Montgomery Guard,) drill each Monday evening, at Bridgeport, Conn. MICHAEL O'CONNELL, Capt.

Company —, (Republican Guard) drill every Friday Evening, at "Worth's Military Headquarters," 22 White street. W. H. LYONS, Capt.

Company —, (Keystone Rifles,) drill every Monday evening, in Port Carbon, Pa. MATTHEW BYRNES, Captain.

Company—(Emerald Guard), drill each Monday evening, at "Smith's Hall," corner of 11th and First Avenue. JOHN COX, Captain.

SECOND REGIMENT—HUDSON BRIGADE.

Company —, (Montgomery Guard,) drill each week at the "Armory," Grand street, Jersey City. —— FARRELL, Capt.

FIFTH REGIMENT N. J. S. M.

Company C, (O'Brien Columbia Rifles,) drill on the 1st and 3d Tuesdays in each month at their Armory, "Willow Hall," Orange, N. J. OWEN MURPHY, Captain.

SECOND REGIMENT PA. VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Hibernian Greens,) drill each Thursday Evening at 88 South Fifth street, Philadelphia. P. O'KEAN, Capt.

Company —, (Meagher Guard,) drill each Tuesday Evening at 404 Market street, Philadelphia. Lieut. THOMAS ASMITH, Com'dt.

Company —, (Emmet Guard,) drill each Friday Evening at "Ewen Hall," Hawley, Pa. M. W. MORRISS, Capt.

FIRST REGIMENT ME. VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Grattan Guard,) drill each Thursday Evening in Bangor, Me. JOHN CARROLL, Capt.

SIXTIETH REGIMENT ILL. S. M.

Company —, (Shields Guard,) drill each Thursday Evening in Chicago, Ill. CHAS. E. MOORE, Capt.

FIRST REGIMENT VA. VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Montgomery Guard,) drill each Monday and Friday Evenings in Richmond. P. S. MOORE, Capt.

SIXTEENTH REGIMENT S. C. S. M.

Company —, (Meagher Guard,) drill the second Thursday of each month in Charleston. GEO. SERGEANT, Capt.

SEVENTEENTH REGIMENT S. C. S. M.

Company —, (Irish Volunteers,) drill once a month in Charleston, S. C. EDWARD MAGRATH, Capt.

—— REGIMENT GEORGIA VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Irish Volunteers,) drill each —— evening, in the city of Augusta. EDWARD J. WALKER, Capt.

FIRST REGIMENT ST. LOUIS LEGION, MO.

Company—(St. Louis Washington Guard) drill each Tuesday evening, in the city of St. Louis, Mo. D. M. FROST, Capt.

FIRST WASHINGTON BATTALION OHIO S. M.

Company A, (Shields Guard), drill on each Thursday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati. DENNIS KAVANAGH, Captain.

Company B, (Sarsfield Guard), drill on each Monday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati. JOHN LEVY, Capt.

Company C, (Republican's Guard,) drill on each Saturday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati. JOHN ELITCH, Capt.

Company D, (Montgomery Light Artillery,) drill on each Wednesday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati. THOS. TIERNAN, Capt.

Company E, (Queen City Cadets, Rifles,) drill on each Tuesday and Friday evenings, at the "Cadets Armory," Pomeroy's Building, Third street, Cincinnati. JOSEPH H. BURKE, Capt.

N. B.—Commandants of Irish-American Military Companies throughout the United States, are respectfully tendered a place in the above "Directory," and requested to send such information as will enable us to represent them in it.

Continental Military Establishment.

J. PARKS,

195 FULTON, BELOW DUTCH, N. Y.

Hats, Caps, Ornaments, &c., made to order. 3m28ju

Business Directory.

NEW-YORK CATHOLIC LIBRARY ASSOCIATION.

"The objects of the Association are, 1st. The dissemination of Catholic and useful knowledge. 2d. To forward the moral and intellectual advancement of its members. 3d. To create among its members a spirit of harmony and good feeling, that will be conducive alike to their interest and pleasure. These to be attained by establishing a Library and Reading Room, and by Readings and Lectures when practicable."

Contributions of either books or money received at the office, No. 107 Nassau street.

M. T. COZANS, President.
JOSEPH MCGUIRE, Vice-President.

CORRESPONDING SECRETARY, D. Quinn.
RECORDING SECRETARY, James Fabb.
TREASURER, John Russell.
LIBRARIAN, T. S. Haughey.
DIRECTORS, R. T. Kelly, J. J. Mullen, M. B. Lynch, L. T. Cozans, P. J. McGuire.
m3jun14

PIANOS, MELODEONS AND MUSIC

The Cash system adopted!—Prices greatly reduced.

HORACE WATERS,

No. 333 Broadway, N. Y.,

AGENT FOR THE BEST BOSTON AND NEW-YORK INSTRUMENTS.

The largest assortment of

Pianos, Melodeons, Musical Instruments,

AND

MUSICAL MERCHANDISE,

of all kinds, in the United States, Pianos from ten different Manufactories, comprising those of every variety of style, from the plain, neat and subtsantial 6½ octaves, in Walnut or Rosewood Cases, from $150 to $200, to those of the most elegant finish up to $1000. No house in the Union can compete with the above in the number, variety, and celebrity of its instruments, nor in the extremely low prices at which they are sold.

Horace Waters' Modern Improved Pianos,

WITH OR WITHOUT IRON FRAMES.

possessing in their improvements of over-strings and action, a length of scale power, and compass of tone equal to the Grand Piano, united with the beauty and durability of structure of the square Piano. They are justly pronounced by the Press and by the first Musical Masters to be equal to those of any other manufacturer. They are built of the best and most thoroughly seasoned material, and guaranteed to stand the action of every climate.

Each Instrument guaranteed to give satisfaction, or purchase money refunded. Second-hand Pianos at great bargains, constantly in store; price from $30 to $140.

Horace Waters' Melodeons,

SUPERIOR INSTRUMENTS IN TONE, TOUCH AND DURABILITY OF MAKE.

(Tuned the equal temperament.) Melodeons of all other styles and makes. Price, $45, $60, $75, $100, $125, $140; double Reeds, $150; double Reeds and two banks of Keys, $200. Less a liberal discount. Clergymen and Churches, an extra discount.

Martin's Guitars, Brown's Harps, Flutes, Flutinas, Accordeons, Violins, and Musical Instruments,

OF ALL KINDS, AT LOWER PRICES THAN EVER BEFORE OFFERED TO THE PUBLIC.

A large discount to Teachers and Schools. The trade supplied on the most liberal terms.

MUSIC.

One of the largest and best selected catalogues of Music now published, comprising many of the choice and most popular airs of the day, and will be sold at one-third off from the regular prices.

Music sent by mail to all parts of the country, post paid. Particular and personal attention paid to all orders received by mail. Satisfaction guaranteed in every instance. Pianos and Melodeons for rent, and rent allowed on purchase. Pianos and Melodeons for sale on monthly payments. Second-hand Pianos taken in exchange for new. General and select Catalogues and Schedule of prices forwarded to all parts of the country by mail.

☞ Great inducements offered to agents in all parts of the country, to sell the Horace Waters' Pianos, Melodeons, and Catalogue of Music.

PIANOS AND MUSIC.—We learn that Horace Waters, of 333 Broadway, N. Y., agent for the sale of many of the most celebrated makers of Pianos and Melodeons, is offering them at prices which we advise all who desire to purchase to avail themselves of. He is also selling his large and well-known Catalogue of Music at one-third off from the regular prices, and will forward the same free of postage. His offers to the trade, teachers and schools, are of the most favorable character, all of which he will be able to fill to the letter, for having wisely adopted the cash system. The Horace Waters' Pianos are known as among the very best. We are enabled to speak of those instruments with some degree of confidence, from personal knowledge of their excellent tone and durabe quality.—N. Y. Evangelist.
ap19tf

I. E. Tate's Pannus Corrium Boot and Shoe store, for tender feet. A large stock of Boots, Shoes and Gaiters always on hand, in great variety, and made to order at the shortest notice, for Gentlemen, Boys and Youths—wholesale and retail, at the lowest Cash prices. Particular attention is requested to the Pannus Corrium or Leather Cloth Boots and Shoes, for those troubled with corns, bunions or tenderness of the feet. Its qualities for summer boots or shoes, surpass anything ever got up in this country for real comfort, as it keeps the feet perfectly cool, and at the same time is susceptible of the finest polish; for a dress boot more so than any French calfskin, with one half the labor. ISAAC E. TATE.
my 24, 3 mos. 427 Broadway New-York.

Massachusetts Advertisements.

BOSTON EMIGRANT SOCIETY.

OFFICE, CORNER OF SOUTH AND BEACH STREETS.

THE object of tho Society is to protect the Emigrant from imposition. The Office is open daily from 7 o'clock A. M. to 6 P. M. Emigrants and others furnished with employment. The Society, having made the necessary arrangements, is prepared to furnish tickets of transportation to every section of the West. Persons procuring tickets at this office may rest assured that they will reach their destination by the best route, with the least delay, and the lowest cost.

MARTIN GRIFFIN, President.
JAMES FERGUSON, Rec. Sec. | JAMES DACEY, Cor. Sec.
JAMES FLYNN, Treasurer.
M. J. FENELON, Agent.

THE GREAT RUSSIAN REMEDY.

Pro Bono Publico.

"EVERY MOTHER SHOULD HAVE A BOX IN THE HOUSE HANDY IN CASE OF ACCIDENTS TO THE CHILDREN."

REDDING'S RUSSIAN SALVE. It is a Boston remedy of thirty years' standing, and is recommended by physicians. It is a sure and speedy cure for Burns, Piles, Boils, Corns, Felons, Chilblains, and old Sores of every kind.

For Fever Sores, Ulcers, Itch, Scald Head, Nettle Rash, Bunions, Sore Nipples, (recommended by nurses); Whitlows, Sties, Festers, Flea Bites, Spider Stings, Frozen Limbs, Salt Rheum, Scurvy, Sore and Cracked Lips, Sore Nose, Warts and Flesh Wounds, it is a most valuable remedy and cure, which can be testified to by thousands who have used it in the city of Boston and vicinity for the last thirty years.

In no instance will this Salve do an injury, or interfere with a physician's prescriptions. It is made from the purest materials, from a recipe brought from Russia, of articles growing in that country, and the proprietors have letters from all classes, clergymen, physicians, sea captains, nurses, and others who have used it themselves and recommend it to others.

REDDING'S RUSSIAN SALVE is put in large tin boxes, stamped on the cover with the picture of a horse and a disabled soldier, which picture is also engraved on the wrapper. PRICE, 25 Cents a Box. Sold at all the stores in town or country, or may be ordered of any wholesale druggist.
ap19tf Redding & Co., Proprietors, No. 8 State st., Boston.

WEEMAN'S IRON RAILING MANUFACTORY.

No. 26 Merrimac street, Boston, Mass.

Where he has been for the past thirty years.

ALL persons in want of IRON FENCES, suitable for cemetery, house, garden, Balustrades, &c., can, by calling on the subscriber, purchase a better fence at a lower price, than at any other establishment in the state, as he makes it his entire business.
jun14m6
EBENEZER WEEMAM.

B. S. TREANOR,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,

15 MASSACHUSETTS BLOCK, COURT SQUARE, BOSTON.

Particular attention paid to Conveyancing, and the examination of titles to Real Estate.

Medical.

THE CAUSE OF CONSUMPTION.

BRONCHITIS.—WHAT PRODUCES BRONCHITIS?

FIRST STAGE OF DISEASE.

COSTIVENESS is the first link that connects disease in the System. It creates, induces, feeds and supports Bronchitis; and is slightly or indifferently treated, as though it was of no serious tendency: nevertheless, it has laid the foundation of that destroying disease, without the knowledge of the sufferers, undermining and sapping the very vitals of their constitutions.

Among the numerous class of diseases which afflict man, there is none more silent or treacherous in its approaches or more certain to triumph over its slowly consuming victim, than that formidable and insidious leveller of humanity—Bronchitis, which is produced by catching cold, through a neglect of regulating the state of the bowels when arriving to adult age. It seldom excites attention or alarm in the mind of any person, until it has sown the seed of disease and suffering in the human system, by checking the circulation of the blood; and it is to this source alone that we attribute the awful mortality of Consumption.

The following is a simple but correct illustration, namely:—If the culverts and sewers of the city were choked or clogged up, accidentally or otherwise, what would be the result? An overffow of accumulated filth and slush on the surface of the earth in its neighborhood, until it fills every hole, corner and crevice. This is quite similar to the human body, when the channel or sewer of life, as I may term it, which is the bowels, is checked or confined through constipation or some unnatural obstruction, which prevents the blood from circulating through the general system.

What, then, is the consequence? An accumulation of diseased matter and bile. Where will this bile and poisonous substance go to when it is prevented from taking its natural exit, through the bowels? It must surge itself back again into the blood, to be infused through the entire frame by the agency of the blood, bringing in its passage disease and suffering, and exhibiting itself by pain, nervous sensations and irritation all over the body—producing a bad feeling at the stomach, sourness of the food, a rush of blood to the head, catarrh, bronchitis, a short dry cough, dizziness, pain in the shoulders, and through or under the shoulder blades, cold feet, a peevish and irritable temper, annoyed by this hacking cough, and then gradually begins the expectorating from the throat of a lightish phlegm, resembling boiled starch or tough jelly of various colors, from a light to a darkish substance, and hawked up like a string.

SECOND STAGE.

From this period the patient is aware of some unusual and disagreeable feeling, though he seldom takes the hint till it goes from bad to worse. Catching cold from the slightest exposure, which he cannot avoid in consequence of the blood being in a diseased and corrupt condition for a long time previous to the appearance of those troublous symptoms, through the impure state of the blood, that at every breath the patient draws he inhales a similar quantity of fresh air by the nostrils and mouth, which keeps the tickling that exists in the throat and bronchial tubes in a ferment of irritation—this is the reason why some people complain of catching cold, even when confined to their room. Hence the sufferer is hacking, hawking, or expectorating a little at a time, with the impression that there is something in his throat that wants to come out; and which he desires to get out. There is a frequent desire for heavy sighing, with a dryness of the nostrils, which inclines the patient to pick or scratch them; sleepy, drowsy, dull, and heavy loss of appetite, and confused memory; a stuffing, tightness, and oppression of the chest, with a rawness and soreness of the gullet of the throat. This is caused by the silent enemy that has lurked in the system for months, and even years, and has at last aroused your fears, and well it might; for out of one hundred persons who die of Consumption ninety-nine are owing to disease of the throat alone, though simply called Bronchitis; and wretchedly treated by this self-pretended and dignified class of sheepskin physicians termed M. D.'s, who have proved a curse to the human family. They treat their patient on the following abusive principle, by cutting the tonsols and palate from the throat, as you might cut the gills out of a fish—next comes the solution or wash of nitrate of silver or caustic, and the whalebone swab, to wash and burn away the disease that has occupied the throat. Then comes the application of blister, and Croton oil externally to the throat and neck, to draw out the inflammation, as the physicians suppose (what blind philosophy.) Then comes the quack sheet of their MATERIA MEDICA—Calomel, Antimony, Morphine and Opium, to salivate and lull the feelings of the pafient, which adds to the disease and increases the suffering, by giving the disease an opporiunity of triumphing over nature. What a delusive idea to think the above treatment would be available in having recourse to those debilitating and irritating remedies of cutting, burning, blistering, purging and starving, which is of itself sufficient to lower and reduce the constitution of an ox.

THE THIRD STAGE

Confirms the above remarks. While undergoing this torturing treatment, the constitution is gradually failing and giving away, in giving rise to more alarming symptoms, evidently preparing its victim for the shroud, while the physician and friends fail to see the cause until those confirmed symptoms of consumption set in, but foolishly assign the cause to some other besides the genuine one, till the disease has reached its meridian, with a complication of fresh symptoms, breathing short and hurried, cough frequent, with an accumulation of corrupted matter, sometimes streaked with blood; profuse night sweats, emaciation and debility; cold chills in the forenoon, with a burning fever after; flesh soft and flabby, the limbs scarcely able to support the body; a susceptibility of catching cold on the least exposure, attended with a hoarseness and loss of voice, with a very heavy expectoration in the forenoon; flying pains in the chest, sides and shoulders, with a severe fit of coughing in the morning, or awaking from sleep. The painful crisis is fast approaching, with a swelling and puffing of the feet and ankles, and frequent attacks of diarrhœa. In females, the symptoms are more distressing at an earlier period than in the male, with a weakness in the back and loins, a sinking and exhausted feeling at the stomach, nervous and excitable, with gradual and frequent interruptions of the monthly flow, and as the disease progresses, a total or final cessation of it, with the harbinger of a broken down constitution which is a discharge of whites, a symptom that proves very debilitating and irritating to females.

All the above symptoms and sufferings are the fruits of costiveness at an early period, accruing to the sufferer through neglect of keeping the bowels in gentle operation, which would circulate the blood, and prove as ventilation to the general system, from the age of 18 to 26, when this disease creeps on and grows on, until every organ in the body is totally disorganized.

My long experience and observations, and my unprecedented success in treating consumption, inclines me to devote the remainder of my life to the cause of suffering humanity. I have cured more consumptive patients in the last ten years than any other doctor in the world in that time, and not by steam, smoke or vapor; nor by smelling medicine through an India rubber or glass tube, but through the selection I make from the forest and verdant meadows. I can always determine on examination whether I can be successful or not, and I speak accordingly. I have made it a rule to treat no disease longer than three weeks. If I cannot check the fatal progress of the disease in that time, I give up the patient as lost, and lead the sufferer to no further expense.

☞ In compliance with the repeated solicitations of consumptive patients living in remote parts of the country, I have opened an hospital at No. 178 Bowery, for the exclusive treatment of those laboring under any species of the above disease, where I can bestow on them the unremitted attention which the seriousness of their cases require; where I can be able to regulate their diet and regimen according to circumstances. Three weeks under the supervision of my especial care is worth four months at a distance.

All persons desirous of medical information can obtain it by enclosing one dollar, when all information and communication will be forwarded on receipt.

D. Durkin, Chronic and Consumptive Doctor,
my31 No. 178 Bowery, New-York.

DR. B. F. ADAMS,

SURGEON DENTIST, (formerly of Barclay street,) feeling grateful for the patronage so liberally bestowed upon him for the last fourteen years, respectfully informs his friends and the public, that he has taken an elegant suite of rooms, at

NO. 122 CHAMBERS STREET,

(near the Sixth and Eighth Avenue Railroads,) where he may always be found, ready to perform all operations pertaining to his profession, in a manner unsurpassed, and on the most reasonable terms. Whole or part sets of incorruptible teeth inserted without pain, on gold plate or gutta percha, excelling nature in beauty and durability. No impure gold or dangerous amalgams used. Irregularities in children's teeth prevented, or of adults remedied. Cleansing, extracting, &c. &c., all at reduced prices. Sets of teeth inserted on Silver or Gutta Percha, for six shillings each. Teeth examined, and advice given free of charge. Please call.
8m7jun B. F. ADAMS, 122 Chambers street, New-York.

DR. J. VOORHIES,

MEDICAL ELECTRICIAN,

NO. 69 SANDS STREET,

Brooklyn.

Office hours from 9 A. M. to 4 P. M.

N. B. All chronic or nervous diseases cured by Electricity in some form. Electro Medicated Vapor Baths ready for operation. Dropsy can be cured by this treatment. Consultations free. m3jun14

WRITING INKS.

WE ask the attention of all who wish imperishable records,—a matter of great importance to State, County and Town Offices, Banks, and others, to Dr. Chilton's test of the prominent Inks in use, made with a view to show their different degrees of permanence by exposure. Engraved facsimiles of the test can be seen at our office.

Thaddeus Davids & Co.,
ap19 6m Manufacturing Stationers, 26 Cliff street.

Medical.

"Eye and Ear."—DOCTOR HENDERSON, Oculist and Aurist, 419 Broadway, corner of Canal street, treats all diseases of the eye and ear, without cupping, leeching, blistering or the use of calomel. Within the past two years upwards of thirty cases of blindness from inflamation have been restored to sight, to whom reference can be given, (hundreds of which can be seen in my circular,) by inclosing three postage stamps. Electro-chemical Medicated Vapor and Sulphur, hot and cold water BATHS. Office hours 9 A. M. to 5 P. M. Sundays and evenings by appointment. 419 Broadway, corner of Canal st., New-York. my17 3m

ARTIFICIAL EYES inserted.

H. G. LUTHER,

SURGICAL AND MECHANICAL DENTIST,

No. 698 BROADWAY, Second House above Fourth st.

HAVING enjoyed an extensive practice during the last twelve years, feels confident of his ability to give perfect satisfaction to all who may honor him with their preference. He is prepared to perform all operations connected with his profession, in the most faithful manner, and in strict accordance with scientific principles, embracing all the recent improvements of the day.

References of the most respectable character given if desired. Patronage respectfully solicited.

☞ N. B. Teeth extracted without pain. my17 3m

Dr. J. J. McGowan, Physician and Surgeon, Graduate of Harvard University, Fellow of the Massachusetts and Rhode Island Medical Societies, etc., has removed to No. 69 Canal street, New-York, a few doors from Broadway, where he will attend to calls in every branch of the medical profession. Dr. McG. will devote particular attention to chronic diseases, and those of women and children. m10 1t

New School of Medicine and Pharmacy. The last Unfolding of the Art of Healing. My daily practice proves that I CURE CONSUMPTION, in all its varied forms and most advanced states, as readily as any other disease. Therefore I desire to treat all Consumptives, but particularly those who have tried all other physicians without relief. Mrs. M. J. MARIN, M.D., No. 37. Lafayette place, N. Y. (First street east of Broadway, between 4th and 8th sts.) Office hours: from 10 A. M. to 1 P. M., exclusively for Ladies; and from 2 to 5 P. M., for Gentlemen, Wednesdays excepted. All other hours by appointment. my31 3m

THE GREATEST WONDER OF THE AGE!

A REMEDY WHICH CURES IN FIVE MINUTES.—M. LEROUX'S FRENCH CHOLERA COGNAC BITTERS.—This wonderful and scientific compound is recommended by the most eminent and learned physicians of all Europe and America, and enjoys the best reputation of anything similar ever offered. It is without doubt the best, most efficient and generally acknowledged remedy against Cholera, dysentery, diarrhœa, and complaints of the stomach in general. The numerous patients who have tried it according to directions, have invariably found relief in a very short time, and the best proof of it is, that since this standard remedy was introducee in the armies of the allies in the Crimea, the mortality of the soldiers from Cholera and similar diseases was reduced by over 75 per cent.; in consideration of which, the inventor was presented by the French and English governments with a gold medal, bearing the inscription, "Hail! M. LEROUX, the great Chemist and inventor, by whose knowledge our armies are preserved from Cholera."

This invaluable preparation is also a remedy for biliousness, indigestion, weakness, and general derangement of the stomach. Upon being taken, it creates appetite, and prevents the heaviness attendant upon eating, by persons who are dyspeptic.

In this city, also, this remedy has been tried with the most undoubted success, and the undersigned can produce the best testimonials of our most celebrated physicians, as to its immediate and complete success, which he will be happy at any time to show to any that may wish to see them. S. STEINFELD, sole agent for the United States, No. 70 Nassau street, corner of John.

P. S.—Those not having money to pay, may call at my place from 3 to 5 P. M. and receive this remedy gratis. my17 3m

TO NERVOUS SUFFERERS.

A Retired Clergyman, restored to health in a few days, after many years of great nervous suffering, is anxious to make known the means of cure. Will send (free) the prescriptions used. Direct to

Rev. JOHN M. DAGNALL,
my10 3m No. 59 Fulton street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Best Hair Dye.—DR. O. M. BALLARD'S new article received the highest premium at the World's Fair and American Institute, where it was examined by the distinguished Chemists, Dr. Chilton, and Prof. John Torrey, and pronounced the best. For sale by the best Druggists. Principal office and store, 498 Broadway, New-York. my17 3m

The undersigned announces to the legitimate faculty that he has opened a store for the dispensing of pure medicines, chemicals, &c. Having obtained a knowledge of the profession in the best schools in the world, during twelve years, he will be able to compound prescriptions precisely as they are ordered. JOHN. C. GILES, Apothecary, 21ju3m 285 Bleecker, two doors above Barrow.

Reed's Celebrated London Cordial Gin, having gained much popularity in this country, being distilled the same as that in London, as he was formerly a distiller of the same kind of Gin in England, under the EXCISE LAWS.

This article is used in every hospital in and out of England's great metropolis. Its medicinal properties are invaluable.

☞ This Gin is not an imitation or a mixture of raw materials, of which much is sold in this city, under the name of London Cordial Gin, but a genuine and pure article, equal to any imported.

W. R. takes the opportunity of thanking the public for their liberal support, support, and begs a continuance of the same.

DISTILLERY,
118 East 29th st., New-York, between 2d and 3d avenues.

LABORATORY AND CHEMICAL OFFICE,
18 Exchange Place, N. Y., March 4, 1856.

MR. REED: Sir—I have submitted to close examination two samples of London Cordial Gin, manufactured by you, and purporting to equal the English article. I find on comparison with samples of Hodges' and Burnett's previously examined by me, and which I know to have been imported direct, that the quality of yours is by no means inferior to their celebrated compounds while the perfect method you posess of rectifying, insures an article of a higher degree of purity and flaver, when it has the equal advantage of time to soften it, than much of the so-called imported London gin. As a medicinal agent and cordial, under proper advice, it may be depended upon, from the care with which you select the essential oils combined with it in the distillation.

Yours, respectfully,
ISAIAH DECK, M. D.,
Consulting and Analytical Chemist.

Mr. REED'S Distillery, 118 East Twenty-ninth st., New-York. [my31 3m

MRS. HAYES' SYRUP.

For Dysentery and Bowel Complaints.

WARRANTED to cure the worst cases in less than twenty-four hours, if used according to directions. It has stood the test of thirty-five years and has never been known to fail, even when the most eminent physicians had pronounced the patient beyond the reach of medicine. Over two thousand satisfactory references and certificates can be produced, sufficient to prove its superiority over all other preparations for these complaints.

The Syrup can be given to a child a week old with perfect safety. It is pleasant to the taste, and harmless in its composition, it being free from opium, alcohol, &c. Prepared and sold by Mrs. M. Hayes, 175 Fulton st., Brooklyn. Sold also by Joseph W. Hayes, 159 Atlantic st., H. Parker, cor. of Fulton Avenue and Cumberland street, M. Evans, corner of Myrtle and Classon avenues, Brooklyn. In New-York by F. C. Wells & Co., 115 Franklin street, C. H. Ring, 92 Broadway, T. T. Green, 862 Broadway, Guion, corner of Bowery and Grand streets, W. S. Dunham, 476 Broadway. In Williamsburg, J. D. Norvill, 26 Grand street. In Newark, by R. Vanbuskirk, cor. of Market and Broad streets. 8m19jly

Special Notices.

MAYOR'S OFFICE, NEW-YORK, May 23, 1856.

NOTICE is hereby given, that the Complaint Book, opened at this office on the 1st of January, 1855, is still open for the reception of complaints of municipal abuses of all kinds. So far as the Mayor has the power, he will continue to exercise it for the abatement of any such evils, when brought to his attention through the Complaint Book, or otherwise. The Mayor invites all persons to take this method of reporting to him all violations of corporation ordinances, nuisances, or dereliction of duty upon the part of the officers of the Corporation, and he will, as heretofore, use all the legal means at his command to see the laws enforced, and the interests of the public protected. By order of the Mayor. ALEXANDER MING, Chief Clerk.

OFFICE OF RECEIVER OF TAXES, No. 32 Chambers street, New Court house

To avoid the risks that must inevitably occur from the crowd of Tax Payers who put off to the latest day the payment of their taxes, I have determined to adopt the following rule, which will be rigidly adhered to during my term of office. I shall receive no money after 2 o'clock p. m. Every officer in this department is STRICTLY PROHIBITED from receiving ENVELOPES containing money or checks for the payment of Taxes. By order, 8m1y5 HENRY H. HOWARD, Receiver.
New-York, June 28, 1856.

Business Directory.

RICH CARPETING.

1856. SPRING IMPORTATION. 1856.

ARTHUR DONNELLY,

98 BOWERY, (West side,) BETWEEN GRAND AND HESTER STREETS.

IS now prepared to exhibit his New Spring Styles of

Foreign and Domestic Carpetings,

Comprising every grade and every description, from the Cheapest Fabric to the Richest.

Importing his goods direct and thus saving the commission and interest which most dealers pay, he is enabled to offer them at prices highly favorable to consumers, who will find at his store, among other Carpetings adopted to all varieties of taste, the following elegant descriptions:

Medallions,	at	14s to 18s per yard.
Velvet,	"	10s to 16s "
Tapestry,	"	6s to 12s "
Brussels,	"	7s to 12s "
Three-ply,	"	7s to 10s "
Ingrain,	"	8s to 7s "
Common Ingrain,	"	18d to 3s "

English and American Floor Oil Cloths,

of every imaginable width, pattern and style.

A complete and choice assortment of

STAIR AND HALL CARPETS, RUGS, MATS, MATTINGS,

and of everything else appertaining to the Carpet Trade.

ARTHUR DONNELLY, 98 Bowery, (West side,)
ap19 8m Between Grand and Hester sts., N. Y.

NEW STORE

AND

NEW GOODS.

THE subscriber having leased for a term of years the premises

374 Hudson street,

and made exthnsive additions thereto, and having laid in a large stock o

Carpeting and Oil Cloths,

mostly bought at Auction, for CASH, is now prepared to sell them at the following extremely low prices:

Tapestry Brussels, 8s. usually sold at 10s.
Three Ply Ingrain 8s. usually sold at 10s.
Superfine do 6s. usually sold at 8s.
Fine do 5s. usually sold at 6s.
Common do All WOOL 3s. 6d. per yard, a prize absolutely unheard of.

Ingrain, Cotton Warp and Wool Filling 2s. 6d.
Oil Cloths 3s. per yard, usually sold at 5s.

Mats, Matting, Table and Piano Covers, Venetian and Hall Carpetting, Stair Rods, &c. &c.

Clergymen and Churches furnished at wholesale prices.

Goods in all cases warranted as represented.

J. R. Landon, 374 Hudson street, New-York,
8mjun a few doors from Hamersly.

JAMES CAIN,

MERCHANT TAILOR,

AND

CLOTHIER,

NO. 129 FULTON STREET,

(HERALD BUILDING,) New-York.
my31y

THOMAS BRENNAN,

DRAPER AND TAILOR,

CANAL STREET, ONE DOOR FROM BOWERY, WEST SIDE.

NEW-YORK.

☞ I am prepared to serve my customers with the newest styles, and at the most reasonable rates. y28je

---

GEO. McDONNELL,

BOOT AND SHOE MANUFACTURER,

82 PARK ROW, NEXT DOOR TO LOVEJOY'S HOTEL, NEW-YORK.

☞ Boots, Shoes, and Gaiters of the best quality made to order.

3m.my10 Geo. McDonnell.

ROBERT IRWIN,

CHEAP BOOT AND SHOE STORE,

my10 156 Chatham street, opposite James' st., New-York. 3m

R. HOGAN,

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL

UMBRELLA AND PARASOL MANUFACTURER,

374 BOWERY, NEAR FOURTH STREET.

Repairing neatly executed. my17 3m*

M. GRADY.

27 FAYETTE STREET, LOWELL, MASS.

ju21 Agent for the IRISH NEWS and all the other choice literature of the day.

KNOX'S

OFFICE FURNITURE WAREROOMS,

59 BEEKMAN STREET, UP STAIRS.

DESKS! DESKS!! DESKS!!!

DOUBLE and Single counting-room DESKS, from 3 to 8 feet long. Office Desks from 3 to 6 ft., of Mahogany, blackwalnut and oak; cases for Books and pigeon-holes. Office chairs, cushions, lounges and Office Tables of every description. my17 tf

---

McLOUGHLIN & McSHANE,

(Successors to THOS. ANDREWS,

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALERS IN

CHOICE TEAS, COFFEES, WINES, BRANDIES, AND GROCERIES,

61 FULTON STREET, near Cliff street,

NEW-YORK. 3m

SHIP STORES SUPPLIED.

MRS. J. McCARTHY,

FASHIONABLE MILLINERY STORE,

44 THIRD AVENUE,

Third door from 10th Street, New-York.

Cheap Straw Hats, Ribbons, Flowers, Ladies' Straw Goods.

Straw Bonnets cleaned and altered to the newest fashions.

LADIES' OWN MATERIALS MADE UP TO THE LATEST STYLES. tf

Analytical and Metallurgical Chemistry and Mining Geology.

DR. ISAIAH DECK,

No. 18 EXCHANGE PLACE, NEW-YORK.

MAY be consulted on all subjects relating to Practical Chemistry, Mining- and Metallurgy. Assays of Ores, Analyses of Minerals, and Mining Pro, ducts in general carefully and expeditiously conducted, and sound opinions delivered upon the most economical methods of working them, based on the latest chemical discoveries. Geological and Mining Surveys undertaken in any part of the world—Dr. DECK having had considerable experience in this branch of his profession. my31 3m

---

NICHOLAS WALSH.

SEXTON AND UNDERTAKER.

NO. 8 SIXTH AVENUE.

Business Directory.

MEAGHER & CAMPBELL,

ATTORNEYS AND COUNSELLORS AT LAW,

NO. 82 BROADWAY.

NOTARY PUBLIC,

Commissioner for the U. S. Court of Claims.

THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER, having formed a partnership with MALCOLM CAMPBELL, for the general practice of the law, the firm will continue to devote their attention to such law business as may be intrusted to them, including conveyancing, practice in all the courts of the state of New-York and of the United States, and general collecting business in all parts of the world. Particular attention will be given to the prosecution of claims against the United States in the Court of Claims.

Mr. Meagher may be consulted daily, on law business only, at No. 82 Broadway, from three till five o'clock P. M.

THOS. H. HURLEY,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,

NO. 10 CENTRE ST., OPPOSITE CITY HALL.

WILLIAM E. ROBINSON,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR,

HAVING entered into partnership with ISAAC DAYTON, Esq., (author of the work on Surrogates,) and WILLIAM A. COURSEN, Esq., gentlemen long known, and of high standing at the New-York Bar, has removed to their new office at 267 BROADWAY, third door below Chambers street.

☞ All business either in the Criminal or Civil Courts, promptly and faithfully attended to. ap19ly

---

JOHN O'ROURKE,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,

NO. 10 CENTRE STREET,

(Opposite the Superior Court Buildings,)

7jun NEW-YORK.

JAMES M. SHEEHAN,

Attorney and Counsellor at Law,

No. 13 Chambers Street, New-York.

2y1ju Collections promptly attended to, and Liens carefully filed, &c.

JOHN A. McSORLEY,

CUSTOM HOUSE AND SHIP BROKER, AND NOTARY PUBLIC,

7 BROAD STREET,

Clergymen, importing Vestments, Church Ornaments, &c., will be liberally treated with by calling on the subscriber.

REFERENCES:

Messrs. Thos. McClune & Co., C. Meletta, | Messrs. D. & J. Sadlier & Co., James Cook & Co. 6m

---

JAMES HARLIN,

WATCH, CLOCK MAKER, AND JEWELER.

236 HENRY STREET, BROOKLYN.

All watches and clocks bought or repaired at my establishment, warranted for twelve months. *

JOHN FOLEY,

WATCHMAKER,

JEWELER AND FINISHER OF FINE WATCHES,

NO. 202 BOWERY.

(Between Spring and Prince Streets, New-York.

Watches of a superior quality made to order, and warranted not to err more than four minutes a year. Cases jointed, works jeweled, and chronometer balances set in the best style. Jewelry of every kind repaired in a ju12m6 workmanlike manner. All orders punctually attended to.

J. McCARTEN,

WATCH AND CLOCK MAKER,

154 SEVENTH AVENUE.

Between 20th and 21st streets, New-York.

Watches, Clocks, and Jewelry carefully repaired and warranted. A good
7jun assortment of watches and clocks always on hand. 3m

JOHN FOLEY,

MANUFACTURER OF FINE GOLD PENS

BEST QUALITY ONLY.

GOLD AND SILVER PENCIL CASES.

my24tf No. 163 BROADWAY, NEW-YORK.

JOHN KENNEDY'S

STEAM MARBLE WORKS,

35TH STREET, NEAR BROADWAY.

Statuary and Marble Mantle-Pieces, Monuments, Grave Stones, Tombs, &c. All orders thankfully received and punctually attended to. *

THOMAS GAFFNEY'S

SOAP AND CANDLE

MANUFACTORY,

825 EAST SENECA STREET, BUFFALO,

NEW-YORK. 6mJune7

WILLIAM M. SMITH,

The Public Favorite, and only American Opposition

BILL POSTER AND DISTRIBUTOR,

THE OLDEST ESTABLISHED IN THE BUSINESS.

Work done promptly and faithfully—cheaper, quicker, and better than any other poster in the city. Work done either in New-York, Brooklyn, Williamsburgh, or Jersey City. Boards lent for concerts, or any kind of work.

OFFICE, 28½ SPRUCE STREET, NEW-YORK,
ap26tf (Between William and Gold streets.)

THE METROPOLITAN

FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY,

No. 108 BROADWAY,

(Cor. Pine Street.)

CASH CAPITAL $300,000.

JAMES LORIMER GRAHAM, President.

EDWARD A. STANSBURY, Secretary. my31y

WILLARD, FELT & CO.,

MANUFACTURERS OF ACCOUNT BOOKS,

AND IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN PAPER AND STATIONERY,

NO. 14 MAIDEN LANE,

3mos (near Broadway.)

MATTHEW WALLACE,

25 CLARK STREET, CHICAGO, ILL.,

WHOLESALE DEALER IN NEWSPAPERS, BOOKS, &c.

☞ "The Irish News," on hand, by the earliest moment, each week. tf

---

Hotels.

STEVENS HOUSE.

(LATE DELMONICO'S HOTEL.

21, 23, 25, & 27 Broadway, New-York.

THE undersigned avails himself of this opportunity of informing his friends and the public that he has leased the above named house for a term of years, and has made extensive alterations and repairs, and omitted nothing that will tend to the accomodations or comfort of guests. The house having been newly furnished throughout in the most thorough and modern style, with a view to convenience and comfort, and as it will be conducted on the European plan, and with an experienced caterer, and thorough cooks, he hopes to give satisfaction to those who favor him with their patronage which has never failed while in other Hotels in this city.

Catholic families and clergymen visiting New-York will find in the arrangements of this spacious establishment, elegance, convenience, and comfort, at moderate charges. JOHN O'GRADY, JR.,

3m5jly Formerly of Judson's Hotel and the Brandreth House.

NEW HOTEL.

LAFARGE HOUSE,

Broadway, New-York.

This new and beautiful First-class Hotel, is now open for the reception of guests. The location is the most pleasant part of Broadway, opposite Bond street, and in the immediate vicinity of the most fashionable places of amusement. The rooms are large and airy, and so arranged that they may be connected in suites for families, or used separately for single seasons. The patronage of the public is respectfully solicited.

3m19jly STONE & BURROUGHS, Proprietors.

JAMES McPYKE,

James McPyke respectfully informs his friends and the public that he has leased for a term of years the spacious and elegant premises 90 Prince street, three doors west of Broadway, which he will open for the reception of his old patrons, friends, and those who will honor him with their patronage on the 4th inst. The house has been newly painted and furnished in a commodious manner, for the comfort of his guests. His bar will contain the choicest and most approved brands of liquor, and his larder will always be stocked with the finest luxuries and delicacies of the season. Rooms for private parties. Families supplied with meals at all hours. 4t12jly

---

HOSEY & RILEY,

PACIFIC RESTAURANT,

600 BROADWAY, NEW-YORK.

Private entrance on the first floor, 134 Crosby street.

☞ Hosey & Riley invite their friends to give them a call.

my24 8m

Business Directory.

THE VIRGINIA TOBACCO AGENCY,

(ESTABLISHED IN 1836.)

45 Water street, New-York.

CHARLES M. CONNOLLY,

Commission Merchant and Agent for the sale of Manufactured Tobacco.

Has always on hand, at the above agency, a full supply of

Manufactured Tobacco,

Of all brands and descriptions, direct from the Virginia Factories, for sale on liberal terms. jly5 y

---

JOHN J. STAFF'S.

WINES, LIQUORS, SEGARS,
LONDON, DUBLIN, PHILADELPHIA,
PORTER and ALE,
SCOTCH, BURTON, and EAST INDIA ALES,
CHAMPAGNE CIDER, in quantities to suit purchasers,
at 333 Broadway,
tf corner of Anthony street, New-York.

P. MONAGHAN,

IMPORTER of the various and best brands of HAVANA SEGARS, &c. &c. Country and city merchants supplied in bond or in store. Duties paid or unpaid. 121 PEARL STREET, New-York.

N. B.—Sole Importer of the J. M. Vichot, La Union, and La Primavera brands. ap26ly

---

WISE'S IRISH MALT WHISKEY.

IMPORTED by J. & P. Hogan, Nos. 6 and 12 West street, and 253 Third Avenue, corner of 21st street, New-York, and corner of Vanbrunt and Sullivan streets, Brooklyn. J. & P. Hogan wish to inform their friends and the public that they have just received a large quantity of WISE'S CORK MALT WHISKEY, which will be sold at a reduced price, out of bond and at the above establishment. They are the only firm who import the same in New-York. ap26ly

---

DRY-DOCK DISTILLERY.

No. 291 East-thirteenth st., near Avenue B.

JAMES RUSSELL,

Rectifier and Manufacturer of Cordials,

IMPORTER AND DEALER

IN Foreign and Domestic Wines, Liquors, Cordials, &c. J. R. having had long experience in the liquor trade, he has facilities of selecting wines and liquors of the most superior quality, which he offers to dealers and families at the lowest market prices, and flatters himself that a single trial will be quite sufficient to secure custom.

Goods delivered free of expense in any part of the city, and country orders promptly attended to. 3m jun14

P. CUFF,

RECTIFIER AND DISTILLER,

NO. 306 EIGHTH AVENUE.

NEW-YORK.

Dealer in Foreign Wines and Liquors.

☞ Goods sent to all parts of the country. Orders of all kinds promptly attended to. y jly26

CALL ON

THOMAS LYNCH,

OF the "FULTON SHADES," Fulton Ferry, Brooklyn, for the best XX and XXX ales, brandies, and segars.

TAILORS, ATTENTION!

If you wish to possess the best and most exact system of Coat and Jacket Cutting, procure HOLDWAY'S DIAGRAM AND SCALE, whereby you are enabled to cut for 30 different sizes, varying from 20 breast measure (which, you know, is small,) to 54, which you also consider large, and whereby you will find a misfit next to impossible. See it and judge for yourself.

To be had of TILL & COOK, 299 Broadway; or of A. HOLDWAY, 20 Anne street, next door to the IRISH NEWS office. je14 tf

---

REMOVAL.

McConville & Murphy, Importers of Wide Silks

Shawls, Vestings, and Linen Goods, have REMOVED to No. STREET, where all orders will be punctually attended to. tf

The Irish News.

THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.
JOHN SAVAGE, LITERARY EDITOR.

THREE DOLLARS PER ANNUM. SINGLE COPIES 6 CENTS.
Publication Office, 29 Ann St., cor. of Nassau.

VOL. I. NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, AUGUST 2, 1856. NO. 17.

Publications.

CONTENTS OF NO. XVII.

Editorial.

BRITISH INFLUENCE IN AMERICA.

COURTESIES OF SOVEREIGNS.

IRISH RAILWAYS.

EUROPEAN MOVEMENTS—Latest News by the Asia.

Correspondence.

Letter from Dublin—by "Kilmainham."
" from California—by "Humboldt.."

Literature.

PERSONAL RECOLLECTIONS.—Trip to Killarney—The Devil's Punch Bowl and O'Donohue's Prison.

Round Towers of Clonmacnoise.

Spanish Genius and English Talent—Calderon's Poems.

American Talent in England.

Poetry.

The God-Child of July.

Miscellaneous.

European News.—Irish Provincial News—Dreadful Riot in Tipperary—Letter from Father Kenyon—Memoir of Robert St. Leger—Smith O'Brien—American News—Central America—Gold Discoveries in Honduras, &c.

Answers to Correspondents.

THE IRISH NEWS,

EDITED BY THE PROPRIETOR,

THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER,

DEDICATED TO THE SERVICE OF THE

IRISH PEOPLE,

AT HOME AND ABROAD,

Will be published every Saturday, on and after the 12th of April, at 29 Ann street, corner of Nassau, New-York.

TERMS.

For subscribers, $3 per annum: 6 cents a copy.
For retailers and carriers, $4 per hundred.
For Clubs, 4 copies to one address, per annum, $10.
" 7 " " " " $17.
" 10 " " " " $20.

For advertising.—Each square of eight lines,

Transient	$1
Monthly	$2
Quarterly	$5
Yearly	$16

N. B. Four lines, or under, constitute half a square.

Agents or Postmasters who interest themselves in procuring and remitting subscriptions, may retain 50 cents out of each annual subscription of $3.

☞ Subscribers, Agents, and Advertisers will please send in their orders early, and observe that our terms are invariably, payments in advance.

Communications of a PRIVATE nature should always be marked so. Those connected with the editorial department are to be addressed to Thomas Francis Meagher, and those on business to Richard J. Lalor, Irish News Office, 29 Ann street, corner of Nassau.

☞ Subscribers, residing in New-York, Brooklyn, and Williamsburgh, who pay in advance, will have their papers neatly enveloped, addressed, and delivered on each Wednesday through Boyd's Express or some similar medium.

Wholesale Dealers.

DEXTER & BROTHERS, 14 Ann Street, New-York.
ROSS & TOUSEY, 108 Nassau Street, New-York.
SAMUEL YATES, 22 Beekman Street, New-York.
MIKE MADDEN, 22 Ann Street, New-York.
HAMILTON & JOHNSON, 30 Ann Street, New-York.
DE WITT & DAVENPORT, 160 & 162 Nassau Street, New-York.
HENRY TAYLOR, Baltimore, Md.
FEDERHEN & CO., 13 Court Street, Boston.
WM. HICKEY, 128 Federal Street, Boston.
REDDING & CO., 8 Court Street, Boston.
THOS. McLOUGHLIN, 42 South 4th Street, Philadelphia.
T. R. CALLENDER, 88 South-Third Street, Philadelphia.
DROVIN & CO., Philadelphia.
A. WINCH, 116 Chestnut street.
J. M. CRAWFORD, 30 and 32 Chestnut Street, St. Louis, Mo.
MATTHEW WALLACE, 25 Clark Street, Chicago, Ill.
McNALLY & CO., 75 Dearborn Street.
J. W. SULLIVAN, Kearney Street, San Francisco, Cal.
ROY'S, Detroit, Mich.
J. B. MAHONY, Cincinnati, Ohio.
J. P. WALSH, Cincinnati, Ohio.
— COURTNEY, Charleston, South Carolina.
BRICE, 100 Exchange Place, New Orleans.
JOHN PLASTO, 144 Upper Abbey street, Dublin.
STILL & CO., 120 Montgomery street, San Francisco.
WM. BOYLE, News Carrier, San Francisco.
J. C. Morgan, next post office, New Orleans.

Retail Dealers.

NAGLE, Bangor, Me.
O'CONNELL, Cincinnati, O.
HASTINGS, Albany, N. Y.
McGOWANS, Portland, Me.
ADAMSON, Washington, D. C.
DOWNS, New-Haven, Conn.
MORRISEY, " "
DONOHUE, Newark, N. J.
JOHN H. TYSON, 89 Washington street, Hoboken, N. J.
JOHN C. CLARKE, 38 Newark avenue, Jersey City.
B. E. DOWLING, Jefferson st., next the Post Office, Newport, Ky.
M. GRADY, 27 Fayette st., Lowell, Mass.

Printed by Watters Brothers, 47 Ann street.
POWER PRESS OF J. B. WILLIAMS.

KEATING'S IRELAND.

A NEW TRANSLATION OF THE

FORAS. FEASA AR ERINN;

OR, GENERAL HISTORY OF IRELAND.

From a Manuscript Copy of the Original Irish of the Rev. and Learned

GEOFFREY KEATING.

With Notes, Historical, Topographical, and Explanatory,

By JOHN O'MAHONY, Esq.

The work is now in course of preparation, and will be speedily published, in one large octavo volume of about 600 pages, with plates. Price to Subscribers, $2,00.

The book will be got up in superior style, and furnished to the address of Subscribers giving their names to a duly-authorized canvasser, or to

A list of subscribers will be printed in the work.

P. M. HAVERTY, Publisher,
tf 110 Fulton street, N. Y.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., July 10, 1856.

Dear Haverty—I wish you to put down my name as a subscriber to Mr. O'Mahoney's translation of the Foras Feasa ar Erinn.

That is a book long wanted, and which the "Celtic Society ought to have given us long ago. If William Eliot Hudson had lived, it would have been accomplished. And it will be no small credit to you, if you can bring out here in America a work long acknowledged to be a desideratum in Ireland; executed, too, by a scholar so competent both to translate and to illustrate it with notes, as Mr. O'Mahony.

I hope it is well advanced in its preparation.

Faithfully yours, JOHN MITCHEL.

Publications.

BENZIGER BROTHERS.

Publishers and Booksellers,

MANUFACTURERS AND IMPORTERS OF

Church Furniture,

Einsiedeln, Switzerland, and 172 William street, corner of Beekman, New-York.

BENZIGER BROTHERS beg leave most respectfully to call the particular attention of the Right Rev. and the Rev. Clergy, the Religious Communities, Educational Establishments, and of the Trade, to the large and varied stock they have just opened in their new store, 172 William street.

Their Book Trade.

The old established house of Benziger Brothers, Eisiedeln, well known to many of the Hierarchy and the Rev. Clergy of the United States who have visited Switzerland, established this house in New-York four years ago, and they trust they will receive for the greatly increased advantages they offer, a continuance of that support, which for a period of over forty years has enabled them to build up, at the Pilgrimage of Our Lady of the Hermits (Einsiedeln) an establishment in which over four hundred persons are daily employed in the fabrication of the various articles that are used in the Church.

They desire particularly to call attention to their publications of PRAYER and DEVOTIONAL BOOKS, in German, French, Italian and Latin, consisting of over 200 different sorts. Being in immediate and constant intercourse with nearly all the principal publishers of Europe, they are enabled to offer a large assortment of standard THEOLOGICAL and LITURGICAL WORKS, among which are, the editions of Mechline, Paris, Ratisbone, &c., at exceedingly low prices.

They are also prepared to supply any of the English Catholic Books published in the United States, at publishers' lowest prices.

An assortment of Dutch and Flemish Prayer Books, and of German School and Story Books.

2. They very respectfully invite an inspection of their extensive assortment of

Vestments and Church Vessels,

and, in doing so, feel confident that their stocks is more varied and of superior fabrication than any of the kind heretofore introduced into the United States, and from their facilities for purchasing in Europe, are enabled to sell at a lower price than any other house in the country.

3. Engravings, Beads, Crucifixes, &c.

ENGRAVINGS—An immense variety of their own manufacture, including Altar, Baptismal, Confirmation, First Communion and First Confession Cards, Holy Water Pots, and

BEADS—Pearl, Garnet, Cornelian, Cocoa, Ivory, Wood, and Glass.

CRUCIFIXES, MEDALS, and RELIQUARIES, &c., in great variety. Also, STATUARY, in porcelain, biscuit, plastique, &c., &c.

4. Together with the above they have a large number of

Beautiful Statues,

suitable for Churches and Oratories, imported from Germany, France, and Belgium; amongst which are "The Immaculate Conception," "Virgin Mother" or "Our Lady of Victories," "St. Peter," "St. Paul," "Ecue Homo," "St. Joseph," "St. Aloysius," "St. Patrick," "The Resurrection," "Angel Guardian," "Angel Adoring," "The Infant Saviour in the Crib," "The Crucifixion," and many others. Any figure made to order, from design.

☞ Catalogues describing the Church Ornaments, Books, Pictures and Beads, can be had on application. jy19 8mos

Study the Life of Mary!

THE OLD ESTABLISHED CATHOLIC HOUSE

OF

EDWARD DUNIGAN & BROTHER,

(JAMES B. KIRKER,)

151 Fulton street, New-York,

Are now publishing, in monthly parts, at twenty-five cents each, and with the express approbation of the

MOST REV. JOHN HUGHES, D.D.,

ARCHBISHOP OF NEW-YORK,

The Life of the Blessed Virgin Mary,

By the

RIGHT REV. ROMUALD GENTILUCCI,

Chamberlain of Honor to His Holiness,

Dedicated to and honored with the suffrages of His Holiness

POPE PIUS IX.,

ILLUSTRATED with fine steel engravings, and vignettes, borders, and initial-, designed expressly for this work. This Life, published at Rome in 1848, by a Prelate high in the esteem of the Holy Father, is approved by the Master of the Sacred Palace, and has already been translated into other languages. Amid the many lives that have appeared, Gentilucci's will ever be remarkable for its unction and beauty of style, no less than for the deep knowledge, which it displays of the writings of the Holy Fathers, and all the monuments of Ecclesiastical History that can in any way throw light on the Life of the Immaculate Mother of our Lord, as handed down in the loving traditions of the faithful from the age in which she lived.

It is a book for the studious as well as for the fervent Christian; a book for every one who seeks to rouse in his heart feelings of devotion for Her, whom the unerring Judge selected for the greatest honor which the human mind can conceive.

Conditions of the Work.

Gentilucci's Life of the Blessed Virgin Mary will be published in semi-monthly parts of 48 pages each, with a steel engraving in every number, and several fine woodcuts. Printed on fine paper, from new type, it will, when complete, form a most unique and beautiful volume of six to seven hundred and fifty pages.

OBSERVATIONS OF THE PRESS.

No other work of our day, on the same subject, can be compared to it. It is unrivalled for beauty of style and depth of erudition. It is the offering of a learned and devoted son of the blessed Virgin, who enjoys the confidence and friend-ship of our most Holy Father, to whom the work is dedicated. We are not more edified at the piety of the author, than astonished at the wonderful erudition displayed in the book. The translator has performed his task admirably.—Pittsburg Catholic.

We cannot too highly recommend it to the consideration of our readers, whether we regard the intrinsic value of the work itself, or the beauty and exquisite ensemble of its getting up.—Truthteller.

Profusely illustrated with engravings and vignettes, this work is brought out in such an elegant style, as to make it, exclusive of its literary merit, a fitting library companion to the Bible of the same enterprising publishers.—Detroit Vindicator.

This work is one of devotion and merit. We do not know who translated it, but it seems better than average translations.—Freeman's Journal.

This work, translated from the Italian, and apparently well translated, is by an eminent author, is dedicated by permission to his Holiness Pius IX., and is spoken of in very high terms by competent judges. As far as we have seen it, we like it very much, and think it must prove a great favorite with the children of Mary and all devout Catholics.—Brownson's Review.

Inducement.

Each subscriber to this splendid work will receive with the last number a magnificent steel engraving, suitable for framing, of the

MOST. REV. JOHN HUGHES, D.D.,

ARCHBISHOP OF NEW-YORK.

Canvassers will find it to their advantage to address the publishers.

8t12jly EDWARD DUNIGAN & BROTHER.

☞ Post Office Notice.—The MAILS FOR EUROPE, via Southampton and Havre, per U. S. steamer Ericcson will close at this office on SATURDAY, the 2dday of August, at 10½ o'clock, A. M.

☞ Post Office Notice.—The Mails for California, per U. S. steamer Illinois, will close at this office on Tuesday, the 5th day of August, at 1 o'clock P. M.

Isaac V. Fowler, Postmaster.

Publications.

SCARCE BOOKS RELATING TO IRELAND.

DUBLIN UNIVERSITY MAGAZINE—from the commencement to 1855, complete; 46 vols. in neat half calf.
RYAN'S IRISH WORTHIES. 2 vols., 8vo., cloth.
STUART'S HISTORY OF ARMAGH. 8vo. $3.
MONASTICUM HIBERNICUM. By Stevens. 8vo, calf, plates. $8.
SMITH'S HISTORY OF CORK. 2 vols., 8vo. $6.
McGREGOR'S HISTORY OF LIMERICK. 2 vols. $6.
IRISH QUARTERLY REVIEW. 5 vols., 8vo, containing Gilbert's Streets of Dublin—Life of John Banim—Celtic Records of Ireland—Memoirs of Irish Celebrities—Lady Blessington—Maturin—Dr. Maginn—Chief Justice Bushe—Rev. S. Madden—Tom Moore—Barry, the painter—Mackin, &c., &c. $16.
IRISH PENNY JOURNAL. 1 vol., quarto. $3 50.
DUBLIN PENNY JOURNAL. 4 vols., very scarce. $16.
ANCIENT IRISH HISTORIES. By Spencer Campion Hanmer and Marlborough. 2 vols., 8vo. $7 50.
PAUATA HIBERNIA. $6.
IRISH PENNY MAGAZINE. Edited by Lover. $3 50.
ANNALS OF THE FOUR MASTERS. Translated by Connellan. 4to, cloth, map. $6 50.
HARDY'S LIFE OF CHARLEMONT. 2 vols. $3.
KEATING'S HISTORY OF IRELAND. 8vo. $4.
THE CITIZEN, a Dublin magazine. 4 vols., with a collection of ancient Irish music. $12.
O'BRIEN'S ROUND TOWERS. 8vo, half calf. $10.
MUSGRAVE'S IRISH REBELLIONS. 2 vols., 8vo, half calf. $4.
And a large collection of miscellaneous Irish books.
For sale by P. M. Haverty, Bookseller,
110 Fulton street, New-York.

VOLUNTEERS ASSEMBLED IN COLLEGE GREEN—A copy of this rare engraving (described in No. 10 Irish News) for sale. Price $5. jy12 tf

The Trade supplied on liberal terms with
MITCHEL'S JAIL JOURNAL.
MOORE'S LIFE OF LORD EDWARD FITZGERALD.
DAVIS'S POEMS, with an introduction by John Mitchel.
THE DUBLIN NATION for 1849, '50, '51. 3 vols., half-green calf, neat.

An able work of Genius!

"COUSIN NICHOLAS,"

By

THOMAS INGOLDSBY,

(Reverend Richard H. Barham,)

Author of .. .. "The Ingoldsby Legends."

One volume, 12mo., handsome cloth, with six fine illustrations. Price One Dollar.

"COUSIN NICHOLAS" is not a mere compilation of ludicrous situations and startling effects; it is not the embodying of the exaggerated imaginings of a literary caricaturist; it is the well digested, carefully written, natural and most pleasing scenes of every-day life, woven into a matchless tale, whose greatest beauty is its quiet unpretending vein of humor and sentiment, sense and sarcasm, which steal over our senses, and entrance us in a dream, so pleasant that it is with deep regret an arrival of that inevitable "End" compels us to part with characters so well understood and appreciated.

A Burke, Publisher, Buffalo.

For sale in New-York by Ross & Tousey, 108 Nassau, and by all Booksellers. 1

A VALUABLE BOOK OF REFERENCE.

Will be published in July,

In one volume, 8vo. cloth, price $1 50,

HISTORY OF IMMIGRATION

TO THE

UNITED STATES,

EXHIBITING THE

Number, Sex, Age, Occupation, and country of birth,

OF

PASSENGERS ARRIVING IN THE UNITED STATES,

By sea from Foreign Countries, from September 30th, 1819, to December 31st, 1855.

COMPILED ENTIRELY FROM OFFICIAL DATA.

With

An Introductory View of the Progress and Extent of Immigration to the United States prior to 1819.

And an appendix containing the

NATURALIZATION AND PASSENGER LAWS

Of the United States, and extracts from the Laws of the Several States relative to Immigrants, the Importation of Paupers, Convicts, Lunatics, etc.

BY WILLIAM J. BROMWELL,

Of the Department of State.

tf28je J. S. Redfield, 34 Beekman street.

Billiards.

IMPROVED BILLIARD TABLES AND CUSHIONS.

MICHAEL PHELAN'S

MODEL TABLES AND COMBINATION CUSHIONS,

(Patented February 19, 1856,)

CORRECT in principle and perfect in action—so constructed as to insure mathematical correctness of angles when played upon, and warranted to possess the requisite elasticity in all seasons, having been tested by the best players in this country, and by them pronounced the most perfect of any hitherto constructed—are offered to the public as cheap as the ordinary tables of the day. Orders promptly attended to for fitting up private or public Billiard Rooms; new Cushions put on old Tables, &c.

Saloon and Salesroom No. 39 Chambers street, up stairs.

O'CONNOR & COLLENDER,

BILLIARD TABLE MANUFACTURERS.

53 ANN STREET, NEW-YORK.

Special Notices.

Notice.—New-York and Liverpool U. S. M. S. S. Co., 56 Wall street—New-York, May 27th, 1856.—The rate of freight by the steamers of this line from Liverpool to New-York, is reduced to four pounds per ton measurement until further notice. jly19tf E. K. COLLINS.

Wanted,—Good hands to embroider on linen. Apply at GENIN'S Bazaar (under St. Nicholas Hotel,) 513 Broadway. my17 8m

Shipping.

THE NEW-YORK AND LIVERPOOL

United States Mail Line.

The ships composing this line are the following:

The ATLANTIC ..... Capt. Eldridge.
The ADRIATIC ..... Capt. West.
The PACIFIC ..... Capt. Eldridge.
The BALTIC ..... Capt. Comstock.

These ships have been built by contract, expressly for the government service. Every care has been taken in their construction, as also in their engines to insure strength and speed; and their accommodations for passengers are unequalled for elegance and comfort.

Price of passage from New-York to Liverpool in first cabin, $130; in second do., $75. Exclusive use of extra size state rooms, $325. From Liverpool to New-York, 30 and 20 guineas.

An experienced surgeon attached to each ship.

No berth can be secured until paid for.

PROPOSED DATES OF SAILING.

FROM NEW-YORK.		FROM LIVERPOOL.
Saturday	Aug. 2	Wednesday	July 23
Saturday	Aug. 16	Wednesday	Aug. 6
Saturday	Aug. 30	Wednesday	Sept. 3
Saturday	Sept. 13	Wednesday	Sept. 17
Saturday	Oct. 11	Wednesday	Oct. 1
Saturday	Oct. 25	Wednesday	Oct. 15

Edw'd. K. Collins & Co., No. 56 Wall street, New-York.

Brown, Shipley & Co., Liverpool.

Stephen Kennard & Co., 27 Austin Friars, London.

B. G. Wainwright & Co., Paris.

The owners of these ships will not be accountable for gold, silver, bullion, specie, jewelry, precious stones or metals, unless bills of lading are signed therefor, and the value thereof therein expressed.

Shippers will please take notice, that the ships of this line cannot carry any goods contraband of war. ap26 6m.

C. H. MARSHALL & CO.,

Old Black Ball Line of Liverpool Packets.

CERTIFICATES

Furnished for Passage to and from Liverpool, on the 1st and 16th of every Month, by the following splendid ships:

James Foster, Jr.	Capt. J. W. Porter.
Neptune	" E. W. Peabody.
Harvest Queen	" E. Young.
Isaac Webb	" J. M. Bayer.
Great Western	" W. G. Furrier.
Manhattan	" T. Dixon.
Isaac Wright	" E. Abeel.
Columbia	" C. Hutchinson.
Fidelia	" W. A. Macgill.
Yorkshire	" C. A. Marshall.

REMITTANCES.

Drafts, for £1 and upwards, on the Royal Bank of Ireland, and on Messrs. Baring Brothers & Co., Bankers, Liverpool and London, payable on sight.

C. H. MARSHALL & CO.,
38 Burling Slip, N. Y.

Agents in Liverpool, Baring Brothers & Co.,

OLD LINE PACKETS,

Pier 23 East River, foot of Beekman street. 6m

WILLIAMS & GUION'S

Old Black Star Line of Packets. 1856.

Passage from any part of Great Britain and Ireland, secured at the lowest possible rates by this old-established line, sailing from Liverpool to New-York every five days, comprising the following magnificent Ships:

Ships.	Captains.	Tonage.
AUSTRALIA,	Smith,	2,000
BRIDGEWATER (new),	Barstow,	2,000
CULTIVATOR (new),	Austin,	2,000
CYNOSURE,	Bray,	2,060
CORNELIA LAWRENCE (new),	Knapp,	2,000
DE WITT CLINTON,	Funk,	1,800
ENTERPRISE,	Davis,	1,200
GUY MANNERING,	Dollard,	2,000
JACOB A. WESTERVELT,	Hoodless,	2,000
IRENE,	Williams,	1,400
JOHN BRIGHT (new),	Cutting,	2,000
MARMION,	Hanley,	1,200
NORTH AMERICAN,	Clark,	1,800
OSWEGO,	Stevens,	1,400
ROBERT KELLY,	Barstow,	1,500
SILAS WRIGHT (new),	Freeman,	2,000
SOUTHAMPTON,	Furlong,	1,600
THORNTON (new),	Collins,	2,000
TICONDEROGA,	Boyle,	1,400
UNIVERSE,	Cave,	2,000
VANGUARD,	Norton,	1,800

The ships of this line are the largest and swiftest in the trade, their accommodations for passengers are unequalled, and the frequency and punctuality of their departure offer advantages to the emigrant not to be had by any Line of Packets. Such passengers as decline coming out, the money paid for them will be promptly refunded without discount.

Provisions of best quality are provided for passengers; rations, consisting of Bread, Flour, Rice, Oatmeal, Tea, Sugar, Molasses, Salt, &c.

The increased patronage received by the proprietors of the Old Black Star Line has induced them to add to the Line several New Ships, which have taken their place this season; no expense has been spared to render the facilities for Emigration equal to the times, and add to the renown of these celebrated Packets.

The regular Sailing days are 1st, 8th, 11th, 18th, 21st, and 26th of each month; this will give passengers opportunity for embarking more frequent than by any other established Line, to which the attention of the public is respectfully called.

No Certificate of Passage will be issued for children under 12 years of age unless accompanied by an adult, who must be paid for on same certificate; for persons over 60 years of age, or with any impediment, without a Permit from Commissioners of Emigration.

REMITTANCES.

Persons wanting to send money to their friends can obtain drafts for any amount, which will be cashed at sight at the following Banks:

Ireland—National Bank of Ireland; Royal Bank of Ireland; Ulster Banking Co., and their Branches.

Scotland—National Bank of Scotland and Branches.

England—Messrs. GLYNN, MILLS & Co, Bankers, London; GUION & Co., Merchants, Liverpool.

For further particulars apply, if by letter post-paid, to

WILLIAMS & GUION,
40 Fulton street, New-York.

GUION & CO.,
115 Waterloo Road, Liverpool.

AGENTS—JOHN WHITNEY, Providence, R. I.
EDWARD RYAN, 2 Albany street, Boston.
THOMAS RATTIGAN, Pittsburgh, Pa.

BLACK BALL LINE

OF LIVERPOOL PACKETS,

Sailing to and from Liverpool on the 1st and 16th of each Month.

THE following ten magnificent clipper Packet Ships comprise the "Black Ball Line, viz:—

James Foster Jr.,	Manhattan,
Great Western,	Neptune,
Harvest Queen,	Columbia,
Isaac Webb,	Yorkshire,
Isaac Wright,	Fidelia.

DRAFTS AT SIGHT for any amount payable in every town throughout England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales.

Persons returning to the old country, or those sending for their friends, will find it to their interest to select the "Black Ball Line," as the accommodations in the above clippers for Cabin, Second Cabin, and Steerage Passengers, are well known by the travelling public to be far superior to any other.

☞ Apply or address by letter, post-paid; no letter will be answered unless a postage stamp is enclosed to pre-pay postage.

Jacob Wilson, 108 South street, New York,
Who is the only authorized Passenger Agent for the "Black Ball Line," which lay at Pier 23 East River, opposite this office. my3 3m

Shipping.

LIVERPOOL AND PHILADELPHIA

STEAMSHIP COMPANY,

Intend despatching their splendid Iron Screw Steamers as follows:

FROM LIVERPOOL		FROM PHILADELPHIA
Kangaroo	30 July	City of Baltimore	7 August
City of Manchester	13 August	Kangaroo	21 August
City of Baltimore	27 August	City of Manchester	4 Sept.
Kangaroo	10 Sept.	City of Baltimore	18 Sept.
		Kangaroo	2 October.

Steerage passage from Philadelphia, $30; from Liverpool, $40, including cooked provisions. Persons wishing to visit Europe or to send for friends from Great Britain and Ireland, by the above line of splendid Steamships, or by first-class sailing Packets, can purchase passage tickets on application to

Sabel & Cortis, 177 Broadway, New-York.

Or to their Agents in

Albany—A. T. Holmes	Dubuque—Jas. C. Rattray.
Baltimore—Foard & Rodgers	Hartford, Ct.—A. Rose.
Boston—F. S. Saxton	New-Orleans—Jenkins, Williams & Co.
Buffalo—Robt. Hager	Pittsburg—John Thompson.
Chicago—Lull & Mayer	Pottsville—R. Edwards.
Cincinnati——	Toronto C. W.—D. K. Feehan. tf24my

J. F. Meline & Co.

Bankers.

GREEN & SEWELL,

BANKERS,

No. 29 Wall Street, New-York.

DRAFTS on the Belfast Banking Co., available in any part of Ireland, for sale.

REMITTANCES from the interior, promptly forwarded to any address in Ireland, and receipt therefor returned to the sender. General Banking business transacted. my17 6m

---

BREWER & CALDWELL,

20 OLD SLIP, CORNER OF WATER STREET, N. Y.

ISSUE BANK OF CHARLESTON BILLS

ON

BANK OF LIVERPOOL,

In sums of one pound sterling and upwards, payable at any of the Banks in

ENGLAND, IRELAND, SCOTLAND, AND WALES. jun14

REMITTANCES TO IRELAND.

IRISH EMIGRANT SOCIETY,
Office, 51 Chambers street.

NOTICE.—The recent failures, by which a large amount of Bills remitted from this country to friends in Ireland, has been returned unpaid, afford to this Society the opportunity, and at the same time impose upon it the duty of informing the public, that such losses would have been prevented if the parties purchasing Bills had availed themselves of the advantages offered by the Society.

For the purpose of entire protection a fund is constantly kept on deposit in the Bank of Ireland, against which this Society issues its drafts, payable at sight (from sums of £1 sterling and upwards), on the Bank and all its branches, and has thereby for the last Ten Years afforded a mode of remittance perfectly safe and unquestionable.

New-York, December 29, 1851.

ANDREW CARRIGAN, President.

JOHN MANNING,
ROBERT J. DILLON,
HUGH KELLY,
} Vice-Presidents.

EDWARD C. DONNELLY, Corresponding Secretary.
PETER CRERAR, Recording Secretary.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

Felix Ingoldsby,	John Nicholson,	William Redmond.
William Watson,	Hugh Kelly,	James Olwell,
John Manning,	Cornel Sheehan,	Daniel Devlin,
Terence Donnelly,	Romaine Dillon,	John McMenomy.

EMIGRANT INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS BANK.

No. 51 CHAMBERS STREET.

THIS Institution has been established for the purpose of affording to Emigrants and others, a safe place of deposit for their funds, to protect them from robbery and fraud.

It is conducted with the strictest economy—neither the Officers and Trustees, receive any compensation for their services. The entire profits belong to the Depositors, and will be divided amongst them, having due regard to the safety of the funds.

The last dividend was six per cent. upon all sums of $500 and under, and and will be continued or increased as the profits may justify.

Bank open to receive Deposits, daily, from 10 A. M., to 2, and from 5 to 7 P. M.

TRUSTEES.

William Watson,	John P. Nesmith,
John Nicholson,	John Milhau,
Andrew Carrigan,	Edward W. Tiers,
James Kelly,	Charles M. Connelly,
James Kerrigan,	Cornelius H. Sheehan,
Hugh Kelly,	Edward Bayer,
Charles O'Connor,	Daniel Devlin.
James Olwell,

JOSEPH STUART, President.
FELIX INGOLDSBY, 1st Vice-President.
JOHN MCMENOMY, 2d Vice-President.
TERENCE DONNELLY, Treasurer.
LOUIS B. BINSSE, Secretary.
PETER CRERAR, Accountant.
JOHN MANNING, Comptroller. tf

REMITTANCES TO

ENGLAND, IRELAND AND SCOTLAND.

STERLING BILLS for sale on Messrs. Prescott, Grote & Co., Bankers, London, from £1 upwards, payable on demand, and negotiable in any part of the United Kingdom; also Bank of England Notes and Drafts of any of the English Banks or Bankers, bought and sold.

ap191y Prime & Co., 54 Wall street.

Coal.

COAL.

THE subscriber respectfully informs his friends and the public generally, that he has opened a new Coal Yard, cor. 27th Street and 9th Avenue, where he is prepared to sell the best quality of Red and White Ash Coal, at the lowest market price for cash. Weight warranted, or forfeit coal.

6mos* JOHN MACDONALD.

COAL of the very best quality both Anthracite and Bituminous, for family and manufacturing purposes, for sale by the subscriber from his Yards, 632 Washington, 128 McDougal, and 146 West Thirty-second streets. Also, Coal by the cargo.

ap191y Thomas Maher.

Business Directory.

HAMILTON & JOHNSON,

NEWS AGENTS,

30 ANN STREET, NEW-YORK.

DAILY, weekly and Sunday papers, Magazines, and Cheap Publications. The trade supplied. Orders from the country solicited and promptly filled.

JOHN HAMILTON,
S. W. JOHNSON.
} tf

Business Notices.

HERRING'S

PATENT CHAMPION FIRE AND BURGLAR PROOF SAFES.

THE great interest manifested by the public to procure more perfect security from Fire for valuable papers, such as BONDS, MORTGAGES, DEEDS, NOTES, and BOOKS OF ACCOUNT than the ordinary SAFES heretofore in use had afforded, induced the subscribers to devote a large portion of time and attention during the past fourteen years in making improvements and discoveries for this object, and they now beg leave to assure their numerous friends and the public generally that their efforts have been crowned with complete success, and now offer the "IMPROVED HERRING'S PATENT WORLD'S FAIR PREMIUM FIRE-PROOF SAFE," as the

CHAMPION SAFE OF THE WORLD!

Having been awarded Medals at both the

World's Fair, London, 1851, and in New-York, 1853,

As superior to all others. It is now undoubtedly entitled to that appellation, and, secured with HALL'S PATENT POWDER-PROOF LOCKS, which also was awarded MEDALS as above), forms the most perfect Fire and Burglar Proof Safes ever offered to the public.

The subscribers also manufacture all kinds of Boiler and Chilled Iron Bank Chests and Vaults, Vault Doors, and Money Boxes or Chests, for Brokers, Jewelers, and Private Families, for Plate, Diamonds, and other Valuables, and are also Patentees (by purchase) and Manufacturers of

JONES' PATENT PERMUTATION BANK LOCK.

SILAS C. HERRING & CO., Patentees,
GREEN BLOCK, Nos. 135, 137 and 138 Water street, New-York. my10 tf

---

Important to the Ladies.

GLENFIELD PATENT STARCH.

FOR the dressing of Laces and all descriptions of fine goods.
This celebrated starch is unrivalled.
ONE TRIAL WILL CONVINCE.
For sale by all respectable druggists and grocers.
3m28ju ROBERT HOSIE, 8 Pine Street, New-York,
Sole Agent for the United States.

S. CAHILL'S

BOOT AND SHOE STORE,

NO. 377 BROADWAY,

(One door below White street), New York.

S. CAHILL respectfully informs his friends, customers, and the public generally, that, having made an extensive addition to his Store, for the better accommodation of his customers, he has now the largest and most extensive BOOT AND SHOE STORE in the world, and is prepared to exhibit the most extensive assortment of

LADIES, MISSES, AND CHILDREN'S, GENTLEMEN'S, BOYS, AND YOUTH'S
BOOTS AND SHOES
EVER BEFORE OFFERED TO THE CITIZENS OF NEW YORK.

His facilities for manufacturing on an extensive scale, together with his superb assortment of FRENCH BOOTS and SHOES, received direct from Paris by every steamer, enable him to sell a much better article at much lower prices than can be purchased at any other house in the city. BOOTS AND SHOES OF ALL DESCRIPTIONS MADE TO MEASURE AT THE SHORTEST NOTICE. je28 3mos

Monday, June 16th, and during the week—

LATEST FASHIONS.

THE New Hat Company would here lay before their readers a few of the advantages to be derived from their system of doing business, which is ONE QUALITY, ONE PRICE, AND NO ABATEMENT. In the first place, any gentleman, whether he be a judge of the article or not, can rely upon receiving our first and only quality. Secondly, our price is so low, that the man of the most limited means is enabled to procure a fine and fashionable hat, (at the same time we wish it to be distinctly understood that our hats are not to be excelled by those sold at four dollars by any other establishment,) and lastly, we strive to please. If any gentleman desiring a hat differing from the usual style, will call and leave his order, we shall endeavor to suit him in every respect. The inducements which we offer to wholesale purchasers, and the trade in general, are not to be exceeded by those of any other establishment.

Also, a large assortment of CLOTH CAPS, CHILDREN'S FANCY HATS, UMBRELLAS, &c., constantly on hand at the lowest rates. Nos. 146 and 148 Nassau st. ap268m

---

FASHIONABLE HATTER, 223 THIRD AVENUE.

COWHY'S Spring style of Hats, now ready, are superior to anything hitherto offered in Beauty of Shape, and Elegance of Finish. Being a practical hatter himself, Cowhy is enabled to sell A SUPERIOR HAT AT A VERY MODERATE PRICE.

His young gent's hat is one of great beauty, and his assortment of children's fancy hats and caps cannot be surpassed by any other establishment in the city.

N. B.—Hats and Caps made to order, and warranted to fit, by COWHY, 223 Third Avenue, between 19th and 20th streets. my3 1y

---

Furniture.—F. FITZSIMMONS respectfully calls the attention his of customers and the public to his stock of elegant and substantial FURNITURE, (not made for the auction room) consisting of rich Parlor Suites in rosewood; oak Dining and Chamber Sets of every description; Upholstery in all its branches executed in the best mechanical manner. Prices unexceptionable. Warerooms No. 8 Astor place, near Broadway. my24 3m

---

Lumber and Timber for Export and City Trade.—THOS. RIGNEY & Co. offer for sale AT THEIR YARD FOOT OF THIRTIETH-STREET, North River, a general assortment of LUMBER AND TIMBER, suitable for export and the city trade. SHIPPERS AND BUILDERS will find it to their advantage to examine their stock previous to buying. Apply as above, or to J. PICKARD, Agent, 26 Bridge street. my17 3m*

"TERRA COTTA"

CHIMNEY TOPS,

PLAIN and Ornamental. Drain Pipes of all sizes, superior manufacture lowest rates. LONG ISLAND POTTERY. Depot, 82 Nassau street New-York. my10 3m

---

JAMES O'FLYN.

HOWARD HOTEL,

176 BROADWAY, NEW-YORK.

Advertising Envelope Manufacturer, Embosser, Die Sinker, and General Engraver. Notarial and Lodge Seals, Crests, and Coats of Arms. Seal Presses of every description constantly on hand. 14ju3m

---

Sewing Machine Depot.—Sewing Machines of all kinds sold, improved and repaired, on reasonable terms, in the most substantial manner. Superior Machine Oils for sale. A large assortment of Machine Silk Twist and Needles for sale at reduces prices.

my 24, 3 mos. F. S COATES & Co., 345 Broadway, New-York.

Employment.

EMPLOYMENT OFFICE FOR SERVANTS.

275 BOWERY, NEW-YORK.

MALE and Female Servants can be promptly suited at the above number, with any situation in the city or country, at good wages, in first-rate families, without delay.

N. B. Employers quickly supplied.
3m may 31 ALEXANDER F. RUNGE, Agent.

Wanted, at 766 & 648 Broadway, (near 8th st.) Places procured for conductors, Bookkeepers, Clerks, Salesmen, Firemen, Brakemen, Barkeepers, Porters, Waiters, men on Steamers and Railroads, boys for trades, and girls of every description. 21my3m

French, English, and German spoken. LOUIS KAUFMAN, Agent.

EMPLOYMENT OFFICE for Servants, 129 Waverley Place, two doors from Sixth avenue, New-York.—A large number of competent help can be suited with good situations, in city and country, without delay. Employers in the city and country supplied with the best of female help. [my17 3m] WM. O'BRIEN, Proprietor.

NEW-YORK EMPLOYMEMT OFFICE.

480 Broadway.

HONEST, capable, and faithful servants can at all times find good situations at this office. Protestant and Catholic have equal privilege. Established in 1844 by [3m21ju] T. P. SAUNDERS.

European News.

European Summary by the Persia.

The British and North American Mail steamer Persia, Capt. Judkins, from Liverpool soon after 3 o'clock P. M., July 12, arrived at this port on Wednesday morning, July 23. The news is not very important.

The English Lords of Privy Council for Trade and Plantations have received, through the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, a copy of a dispatch from her Majesty's Ambassador at Paris, enclosing a copy of a French Imperial decree, fixing as follows the duties upon the undermentioned articles: Fabrics of cotton (other than nankeens), 35 per cent. ad valorem. Fabrics of wool 30 per cent. ad valorem. To be converted into a fixed duty, to be determined by the Consultative Committee of Arts and Manufactures. Wearing-apparel, 40 per cent. ad valorem.

There was nothing of much importance in Parliament.

Lord Campbell called the attention of the Lords to the indiscriminate sale of poison, and hoped the Government would introduce some measure on the subject.

There has been no reference to American affairs, excepting some interrogatories as to the boundaries of the Balize.

Colonel Dunne asked whether other persons than Austrians might navigate the Danube, above the frontiers of Austria, on equal terms?

Lord Palmerston replied that by the Treaty of Paris, the navigation of the Danube was to be rendered liable to the stipulations of the Treaty of 1815. By that treaty such rivers as divided or traversed different States, were free to navigation by vessels of all nations. He apprehended the opinion of the Congress to be, that the Austrian monopoly referred to, could not stand against the stipulations of the treaty.

On Friday, the 4th inst., a sumptuous dinner was given by Mr. Peabody, at the Star and Garter, Richmond, to upwards of 100 American, and a few English gentlemen, in commemoration of the 80th anniversary of the declaration of the independence of the United States. The grand dining-hall was fitted up for the occasion with busts of the Queen and of Washington, the American eagle, the standards of England and the United States, and other appropriate decorations. Mr. Peabody took the chair shortly after seven o'clock, supported on the right by the American Minister, Mr. Dallas, and on the left by Mr. W. Brown, M.P.; Mr. Stell of Manchester; Mr. Morgan of London; Mr. Somerby of Boston, United States. Mr. P.N.Dallas, Secretary of Legation, and Mr. Croskey, United States Consul at Southampton, acted as Vice Presidents. Mr. John Macgregor, M.P., Mr. S. C. Hall, and Mr. J. E. Jones, the sculptor, were among the English guests.

France.

A paragraph in the Independance Belge denies the authenticity of the letter attributed to the Count de Paris, on the subject of the Orleans fusion, but the correspondents of the London papers re-affirm it.

Several persons are already named as candidates for the office of Minister of Public Instruction, in room of M. Fortoul. Of these M. M. Crouseilles, Dumas, Parieu and La Guerroniere, are mentioned, all of whom, with the exception of the last, have already been in the Cabinet.

A French soldier has been killed in a brawl at Giurgevo. It appears that the soldier omitted to salute an Austrian officer, whereupon the officer proceeded to cane him, and some Austrian soldiers coming up, a row ensued, and the Frenchman was killed. The Paris Moniteur announces that full justice will be dealt upon the offender, and, meantime, the Austrian government pensions the family of the deceased.

Gen. Martinprey is the officer who remains in the Crimea, charged with the consular functions until such time as a regular Consul is appointed.

Victor Hugo and the Inundations.—In forwarding his subscription to the Paris Siecle, M. Victor Hugo accompanied it with the following preface, which, of course, did not appear:—"The mad war in the Crimea, the whim of M. Bonaparte, has cost France two milliards. With these two milliards one might—social science proves it—have dyked the rivers, commenced the embankment, restored the waters to their channels, and rendered inundations impossible. We confine ourselves to this reflection; for the rest our brethren suffer, misery prevails, and exile offers its mite." The undersigned are exiles residing at Guernsey:—Victor Hugo, 100f.; Charles Hugo, 5f.; Francois Victor Hugo, 5f.; Theophile Guerin, 5f.; Kesler, 5f.

Germany.

Berlin correspondence of the London Times, says:—"The Zollverein is just now approaching a crisis which will lead to great alterations, and not impossibly to a rupture between the liberal Northern and the protective Southern States of Germany. Prussia is the State that is empowered to negotiate with foreign nations in the Zollverein, and it is at Berlin that the main business of the Zollverein is transacted, and the re-partition of the revenues, the preparation of new measures to be introduced at the conferences, and the conduct of the business in general are carried on—Prussia forming nearly half of the Zollverein. Prussia already (three years since, took a step indicating the course the Zollverein ought in future to follow, viz.: in the union it formed with the Steuerverein of Hanover, &c.: and this will enable it, on an early occasion, to strive with a better degree of success for the introduction of a more liberal tariff." The writer then proceeds to advocate the appointment of an able representative to look after British interests.

The Independance Belge, publishes the following, dated Hamburg, 6th instant:—"After the dissolution of the Anglo-German Legion, it was said that many soldiers, enlisted at so enormous an expense in the North, had readily accepted the offer to emigrate to Canada and cultivate the lands placed at their disposal by the English Government. This, however, does not appear to be the case, for the John Bull steamer, which entered our port to-day, has already brought back 150 of these recruits, and we are informed that others will arrive in succession on board the packets plying regularly between England and Hamburg.

Our police immediately sent a number of agents to inspect the papers of the new comers before they allowed them to land, and when their nationality was ascertained they were respectively marched to the stations of the railroads leading to their native countries. Some of them proceeded to Hanover, others to Prussia, and the greater number to the Duchies of Holstein-Schleswig. None of them were permitted to remain at Hamburg. As these soldiers formed part of the revolutionary army of the Duchies, it is natural that the Danish Government should be alarmed, under existing circumstances, at the presence of such men from whom it has more to fear than to hope. The Governor of Altona, by order of the Minister of War at Copenhagen, adopted military precautions to prevent all hostile manifestations. Our police on the other hand hastened to telegraph the name of each individual to his government, so that during the whole day the telegraph office was so actively engaged in forwarding these dispatches that the transmission of private and commercial messages had to be postponed until a late hour in the evening."

Arrests at Hamburg.

The Independance Belge, has the following from Hamburg, dated the 4th:—"The police of this city have just effected an arrest which has created some sensation. A Pole, M. Joseph Olsceski, an emigrant of old date from his own country, where his property is sequestered, arrived here a few weeks ago from London. Upon the strength of an information received from some secret agents in London, our police made a sudden irruption into M. Olsceski's rooms, where they discovered, it is said, some boxes filled with addresses and proclamations printed in England and drawn up by the revolutionary committee that has established in that country the basis of its operations. These printed sheets were to be distributed by thousands over the kingdom of Poland. The plot had its ramifications at Berlin. It is announced that the police of that capital have just made there several political arrests among the Polish refugees. M. Goldheim, Lieutenant of Police at Berlin, accompanied by two agents, came yesterday and demanded the surrender of M. Olsceski, who will be conveyed to Berlin, and from there escorted to the Polish frontiers, where he will be handed over to the military authorities of Russia.

State of Italy.

From the London Times.

Naples, Thursday, July 3, 1856.

In a former letter I mentioned that a political prisoner confined in Montesarchio was ill with a mortal malady and yet in chains. I asserted that my statement was true beyond the possibility of refutation. I have now to add fresh particulars of the unfortunate Alfonso Zeull. On the 25th of last month, in almost a dying state, he was taken from the prison and transferred to the hospital at Capua. His chain had been taken off a few days only before his departure. Of the weak state to which this victim of political vengeance had been reduced you may form some idea from the following facts:—He was so ill that he could not bear the movement of a carriage, and was taken, therefore, to Cancello in a portantino, and was accompanied by the physician, and, I believe, the chaplain. The mercy which was shown to him then amounts to this—that after his body had been consumed by persecution in chains and damp prisons for many years, every preparation was made for the decent appearance of his soul in the presence of Him who is King of Kings and Lord of Lords. It is an edifying instance of the high religious feeling of the government, and it is to be hoped will reconcile to their fate those who are now suffering or who are yet to suffer.

As to the appearance of Zeull, I am informed that he was reduced to a shadow, without an ounce of flesh upon his bones. At Capua no friends await to close his eyes. Passports have been hitherto refused to his relatives, but, as much interest is being used to get one for his brother, it is to be hoped that he will come in for the closing scene. I must in justice say, that everything necessary had been prepared for his journey, and that by the local authorities he was treated with the utmost attention. Sympathy, though dangerous to those who show it too much, is one of those sentiments which the government of the Two Sicilies has not as yet been able to suppress.

I have called more particular attention to the case of Zeull, not for the reason that it is one of an extraordinary character, but because the details have been brought more clearly before my eyes. The wonder is that so many are preserved alive—the more so, when it is remembered that out of 500 political prisoners immured in the Bagno of Procida for political offences since 1848, 80 have died. This, and the political trials, are pleasing facts, and very pregnant with meaning at the present crisis. They show how great are the enormities which may be safely practised by the government, and how great is its disposition to yield to the "friendly representations" of other governments. They have asked for bread and received a serpent. As Cicero wondered that the augurs did not laugh in each other's faces, so we who know Naples, wonder that the statesmen do not laugh when speaking of friendly representations, and of their hopes that they will be listened to. Is it the first time that such representations have been made? Are not the archives of the British Legation full of such futile remonstrances? It is an insult and an injury to Italy, in the face of a host of facts, to confine ourselves to simple remonstrances, the only probable result of which will be to irritate the petty despots of this country, and to embitter yet more the position of their subjects. Once having decided on the principle, which Lord Clarendon appeared to have done when he spoke of "exceptional cases," and something more than remonstrance became necessary. That something more need not be much. I now send you in conclusion an address from the Neapolitans to Count Cavour. It is important as showing the increased influence which Piedmont has gained by recent events, and the greater approximation which is being effected between the Italian Nationalities.

THE NEAPOLITANS TO COUNT CAVOUR.

"The Parliament and the army of Piedmont have made manifest to the world that civil prudence and military valor are the patrimony of Italians; a patrimony which falls not beneath the scythe of time, nor with the vicissitudes of history. This wisdom and this courage no longer suffering delay, you have known how to engage in the great affairs of nations, and in the struggle of giants in the Crimea. Those deeds now bear upon them the impress of the Italian arms, and your name will never be blotted from the pages of human greatness. Those who once regarded your counsels as rashness, now applaud you with astonishment. They have been enabled to perceive that privileged minds pierce deeply into passing events; that happy results are almost always the effect of wise preparations, and that, therefore, the intellect of man makes even Fortune obey it. The Piedmontese soldier carried with him the heart and the wellwishes of the Neapolitan people. His triumphs and his glory were a ray of living light, which penetrated into the innermost soul of the Neapolitan soldier. We have seen him tremble with indignation at the unhonored ease to which he is condemned. Praise be to your name! those were the testimonials which you brought forward for Italy; you afterwards undertook to prepare for it amid the nations a third glorious life, to create for it a more robust existence—a more wonderful civilization—and now we, and those of the other Italian provinces, though impeded in body, have begun to live, it may be said, in this third Italian cradle, Piedmont. This is the new impersonation of Italy which you with infinite dignity and firmness have represented in the presence of potentates, and for which we are loved and hated. In this way have you asserted the right of us all to live as Italians, in our great and coveted country. Eternal glory be to your name! The sentiments of Neapolitans for such benefits do not find terms sufficiently strong to give them expression. You, most distinguished citizen, while sustaining and defending your country, would have a feeling of repugnance that it should proffer to you, by our lips, though we are your most oppressed fellow-citizens, words of gratitude; but our hearts are so deeply moved, that silence would oppress us still more. Accept, then, at least one act of our deep affection and of our profound admiration. If we Neapolitans now live in Piedmont, you live also in our hearts, and our children shall ever repeat your name with love and veneration. Your name, as it is, is a terror to those who oppress us—to those who envy us our independence, our liberty, our morality—so is it hope to the oppressed, comfort to the weak, and a support to the bold. And this name, which sounds not less revered in the palaces and in the writings of free and enlightened nations—this name, we trust, will be also, and that before long, the herald of the well-secured independence and union of Italy."

Attack on the Liberty of the Press in Holstein.

The state of affairs in the Duchies is beginning to assume a very threatening appearance, for the breach between the Dutch Government and the German population is widening every day. It was in consequence of the generally expressed wish of the inhabitants of Holstein for a revision of the "joint constitution for the whole monarchy," that Baron Von Scheel-Plessen brought forward in the Reichsrath at Copenhagen his motion on the subject, which brought down on him his summary dismissal from the important post he held as civil governor of Altona. It being a matter of great importance that the facts of the case, and his own conduct in the affair should be generally known in order to be appreciated, the Baron had the debates in the Diet on the question reprinted from The Danish Hansard, and published in the form of a pamphlet; but scarcely was it published before orders were sent from Copenhagen to the police to seize and confiscate all the copies that could be found in circulation.

Disturbances at Dantzic.

There have been disturbances in Dantzic, in consequence of which the military was called in to the assistance of the civil power, and in the endeavors made to clear the streets three persons were injured but none killed, a result that says a great deal for the moderation and skill of the soldiery, seeing that the cavalry had to force their way through the crowd sabre in hand, and the infantry to charge with fixed bayonets. The disturbance arose from an attempt made by the magistracy to bring all the "sick funds and benevolent funds" of the different trades' societies under the control of an officer of the municipality, and to merge them all in one general fund. Many of these sick funds date from those times when Dantzic was a Hanseatic town, and subsequently a free town, a Polish town, a French town, previous to its eventually becoming a Prussian town; the funds of such trades as have fallen into decay in the course of this time have suffered with them, and the sick and poor whom they ought to support come upon the town for relief; on the other hand, those attached to flourishing trades are suffering only from plethora, and the ends to which they are applied seem not to be always justifiable. To remedy this state of things the municipality desired to fuse them all into one, and thus make the living pay for the dead—the flourishing pay for the decayed; against this proceeding the living have most tumultuously protested, but without any further ill effects than those mentioned above.

Turkey.—Ali Pacha arrived at Constantinople June 28, from Paris. A company has been formed, with Messrs. Cunard and McIver at its head, for the construction of a dock, with patent slips, on the Bosphorus. Mr. Barkley, engineer of the Heraclea coal mines, was commissioned to find a suitable site, and has selected Beicos Bay, as being easily accessible, and well sheltered from every wind. As the company ask for no exclusive privilege, there will be no difficulty in obtaining permission from the Porte.

The Crimea.—The Paris Moniteur publishes the following dispatch from Admiral Trehouart, Commander-in-Chief of the Mediterranean squadron:

On Board the Bretagne, Sunday, July 6, 1856.

Yesterday, July 5, the definitive evacuation of the Crimea took place. Marshal Pelissier embarked on board the Roland, which immediately got under way. The Bretagne, which has just anchored at Beicos, left Kamiesch with the last vessels that were there, and which are expected to arrive to-morrow in the Bosphorus.

An imperial decree of the Czar extends the amnesty accorded to refugees of the western governments of Russia to individuals who took part in the events of 1830 and 1831. After three years' good conduct they will be considered eligible for government employment.

Advices from Madrid, of July 9, says:—The return of M. Escosura, Minister to the Interior, who is now at Valladolid, is postponed to the end of the week. Several workmen have been arrested here. The cholera is not spreading beyond Seville.

According to the terms of the Danish Constitution, when the King wishes to leave the national territory, if for a day or two only, he is previously compelled to appoint a supreme council of regency to replace him during his absence. It is now stated that the Diet will shortly be called upon to pass a bill to abolish this law, which has hitherto found many defenders among the nobility and higher clergy.

Miscellaneous.

Alliez, Grand & Co., Bankers, of Paris, have failed.

The Duchess of Orleans has sent for herself and the Princes, her sons, the sum of 15,000 francs, for the sufferers by the inundations in France.

The Emperor continues at Plombieres, where he uses the baths, and passes his time mostly in out-door exercise.

Count Apraxin, Governor-General of Siberia, has arrived in Paris. His object is said to be to take advice on the best and readiest mode of working the gold mines discovered in that part of the Russian empire.

Baron Hausman, Prefect of the Seine, acknowledges receipt of the fourth remittance of 100,000 francs, of the 600,000 francs subscribed by the city of London. "The city of Paris," he says, "will never forget this act of the generous English nation."

The extensive spinning-mills belonging to Joseph Ainsworth, at Bolton, Lancashire, have been totally destroyed by fire. There were 80,000 spindles in the mills.

The Prince and Princess of Prussia are on a visit to England.

Correspondence.

DUBLIN, July 11, 1856.

The Enlistment question—British Diplomacy—John Bull in Aden—An old thief and an old chief.—The 99th regiment and the zealous New Zealanders —John Heki's challenge, English misssonaries, Sabbath Swindlers—A day of savage rest and civilized conquest—A fair Tasmanian joke—The Tipperary Militia—Work for Mitchel—England everywhere—Dublin Trades' Alliance—Hurrah! for the French invasion—Palmerston—The Dublin Ladies—Archbishop Cullen on the Polka—Dr. Cahill and his subjects—Smith O'Brien, etc.

You have read the debate in the House of Commons on the Enlistment Question, with Moore's, Gibson's, Gladstone's Pakington's, &c., annihilating speeches. The majority, of course, was with the government, but the argument was all with the minority. The case of Lord Clarendon was so palpably and atrociously wrong, that not even the government lawyers could make a decent defence for him, for the government of which he is a member, or for the poor scape-goat, Crampton. The debate was a most valuable one, as being about the best exposé we have had for many a day of the meanness and villainy of British diplomacy. Besides being the most infamous and unscrupulous, this British diplomacy is, in my mind, the weakest and shallowest in the world. It only requires to be understood in order to be defeated; and, as a general rule, it is only successful with weak or barbarous States. When it comes in contact with the lofty intellects of powerful nations, like France and America, it fails; but it is all-powerful in India, irresistible in New-Zealand, magnificent in Mosquito. Have you ever heard the true account of how the English obtained possession, a few years ago, of the Fort and Harbor of Aden? Well, here it is, and as it comes from an English source, its authenticity can hardly be questioned. The East India Company had long had their eye upon Aden, and deeming its possession essential for the security of their commerce in the Red Sea and thereabouts, they dispatched an agent from Calcutta for the purpose. Arrived at Aden, this agent lost no time in making the acquaintance of the Chief of the Arab tribe who had possession of the fort and neighboring district. The old chief, confiding and unsuspicious, accepted loans of money from his generous friend, the Frank. After sometime, the latter, in the politest manner intimated that he had no desire to press for payment, but that if the Chief would quietly sign a small paper which he would hand to him, the matters might be regarded as settled. The Chief signed the paper. Almost immediately afterwards—as if every preparation had been made for this event—Aden was formally taken possession of by the British forces. The Arabs were in consternation, and on learning what their Chief had done, their indignation knew no bounds. The old Chief, however, still confiding, assured them that he would settle everything. "My friend, the Frank, is a kind good man. I will immediately take him back his money and the place will be at once restored to us." The Frank had vanished, and, a sadder and a wiser man, the old Chief returned to his tribe. Collecting all their forces, they attacked the place. They were repulsed. Four times the assault was renewed, but each time with worse success than before. Reinforcements of British troops were poured in, and the "conquest" completed. Such is the true history of the British possession of Aden.

That "gallant" Regiment, the 99th, have lately come home from Tasmania, where they had been stationed for a considerable time. A portion of them are now quartered in England, and the remainder in Ireland. You are aware that this 99th Regiment were employed in New-Zealand, where by their splendid exploits they shed such lustre on the British arms. In every engagement which they had with the natives—a noble race in arms for their beautiful mountain-land—they were ignominiously defeated. The New-Zealand "Pahs" proved to be as formidable to British valor as the Redan; and the "gallant 99th" showed themselves as great adepts at running away, as did their comrades lately in the Crimea. Frequently John Heki, the New-Zealand Chief, sent this challenge to the British commander:—"Take away your blue-coats (men-of-war's men), and our women will beat you." The challenge it is needless to say was not accepted. What British valor, however, could not accomplish, it was resolved that by fraud and stratagem should be achieved. British missionaries went amongst the natives, preached to them, and told them that though it was lawful to fight for their country, yet that upon the Sabbath Day they should lay down their arms. "It was a day of rest. The English rested and prayed upon that day. They should do so likewise, and the Great Spirit would bless their arms." So preached the missionaries. The natives believed in the words of the holy men; and one Sabbath morning, as they were reposing from their weekly toil, unconscious of any ill, the red-coats came upon them, took easy possession of their undefended "Pahs," and butchered them indiscriminately, men, women and children, as they lay.

Such is the true history of the British "conquest" of New Zealand. The events in New Zealand created at the time much sensation in Australia; and on their arrival there in Sydney, this 99th regiment were hooted through the city. Sydney was too hot for them; so they were shipped off to Hobart Town. There, on the Barrack-hill, overlooking the town, a monument was raised to the memory of the officers and men of the 99th, who fell in the attack on New Zealand. It was in relation to this monument a fair Tasmanian lady made the witty remark, that it should be adorned with scarlet-runners.

As I am on the subject of the military, I may call your attention to the "rioting" of the Tipperary Militia. These poor fellows were seduced into the militia by large promises of bounty, &c. Now that they are no longer requred, they are cast off with a promise of fourteen days' pay—about ten shillings and sixpence per man—and deprived of their arms and clothing. Their resistance to this is called "rioting!" Had they acted, however, with a little more prudence—disarmed the police, and kept to the barrack ground, it is a species of riot that would have cost the Government some trouble to quell. I would back this single regiment of Tipperary Militia to thrash all the royal troops at present in Ireland.

What a splendid work Mitchel might produce, having for its subject the British Empire? India alone would make a volume. Then Borneo and Rajah Brooke should not be overlooked. Nor Ceylon and Lord Torrington. He might then glance at Australia; and, coming westward from there, give us another chapter about the Cape of Good Hope. Then there are the Falkland Isles, and Malta and Gibraltar, and in fact every commanding position on the world's map. How did England get all these places? By what means were they acquired? How has she exercised her power? Pregnant questions these, and ones which the interests of morality and civilization require should be clearly solved.

There is a little agitation going on here, under the shape of a "Trades' Alliance," for the purpose of breaking-down the "Monster-House" system. Unquestionably these Monster Houses are a great evil. There are about half-a-dozen of them now in Dublin, and they monopolize all the business of the city, for they sell everything. I have my doubts, however, that the evil can be remedied by an agitation. Previous to the establishment of these Monster Houses, there is no doubt that the public were imposed upon by the small shopkeepers. A better system, I believe, now prevails; and the small shops are as well conducted, and sell at as fair terms, as the monster ones. Still the public throng to the big houses. There is something wrong in this. It evinces in my mind a low stage of civilization. In London they have not these Monster Houses—at least not by any means to the same extent as in Dublin. In Paris they are unknown. In Paris, however, the shopkeeper is in general an artizan. Thus, if you want a pair of gloves in Paris, you enter a small shop, and there you will find Madame and Monsieur, and les petits or petites as the case may be, engaged in manufacturing the article you require. Here in my mind is the key to the mystery. With French bonnets and ribbons, we want a little French civilization amongst us. Hurrah, then, for the French invasion, if it were only to put down the "Monster Houses!"

You will find a funny article in the Times, apropos of the 80th anniversary of American independence. A few days ago the question of the Times was, "When will Americans learn manners?" Now it is all Anglo-Saxonism, pan-slavism, peace, protestantism, and brotherly-love. These stupid Britishers really imagine that they can compass their objects in America as in Ireland, by exciting religious animosity, and setting sect against sect.

Palmerston—though with much difficulty—has succeeded in stifling for this session a debate on the Central American question. The Enlistment debate is, I hope, enough to satisfy the Americans that in all dealings with Great Britain their true policy is firmness—is boldness—is determination. England understands nothing else.

The Dublin Ladies are as remarkable for their piety as for their beauty. One-fourth of the time is spent in the churches, another fourth in preparing for charitable bazaars, where the most beautiful are invariably selected to attend the stalls, the remainder of the time, with an amiable perversity, a delicious disregard of pastoral injunctions, is devoted to dancing the Polka. You know that Archbishop Cullen has anathematised the Polka. Yet dance the Polka the ladies will. His Grace was present lately at a marriage festival in Liverpool, where some of his relatives reside. There was charming music and delightful dancing. One dance in particular attracted his Grace's attention and excited his admiration. On inquiring the name of it, he was informed it was—the Polka!

Dr. Cahill is about to deliver a course of lectures here in the Mechanics' Institute. Being a large and imposing looking man, he must needs chose the largest and most magnificent subjects. Thus, the subjects for this course are:—

"The architecture of the Heavens."
"The American Republic."
"The Rainbow."
"The Social Evils of Ireland."

It will be a treat to hear him. The learned Dr. knows just as much about the American Republic as he does about the architecture of the Heavens; and is just as qualified to speak about the Social Evils of Ireland as about the Rainbow. In real knowledge of any or all of the subjects of which he proposes to speak, I should say, the "Man in the Moon" is decidedly his superior.

Smith O'Brien treads once more the land that bore him. He is looking well. He left Dublin yesterday for Limerick. May his days yet be many and happy in this land is the fond prayer of KILMAINHAM.

At a meeting of the Royal Irish Academy, on the 23d of June, Mr. J. Huband Smith exhibited a rubbing taken from the cross at Campbeltown, in Scotland. It was an ancient cross of Iona, "Iva," which was a Scandinavian name, and came over to Ireland in the 11th century. The Hebrides are of Scandinavian origin. Dr. Todd read a paper on the Stowe Irish MS. now in the possession of the Earl of Ashburnham. He referred, in the first instance, to a silver box containing the Gospels, and said it contained a number of Irish inscriptions; one of them was a prayer for Duncan O'Brien (who was a son of Brian Boroihme), in 1023, who invaded Connaught in 1059, and became the chieftain of Leinster. He murdered his brother Thague, and was ultimately obliged to leave Ireland, and died in the Monastery of St. Stephen's, at Rome, in 1064. After going through the several inscriptions on the box, the Rev. gentleman said he could only speak from memory, as he was not permitted by Lord Ashburnham to make any copies from the books. The box also contained a Missal, which was in an ancient Lombardic character that appeared about the 8th century. Mr. Wilde postponed until their next meeting the remarks he had to make on a MS. of Dr. Willoughby, written in 1696, on the climate and diseases of Ireland.

The plot of Bulwer's "Lady of Lyons" was furnished to hand in a charming story entitled "The History of Peronra, the Bellows-Mender of Lyons," written by Miss Helen Marie Williams. The story was published in the New York Minerva, in 1822, and has since appeared in various journals.

The Lincoln Town Council have taken up a proposal for a monument to Sir John Franklin and his comrades.

Irish News.

The Master of the Rolls, in reference to the reflections passed by the Attorney-General for Ireland in the House of Commons, on the course adopted by his Lordship in commenting, before judgment, upon the frauds alleged to have been committed by Mr. James Sadleir, in his capacity as Manager of the Tipperary Joint Stock Bank, said he had learned from the public journals that the Attorney-General for Ireland thought fit to renew the attacks which he previously made upon him; that the Attorney-General was much mistaken if he supposed that he (the Master of the Rolls) intended to rest quietly under such imputations; he would do no such thing, but on the contrary, he would send forward to the Government documents which would tend to impeach the course that had been adopted by the Attorney-General in this case, and would also be prepared to bring forward a charge against that officer of a most serious nature, and thoroughly calculated to affect his character and office as Attorney-General.

On the 26th June the public examinations took place at the College of Knocktopher, in presence of a large assemblage of the clergy and laity. The chair was taken by the Very Rev. M. Scally, superior of the establishment. The various classes manifested a sound knowledge of their business, and elicited the highest approbation. Master N. Murphy's Epitome of Irish History, Master Brett's description of Clonmel and its surrounding localities, Master Cassidy's description of Dublin City, and Master Finn's picture of the beauties of the River Barrow's banks, drew forth the loudest applause.

A young soldier named O'Keefe, from the Queen's County, excites much curiosity as well as sympathy in Dublin. Having been engaged about a magazine in the Crimea, which exploded, he received several wounds in the legs, arms and body. He has one on the top of the head so broad and deep that one might sink his hand in it without its being seen. The skull is literally broken in.

The steamer Vestal, the property of the Dublin Ballast Board, put in very recently to Waterford, being on a tour for the inspection of lighthouses. The Earl of Meath, Colonel of the County Dublin Light Infantry, with the Colonel of the City of Dublin Militia, and other personages were on board, and entertained at dinner the officers of the County Dublin Militia.

On the day fixed for the presentation to the Right Rev. Dr. Delany, the Bishop of Cork, of the address congratulating him on his return from Rome, the Mayor, with Mr. Lyons the Treasurer of the Fund, drove down to his Lordship's residence, at Blackrock, in the carriage which formed a portion of the testimonial accompanying the address. The Mayor read the address, the engrossing of which, executed by Mr. Henry O'Shea, of Cork, is a wonderful piece of skill. It is a complete imitation of the old illuminated manuscripts. His worship then presented the carriage to the Bishop; also a large salver of exquisite workmanship, which has come from the establishment of Mr. Hawkesworth, of Cork.

The Ballinasloe Farming Society propose to hold a great exhibition of sires during the next October fair. Many of the animals exhibited in Paris will be exhibited at Ballinasloe. For three days previous to the judges deciding, the animals will be housed and provided for by the Earl of Clancarty.

There is now, says the Tipperary Free Press, in Clonmel the finest weather that can be desired for the Wheat and hay crops, both of which are the most flourishing that has been had for years. The former is in full ear and blossom in most places, and many of the early meadows are cut. The oat crop, owing to the drought, will be short as regards straw.

A magnificent new ship called Merrie England, has been launched from the dockyard of Albert White, Esq., Waterford. Her burthen is over 1,700 tons. She has been purchased for £20,000, and is intended for the India and Chinese trades. The Waterford Chronicle expects her to rival in speed any of the clippers now afloat.

The lands of Rathculiheen and Snowhaven, part of Sir John Newport's property near Waterford, were sold on last Friday fortnight in the Encumbered Estates Court, for £5,750. They have been purchased for Col. Sheil, brother of the late Richard Lalor Sheil.

The pensioners belonging to the Waterford district have been inspected by Colonel Tulloch. The old fogies went through several evolutions, and fired several rounds. The gallant colonel complimented the force on their efficiency.

In the list of gentlemen admitted members of the Royal College of Surgeons, London, by the Court of Examiners, we observe the name of Walter Patrick Joseph Purcell, Esq., of Waterford.

The policeman, Power, who was wounded by one of the county Dublin militia on Mount Misery, Waterford, is still far from recovery. The wound has proved more serious than was at first supposed, Dr. Williams having extracted a small stone and a piece of cloth from the lacerated part.

The United Service Gazette states that five divisions of troops are to be formed in England, and two divisions in Ireland; the head-quarters of the latter are to be at the Curragh of Kildare and Fermoy.

The same paper adds, that Fermoy is about to be made a very considerable garrison, and will be under the command of a lieutenant-general and three brigadiers.

The Grand Orange Lodge of Ireland have issued an address "to our beloved brethren in connexion with the Orange institution," calling upon them to abstain from any "outward display" in connexion with the July anniversaries.

Major Brownrigg has inspected the city police, Waterford, and expressed himself highly pleased with the condition of the men commanded by the active Captain Fitzgerald.

Dr. Nugent, the Government Inspector, has visited the District Lunatic Asylum of Clonmel. He reported that considerable additions were required for the accommodation of lunatics.

The Archbishop of Cashel presided at the Diocesan Synod of the Archdiocese of Cashel, which was held pursuant to the statutes of Thurles. Between fifty and sixty priests attended.

Mr. P. Kelly, victualler, late of Limerick, has sent £200 from Australia to his wife and family, through Mr. P. Hogan, of that city.

Baron Greene has arrived in Standfield, the marine residence of Baron Richards. He intended visiting the celebrated Cliffs of Moher.

Surgeon Duigan, of Kilkenny, has been sent a second time to the East to superintend the embarkation of sick troops.

The Liverpool Albion gives particulars of a lamentable collision on the Mersey. The new iron steamer, Excelsior, Captain Kerr, just built on the Clyde, was proceeding on her first voyage to Belfast, having left Liverpool soon after midnight. When off the Lighthouse, she came in collision with the Dublin Screw Company's iron steamer Mail, Capt. Bailey; the stem of the Excelsior knocking off the figure-head of the Mail, entering her port bow near the bowsprit, and tearing its way through the spar deck as far as the foremast. In the fore part of the Mail, under the spar deck lay a number of deck passengers, Irish laborers, who were coming to the harvest in England. They lay asleep, with their heads close up to the bows of the ship. Five were killed as they lay, and nine others were dreadfully mangled, one of them dying soon after the collision. The bulkheads remained firm, and the Mail, though cut down to the water's edge, kept afloat, with the stem of the Excelsior so firmly embedded in the wreck, that it took upwards of an hour to get her free, and then not until the Excelsior left her anchor and nearly all her chain cable entangled among the broken timbers of the Mail.

Mr. Donnelly, Registrar General, has addressed a circular to each of the county surveyors in Ireland, calling their attention to the injuries which arise to the farming classes from the growth of weeds along the public roads, and the consequent shedding of their seeds over the adjoining land, by means of which the land is impoverished, and the crops are seriously obstructed. Mr. Donnelly desires that authority may be obtained from grand juries generally throughout the country for the introduction of a special covenant into all road contracts, requiring the destruction of weeds wherever they may be found on the road sides. The county surveyors have issued notices requiring the road contractors to destroy all weeds that may be found on the sides of roads and fences.

Damages to the amount of £150 were obtained last week in the Court of Queen's Bench, in the case of Parish vs. the Waterford and Limerick Railway Company, for breach of contract, whereby the plaintiff, a horse dealer, sustained loss. He purchased in October last, at the Munster fair in Limerick, thirteen horses, and contracted with defendants to carry them to Dublin. They were detached at the junction, and did not reach Dublin till the day after. The damages will fall on the Great Southern and Western Railway Company, on whose portion of the route the delay occurred.

On the 1st of January, 1851, the number of prisoners in jail in Ireland was 10,084; in 1852, 8,803; in 1853, a further reduction to 7,604; a greater reduction in 1854, the number being 5,955; while on the 1st of January there were but 3,561. The number charged with serious offences in the last year was inconsiderable as compared with any previous year. There was a large increase in the number of prisoners charged with violating the revenue laws, one of the consequences of the great augmentation in the spirit duties.

The weekly statistics of the Incumbered Estates Court show the large amount of £120,911, as the produce of sales for the week ending 12th of July, and this terminates the sales in the court until November next. Among the petitions presented in the week are four by J. W. Burmester and others for property in Mayo, Limerick, and Tipperary, amounting to £3,700 10s. 7d. per annum. The incumbrances are stated in one petition at £503,672 7s. 6d., and in the other three as £2,000, £7,000, and £8,000 less. Another petition is from C. P. Leslie, Esq., M.P., for property valued at £7,200 per annum, with charges reaching £135,800.

The Cork Examiner says, that in anticipation of the visit of the Lord Lieutenant to Cork the various local bodies have been making such arrangements as must insure a reception worthy of the character of that nobleman. His Excellency will visit Camden, Carlisle, and Spike Island, and examine the works in progress in those places. After inspecting the forts, he will proceed to the marine residence of Lord Fermoy, en route to Castlemartyr, the seat of Lord Shannon.

We observe by an article in the Belfast Mercantile Journal that the Harbor Commissioners there have remitted the local dues on passenger steamers, and that it is intended to put on a first-class boat between Dublin and Belfast three times a-week, which, with the present sailings, will make a daily communication.

A fire has taken place in the manufactory of Messrs. Barrington and Sons, wholesale tallow-chandlers, Kings Inns street, Dublin. Before any arrest could be made, the entire place was enveloped in flames.

A correspondent of the Dublin Freeman informs us that a number of workmen have left Dublin for Killarney, to make improvements in Kenmare House, the seat of the Earl of Kenmare, preparatory to a visit from the Queen. The Freeman gives the fact communicated by the correspondent, without guaranteeing its accuracy.

The interesting ceremony of a reception took place on Thursday week, in the Dominican Convent of Sion Hill, Blackrock, county Dublin. The young lady received was Kate, second daughter of Alderman Henry Potter, J. P., Kilkenny city. The ceremony was performed by the Very Rev. Dr. Meagher, Vicar-General of the Archdiocese.

The report that Mr. James Sadleir, M. P. for the county Tipperary, and director of the Tipperary Joint Stock Bank, has eluded justice, is believed to be correct. He escaped in a yacht from near Kingstown, being met off the Dublin harbor by an emigrant vessel, in which, it is stated, he proceeded to America.

The clubs and public resorts in Cork and Queenstown have been the scene of considerable discussion in reference to a transaction that took place in the supper-room at the Regatta Ball, between a young curate and a captain of the 95th Regiment. The matter was yesterday brought before the officers of the garrison, who have determined on laying the facts before the Lord Bishop.

We learn from Galignani's Messenger that the prize medal of the Universal Exhibition at Paris, has been awarded to Messrs. Murphy, of Cork, for a specimen of whiskey of their make of 1851. Now that Irish distillers are driven out of their own market by excessive duties, a foreign demand is created for the most wholesome spirit in the world.

The military authorities have taken the extensive premises lately occupied by Messrs. Shaw and Duffield, in Upper William street, Limerick, adjoining the artillery barrack, for the purpose of erecting new cavalry barracks.

Every description of crop, says the Fermanagh Reporter, promises an abundant yield this year. New potatoes are very plenty, and large as the full grown crop is at harvest.

A farm of forty acres, occupied by a widow lady, near Mullingar, was lately let for a term of seven years. The widow, anxious to retain the land and secure a maintenance for four infant orphans, bid as high as three pounds per acre; but the farm was finally knocked down at £4 5s. per acre per annum, and which, with poor-rates, county cess, &c., will amount to £5 per acre per annum at least. This instance of the way the "land mania" works, we have from a Correspondent of the Westmeath Independent.

A correspondent of the Northern Whig writes that the inhabitants of Lisburn are apprehensive of bad consequences in that neighborhood, resulting from the frequent occurrence of Orange processions. It appears that a few days before, about three bands, playing party tunes, with a yelling mob attached to each, marched out of Lisburn down the Belfast road to some place between Glenmore and Hillden. This is a densely populated district, and a party riot there would be most serious.

The Tenant Right Bill, we are informed by the Tablet, has been withdrawn for the present session, after a discussion in which the actual state of the question is clearly shown. It will be for the country, says the Tablet, to take effective steps to renew the agitation, and bring such a pressure to bear on the Government and Legislature as will put an end to the coquetry with which this question is now treated by the Premier and his followers.

On the 7th of July the House of Lords sat in committee for privileges. Several claims of peers to vote at the election for representative peers for Scotland and Ireland were heard. Amongst the latter, the following claims were proved: The Earl of Listowel, the Earl of Belmore, Viscount Guillamore, Lord Bellew, and Lord Massey.

Constable Smith and party, of the Lattoon station, has succeeded in seizing a potteen still and copper worm in full work, and also a quantity of potale and potteen, on the lands of Tullynashrohan, near the Doggs, in the county Fermanagh. Two of the party, named Timony, were committed to prison by the Rev. L. G. Reade.

The transport Etna has arrived at Queenstown, with the Kerry Militia. The regiment, consisting of 550 men and 37 officers, under the command of Lieut.-Col. de Moleyns, marched immediately to the barracks, from whence they proceeded by train to Killarney, and on to Tralee. Their appearance excited the warmest admiration. The regiment will be disbanded shortly.

The libel case of the Rev. Mr. Moore O'Connor v. the Proprietor of the Londonderry Sentinel has been tried in the Court of Queen's Bench. Damages were laid at £2,000. The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff—damages £200, with a separate assessment of £100 contingent damages, to be afterwards argued before the court.

Three Sundays back, seven ministers of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church preached at different places in and around the town of Belfast, at five o'clock in the afternoon. About two thousand persons, chiefly of the poorer classes, attended.

The Sisters of Mercy, Convent of the Conception, Clifden, Connemara, acknowledge the sum of £50 through Mrs. Eliza Darling, the bequest of the late Mr. Magrane, of Leinster road, Rathmines, county Dublin.

There are four vacancies at present in the Order of Saint Patrick, caused by the death of the King of Hanover, the late Earl of Listowel, the late Lord Carew, and the late Earl of Cork.

Carlow has become the most important butter market in Ireland. The merchants engaged in the trade are men of the highest mercantile reputation. Prices by the last mail ranged from 105s. to 107s.—the supply not sufficient for the demand.

Mr. F. Scully, M. P., writes to the Mayor of Clonmel, that Government has decided on not increasing the barrack accommodation in that town, and therefore declines the offer of the new poor-house made by the board of guardians.

A good deal of dissatisfaction is felt at no step being taken to induce Mr. James Sadleir to retire from the representation of Tipperary. No one appears to know how this is to be done under the present peculiar circumstances.

The Lord Lieutenant has visited Limerick. Addresses were presented by the Corporation, the Chamber of Commerce, and Trades. In the evening his Excellency was entertained at a banquet. The Mayor presided.

A reward of £80 has been offered by the government for such information as will lead to the arrest of the party who shot William Curran dead in his house in Moynure. Up to the present there is nothing to lead to the detection of the guilty parties.

A beautiful day, and an exquisite show of flowers, attracted crowds, a few days ago, to the garden of the Horticultural Society, Clonmel. Numbers arrived by the trains from Waterford and Limerick. The band of the 17th Lancers attended.

Mr. J. D. Piercy, of Carlow, has accepted the editorship of the Dublin Weekly Telegraph; and Mrs. Harty, of Limerick, had her pocket picked on Friday fortnight of £10 in notes, at the cross of William street.

The Ballinasloe July fair was thinly attended. Store cattle brought high prices. Sheep of all kinds went at good prices. The description of horses was rather inferior. Sellers were for the most part satisfied, but there were few buyers present.

The officers of the Curragh camp intended having an archery meeting on the 10th of July, of which Lady Seaton consented to be lady patroness. There were to have been three handsome prizes for lady competitors, and two for gentlemen.

Sergeant Cornelius Quinn, formerly of the 6th Regt., and lately on the recruiting staff of the East India Company's Artillery, was interred with due military honors, the regiment of the Carlow Rifles following him to the grave.

The July fair of Kilkenny was well supplied with stock of all kinds. Purchasers were numerous, and a large amount of business was transacted. Every kind of animal brought a remunerative price.

The depot of the 2d Regiment arrived in the Currah Camp on Friday from Kinsale, and consisted of seven officers and 220 rank and file, under the command of Capt. James.

A report is in circulation that the Irish artillery militia regiments are to be drafted into the Royal Artillery.

The 71st, 72nd, and 79th Highlanders will shortly form part of the garrison of Dublin.

The Lord Lieutenant has appointed John Cheevers, Esq., to be a Deputy Lieutenant of the county Galway.

A party consisting of eight or nine men, armed with guns, a few nights ago visited the dwelling of a blacksmith named Patk. Donohoe, residing at Lemanaghan, near Ballycumber, King's County. Effecting an entrance, two of the party procured a book and administered an oath to a young girl named Margaret Lowe. They swore her not to have anything to do with a young man named Kyran Monaghan, of Derrynagunn, to whom she was about to be married. The match was not approved by Monaghan's family, and as all their passive entreaties were likely to prove fruitless with Kyran, some of his friends adopted this style of "forbidding the banns."

The public examination of the students of St. John's College, Waterford, passed off with great eclat. The Right Rev. Dr. O'Brien presided. All the clergy of the city, secular and regular, without exception, together with those of the adjoining parishes, were in attendance. A numerous assemblage of ladies and gentlemen filled the spacious study-hall, and were entertained for more than four hours with a brilliant display of talent.

The following pensions have been granted from the Civil List:—Samuel Lover, in consideration of his eminent services to literature, £100. John D'Alton, in consideration of literary merits, and his numerous contributions to the history, topography, and statistics of Ireland, £50. John O'Donovan, in consequence of his valuable contributions to ancient Irish history and literature, £50.

A club has been formed in Sackville-street, Dublin, called the Hibernian Army Club. Col. Campbell, Queen's Bays; Lieu't-Col. Pattle, 16th Lancers; Major Carlyon, 3d Dragoon Guards; Captain Sir Thomas Gresley, Bart., Aide-de-Camp to the Lord-Lieutenant, and Captain O'Hara, Queen's Bays, form the committee.

An examination has been held at the Schools of the Christian Brother's, Sexton street, Limerick. The answering was most creditable. Nearly 500 premiums were distributed. The band of the County Limerick Militia was stationed on the sward in front of the school, and played during the course of the proceedings.

A Dungarvan man calls the attention of the Waterford News to the horrible state of Kilbarry churchyard. He counted seven coffins without as much as an inch of clay over them, one or two of which seemed as if left purposely exposed. Others appeared in a most terrifying state, as if torn up by some ferocious animal.

We learn from the Ballyshannon Herald that twenty-five men have been arrested by the constabulary of the Glenties district, charged with being members of the Ribbon Society. Twenty-one of them were committed to Lifford jail to take their trial at next assizes. Three of the arrested were teachers of National Schools.

Four companies from the depot of 9th, 17th, 32d, and 89th Regiments, move from Limerick garrison to Clare Castle.

The beautiful little Catholic Church of Hackett's Cross, has been consecrated by the Lord Primate.

GREAT MILITARY RIOT IN NORTH TIPPERARY.

Throughout Monday, the 7th, and Tuesday the 8th instant, the town of Nenagh was kept in one continued state of alarm and excitement. A riot of considerable importance took place. From the articles and correspondence in the local papers, the Nenagh Guardian, Tipperary Free Press, Limerick Reporter, Limerick Observer, &c., we compile a full statement of the exciting occurrences which gave to the scene an appearance almost revolutionary:

THE CAUSE.

It was known by the men for a couple of days that a general order had been received giving permission to such as wished to leave the service to take their discharge, but requiring from all who did so that they should give up their new clothing. This last condition seemed to have caused much dissatisfaction in the regiment, as well as the knowledge of the fact that they would not, as they were led to expect, receive the residue of their bounty. A spirit of insubordination grew up among the soldiers On the morning of the 6th, a sergeant commenced to take up the clothing from the men, when some few quietly gave them up. One man refused to give away his black trousers, whereupon he was sent to the guard-house.

A RESCUE.

In a very short time afterwards the Company to which he belonged (No. 4 Company) came down to the guard-house to rescue him. The guard were ordered to fire, which they did not, I believe, owing to their having no ammunition. The men, however desisted, but in a very short time after, the five companies quartered in Pound-street barracks came to Summerhill barracks, as is their custom every day for the purpose of being drilled. Hearing that the man was confined, they simultaneously fixed bayonets, and rushed at the guard-room, flinging the guard away, and with their guns and stones they broke open the cell doors and let out all the prisoners, at the same time demolishing the windows, doors, seats, &c.

THE MILITIA WON'T GIVE UP THEIR ARMS.

The Colonel (Maude) came down, and, it is said, a soldier attempted to stab him. They all declared that they would never part with their arms until they should be paid the residue of their bounty, and also let take their clothes with them. After some time they were brought into line by the Colonel and Major, and addressed upon the "enormity of their conduct." The Rev. J. Scanlan, P. P., of Nenagh, came up at the time. The address of the rev. gentleman had a good effect upon the militiamen, but they, at the same time, firmly declared that they would not give up their arms until their bounty was paid. All this time the barrack gate was shut and no one admitted in. When the men stationed in Pound-street were returning to their barracks they were loudly cheered as they went through the streets. The greatest excitement prevailed at the time, but when the Rev. Mr. Scanlan appeared all seemed quiet. When the men stationed in Pound-street were about being marched to Summerhill barracks, they refused to go without their arms.

THE RIOT.

The Nenagh Correspondent of the Limerick Reporter writes:—Of all the scenes, real or imaginary, that an inhabitant of Nenagh ever saw or read of, that of this night threw them into the shade. At 10 o'clock, the militia stationed in the Pound street barracks, broke out the gate, knocked down sergeants and sentries. Carrying with them their guns, with fixed bayonets, they went through the town, to the terror of the inhabitants yelling and shouting. They first attacked the police-barrack in Summerhill, the windows of which they quickly demolished with stones. They then in an irregular body proceeded to Summerhill barracks, the gates of which were closed, and commenced to pummel it with the butt ends of their muskets. In this way they quickly opened the gate and broke in the magazine, from which with a wise precaution, the officers had removed the ammunition. Not finding it they forced out the band, who played them through the streets, which tended to keep them in a regular body. They first marched down to the Police barrack in Barrack street, firing shots at intervals all the way. When they arrived at the police barrack they demolished the windows with stones, together with the house of Mr. Bull, petty sessions clerk.

They then, says the Nenagh Guardian, proceeded to the parochial School-house, into which they fired some shots, and afterwards demolished the windows with stones; and some other houses in the vicinity also felt the effect of their fury. From this they directed their course up Silver street, and when they came to the house of Mr. John Kennedy—a convert from the Church of Rome—their frenzy seemed to have reached its height. They discharged their pieces in through the windows, and made smash of the panes and sashes. Having satisfied themselves here, they next wended their way to the county gaol for the purpose of liberating the prisoners. They smashed all the glass in front of the prison, and attempted to batter in the door; but in this they were unsuccessful; and finding all attempts fruitless, they left for the Summer-hill Military Barracks again. Here, having entered, they broke open the magazine, expecting to get ammunition; but in this they were partly foiled, for there were only two kegs of powder in the store. They contented themselves for the remainder of the night with discharging random shots, keeping the town in a constant state of fright and excitement.

The militia (says the correspondent quoted) were followed by a large concourse of the townspeople, who kept up a regular cheer. They continued marching through the streets in this manner until 12 o'clock. It is thought they purchased powder and shot during the day in town. To do them credit they did not seem disposed to injure any person. When they fired it was in the air; all they said they wanted was to force the authorities to give them their bounty. The militia say they will keep their arms and will fight to the last, and that they may as well die at once as die with hunger after being disbanded without a shilling in their pocket. During the whole time no officer nor sergeant dare approach them. Sergeant Cole was knocked down with the blow of a firelock when the party first left the Pound-street barracks. It is believed that the ammunition had been removed to the gaol when the rioters were leaving the barracks. They seemed to have their vengeance particularly directed against the police, who very wisely kept within their barracks.

Some foolish persons, says the Limerick Observer, posted notices on both the barrack gates, telling them to keep their ground inside, and that the people would mind the outside. The rioting continued all the day.

Messengers were dispatched, with all haste, for troops to Limerick, Parsonstown, and Templemore, to quell the disturbance, and the country police have also been ordered to reinforce the Nenagh station, and protect the inhabitants and peace of the town.

THE NEXT DAY.

On Tuesday morning the militia stopped the Limerick coach, and searched it, imagining it might be conveying away ammunition; but not discovering any, they allowed it to proceed on its journey. The Guardian learnt that they had been running bullets the greater part of the day. At half-past one o'clock all the men from Pound street passed up to the Summer-hill barracks, armed. Lord Dunally, Richard Gason, Esq., and some other magistrates and gentlemen followed them, and endeavored to pacify them. They succeeded so far as as to prevail on the men to unfix their bayonets. The militia afterwards paraded the town, headed by their band, discharging an indiscriminate and irregular fire into the air. The shops were all closed, business was suspended, and the town had all the appearance of a besieged place.

ARRIVAL OF TROOPS.

At about four o'clock the military consisting of 1,000 soldiers of the 13th, 41st, 47th, and 55th depots, under command of Lieut. Col. Hart, entered Barrack st. from Templemore, and were halted opposite the Church. Here they received instructions to fix bayonets and load with ball cartridge, to march on the barrack of Nenagh, and take possession of it. They then proceeded, headed by John Fleming, Esq., R. M., to Summerhill Barrack, each man as cool as if he were going to a review, and a finer body of men—several of whom wore Crimean medals on their breasts—could not be seen; the excitement was fearful in the extreme. On reaching the barrack-gate the Colonel demanded admittance—there was no reply—it was a moment of dread suspense! He placed his hand on the gate and it opened to his touch. He advanced, followed by his men, who opened into a single file, and surrounded the barrack walls. There was here, however, only a small portion of the Militia, from whom Lieut. Colonel Maude, and the other Tipperary officers seconded by Lord Dunalley, succeeded, after some difficulty, in getting a quiet possession of their arms.

TWO SOLDIERS SHOT.

While the disarming was going on, a considerable number of the Militia from the Pound street barracks were prowling outside about the gate with their arms loaded. They made several attempts to fire in at the line, and succeeded in shooting two soldiers belonging to the 47th and 41st through the keyhole of the gate. One of the men was mortally wounded, and he died shortly after. The other man's wounds are not of a very serious nature.

A SKIRMISH.

An officer's party was then sent out to clear the streets of the Militia. On arriving near the market cross, they were fired at by some of the latter. After a slight skirmish the Militia took up a position in Pound street barracks.

REINFORCEMENTS—TAKING POUND ST. BARRACKS—LOSS OF LIFE.

Shortly after eight o'clock 200 men of the 21st arrived from Parsonstown. Having joined the Templemore troops, the entire body, under command of Major-General Chatterton, K. H., who accompanied by his aid-de-camp, Major Foster, and Col. Muller, Deputy Assistant Adjutant General, had just arrived from Limerick, proceeded to take possession of the Pound street barracks, where the militia seemed resolved to make a determined stand, and fight it out with the regulars. Before the soldiers proceeded down far in Castle street, they were received with a tremendous volley from a body of Militia, who had again stationed themselves at the Market cross. The front rank of the Line returned the fire, which was responded to by another discharge from the Tips. A continuous roll of musketry was then kept up for about five minutes. While this scene was going on in the street, a strong party of the Military were despatched up by the new Court-house. Here they fell in with a body of the Militia, who took to the fields, and threw themselves into skirmishing order, displaying the utmost coolness and determination—it may be added bravery—in their encounter with the Line. The Military proceeded round by Codville to the Pound street Barracks, where they met the street party from the Market cross, their small stock of ammunition having run out, the Militia were compelled to submit, and having given up their arms, they were made prisoners, and marched up to the Military prison, where they were lodged for the night. Thus ended one of the most fearful days ever spent in Nenagh.

THE KILLED AND WOUNDED.

The last engagement was attended with serious loss of life and personal injury. Three of the soldiers were wounded; one of them had his thigh bone broken; a pensioner named Gibbons, residing in Pound street, was shot dead while looking out of his house, and two children were more or less injured. The exact number of militia killed and wounded is not known, as many were dressed by the doctors of the town, and marks of blood have been discovered in several of the surrounding fields. Two of them were removed to the barrack hospital, where they shortly after died, and there are three under medical treatment. Some of the men under arrest were also suffering from slight wounds.

MORE SOLDIERS—THE FRAY—MISDEEDS.

About half-past 10 o'clock a squadron of the 17th Lancers entered town, but their services were not needed.

Constable Newman was the means of saving the life of Quartermaster Nolan, of the 41st, and a party of 12 men, escorting some provisions, from Templemore. When they reached the Barrack street constabulary barracks, Constable Newman, at the utmost risk to himself, as the militia sought every opportunity to fire at the police, ran across the street and apprised the officer of the danger of approaching to the Market cross, where a strong body of Tips were stationed, and seemed awaiting the arrival of the officer's party. Scarcely had the constable got off the pavements, when bang went five or six pieces, but providentially both he and the soldiers got safely under cover, and the latter remained so till the Market cross was cleared by the soldiers sent to take the Pound street barracks.

The Nenagh Guardian, which furnishes us with the chief details of the affair, is a Tory journal of the Orange stripe. The peculiar coloring of the party may be noted throughout some of the description. However, the Guardian's views of the mean-spirited policy of the Government, which instigated the "mutiny"—its straightforward condemnation of it, and its appeal to the press on behalf of the militia, will be regarded as just and manly. In its issue of Wednesday, the affair is thus wound up:

With the exception of the marching and counter-marching of the troops between the two barracks, there is nothing unusual in the appearance of the town to-day. Several of the militia prisoners were lodged in the county gaol.

Tuesday, the 8th of July, 1856, will not speedily be forgotten by by the people of Nenagh, and those who witnessed the stirring events which occurred in our town yesterday. It was a day of fearful excitement, and serious apprehensions; and every countenance wore an expression of deep anxiety. The night previously we were completely at the mercy of an armed rabble, and mob law ruled supreme. It is easy, then, to imagine the solicitude of the inhabitants for their own safety. The determined spirit of the militia to enforce their claim, and the preparations made by them for any emergency—their stripping the Pound street Barracks of all the lead, and running it into balls—their purchasing all the finger marbles in town, with a host of other stratagems—all tended to increase the fears of the townspeople for the coming night, and made them tremble lest the troops, said to have been sent for to quell the emeute, should not arrive. And let us here ask, why expose the peaceable inhabitants to such danger and unsafety?

The cause of this outrageous conduct is quite simple. On the embodiment of the Irish militia, the soldiers were promised a certain bounty; but now, when Government are in no further need of them, they violate that stipulation. Is this just or honorable? Here are bodies of men who voluntarily came forward in the nation's extremity to do battle for its honor, and in maintenance of its cause. Is it to be tolerated that they must now be cast on the world without as much clothing, or the means of purchasing it, as will shelter them from the weather, or cover their nakedness? It is much to be feared that there may be a repetition in other places of the conduct of the North Tipperary Militia, and while we must deprecate their outrageous acts, and condemn their unwarrantable attack on the dwellings of the inhabitants, we cannot but express our opinion that they have been unjustly treated, and badly rewarded for their patriotism and loyalty. We trust that the press of the land, as well as the representatives of the people, will take up the matter, and urge on the authorities the propriety, not to say justice (if they wish to avert civil commotion, and preserve the peace of the country), of giving to the Irish militia their stipulated rights, and their just demands.

INQUEST ON THE BODIES.—WEDNESDAY, JULY 9TH.

This day, T. T. Abbott, Esq., proceeded to the military barrack, for the purpose of holding an inquest on the bodies of the parties shot dead the previous evening. The following are their names:—Denis Toohey and Patrick Tracey, Tipperary Militia; Patrick Currey, 41st Regiment, and Peter Gibbons, Pound street, pensioner. Curley, the soldier of the 41st, had only recently returned from the seat of war, having been at the battles of Alma, Inkerman, and Balaklava. He had three medals for his services on those memorable occasions. He was a fine looking young fellow, about 28 years of age, and has left a widow and three young children. The two militiamen were each about 25 years old, and not married.

The following jury was sworn by the coroner:—Rody Spain (foreman), Francis Byron, John Murray, Henry Harden, Edwd. Jones, Frederick Cashel, Philip Searle, Wm. Wiley, George Ronaldson, Brien Consedine, Malichi Nilan, and Nion Tucker. After being sworn, the jury proceeded to view the bodies.

Coroner—We must get some one to identify the body of Curley, and not have a case like John Sadleir's. A corporal of the 41st identified the body.

After the examination of Lord Dunalley, and others, from which nothing was gleaned beyond what is given above, the jury returned a verdict that the deceased men came by their deaths in consequence of gun-shot wounds inflicted by some person or persons unknown, and that the death of the soldier Curley, of the 41st Regiment, was caused by a soldier of the North Tipperary Militia.

The latter portion of the verdict was objected to by Mr. E. Jones, insomuch as he did not consider the evidence went to implicate one of the Tipperary Militia.

Mr. Byron said the evidence of Mr. Frazer clearly showed that Curley's death was caused by a shot from one of the militia.

Some others of the jury agreed with Mr. Byron, but they afterwards agreed to leave out the sentence inculpating one of the militia.

Father Kenyon has sent the following reply to the Limerick gentlemen who invited him to attend the opening of their Athenæum and rejoice in the high and mighty presence of the Lord Lieutenant. It is a scathing commentary on the flunkeyism to which lip-loyalty is carried:

To the Secretaries of the Limerick Athenæum.

Chapel House, Templederry, July 5th, 1856.

GENTLEMEN, I have to acknowledge the receipt of your printed card, requesting me to attend at the inauguration of the Athenæum by his Excellency the Lord Lieutenant, and also requesting the favor of an answer. My answer is dry enough, that I will not attend; but the reason of it is less insipid.

When I subscribed towards the establishment of your Athenæum, I conceived its object to be the diffusion of education among my fellow citizens; and if I were asked at the time how they could be benefitted by the diffusion of education, I should, probably, have answered in proportion as they were more generally educated they must avoid such exhibitions of public folly as I had seen them indulge in, periodically, during my memory.

Amongst such exhibitions, your intended Saturnalia of next week—from the loyal dinner speeches, smacking of champagne, to the hungry professions of loyalty which the silly leaders of the tradesmen are preparing—assumes in my eyes a prominent place. I can see nothing in the visit of the Viceroy to induce me to deviate in the slightest degree from my usual mode of thinking and living. In all places, he is simply to me the visible sign and symbol of British rule and Irish subjection; consequently, of British wealth and of Irish beggary, of British cant or cruelty, (as an occasion may suggest;) and of Irish gullibility or patience, (as it is called) in sæcula sæculorem—a relative condition of things to which I may submit not perhaps without a gain, but in which I could never pretend to feel either pleasure or pride.

That Liberal Corporations and all other West British institutions, including such poor puppets as Congregated Trades, should repeat at intervals these slavish antics, as per programme, with or without any adequate provocation, can no longer surprise one; but that there should be no body of Irishmen in Limerick, Irish or manly enough, to stand alone from the flunky rabble—not even the professed friends of Education, which would lead to wisdom and not to a clownish estimate of tinsel pomp—this reflection, gentlemen, might depress my spirits if I did not conduct myself with the hope that you may all be knighted on this occasion. In this pleasant hope, and praying to be excused to his gracious Excellency,

I remain, gentlemen, truly yours. J. KENYON.

O'BRIEN'S RETURN.

We take the following article from the Nation last come to hand:—

"After eight years spent in prison, or in exile, William Smith O'Brien touched his native soil, a freeman, on Tuesday last—after eight years which have been as eight ages to him and to poor Ireland. The sunken and spiritless city did not open its gates with the air of its old patriot glory, to the martyr who had suffered so much for the cause of Ireland—who had been borne away from its bosom with all the barbarous pomp of a successful tyranny, and who had come back unchanged in heart and spirit—unstained in honor by the least compromise or the faintest complaint—the purest patriot, the noblest gentleman that God ever breathed the breath of life into, in this island. But the welcome which is quietly wafted to his manly heart, not in Dublin alone, but from end to end of the island, though not loud, is deep, and strong, and fond indeed. Every honest Irish voice is combined in it. All men of all parties forget their animosities to do a quiet homage to that nature, so pure, so chivalrous, of so far loftier a standard than that which obtains in Ireland to-day. With one acclaim, the Press, Whig and Tory, as well as Nationalist, express in unison sentiment full of cordial respect, which are echoed and applauded in every Irish home. If our cead mile failte be less demonstrative, less enthusiastic than it would have been in the old high-spirited days, it is not O'Brien who feels that he comes home to a race humbled, and saddened, and self-degraded, who are hardly fit to be the countrymen of one so magnanimous, and so unselfish—but who have at least the good taste silently to respect the modest dignity with which he again returns to the station which he sacrificed for them. He is too generous to feel aught but a noble and pious pity for the country, so weak and wretched—but this sentiment with which he is welcomed back, confesses a sorrowful truth.

It is not yet time to speak of what his future may be amongst us. His character has been tried and canonised by exile, by suffering bravely borne, by long sustained adversity, by the sacrifice of home, fame, fortune, family—by that long death in life, more trying to the heart than the cruellest death that infernal ingenuity ever conceived. But sure we are that whenever O'Brien feels it his duty to advise the People of Ireland, he will speak in tones to which they will listen with a respect more general and more earnest than they have accorded to any voice that has been raised in Ireland, since the day he received sentence of execution in the dock of Clonmel.

Let us, too, no longer obtrude on the peaceful welcome which he is this day enjoying in the old house of Cahirmoyle—in the happy home from which the sunshine of his smile has been so long absent; amid the scenes which in the distant forests of Tasmania, or among the glorious relics of Greece, he longed for with a lover's longing. There the Irish Blessing, and the Irish Welcome, await the Chief, come home to his own again."

We learn from the Waterford Chronicle that crops everywhere present a very promising appearance, but that there are rumors of the Potato showing signs of being under the influence of the fatal distemper. A large extent of ground being under potatoes this year, the Chronicle adds, that the loss would be frightful.

The Windsor Herald states that last Sunday night, when the eastward bound train on the Great Western Railway, was near to Thamesville, about sixty miles from Windsor, two shots were fired at the engine driver, but fortunately missed the object in both instances.

American News.

The following sorrowful occurrence took place at Caroline, Va.:—Mr. Wm. M. Kelley was suddenly roused from his sleep about 1 o'clock in the morning, and, under the impression that his house was being broken into, seized his gun and instantaneously fired upon some one, as he thought, entering the door; but to his horror he found that he had shot his wife, who was fastening it. The shot entered just in front and above the right hip, penetrating deep into the body. Two physicians were immediately called in, but found her beyond hopes. She lingered resignedly and uncomplainingly until about 4 o'clock, Saturday morning, when she died, leaving an almost distracted husband, an infant son eleven months old, and a large number of relations and connections to mourn their loss. Mr. and Mrs. Kelley had been married nearly two years, were remarkably fond of each other, and were living most happily together, when the unfortunate occurrence, like a thunderbolt, destroyed her existence and blighted his. He was, at night, timid, and in the habit of keeping a loaded gun near his bed; hence the terrible accident.

Two negroes were arrested in Richmond, on Saturday last, on the charge of attempting to poison Mr. Benjamin Gram, their overseer. Two weeks ago, Mr. Gram, after eating his breakfast, was taken with a severe spell of vomiting, which continued, at intervals, during the day. On Saturday morning, as was usual, he sent negro Sam for his breakfast. Sam returned, and when Mr. G. took a sup of his coffee he perceived it had a peculiar taste. He poured the contents from the cup, and noticed a white substance in the bottom. He had it analyzed, and found it to be arsenic. Negro Sam says that another servant, named William Jackson, had given him a fourpence if he would allow him to put a paper of white substance in the coffee when he was taking it to Mr. Gram.

The St. Johnsbury (Vt.) Caledonian tells the following rather tough story: "Not long since a youth of sixteen years was out in the town of Victory gathering spruce gum. While thus engaged, his dog started up a bear and immediately attacked him. The dog being of small size, the owner undertook to call him off, and in doing so attracted the attention of the bear. The lad was armed only with a gumming-pole, a stick eight or ten feet in length, with a knife blade in one end. The bear made at him with mouth wide open, when the lad thrust the knife end down the bear's throat, killing him almost instantly."

We understand, says the N. O. Delta, that Mrs. J. Morison Heady, a lady who has been a resident of New Orleans for the last twenty years—ten of which she enjoyed all the blessings of life, but the remaining years in sad reverses—has lately become heiress to property in England worth £250,000.

John and Mary Williams, husband and wife, were arrested in Philadelphia, on Wednesday, on the charge of infamous treatment to their daughter. They are also charged with forcing her to drink liquor until she becomes intoxicated, and then making her the victim of the basest of purposes. She is only 15 years of age. They were both committed.

The Toronto Colonist learns that a violent row occurred in Guelph, on the anniversary of the battle of the Boyne. A party of Orangemen passed through the streets, were attacked by some rowdies, and a terrible fight ensued. Fire-arms were freely used, and many persons were more or less injured. The mob was finally dispersed by a company of riflemen.

Several destructive fires are now raging in the country, and especially between Buffalo and Rochester. The Buffalo Express learns from gentlemen who came over the Central Road on Wednesday, that fires are burning in several places, and that between this city and Batavia, are some places where the heat and smoke were intolerable. Houses are endangered, standing crops destroyed, and valuable timber reduced to ashes.

Mickey Free, the pedestrian, is to walk in Newark, on a plank, 106 hours, without sitting or sleeping, or coming off the floor or ground. The plank is to be 40 feet long, 3 feet broad, and 3 feet from the ground. If the weather is favorable he will walk in the Park, where all can see him. The walking commenced on Wednesday last.

There is a family named Drew residing in Duxbury, Mass., composed of two brothers and four sisters, whose united ages amount to 495. The oldest brother is 90, the next brother 88, and the sisters respectively 86, 79, 77 and 74.

Three brothers, by the name of Keeley, died suddenly last week in Cincinnati—one with delirium tremens in jail; the next day another, by sun-stroke; and the third by sun-stroke, as he entered the cemetery with his brother's corpse.

In Cleveland, on Saturday, some scoundrel entered the dwelling of Mr. Fittenhofer, and stole some $300 worth of jewelry. He administered chloroform to Mr. F., wife and six children, and then administered upon their effects.

The Syracuse Standard, says:—"We learn that Miss Lewis, the young lady who was married to the "Man Woman," has finally become convinced that her pretended husband is a woman, and has, therefore, renounced her husband forever.

John H. Matthews, District Attorney of Worcester county, Massachusetts, committed suicide on Sunday, by taking strychnine. No reason is assigned for the act. He was said to be a young man of talent and promise.

Jemmy Johnson, head chief and warrior of the Tonawandas, and who was the successor of the celebrated orator Red Jacket, is dead. He had reached a very advanced age, and was one of the best known and most esteemed of his tribe.

The Treasurer of the Howard Association of Charleston reports that the whole amount of contributions received by him during the last Summer, for the relief of the sufferers from the recent epidemic in Norfolk and Portsmouth, was $7,092 29.

J. L. Strang, the Mormon prophet, who was recently shot at Beaver Island, died on the 10th inst., at his farm in the village of Vorea, Racine county, at which place he took refuge some days since.

Dr. N. C. Whitehead, for more than twenty years President of the Farmers' Bank of Norfolk, and acting Mayor during the epidemic of last summer, died in that city Monday night last, in the 64th year of his age.

Mrs. Blackwell, (formerly Rev. Antoinette Brown,) arrived in Rochester. She has not been heard from the pulpit or rostrum we believe, since her marriage.

During the last seven years fourteen hundred murders, it is said, have been perpetrated in and about San Francisco, and the city itself has been burned down seven times.

A new Bridge to Goat Island, Niagara Falls, which has so long been wanted, is now being constructed.

The following is a full and complete list of the killed by the recent terrible disaster on the North Pensylvania Railroad. It is supplied by Mr. Charles Burns:

MALES.

Rev. Daniel Sheridan,	John Dudson,
Michael Burns, jr.,	James Roy,
Hugh Campbell,	James Congdon,
Lawrence Dillon,	Henry Harvey,
James McIntire,	Edward Hall,
Barnard Green,	Daniel Marlow,
Wm. J. Barnett,	John McGuire,
John Dugan,	John Gribbons,
John Ryans,	Henry Cerr,
James Hickey,	John McGraw,
John Brady,	Cornelius Coakely,
Henry Harris,	James Conlin,
Patrick Flaherty,	Patrick Hickey,
John Devlin,	Francis Walls,
John Sloan,	Michael McAleer,
Edward Flanagan,	John McVey,
James Gallagher,	Hugh Tracy,
Lewis Rivel,	Thomas Kelly,
Michael O'Brien,	Michael T. Haggerty,
Edmund P. Gillon,	James Flaherty,
James Mulholland,	Patrick Kearney,*
James Loaque,*	James Quigley,*
James Devine,*	John McAleer,*
Hugh O'Neil,*	Francis McCork,*

Bernard Runnagan.

FEMALES.

Sarah McQuigan,	Caroline Mary Kresner,
Kate McGurk,	Catherine Coakeley,
Ellen Clarke,	Rosanna Mulholland,
Mary McErlain,	Elizabeth Gunn,
Sally McGee,	Ann Lilly,
Sarah McGraw,	Mrs. Mary O. Daniels,
Bridget McClean,	Mary Short,*

Teresa Callahan,*

Males 51, Females 15. Total killed, 66.

The names marked with an asterisk (*) have not before been made public.

The Philadelphia Bulletin, publishing the list, says so fearfu a destruction of human life has never before occurred on any railroad in the world, and the circumstances of the destruction were of so frightful a nature as to add materially to its horror. The public will now demand that some measures be taken to bring to justice those who may be proved to have, by their neglect or recklessness, brought on the catastrophe. The verdict of the Coroner's jury in this city does not hesitate to charge the conductor of the excursion train with "criminal negligence." It also condemned the company for a want of proper regulations, especially on excursion trains. The offending conductor is under arrest in Montgomery County, where the disaster occurred, land where no doubt he will be tried. What measures will be adopted against the company we have not learned.

George Wilson, the negro convicted ofthe murder of Captain William Palmer and Gilbert Pratt of the schooner Eudora Imogene, at City Island, last November, was executed at White Plains, Westchester County, N Y., on the 25th instant. The prisoner made no confession, would not receive any religious consolation, looked pleasant the evening previous, but had to be carried in a state of weakness to the scaffold. The excitement was very great, and the scene presented more the appearance of an excursion than an execution, there being tents and oyster stands located round the jail. The feeling of the people was very strong against the accused, and two military companies, with a number of deputy sheriffs, were necessary to keep order. One of the citizens, attempting to press his way into the execution yard, received a bayonet wound in the fleshy part of the arm. The axe used by the Sheriff in the execution, was the same one with which it was supposed Wilson murdered the Captain and mate of the Eudora.

On Friday, (25th inst.) the jury in the Herbert case, after retiring three quarters of an hour, returned a verdict of acquittal. The announcement was received with manifestations of joy and delight, and Mr. Herbert was immediately surrounded by his friends, who accompanied him to the Kirkwood House. About six o'clock, Mr. Preston, for the prosecution, wished to reply to Mr. Walker's strictures, which was objected to by the other counsel for Mr. Herbert. Ex-mayor Lenox, who was standing, was overheard by Mr. Ratcliffe to observe, that that was unfair or unjust. Mr. Ratcliffe sharply said in reply, "they wanted no outside interference;" and in the course of the hurried colloquy that ensued, Mr. Lenox called Mr. Ratcliffe a liar. Mr. Ratcliffe immediately dashed at Mr. Lenox, but Mr. Bradley quickly interposed and prevented a collision. Such is the version of the affair. Subsequently Deputy Marshal Phillips made a complaint before Justice Thompson, who was on the premises, that he had reason to believe Mr. Ratcliffe had sent and Mr Lenox accepted a challenge. Mr. Ratcliffe was forthwith arrested, and held to bail in $3,000 not to fight a duel. A warrant was served on Mr. Lenox, who has failed to appear.

The Mobile Daily Advertiser, of July 15th, says: It becomes our painful duty to announce the demise, after a severe and lingering illness, of one of our oldest and most respected citizens Wm. Crothers, of the firm of Wm. Crothers & Co., cotton brokers, breathed his last at Point Clear, on Sunday morning. Mr. Crothers was born in the city of Dublin, in the year 1802, and came to this country, first to Augusta, Ga., when quite a young man. From thence he removed to Mobile, where he has lived for about twenty-five years respected and honored by all. He was in command of a military company in 1835 and 1836, and has always enjoyed the reputation of a liberal, kind-hearted and public spirited man. Truly may it be said of him,

'None knew him but to love,
Nor named him but to praise.'

His funeral, which took place from his late residence yesterday evening, was numeronsly attended."

The Democrats of Vermont held their State Convention on 25th. ult., for the choice of candidates for State Officers. Hon. Henry Keyes, of Newsbury was nominated for governor; Willis Lyman, of Burlington, for Lieutenant-Governor, and James T. Thurston, of Montpelier, for State Treasurer. A series of resolutions were adopted indorsing Buchanan and Breckinridge.

It is stated by way of Mexico, that Secretary Marcy has proposed to President Comonfort to purchase another slice of Mexico. The offer is said to have been, $6,000,000 for the thirty-first parallel of latitude for the boundary line to the Gulf of California. President Comonfort is stated to have refused to entertain the proposition. The whole statement, however, is very doubtful.

The Cincinnati Enquirer, presents the following glimpse of prison life. James Summons, the convicted poisoner and murderer, appears in a new character—that of Assistant Jail Physician! A man is taken sick at the jail. The disease is excessive inebriation. Medicine is prescribed, and James Summons is entrusted to administer it. The patient dies! A Coroner's Jury is held. Summons is a principal witness. He testifies as to what he administered—perhaps truthfully, perhaps not. The Enquirer may well ask shall convicted murderers not only go unwhipt of justice, but be entrusted with the lives of others.

The following, says the Cincinnati Enquirer, was the bill of fare of a recent dinner at New Orleans, Louisiana: First, catfish soup; second, one huge catfish, with catfish sauce; third, a small catfish, stuffed; fourth, several catfish, not stuffed; fifth, some fried catfish; sixth, catfish omelet, mixed; seventh, scrambled catfish, great variety, very good; eighth, a large number of very small catfish, a la Francaise; ninth, a few catfish; tenth, some more catfish. There was quite a number of dishes besides, but they all contained catfish, done up in every style the heart could wish.

Mr. Lee, of Lee & Marshall's Circus, informs the Editor of the California Spirit of the Age that Joaquin's band paid him a visit one night during his performance in the Southern mines, and while he was in the ring stole ten of his trained horses from under a shed adjoining his tent. On being informed of the fact, scarcely five minutes afterward, while he was performing, he left the audience, mounted his men, armed and in circus costume, tights, &c., started in chase, and not only overtook and routed the bandits, but recovered all of his animals.

At a late meeting of the Catholic Literary Institute of Cincinnati, an informal ballot was taken for President, and resulted as follows: Buchanan 85, Fremont 5.

"Mountain Maid," an animal noted as a fast "racker," fell dead in Cincinnati from the affects of the weather. The "Maid" was owned by John B. Reynolds, and there was no consideration that would have induced him to part with her.

Notices have been given of intended applications to the Legislature of Pennsylvania, for new bank charters, together representing a capital of $18,830,000, or a sum nearly equal to the whole of the present banking capital of the State.

Moses Cawood, an old and respectable citizen of Washington county, Va., shot himself with a rifle, causing death in about three hours.

It is reported that Col. Lane, at the head of 600 men, crossed from Missouri into Kansas on 21st. ult., but had done no fighting.

The bill for the relief of the heirs of Gen. Arthur St. Clair, of the Revolutionary Army, has passed the Senate. The heirs by this bill will get $30,000.

Dr. Kinahan, who has recently returned from Peru, attempts to prove that guano is produced from fetid seals, which die on the Islands, and not from the droppings of birds.

Congressional.

Thirty-Fourth Congress—First Session—Senate.

July 19.—The Senate was not in session.

July 21.—A bill amendatory of the act concerning the registering and recording of ships or vessels was passed. A resolution was adopted calling on the President for information relative to the movements of the Government troops in Kansas. The Armament bill, after an amendment reducing the proposed appropriation from $3,000,000 to $1,800,000, was passed—27 against 10. A resolution was passed providing for the close of the session on the 11th of August. Bills were passed regulating the Judicial expenses of Government, and making appropriations for various River and Harbor improvements.

July 22.—A resolution was adopted directing the Committee on Manufactures to inquire in reference to the substitution of iron for other materials in Government buildings. A bill was introduced to regulate the pay of Members of Congress, proposing a salary of $3,000 for each regular session, instead of a per diem. Two harbor improvement bills were passed.

July 23.—House bill for the improvement of Savannah River passed. The bill continuing improvements in the Sheboygan harbor was passed. A joint resolution was adopted authorizing Lieut. Maury and other officers to receive honorary testimonials from foreign powers.

July 24.—The bill to protect citizens of the United States who may discover guano deposits passed. The Kalamazoo and Milwaukee Harbor bills were passed, and the Grand River bill discussed until adjournment.

July 25.—Mr. Wilson submitted a resolution asking information of the President relative to the course of General Smith in Kansas. Six private bills were passed, and one providing for the compulsory prepayment of postage on all printed matter.

House.

July 19.—Engaged in the consideration of private bills.

July 21.—The Nebraska contested election case was considered—no action taken. The Senate's adjournment resolution was received, and the rules were suspended for its consideration. An animated discussion ensued; several amendments were offered. Finally the House adjourned without acting upon it.

July 22.—The Senate's adjournment resolution was amended by substituting the 18th instead of the 11th of August, and so passed. The Senate subsequently agreed to the amendment. The resolution declaring Mr. Chapman not elected Delegate from Nebraska was rejected.

July 23.—An ineffectual effort was made to re-consider the vote confirming Bird Chapman as delegate from Nebraska. The New Mexico contested election was settled by the adoption of a resolution affirming that M. Gallegos was not, and Mr. Otero was, duly elected delegate from that Territory. M. Otero was sworn in. It was voted to print 20,000 copies of the full Kansas Report, and 100,000 copies without the testimony.

July 24.—It was settled in Committee of the Whole that no money shall be given toward the support of the army so long as it is employed in Kansas.

July 25.—A message was received from the President recommending an appropriation to complete the purchase of Government buildings in Philadelphia. Twenty private bills were passed, including the Senate bill for the relief of the widows and orphans of the officers, seamen and marines of the brig Porpoise and sloop-of-war Albany. The evening session was devoted to political debates.

Answers to Correspondents.

A Cork Man, who evidently is most pleased when he is in close contiguity to the neck of a bottle, encloses us an extract quo ed from an Irish paper to this effect—"On Wednesday the Cork distillers reduced the price of Whiskey to 10s. 9d. per Imperial Gallon. He adds to this, evidently as an illustration of his rapturous appreciation of the announcement, the following lines, which we have not met for the first time:—

"Whiskey, drink divine,
Why should driveller's bore us,
With the praise of wine,
While we've thee before us?

If Anacreon, who
Was the vine's best poet,
Sipp'd our mountain dew,
Oh! how his verse would show it!"
Chorus—Whiskey, drink divine.

The enthusiasm, if nothing else, of the Corkman has evidently muddled his brain. If we recollect right our correspondent has mixed up the beginning and the end of Joe Leary's capital song. As an evidence of the further improvement of the "ould sod," he pastes the following paragraph from the Tipperary Free Press, after his "drink divine":—

"We are glad to learn that the government have at last taken the claims of the Irish Petty Sessions Clerks into consideration, and that a Bill is already prepared for paying those useful officers by salaries commensurate with the important duties they have to perform."

Every thing besides the Sessions is now-a-days petty in the old country.

New-York, 25th July, 1856.

Editor of Irish News: Sir: Permit me once again and for the last time to emerge from my obscurity, and intrude on your space and time for a few moments.

From the discordant tones of your correspondent's concluding flourishes, in his "Notes from the Nore, No. 2," I am inclined to think him wroth with me for correcting one or two "slight errors of memory," contained in his "No. 1," and for my averment of nearer relationship to the late K. T. Buggy than himself. He is so evidently "riled up," that I will not add to his "heated term" by pointing out the manifold inaccuracies in his last "Notes," which do not require a "Briareus" to detect, as "A Kilkenny (city) Man" can see them with "half an eye." With regard to the "relationship question," I stil "aver" that I am not only his nearest relative on this side of the Atlantic, but as near as any on the other side, and it is not "strange" that I should be ignorant of the disposal of his MSS., having chiefly resided in Dublin from '43 to the period of my leaving for this country; and having little intercourse with his friends in Kilkenny, I wrote about the matter several times, but got no satisfactory information. Hence my "anxious cogitation."

"Kilkenny Man" presumes I am "indisposed to learn who he is." Wrong again. I "own up" to a little curiosity to become acquainted with my "near relative," but am decidedly averse to "invade his obscurity," fearing that he might turn up a "ghost, or goblin," or shadowy thing."

In conclusion, Sir, allow me to observe, for the future guidance of 'Kilkenny Man," that it is for you to judge of what is annoying or inadmissable in my communications, (as far as regards yourself,) without suggestions or hints from him; and when he undertakes to write about scenes and persons whose names are familiar in our mouths as household words," without strict attention to facts, he leaves himself open to correction, even tho' his may be only "errors of memory." With many thanks for your courtesy,

I am, Sir, yours, W. F. B.

"King."—You must prove your age, if but eighteen, as you say. If an apprentice, you will be a citizen at twenty-one. Otherwise you must have a witness to prove you have been in the State for the length of time required by law.

"R. O." ("an humble but true Irishman") writes to say that he has seen an appeal for Lamartine in the papers, and that he as an Irishman "would not put out his hand to save him." Lamartine, elegant and eloquent writer, and quasi people's patriot as he is, does not deserve well of any Irish, or other democrat. His want of purpose and decision ruined France in '48. He moreover belied the mission of the Irish sympathisers with the French Republic in the same year. He replied to the British Minister, Lord Normanby, instead of to O'Brien and his comrades; and insinuated that the Young Irelanders came for arms, when it was a matter of notoriety that the fighting members of the Confederation were opposed to French aid. O'Brien flung back the charges made by Grey in the Commons, founded on the reply of Lamartine, and said that if he demanded assistance from France he could have had it. Lamartine was placed at the top of the French Republic in '48 because he had not strength to be its base, and the people, looking up to him, were deceived.

"Young America" thinks that England ought to think a great deal of America after all the pro-English sentiments uttered by Americans. There never was a greater mistake. If we talked more about Lexington and Saratoga, and less about "Anglo-Saxon" principles—more about Andrew Jackson, and less about the diplomatic genius of the English—America would be respected much more. The more you make yourself the vassal of Great Britain, the more she will think you are right for so doing, and the more you kiss the ground beneath the feet of English sovereignty, the more will her statesmen rub your nose in the gutter. As long as you do the one, you deserve the other.

"A Blackmill Boy."—James Stevens, the gallant young Kilkenny man who participated in all the disasters of the movement in the South of Ireland, in '48, is, we understand, a Professor of English in a college in Paris. You ask us "What we thought of him as a patriot?" We never met him. We saw a boot of his once, that he left behind him at a farm house in the Waterford mountains, when pressed by the police. The people spoke of him in the highest terms, and those who earned at that time the people's love are worthy of the highest praise we could fashion for him.

"W. R." (Carrick boy.)—We did not mean to make any comparisons between the men of Cappoquin and the other brave fellows of Tipperary and Waterford who went into the '48 struggle chivalrously. We could not. We regard them all as brave, spirited, and disinterested Irishmen, and will not seek any parochial distinction for them. We own in this national matter no Ulster, Munster, Leinster, or Connaught—nothing but Ireland. As Irishmen in the fortunes of that year, we are bound to all, and to the honor of all—to the Irish "at home and abroad" is our journal dedicated.

Godfrey. A Few Thoughts on Death. (Never say die). A Victim of the Encumbered Estates Bill, dated from Ward's Island. You have nothing to complain of. As a landlord, in Ireland, you robbed and ejected your tenants; an idler there, you lived on the poor; a pauper here, you are living on the public. E. C. D.—Goose Quill, What are My Thoughts Like? (Why then nothing particular.) F. D——y. Not a Wide-Awake. (That's plain enough.) Millie. Now or Never. (Adieu, then, now and forever.) A Comic Song. The least said about this the better, as brevity's the soul of wit. Castlebellingham, by a Cockney. (All ale!) Veritas—Mordecai. (Read up for these years yet.) Ingulphus. ("Own brother" to an earthquake evidently.) &c., &c.

We shall regularly send a copy of the News to any part of Ireland, on receipt of subscription at the rate of 16s. sterling per annum.

Mr. Sullivan, our California agent, desires us to state, that though we send the News to subscribers there, from here, at the rate of $3 per annum, he has to charge $5 to those who receive it through him.

We desire it to be perfectly understood, that our Agents are always provided with our written authority, and for them we believe we can promise uniform politeness and gentlemanly consideration.

THE IRISH NEWS.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, AUGUST 2, 1856.

BRITISH INFLUENCE IN AMERICA.

It is a matter of notoriety that some people lessen the value of that which they secretly admire, and having publicly misconstrued and sneered into a ludicrous obscurity a fact or an idea, revive the one or the other in its pristine strength as the discovery or invention of the heretofore scoffer.

Paracelsus publicly burnt the works of Galen and Avicenna, but took care to steep his brain in their best theories, which he revived with much brazen self-glorification. In like manner, John Bull, who is almost insanely eloquent in condemnation of the revolutionary character of the French, as exhibited within the last sixty or eighty years, has a practical admiration for that Dantonian audacity which wrote those wondrous anti-English and anti-monarchic episodes on the annals of France.

John Bull, however, like that magnificent impostor, Paracelsus, when he steals an idea, dresses it in such a manner that the original proprietor would not reclaim it even if he could.

What is a purpose with the Frenchman, is to John Bull a refuge. There is no more comparison between the audacity of La Belle France and that of Perfide Albion, than there is between the eagle that, shrieking atop the white Alps, struck black terror from the Rhine to the Tiber, and his mechanical namesake, who daily dines off carrion in the Surrey Zoological Gardens, London.

With the French, audacity is an inspiration, with the Englishman diplomacy. The one is audacious to defeat, to a Saint Helena, to death. The other is audacious to a variety of subterraneous manœuvres for plunder, and if detected, he is more than audacious in apologies, exposing his motives in the most humane sack-cloth and ashes.

If he forces a murderous trade in China, confuses the sons of Confucius, by putting opium in their pipes, and making them smoke it, why it is only a calumet, a peace-offering, he presents. If he rides over Hindostan astride of his cannon, the wheels of which are more deadly than those of the Juggernaut that crumbles the bones of its worshippers, why then he is on "a mission." If he offers so much a head for patriotic Caffres and their women and infants, as they do in Algeria for wolves and panthers, he is only spreading the gospel. If he turns wholesale butcher in Borneo, it is purely because he would do anything for the sake of brotherly love. If he insists on lending the King of Oude or the Chief of Aden a few hundred pounds, and helps them to spend it quickly that he may levy on their respective territories, it is only to show what a jolly good fellow he was in the first instance, and to illustrate the commercial progress of the age in the second. All these commercial travellers are such jolly good fellows! Like the "Bold Soldier Boy" with the landlady—

"He tastes her tap,
And tears her cap,"

And then makes the world believe she is dead in love with him; for—

"Isn't he a darling,
The bold soldier boy?"

But if the audacity of John Bull in pushing himself into brotherly love and friendly communication with the East Indies, China, South Africa, New Zealand, and numerous other places and peoples, is enormous, it is infinitely less than that displayed in his persistent good offices to America. In the former, he deals with people without diplomacy, and with bravery, if sometimes quickened by native skill, most-times impotent for want of modern resources of warfare. If "Macbeth doth murder sleep," John Bull doth devour the devotee. Our Dublin correspondent's letter elsewhere, gives a characteristic illustration of this Sabbath exercise.

America, John Bull finds a more powerful rival. The fact that we scourged him twice, but inspires his audacity to a more deadly amiability. He is much quicker to apologize, though he does not desist; and the more fertile in invention, as his bungling exposes him to chastisement. As he cannot compete with the "concern," he will divide it. He will dissolve the Federal partnership, that he may dictate to the principals when they set up for themselves. He will get himself between the parties like a true friend, to keep them asunder, and with sly words, aside into the ears of both, excite their peculiarities into passions; cunningly pacify both with bitter inuendoes of each others' rights; tell each, in turn, he is outraged; and each, in turn, that the other is wrong—that he, John B., is bound to him for ever, and, if needs be, will be with him if the worst comes to the worst. Then aloud, counselling Christian feeling between them, "washes his hands of the matter," and marches direct to plunder their houses while they are having it out on the spot.

This, John Bull has the audacity to do; and he will do it if he can. But whether he can or otherwise, is a secondary question; the first being his right to interfere at all. There is no evidence needed of his interference; and it is to this Foreign influence the self-protective throbbings of the American heart should beat a firm defiance and a decided and timely opposition.

It was to this "foreign influence" that the fathers and defenders of the Young Republic directed the thoughts of their successors. It was against old enemies, not young friends, the prophetic eyes of '76 were turned. It was against old spleen, not young manly blood, they warned the future. It was in the intrigues of a beaten master, not the energy of the sturdy apprentice, they beheld possible disaster. It was in the suggestive disgrace of an unscrupulous enemy, not the reproductive industry of the adopted, home-hunted, European mechanic, that those patriots deciphered thunder in the future heavens. It was in the ambition of the foreign diplomat, which is keener than the foreign sword or bayonet, and not in the allegiance of the emigrant axe, that Washington read the "wiles of foreign influence."

Dark Lanterns may essay to throw a narrow streak of light upon the universal expanse of principle laid down in the Constitution; Know Nothings may persist in exhibiting that as they do not even know themselves, their title was rather too well chosen; Sectionalists may evaporate audible perspiration, and religious lunatics "bay the moon," because it will not leave Heaven solely to the stars, but they only tire themselves out, and render their contrition but the more weakly notorious.

This "Home Treason" to the Constitution, in conjunction with, and springing from the "foreign influence" alluded to, was made the subject of a very brilliant and suggestive speech on the Fourth of July, in Philadelphia, by Mr. C. W. Carrigan. The gentleman's effort was more an outline than an oration, but it was firmly done—bold, broad and truthful. We find a report of it in the N. Y. Daily News, and while on the subject cannot do better than extract some points which the memory will hold tenaciously:

In speaking of "foreign wiles," said Mr. Carrigan, Washington had no allusion to that European exodus which for the last half century has added wealth to our expanding Republic, and years to its existence. [Applause.] Nor to the six thousand Irishmen whose bones rest in a sepulchre of forty-eight miles, along the road from Aspinwall to Panama. He alluded to that insidious wile of foreign nations, which feels its way through the arteries of our Republic by base bribes and fulsome flattery, the more easily and unsuspectingly to compass our ruin. To say that he alluded to the British Government exclusively, might not be true—but true it is, that she, and she only, during our whole history, comes within the scope of his prophetic warning. She has been working mischief among us from the earliest day of the Republic until now, fanning into flame sectional jealousies, degrading our national pride and seeking the dismemberment of our people. * * * * * * *

If in 1796 Washington deemed it necessary to warn us against the "wiles of a foreign influence" which was jealous of our growing greatness; if he was fearful we might be the "satellite" of a more powerful nation; how careful should we be now, when we stand forth the admiration of the world, when we are the Ararat toward which the ark of the race is moving from the sweep of the deluge. [Tremendous cheers.] Our unparalelled progress creates a distrust in Great Britain, the only nation that can rival us—and to the end that we may be weakened, she has steadily kept alive sectional jealousies and created mutual distrusts. Her influence ramifies throughout all our interests. It presides on 'change, dictates the leaders for certain newspapers, and in the halls of our National Legislature would pull down our commercial and war marine to satisfy British vain-boasting. Her power is seen in those Anglo-American presses that think our country always wrong and other powers always right; she encourages agitators to strike at the constitutional rights of one half of the States, applauds to the echo the treason of higher law fanatics, stops a growing and healthy emigration by erecting proscriptive barriers, and imprisons the soul in the charnel house of a Know Nothing ritual. [Great applause.] These are the results of British influence.

The speaker does not underrate this influence. With a base of operations in Canada; with the "dreadful note of preparation" distinctly heard there; with a most persistent foothold in Central America, at the other end of the States; a wild colony of Mormon fanatics (for it is nothing more nor less than an English colony) in Utah; and the numerous agents supported by the diplomatic and consular establishments, as was partially exposed by the recent enlistment audacity—with the "Foreign Influence" in possession of these footholds and outposts, can America be too watchful? With the undeniable will of the English before us, at least as spoken through their parliament by a large majority, to uphold the government officials in their outrages on American nationality and international comity, and by any means to involve us in disquiet, and lessen our moral and physical prestige—can America be over jealous of, or too peremptory in forcing respect for her honor? The past is full of warning for the present.

"We have seen this influence, and have felt its crushing power from 1776 till now. The Declaration of Independence did not drive it forth. It survived Lexington and Brandywine, Monmouth and Yorktown. In 1812, it hovered over field and flood, and tried to palsy American arms in striking for American rights. In 1832, it threatened Andrew Jackson with rebellion, when he with the 'people at his back,' whom 'British gold could neither buy nor awe,' threatened them with Haman's gibbet. In 1846, it greeted our brave soldiers with 'bloody hands.' In 1850, this same spirit fanned the embers of civil discord, and almost snapped the sinews of our brotherhood. In 1851, it sneered at the heroism of Crittenden, who 'never turned back on foe, and knelt only to his God.' In 1855, it became the backbone of faction, with its hell-brood of isms. In 1856, it converts the temples of the Most High into Emigrant Aid depots—declares Sharpe's rifles a better moral agent than the Bible, appeals from peaceful ballot-box to the sweep of the sword, and stabs at the constitution by declaring it 'a league with hell, and a compact with the devil.' It has fostered British interests, British capital, and British commerce. * * * *

"All history tells us that republics have suffered most from foreign meddling in their internal affairs. Let us resolve that America shall prove the exception by creating a healthy and true American feeling, not narrow, bigoted and selfish, but universal and all-embracing, suffering no dictation from abroad or secret plotting at home. God save the country from the wiles of this British influence." [Great applause.]

In alluding to the cry of disunion in the North, the speaker, as a Nothern Democrat, truly says :—

"We of the North do not desire to look upon Mount Vernon, Monticello, the Hermitage and Ashland as foreign ground. No! no! around them the holiest recollections cluster. Our hearts are even now in those sacred graves. We cherish and venerate the memory of those Union-loving men, whose dust consecrates their resting-places, and we mock at the treason of those who would rob us of our interest in those holy spots."

Can we not heartily and fervently approve such sentiments? Can we forget that beneath those tombs sleep all that was mortal of the immortal wisdom and chivalry of the two greatest and most dangerous epochs of the Republic's history—the sponsors at its birth, the defender of its youth, and the eloquent Kentuckian, who dignified its manhood?

The tombs of ordinary men are eloquent; the unknown grave has a mysterious influence; but there are such sermons in these stones as never were shaken out of a disunionist pulpit, and to ever inspect, much less to understand one of which, a dark-lantern could not during secula seculorum.

COURTESIES OF SOVEREIGNS.

The "yellow waistcoat" excitement we presume has not yet abated, and if indeed the article aforesaid was as capable of expansion as Saint Bridget's mantle, it could not have occupied a larger space than has been allowed it in the newspapers. It has covered more miles of type than would encircle the Curragh of Kildare.

It seems however that a great deal of "valuable space" was wasted on this waistcoat. As far as we can see, the dress had nothing at all actually in the matter. It is simply a question of nationality. Granted that Queen Victoria is a very respectable lady, sovereign of England, &c., she is not a whit more respectable than the twenty-seven millions of individual sovereign citizens, or citizen sovereigns of the American Republic. This is a point of which every individual feels the responsibility, and which is thoroughly accorded not only by the people here, but by the recognition of the Republic abroad. Every voting citizen is a sovereign and has in reality a much greater right to rule the country, and does exercise a much greater influence on the government of it, than Queen Victoria does in Great Britain. This, however, is a matter entirely characteristic of the monarchic and republican forms of government respectively.

When a sovereign citizen of America goes to Europe, it is to be hoped he does not leave his birthright behind him, and become the citizen of any country he sees fit to travel through. Should he take it into his head to visit any sovereign of Europe, we do not see that he should put off the garments that pertain to his sovereignty. It is not usual in Europe to do so. When the Emperor of Russia visited England he was not forced to doff his Russian regimentals. When Louis Napoleon paid his respects to Queen Victoria he appeared as the temporary sovereign of France, in French fashion—not as an English valet. When the kings of Belgium, Greece, and Sardinia look in on her Britannic Majesty, it is in the costume pertaining to their distinct nationalities. When the lady and Prince Albert return the French visit, they do not become French, but retain their cockney characteristics of royalty, and were "the Queen" to visit America any day next week, even after the insult to Professor Mahan, no one should or could expect that she would appear dressed in the stars and stripes, as Mary Taylor did when she represented the Goddess of Liberty. No more would be expected of her than what her own country deemed respectable; and in like manner, nothing should be extorted from an American citizen, more than satisfies his own country. As every man in America is an official, actively engaged in managing public affairs, his dress is official; quite as much so as the field-marshal boots of Prince Albert, the embroidered coat of Cardigan, the pelisse of Pelissier, or the wig of Judge Keogh.

Really, if every American who desires to visit a European monarch must do so at the cost of abdicating his sovereignty, and denying the power that confers it—must actually be harnessed in court-livery to the throne, as were the kings to the chariot of Sesostris, then the sooner the Republic is spared the degradation the better.

Signs of the Times.—The Washington jury acquit Herbert of the murder of Keating, while the California Revolutionists only desire they had him, that they might hang him, at the same time that they will not admit more than one per cent. of Irishmen on the Vigilance Committee. We are rather beginning to think that said Vigilance men are of the Wide-Awake order. At the same time, we must admit, that the action of the anti-governmental press with regard to Herbert shows a balance of power.

IRISH RAILWAYS.

A correspondent asks us to elucidate some points regarding Irish railways for him. The subject is not o° very extensive interest here, yet probably may be sufficiently so to warrant the following statement, the principal statistics of which are furnished by the authorized statistics in Thom's Official Directory. Our dates bring us only to 1853. The report of 1851, gave us a list of thirty-one companies, with powers to raise on shares £19,094,675 and to borrow £5,755,643, showing a monetary total of £24,853,318 as a basis of operations.

At the end of June, 1851, the Legislature had authorized the construction of 1,517 miles of railway in Ireland, and the several companies incorporated for this purpose might raise on shares £19,156,700, and borrow £6,321,852—together, £25,478,552. It is ascertained by the latest parliamentary return that has been issued, that the amount raised to the 31st December, 1850, was, on shares £8,406,597, and by loans £2,360,311—total £10,766,-903; and of the amount then borrowed, £130,950 was at 6 per cent., £38,600 at 5 1-2, £1,498,215 at 5, £103,226 at 4 1-2, £376,937 at 4, and £212, 383 at 3 1-2 per cent. The loans on debentures that have been taken or renewed from private sources during 1852 were, however, effected at a considerably lower rate of interest than that previously paid—the average given being about 3 3-4 per cent.; and the interest on the government loan has been during the same period, reduced from 5 to 4 per cent.

The amount expended by the companies to the 30th of June, 1852, was upwards of £13,000,000. The length of railway open for traffic in December, 1852, was 710 miles, and in course of construction about 100 miles. Excluding the Midland Great Western, which is hardly pertinent to the calculation, 275¼ miles of the length open may be considered as north, and 309 miles as south of Dublin. The South-Western and South-Eastern system of lines is distinguished as affording the continuous railway communication, upwards of 280 miles in extent, that now connects the cities of Dublin, Cork, Limerick, and Kilkenny, and the important intermediate districts. The Northern system yet requires the viaduct across the Boyne, to furnish an unbroken road between Dublin and Belfast. The chief features of the railway system in Ireland are—1st, the guage, which is 5 feet 3 inches, and is compulsory—the only diversity now existing is the 4 feet 8½ inches of the Dublin and Kingstown Railway, that line having been constructed previous to the adoption of the broader guage; 2nd, the heavy weight of rails, the permanent character and moderate cost of the works generally, and a singular and almost entire freedom from tunnels; 3rd, the ease and safety of travelling, for it is most creditable to the management of these undertakings to record, that of 5,174,632 passengers conveyed during the year ending 30th June, 1850, only one was injured, and but slightly. The Irish Railways are exempt from passenger duty.

The construction of the lines afforded employment to 19,123 persons in 1850, and 13,610 in 1851, and the number employed upon the lines that were open during the same periods was, respectively, 4,671 and 3,477 persons. In the business of the several companies it is satisfactory to observe a most marked improvement during the year that has closed, and that an increased and increasing dividend, particularly in the principal lines, gives now no undeserved recompense to those who had the enterprise to embark their money in these noble undertakings.

EUROPEAN MOVEMENTS—LATEST BY THE INDIANA.

The arrival of the screw steamer Indiana at Quebec, July 27, with Liverpool dates to the 16th ultimo, brings us no very important intelligence. The affairs of Italy, a memorial from Honduras, and a ministerial crisis, which is always to be expected in Spain, are the only topics approximating to the slightest interest we are furnished with.

If Europe was favored with our pity, we might make an apology for its over-heated lassitude; but as even the thermometer is not chronicled, we needs must take things as they come.

In the House of Commons, Lord John Russell made his anxiously looked for motion of inquiry, demanding to be informed what course the British Government proposed to adopt in reference to the suggestion of the Congress of Paris respecting the affairs of Italy.

Lord Palmerston replied that it was not expedient to make known the intention of the government.

Mr. D'Israeli and others spoke on the subject, when the motion was negatived.

The Government of Honduras has prepared a memorial to the European powers, inviting them to guarantee the right of transit from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

The Duke of Cambridge has been appointed Commander-in-Chief of the army, and Lord Palmerston decorated with the vacant garter.

France.—Nothing can exceed the quiet of the political world at this moment in Paris, and the Journals only reflect the general dullness.

General Pelissier was expected to arrive at Marseilles between the 15th and 25th inst. A banquet will be given to him.

THE REVOLUTION IN CALIFORNIA.

San Francisco, Saturday, June 21, 1856.

To the Editor of the Irish News, N. Y.:

Sir,—I little thought when I closed my communication to you on yesterday, that this day, Saturday, 21st June, would give birth to scenes more startling, more lawless, and more unconstitutional than those which preceded them. After the outrages that had been committed on the 20th, the peaceable and law-abiding inhabitants of the city had in most cases returned to their homes and occupations, hoping that the Vigilance Committee had been sufficiently satiated with blood, but scarcely had the steamer for the Atlantic States cleared the "Golden Gate," when an act of Piracy was committed on the high seas by an armed body of men, acting under the command and control of the Vigilance Committee.

A vessel coming down from Benecia with a quantity of States arms, was overhauled and searched by another vessel in San Puebla Bay, the captain and crew intimidated and made prisoners, the arms belonging to the State forcibly seized, and conveyed to the Vigilance Committee rooms at San Francisco. One of the parties on board the boarded vessel, a Mr. Moloney, who had special charge of the arms, on his arrival at this bay proceeded to the rooms of Dr. Ashe, Navy Agent at this port, and informed him of the facts. The Vigilance Committee having taken the arms into their custody, at once saw the danger of their position and its consequences. They therefore resolved on arresting Moloney, and put him out of the way of bearing testimony against them. They consequently sent a posse of their police to the rooms of Dr. Ashe, where Moloney had proceeded to report the proceedings, and where Judge Terry, of the Supreme Court, had repaired to consult with Dr. Ashe and some others as to the best course to be pursued in relation to the proceedings.

This posse, headed by a man named Hopkins, entered Dr. Ashe's rooms and demanded the surrender of Molony, which was refused, on which Hopkins retreated to the rooms of the Vigilance Committee for a reinforcement. In the mean time, Dr. Ashe, Judge Terry, and a few other gentlemen, determined not to obey the edict of this arbitrary Junta, proceeded to the Armory of the "San Francisco Blues," armed with double-barreled shotguns, but they had not time to reach the armory until this Hopkins had returned with a strong reinforcement and arrested their progress, and again attempted the arrest of Moloney. Judge Terry, who still kept retreating towards the Armory of the "Blues," warned him in the name of the law and of his jurisdiction as Judge of the Supreme Court of the State to desist. Hopkins, however, feeling that he was backed by a party who had set all Law at defiance, laid hold of Judge Terry's gun with one hand, and with the other seized him by the hair, pulling his head backwards. They continued in this position for a few seconds, when a shot was fired by one of the party composing the posse of the Vigilance Committee. Judge Terry instantly drew his knife, and commanded Hopkins to let go his hold or take the consequences; but, backed as Hopkins found himself to be, he only increased his violence, when Judge Terry struck at him with his knife inflicting a deep wound in his neck.

This was the signal for a general onslaught of the bands of foreign mercenaries who compose the fighting department of the Vigilance Committee. About half-past 3 o'clock, P. M., the bell they had erected on the top of their building tolled out the alarm. The streets were instantly crowded with eager and excited men; some running to the Vigilance Committee rooms; others, who were faithful to their obligations, rushing to the armories of the various military companies to which they had attached themselves. These, however, being composed chiefly of laborers and industrious men, and who, by the instructions of the general order from head-quarters of the militia, had continued at their usual employments, were slow in gathering. The Vigilance Committee were composed chiefly (I mean the fighting department) of men following light occupations, viz., Frenchmen, who keep boot-blacking stands and old clothes renovating establishments; Dutchmen, keeping Lager Bier cellars, and German Jews who keep ready made clothes stores and all sorts of "cheap John" goods; add to those a number of "genteel young gentlemen," who live on and about the various lunch tables of our city were all on hand in an instant, and furnished with arms from the rooms of the Vigilance Committee. In half an hour after it was a melancholy sight to behold the streets of a free city of this free Republic trod by armed mercenaries in defiance of the Laws and Constitution.

How mortifying to look at those men, and to hear their various words of command, given in French, Dutch, and long nasal Yankee dialect; but there they were, armed to the teeth, and occupying the principal entrances to the main streets in and about the Plaza, with rows of men, with fixed bayonets or drawn sabres, and consequently the militia could not get to their armories, the principal of which were soon surrounded. That of the "Blues," where Dr. Ashe and Judge Terry had taken refuge, and that of the "Jackson Guards," where a considerable quantity of arms were stored. The others were taken in detail and robbed of their arms, with the exception of the "National Lancers," whose depot being a short distance out of town, and the company being known as a well drilled, numerous, and effective one, they avoided attacking.

[Our correspondent sends us the details, but as they have already appeared in the morning journals, we need not publish them.]

You no doubt, Sir, have in your eventful career witnessed scenes of both anarchy and despotism; but never in its most despotic form did despotism rule with a more despotic hand. The oldest, most respected, and most peaceable citizen could not even pass the streets on the way to his private house, store, or office, without having a bayonet pointed at his breast, and asked for the pass-word. To furnish all the incidents of that tumultuous 21st would be impossible in the brief sketch I intend to give. It was indeed a reign of terror. None knew where this Robespiere

(Continued on page 269.)

Literature.

PERSONAL RECOLLECTIONS.

A TRIP TO KILLARNEY—THE DEVIL'S PUNCH BOWL AND O'DONOHUE'S PRISON.

In the autumn of 1845, I was one of a party, which set out from Cork to Killarney. The party was thirteen in number. The ladies and gentlemen were equally divided. All were young, and the majority handsome. The Bantry day-coach, chartered for the occasion, rattled us briskly out of the coach-yard in Pembroke street, at eight o'clock in the morning. The weather was charming. Not a speck dimmed the beautiful blue sky. The gentlest breeze played with the smoke which lazily rolled itself out of the chimneys. The dust lay dead with the dew on the pavement, and out on the road all the way to Bandon. It was the mildest, sweetest, loveliest morning I ever breathed.

In the very heart of Tasmania—away up in the great central rocky ridge of that island—I have seen the woods and waters, the flowers and mountains, waking up, as it were, into fresh life and grandeur, sparkling as though they had never sparkled, towering as though they had never towered, rustling their leaves, and giving forth their beauty, as if in the first breath, and to the first hymn of creation. The beauty, and the perfume, and the quiet splendor of the expanding scene has been to me a rapture. Exile and solitude became a joy under such influences and visions. So gentle, delicious, noble was it all, I fancied often that life there, even though it were in chains, would be a repose, and death a consoling glory. Even so, the memory of that morning I drove to Bantry, rose up, a beauteous and radiant spirit, between me and the soothing fragrances and splendors of that Tasmanian mountain-lake, and my heart broke into tears.

I have galloped through the dark green palm, banana and cocoa groves, stretching away—dense sombre masses, and of luscious fruit and luxuriant foliage—from the old white towers of Pernambuco, and have seen the gorgeous sun turning into liquid gold the dripping dew upon the broad leaves, and the slime of lizards on the trees and stones, and the dull deep waters, here and there, in the midst of the sweet forests of Olinda. In the full beams of that sun there went up like frankincense in a great shadowy cathedral, lit with colored windows, the sweetness of the orange, and fruits still richer, and the warmth of the ruby earth in a dense cloud of exhalation; and countless wings of bird and insect broke, like ripples on a sunny sea, through the mist, and heaven and earth seemed to dissolve and blend in one vast sea of glory—a sea of smoking myrrh and flitting stars. Even so, and even then, there came to me the memory of that morning. I heard the Shandon bells pealing out clearly through the sweet sky, which won my heart on the road to Bantry. That memory, even there and then, was musical to me as the whisper of a loving friend, and it came between me and the scene which circled me with a girdle, as it were of emeralds and diamonds, like a soft picture of the eternal happiness we pray for, and in the midst of the enchantment, I felt chained to Ireland, my knees upon her holy turf, and my eyes fixed upon her ruins, and the traditions and the names that break, like sunbeams, through them.

And here—here where I have fixed my home—here where my future has taken root, and the fruit it sheds, be it sour or be it sweet, must fall—here where so many of my sorrows have been made bright, as the darkest wave swells into lustre whilst the moon looks out upon it—here where I have been the favored one of many a loud ovation, and a republican citizenship offers me the honors of freedom—even here I cannot help thinking of the roads I've trudged and wheeled along in Ireland—even here, amid the roar of the Niagara down-fall of a thousand Lakes and Rivers, and the calm cold sublimities of the Sierra Nevada, and the sparkling picturesqueness of Lakes Champlain and George—even here I cannot, with all these scenes crowding on me, shut out the memory of that quiet beauteous morning I drove to Bantry. Such memories come to us in sorrow, and in joy, in prosperity and in beggary. In the more affluent condition, they purify the insipidity and grossness which wealth accumulates. In the less propitious state, they illumine the darkness of poverty, and turn to gladness, like hymns heard over Bethlehem, the wailings of the sorrowful, homeless, and outcast. Were I opulent, I feel that these memories would prevent me being heartless. Being otherwise, they cheer me in my labors, stretching before me, from horizon to horizon, a beautiful heaven to look upon, even when I am in desolation, in agony, in a dungeon, vilified by those who know me not, or with a stiff quill, in this hot season, in an office like an oven, laboring, like a hod-man, for my bread. These Irish Memories are to me, life, light, and music. Without them my life were dull, dark, and voiceless. With them, even the wilderness becomes a garden, and the solitude a chorus of glad voices.

The night had set in an hour before we reached Bantry. It was very dark. The blackest rain was falling. Only now and then, as we entered the town along the beach, were there glimpses to be had of the waters and the mountains. The moon shining through the ragged clouds as they occasionally broke asunder, lit up patches of the whitest foam, and showed us, here and there, a strip of sand, a rock, or the masts and rigging of some fishing craft rocking violently at anchor. But through the deep darkness there ever came the roar of the waves, and the booming of the thunder away beyond Mount Gabriel and Knocknaveagh.

Early next morning we were on board the beautiful yacht belonging to Jerry O'Connell, of Beach-farm, standing with a fair wind for Glengariff. A piper accompanied us. Less noble in appearance than Ganzey, he was gifted with a larger fund of humor, and with equal precision and rapidity could touch off his notes.

Our day at Glengariff was all sunshine and song. We rambled about the woods, visited the Earl of Bantry's cottage, climbed the mountains, and drank goat's milk at the foot of Hungry Hill. The description of this mountain in Lever's O'Donohue, is glorious. It is from the summit of it that Mark O'Donohue looks out in the light of a beautiful dawn, counting the ships of the French squadron as they majestically move up the bay, and with their broadsides wake the echoes of Caha and Slieve Miskisk. About three o'clock we put off in boats from the main land to one of the small islands immediately opposite it. It is known as Bere Island. On landing, we found a delicious cold dinner laid out amongst the furze and wild flowers of the island. The captain of the yacht had seen to that. The piper played us to dinner, and during it helped to drown the clatter of plates and spoons, and the brisk drawing of corks. Of the latter, however, there wasn't as much as one might expect. A huge brown jar of cold punch reduced the demand for wine at the feast. It was well it held such a supply, for the drain was enormous. The ladies, of course, merely tried it. A thimble-full was all the darlings could be persuaded to take. Even that was consented to out of courtesy to the gentlemen, and disappeared under protest.

The eldest couple of the party were a Mr. and Mrs. Jenkins, of Bristol, England. Both were a little advanced in life. It was autumn with them. Their leaves had not exactly withered, but their greenness was gone. A mellowness of tint pervaded the good souls, softening the gay coloring of the groups, in the midst of which they stood like tombstones, embellished with cherubs, and wreathed with flowers.

The likeness is comparative only. The matured couple were livelier than tombstones, by a good deal. Jenkins himself was social in the extreme. He was fascinated with the piper, and enchanted with the punch. The brown jar was constantly at his elbow that evening on Bere Island. When the time came for us to go on board the yacht, it was impossible for him to recollect whereabouts he had put his hat. A rumor prevailed that it had gone out to sea. It was a white beaver hat, turned up with green cloth. Our coxswain saw something answering this description drifting away pretty quickly from the island towards the end of dinner. Mr. Jenkins returned to Bantry, his head in a silk handkerchief. His wife being very delicate (in fact she was travelling through Ireland for the benefit of her health), lay on the sofa in the cabin the entire of the trip home. The circumstance must have been overlooked, for the piper all the way back played more uproariously than he had done in the morning, and there was dancing before the mast, and Jenkins, with his jovial face as red as his turban, kept close to the jar. That jar was near being the death of him.

The last evening of our visit to Killarney (we were there for more than a fortnight) the ladies proposed that Mr. Jenkins should be brought to trial for several social misdemeanors, and, if found guilty, should be punished appropriately. Ever since the pic-nic on Bere Island, the frolic and feasting had been kept up with the gayest elasticity of spirit. During the day, in the presence of the ladies, everything was elegantly subdued. The smoking was moderate. There were very few glasses of dark or pale Sherry, or any other sort of wine drunk. At the foot of the Eagle's Nest, or Sullivan's Cascade, we had a drop, once or twice, of the Poteen which the bare-footed, beautiful, dark-eyed young girls of the mountains brought down to us, with a wooden cup for us to drink the fragrant distillation out of, and the whortle-berries to sweeten our breath, as they said, after the dew. But with this exception, Father Matthew himself could have had no fault to find.

In a beautiful six-oared boat, belonging to the Victoria Hotel, with Spillane as our bugler, we swept in those bright summer days, from sunrise to sundown, all over those glorious waters—sometimes in deep shade under Torc mountain—sometimes in the clear sparkling light of Glena bay, with those vast walls of purple rock so greenly wooded from base to peak towering to the white, feathery clouds above us—at other times, resting on our dripping oars in the still deep passage between the Upper and Middle Lakes, with straining eyes watching some solitary eagle floating upwards from the Toomies until it faded off into a speck between us and the sun. Or, perhaps, it was to the top of Mangerton we were bound. In which case, mounted on our Kerry ponies—the shaggiest and sturdiest little roadsters in the world—we made the dust and stones fly behind us, and from left to right to the ditch on either side. One day, I recollect, we rattled to Aghadoe. Another we spent going through the Gap of Dunloe and the Black Valley, to Lord Brandon's cosey thatched cottage, at the head of the Upper Lake. Two days were given up to Muckruss, the sweetest and most beautiful ruin that wins to its decaying strength the ivy from the Irish sod. As that ruin is in its decay, its beauty and its gloom, so has Ireland been for years. It is a shadowy place of dreams, revered names, the poetry of sorrow, and the prayer of hope.

Mr. Jenkins looked at everything, even at Muckruss, with a smiling eye. He was a jovial Englishman, as I have already intimated, and sustained his hilarious mood at the one high pitch through every scene. Possessed of a large fortune, without any incumbrance or care in life, with only a wife to look after (or to look after him), and surrounded as he was at Killarney, and had been, ever since that day at Glengariff, by the merriest and brightest young party—by a flashing ring of the beauty, goodness, wit and manhood of Cork—no wonder he kept in good humor. No wonder he was genial and festive. No wonder he escorted the ladies in ecstasies all through their rambles and rides, perpetually carrying their sunshades or shawls, handing them (sometimes in his benevolent arms lifting them) in and out of boats, lifting them into side-saddles, tenderly extricating them when the gallop was over, paying them innumerable minute attentions at table, and all the time in full bloom, laughing, chatting, trying to crack jokes, and whether he failed or succeeded, becoming more than half cracked himself. No wonder that he joined the gentlemen in every fun going, and that when the ladies had retired, he might have been seen out of doors, on the edge of the lake, puffing his cigar, tossing off his brandy and water, smiling as usual, shouting at intervals, kicking up his heels with delight, on the point of losing a fresh hat every night, and in the most glorious style doing his best to identify himself with Ireland and the Irish.

No wonder, then, he was brought to trial, the last day of our excursion, for making too free with the Devil's own Punch-bowl, and that, being convicted by a fair and impartial jury of the ladies, he was sentenced to be conveyed at midnight to O'Donohue's prison in the Lower Lake, in company with a mysterious brown jar and a box of cigars, together with the Judge, the Counsel for the defence and prosecution, and the Witnesses against him, (there were none in his favor, for they were all his accomplices,) and Ganzey the piper.

I had the honor of being Mr. Jenkins' counsel on that trying occasion, and having taken full notes of the proceedings, will publish them next week.

THE GOD-CHILD OF JULY.

A BIRTH-DAY ODE.

On the middle day of the middle month,
Of the Heavenly-fashioned summer;
When the vines were sealing the antique eaves,
And earth lay in shade under motionless leaves,
And the sap of the sod,
By the blessing of God,
Ran leaping and romping through branch-woven bowers,
Was tittering in tendrils and laughing in flowers:
Like young happy children, love-linked to each other,
Who spring from to brighten,
And clinging to, lighten
With ever fresh pride, the rich breast of their mother.

In such a midday of the middle month
Of the golden-dowered summer,
My better angel was sent from above,
Born to the earth with her mission of love.
And Earth, with the favors of rich July,
Arrayed the gentle comer.

The mingled radiance of the illumined space
Centred on her face;
With the blue of the skies
Were tinct her eyes;
And the staid and holy air
Filled her with prayer.
The fruitage of the earth
Gave her ripe mirth,
And the myriad floral dyes
Numberless shades of pleasantries.
The mighty oak outstretched its arms at length,
Standing strong sponsor for her strength;
And the trustful vine
Taught her to entwine
Her soul around the strong to beautify it:
The conscious heat of noon lent her full power to defy it.

The freshened dawn, in night-escaped security,
Thrilled her fresh heart with clarion tones of purity:
The evening breeze
Brought her revivifying ease;
The half-parched streams, with mutual assistance,
Made a flush river, to teach her mind persistence.
And crowds of wealthy humble bushes quaint,
Gave her their unambitious birth-right—self-restraint.
The Ash upon the mountain's rugged side
Told her in life and liberty to pride;
And the Yew, bending its melancholy head,
Taught her to weep the dead.

The wild plants of the wood,
Showed her the weal of solitude,
And preached of modesty in their fresh enamels.
The lightning, leaping from its ebon trammels,
Showed her, as it unfurled,
The electric lord and servant of the world.
The rapid thunder, that in hot July
Strikes earth with all the ordnance of the sky,
Rolled its unseen artilleries
Through the black gorges of those weird Cordilleras
Of cloud, which mocks imagination—
Poured its mysterious majesty of sound
The god-child of its favored month around,
And woke the drowsy day to hearty acclamation!

Ah me, so tended was this tender creature,
Within by heavenly, without by earthly nature,
She grew a being strong, without alloy
To bless in sorrow, to sustain in joy—
In wealth be calm, in poverty be rich,
Until one questioned with her, which was which!
Within the world, she is so much above it,
She lessens not herself, nor it, to love it.
With faith surrounding, leading all things human,
At once a loving wife and trustful woman.

The anniversary of her natal day
Is rung, by the chimes, to the times passed away.

I pray of Heaven, which vouchsafed to me
The guardianship of such condensed variety,
As the dear Past, to let the Future be Suffused with Love, sublimed by Piety.

July 15th.

A committee has been formed at Florence to raise one hundred thousand shares of five paoli each ($50,000), for the purpose of purchasing from the sculptor, Pio Fedi, his celebrated group of "The death of Polyxena," lately completed, and worthy, according to connoisseurs, of the chisel of Michael Angelo, in order to erect it on some public place of the capital. With this sum it is also proposed to repair a great historical injustice, by raising a statue at Leghorn to the memory of Americus Vespucius.

SPANISH GENIUS AND ENGLISH TALENT.

CALDERON; his Life and Genius; with Specimens of his Plays. By RICHARD CHENEVIX TRENCH, B.D. Author of "The Study of Words," &c. Redfield.

POEMS. By RICHARD CHENEVIX TRENCH, B.D. Redfield.

The Rev. Mr. Trench is a diligent scholar, an agreeable critic, an elegant writer, and altogether an accomplished gentleman. From the evidence given in his various works we should say, that both as a man and an author, he is not great, but good. Never daring, he is always agreeable; and never profound, he is easy of access. He interests a reader, but does not command a study. He is one from whose prose labors much usefulness and information springs; and who, in giving the fruit of his scholarship, is generous in the elegant variety he offers; and dignified with the consciousness that he has an amount of good things to bestow.

The essay on Calderon is the best offspring of Mr. Trench's erudition, taste and equable judgment. In these days of rabid polemical prejudices, of ethics torn into shreds by rival "theologians," when a difference of religion "makes all the difference in the world,'" and when the representatives of all shades of belief loudly boast of being the inheritors of that wild and bitter and demoniac spirit which rendered the primal feuds of the church so horribly historic—in such days it evinces no little courage on the part of a Church of England divine to do justice to the most Catholic poet of the most Roman era of Spain, the gorgeous champion and relentless guardian of the Faith. Sismondi called Calderon "the poet of the Inquisition," yet he does not, to Mr. Trench's appreciation, show cause why the latter should not hail the Spaniard as a "Great Christian Poet." Between the revilers and the admirers of Calderon's genius, Trench takes a judicious and dispassionate stand-point, with his face turned to the more congenial pages of the latter. "You may bring a nosegay to the town," quoth a Persian proverb, "but you cannot bring the garden." So, although Mr. Trench does not present his volume as a nosegay from the rich garden of Calderon's genius, the work may well be received as the effect, at least, of the author's pastime amid the wealthy fragrance and luxuriant profusion of the Spanish poet's growth.

If the English critic does not to the full regard Calderon, with the brothers Schlegel, as "a great and divine master," who not merely expressed but solved the riddle of life—as one to stand beside and share the epic glory and dramatic majesty of Homer, Dante and Shakspere—if he deems it necessary and just to temper the excessive zeal of the poet's great German admirers; he also, we need scarcely add, takes a much higher view of his mind and manner than Salfi, Sismondi, Hallam and others, who beheld in him but an adroit playwright, a squanderer of rhetorical flowers, a panderer to the worst superstitions of his countrymen, and who, moreover, can never read him but with indignation or disgust.

Calderon had the rare fortune to be rabidly attacked and grandly defended, which, considering the parties engaged, we regard as a wholesome evidence of the great ability of the subject under discussion. The English had not very much to say on the matter, to which fact, no doubt, and an evident desire to do justice, we are indebted for the book before us. It will be read with satisfaction, and will carry the reader into the author's estimate of one, who to say the least, was the greatest poet of a once great empire. Mr. Trench's extensive study of European Literature, richly illustrates his text. Upon it he, in a congenially Catholic manner, treating of "the last great Romanist poet," beads a very rosary of learning. He is wealthy in "distinguished allusions" to his hero—from those by the German Schlegels to the "inexpressible wonder and delight" with which Shelley viewed the "ideal dreams," which, as he said himself, "were perpetually tempting him to throw over their perfect and glowing forms the gray veil of his own words." This assiduity of Mr. Trench made us notice what in a less careful performance we would not, probably, regard as an omission, to-wit, the allusions to Calderon given by Humboldt in his "Cosmos," as extracts from unpublished letters of Ludwig Tiéck to the great philosopher. Tiéck pays a fine tribute to the Spanish poetry of the Calderonian epoch, at the same time that his thorough appreciation of its beauties does not dim his critical acumen to the allegorical conceits with which it was heavily laden. We supply a passage to those who feel sufficient interest in the theme as to possess the book.

"At the period when Spanish Comedy had attained its fullest development," says my friend Ludwig Tieck, one of the profoundest critics of Dramatic Literature, "we often find in the romanesque and lyrical metre of Calderon and his contemporaries, dazzlingly beautiful descriptions of the sea, mountains, gardens, and sylvan valleys, but these are always so interwoven with allegorical allusions and adorned with so much artificial brilliancy that we feel we are reading harmoniously rhythmical descriptions, recurring continually with only slight variations, rather than as if we could breathe the free air of nature, or feel the reality of the mountain breath and the valley's shade."—Cosmos, vol. II.

The chapter entitled "Calderon in England," is devoted to a sketch of the adoption of some of the poet's writings into the English language. The author's task here was not difficult, as the Spanish poet, though in a few instances introduced by Dryden and others of his day, was barely recognised in England until very lately. In the category of those who have attempted to popularize the poet in an English dress, the name of Denis Florence McCarthy appears, but without that full meed of "honorable mention" which, in the opinion of others not less capable of judging than Mr. Trench, he is fairly entitled to. However, as the critic of McCarthy's Calderon is also a translator of specimens from the same poet, probably the former is commended as much as can reasonably be expected "under the circumstances."

Coming more immediately to Mr. Trench's claims on us as a "Poet," we differ very much from the unmeasured terms used by the American editor prefacing the collection before us. It is there broadly stated that "he is one of the truest and best poets of the day," and the Christian Remembrancer is quoted to show that "he was born a poet." Now Mr. Trench must be saved from his transatlantic friends. If the Remembrancer was not born a poet, he assuredly will die one, if he continues to body forth "the forms of things unknown" in such a manner. The five syllables quoted exhibit him as possessing that "imagination all compact," which, in the opinion of the greatest poet of all time, is typical of his race. Mr. Spencer will be for showing up Mr. Trench as the truest and best poet of any time, for if he is one of the best and truest poets of this day—a day in the Nineteenth Century!—which philanthropists so much exhort the world to believe is the greatest age it has ever looked out upon, of course the author of "Justin Martyr" will be martyred by his friends to insure him a doubtful notoriety. But we must not write thus, lest our readers may confound our condemnation of Mr. Trench's friend with a wholesale condemnation of Mr. Trench himself, which is not our intention either to make, or to solicit.

Mr. Trench is a highly accomplished versifier. He has ease, elegance of diction, music of rhythm, happy trains of thought, appositeness of illustration, and almost every felicity, with an evident polished facility for making well turned stanzas. He thinks poetically. This sums up the gentleman's powers. He can be read with much pleasure, and the cultivators of Belles Lettres should peruse, at least, a dozen pages of him, as a specimen of the elegant useless school. He has no originality, force or passion. His lines suggested by the war, named "Alma" and "Balaklava," are to our mind as dead failures as the whole Crimean expedition. They contain half a dozen fine lines, but they will not suffice for the exigencies of the themes. There is pomp of words, and no lack of music in their composition; but we have no blood or bone or sinew in them. They neither shiver us with passion, or warm us with fiery indignation. We never grow cold for an instant while reading them, which we take to be a bad omen for the poet's power. As we said before the Rev. scholar is a good writer, has much taste, tenderness, and talent, but is by no means great.

AMERICAN TALENT IN ENGLAND.

American Literature in England: Coggeshall's History of the Privateers—Hildreth's Japan—Minor American Minstrels—Nationality—Miss Warner—Mrs. Barney Williams.

Our late files of the London Athenæum contain some notices of American authors and actors, from which we purpose to glean a few opinions. Respectable English periodicals are not quite so sarcastic on "Brother Jonathan's" literary leanings and labors as in the days gone by, even when Washington Irving held their ears patient to the dulcet echoes of a Transatlantic Goldsmith's voice, and Brockden Brown, with a more subtle metaphysical genius prepared the way for the English reception of an Edgar Poe. Within the last quarter of a century American genius has, like the democratic spirit of the land, forced itself, and continues to force itself, still deeper, and with an admonitory importance, on the ear of Europe, which is constrained to listen as much through curiosity as homage. Bryant, Longfellow, Bancroft, Prescott, Hawthorne, Alice Carey, and, within the year, John Lathrop Motley and others, made marks on the literature of the English tongue which English readers cannot afford to overlook, and English critics are eager to acknowledge. They have been conquered into it; and the pleasure of recording their views of some American books of the day, does not lose its interest from a thorough conviction of this fact.

The Athenæum is a spirited, well-written and generally honest critical journal. The promptness with which it reviews such American works as come within its grasp is another evidence of the position attained by the literature of the Republic. Thus a few weeks back it gives us a leading review on a work which we have barely heard mention of even in New-York — the History of American Privateers and Letters of Marque, by George Coggeshall. Considering the subject treated of, and the many reasons, in perusing the work, why an English reviewer would feel the blood rising to his forehead at the disgrace of his national flag, Mr. Coggeshall's work is treated with considerable grace. The reviewer good-humoredly remarks, that he might "pluck a crow with the skipper (Mr. Coggeshall) for his tone about the British," but he evidently thinks it would not be a profitable discussion. It is a "curious book," he says, and seems to be "the joint production of an old skipper and a bookseller's hack. It smells of tar and paste, and at once suggests a marlinspike and a pair of scissors." Of privateers the writer has, as he well may have, a "holy" horror. He regards them as "being to Blake and Benbow what Claude Duval and Turpin are to Prince Rupert's Dragoons." At the present juncture, the Athenæum, in unison with more political London papers, does well to recommend to Englishmen a study of "how many privateers managed to get abroad during the American war, and to do execution, in spite of our blockading squadrons?" Concluding his article, the writer admits that the privateers "were generally fast sailers, and were well and dashingly handled." Paul Jones at Whitehaven, in 1778, and Sam. C. Reid at Fayal, in 1814, is tolerably conclusive evidence of the writer's veracity on this point. "This book, with all its oddities of form and taste, deserves a place of its own in nautical literature." Not having seen the work, we cannot actually say the Athenæum is right or wrong; but it is almost conclusive evidence of its being remarkably worthy, when, considering its subject, so strong a recommendation of it is given.

Mr. Richard Hildreth's "Japan as it Was and Is," does not meet with so well written or so prominent a welcome. It is regarded as "scarcely in any sense original" or "systematic." It is a compilation from the memoirs of travellers from Kœmpher to Perry. "Mr Hildreth's historical sketch, though always readable, is disconnected and incomplete," still it is looked upon as an "intelligent summary."

Two volumes of Poetry published in America are reviewed under the head of "Minor Minstrels." Mr. Thos. W. Parsons' Poems [Ticknor & Fields, Boston,] met with a brief but appreciative notice. The author is "a man of taste and learning, who can write good flowing verse, scintillating with humor, national, yet not vulgar." The author, in the Athenæum's opinion, "can rhyme you an Italian legend almost as playful and musical as 'Beppo.' He can imitate Skelton," also, "in as clever a jumble of verse as any one need wish to laugh over." Good for Parsons!

Winter Studies in the Country (Parry & McMillan, Phil.,) is handled less kindly. The critic strikes at a necessity which is so often overlooked by the young American poet—his nationality. He reminds the writer that if he is national, he may "be worth the carriage," but "if he babbles only of green fields and blue skies and strives to pass for an Englishman, his book is generally little better than paper damaged by the injudicious use of printing ink." Here the English critic is right. The majority of works issuing from the press here are more typical of colonial than distinct republican existence. In a work entitled "America, by River and Rail," by William Ferguson, the English reader is informed that "Miss Warner (the Elizabeth Wetherell of Queechy) is not young? She is tall and thin, and very peculiar looking—very good, which you can see in her face." She is, however, a "favorite author." Of the work, the Athenæum says, "oblivion now awaits it."

Of Mrs. Barney Williams and her peculiarities, we have the following discriminating notice, which shows that the Londoners can even appreciate the hearty eccentricities of the Yankee character:—

"Mr. and Mrs. Barney Williams, the American performers, appeared on Monday, and as they are understood to have been the original representatives, in the United States, of the characters lately introduced at Drury Lane to the English public by Mr. and Mrs Florence, considerable interest was excited. The first piece was called 'The Customs of the Country,' substantially the same though shorter and less extravagant, with that of the 'Yankee Housekeeper,' previously enacted. Mrs Barney Williams and Mrs. Florence are, we believe, sisters; but their styles, though similar in many respects, are essentially different. The latter is a caricaturist, and the same piece in which both appear, was evidently written-up for her in an exaggerated vein, and with absurd situations not to be found in the version now produced. The Yankee Girl from Down East, is here simply called "Melissa," and Mrs. Barney Williams contents herself with a moderate degree of eccentricity, perfectly consistent with a natural expectation. The character in her hands is rather comic than farcical, and the delineation, though less funny, takes higher rank as an artistic product. We have formed, indeed, no inconsiderable opinion of Mrs. Williams as an actress, who might be tried in parts more legitimate. She is tall, of a good figure, handsome, and evidently intellectual."—Athenæum, July 5th.

So ends our English notes of American notabilities for the present.

THE RUINS AND ROUND TOWERS OF CLONMACNOISE.

The gratifying perusal of a complimentary allusion, in a recent number of the Irish News, to "the Round Tower of Clonmacnoise"—an object associated with my earliest conceptions of the beauty and grandeur of the historic memorials of fatherland—has recalled to my memory many a boyish gambol within the "long shadow" flung by O'Rourk's Tower across the sparkling bosom of the dear old Shannon. Among the reminiscences thus evoked, there are those both of joy and sadness—of youth with its dancing hopes and bounding aspirations: of maturer years with their vanished dreams and dreary realities. But let them pass!

Looming up among a thousand other recurring memories of Clonmacnoise, one incident, in connection—not with O'Rourk's Tower, but with that of McCarthy, its less gigantic but not less beautiful neighbor—which occurred some twenty years ago, comes back over my mind with all the romantic singularity of its attendant circumstances; and these, with your permission, I shall briefly record upon a page of the Irish News. This occurrence—which I will designate an "Evil Omen in the bridal hour," cast at the time a shade of mysterious gloom over more than one young heart (perhaps not altogether free from those feelings of superstitious awe which the scenes around them, with all their legendary associations, were well calculated to produce). They hailed it as an evil omen, and it too soon became invested with a melancholy local interest, as such.

As many of your readers, however, must necessarily be unacquainted with the character and topography of these scenes—which could hardly fail to deepen the solemnity of the occasion to be described—I take the liberty of transcribing a brief passage, in description, from an Irish tale of which I have been charged with the authorship, published in the New-York Sunday Courier of the 20th August, 1854:

"Of the numerous ecclesiastical ruins, with their traditional associations and hallowed memories, which hold so prominent a place among the architectural antiquities of Ireland, few possess a deeper interest, or occupy a position more characteristic of the retiring and unobtrusive piety of their venerable founders, than those of the "Seven Churches" of Clonmacnoise, immediately on the verge of the beautiful Shannon, midway between Banagher and Athlone.

"This heterogeneous assemblage of broken temples, mouldering aisles, sculptured arches, massive crosses, priestless and mutilated altars, thunder-stricken towers and time-worn tombs—surrounded by a melancholy accumulation of fresh green graves, all mingled in promiscuous desolation and decay—overlooks the "deep and ample stream" from the sloping angle of a naked and projecting headland; and for more than a thousand years these hoary structures have flung their evening shadows across the sullen flood that rolls beneath them. Here those twin Titans of a still remoter period, the Towers of O'Rourk and of McCarthy, in solitary exemption from the devastations of time, and clad in their ivy-robes of everlasting green, serenely lift their unscathed heads above the surrounding wreck of ages, gloomily revelling in that impenetrable mystification, which, in spite of the researches of a Petrie and of a Dunoyer, still hangs around their remote and undated origin. Thrice did the sacred treasures of Clonmacnoise become a prey to the Scandinavian marauder, till upon the sacrilegious head of Gill O'Comothan, their chief, a just retribution was wrecked at the hands of a royal ancestor of the exiled patriot O'Brien. But her treasures, thus repeatedly rifled, still contained enough, with the addition of her sacred utensils and sacerdotal wardrobe, to tempt the avidity of more recent invaders; and from the days of the second Henry to those of the sixth Edward, the tramp of the plundering Briton repeatedly resounded within her walls. The crowning atrocity however, was reserved for a despoiler still more unsparing than these, and the elaborately-chiselled doorway of the Great Cathedral, still bears the marks of wanton and profitless desecration at the hands of the fanatical minions of Elizabeth, when the adjacent Castle of Athlone was the headquarters of "my Lord of Essex." Here stands the ruined convent of the pious Dorgirville.

"All tenantless, save to the cranying wind," there is the sepulchral chapel of the O'Connors of Connaught, while the tomb of the monarch Roderick—like that of the bride of O'Meliglan—crumbles in the same sanctuary with those of Saints Kieran, Tegernach, and Murzall, and all are alike indistinguishable in the general jumble of revolving centuries.

"Although the far-stretching Abbey lands of this once celebrated stronghold of genuine piety and classic lore, comprehended in the days of its glory (contemporaneous with the opposing Vandalism of a rude and benighted era) an extent of territory which might furnish more than one modern principality, yet all that is now recognizable (as such) of the ancient monastic domain, is an inconsiderable tract of sterile crag and alluvial sward, immediately surrounding and bearing the historic name of that

"Noble wreck in ruinous perfection."

"A semi-circular barrier of wild and irregular hills, resting its converging extremities upon the tortuous water-line of the placid Shannon, encloses with a double chain of Nature's roughest forging, the romantic region which claims for its metropolis that "city of the dead," within whose consecrated precincts "the rude forefathers of the hamlet sleep.'

So much for the ancient prestige and present topography of Clonmacnoise, and now for our incident of the "evil omen."

The last autumnal leaf had disappeared from the rifted oak—the sole survivor of its sylvan kindred—whose aged arms swayed drearily above the ruins of Temple Finian, and nearly grasped the rustling ivy in which the screech-owl had found a refuge from the storm—far up against the lee of McCarthy's Tower. The valley of the Shannon, from Lough-Allan to Killaloe, lay submerged beneath the early inundations of November ; the winds, as if rehearsing the dirges of the dead, (less loud than mournful,) wailed in their most unearthly tones through roofless chancel and sepulchral chamber, and chiming in with the funereal chorus, the waves of the swollen river broke in spray and foam over the dilapidated boundary of the old cemetery of Clonmacnoise. Hark! the report of a gun : its deepening intonations rise upon the awakened echoes of ruined abbey and hollow tomb —intruder, pass on ; you little dream, that amid the deathlike solitude of that evening scene, there is one kneeling within the area of those reverberations, whose cheek was paled, and whose beautiful young form shook and trembled at the ominous though familiar sound !

Some years anterior to the period already indicated, a gentleman named Johnston had become the purchaser of a tract comprising the most interesting portion of the ancient abbey lands of Clonmacnoise, as including within its borders the scenes already so imperfectly described. A lover of seclusion, highly distinguished for taste, refinement, and antiquarian lore ; an accomplished sportsman and deadly assailant of the game—Captain Johnston was just the man to appreciate the inducements and advantages of that wild and romantic location.

A costly mansion, of fair proportions, suited to the exercise of a boundless hospitality, soon arose in contiguity to the old Ruins that he loved. . . . .

Than his daughter, (Matilda Ann, if I rightly remember,) then just verging to womanhood, a fairer human flower did not bloom upon the banks of the Shannon ; and never was beauty of Anglo-Saxon blood and faith guarded by a sterner interdiction than that which pointed to the affiliations of race and creed, and forbid her to love, except under the sanctions they afforded. Vain, however, were the dogmas of that cold and sectional philosophy! The favored candidate for her affections was a scion of the old Milesian stock of the west ; and young Walter Kelly still clung to the too-often-persecuted worship for which his forefathers had died. This attachment to the altar of his sires was far from disparaging him in her view ; and his position in the land of his lineage was not inferior to her own. Their love was reciprocal, and not having before their eyes the fear either of conflicting theologies or parental interdicts, they determined to link their fortunes in an honorable though clandestine alliance.

Upon that dreary November evening, a small boat, impelled by a single pair of oars, in the hands of a lusty Shannonite, and bearing from the direction of Athlone, might be seen, slowly laboring against a heavy swell and gusty headwind, and cautiously approaching the Ruins of Clonmacnoise. As her tiny prow touched the shore, two individuals, her only human freight with the exception of her single oarsman, stepped hastily from the gunwale of the ricketty craft, and as if anxious to escape observation, reconnoitred the sullen scenes around them, for a few apparently anxious moments, and then, crossing the old stile leading into the cemetery, immediately disappeared within the doorway communicating between the ruined chancel of St. Finian's church, and the ancient Round Tower, which, as Dr. Walsh very correctly remarks, "still forms an integral part of the building." Without waiting to picture contrarieties of contour, one was Walter Kelly, the other was a Franciscan friar, from the monastery of Athlone. They entered a gloomy circular chamber, some seven feet in diameter, with an elevation, unbroken by floor or ceiling, of more than eight times that measuremant, with a conical roof closing at the top, and only lighted by three narrow fissures, at least fifty feet above their heads. This was the interior of McCarthy's Tower, and there the fair Matilda, with one faithful female attendant, was waiting to receive them.

Need the object of such a meeting be explained ? Their young affections were already consecrated to each other, and in what more fitting place could Religion confer her sanction upon the contract of congenial hearts, than within those ruined sanctuaries, still beautiful even in their forlornness and decay.

And there they knelt, at the feet of the "holy man"—the youthful groom and his affianced bride. The scene, as their hands, like their hearts, were linked within the gloom of that narrow chamber, with the winds and the waves chanting their bridal anthem, was one of more than ordinary interest and solemnity.

One thought still darkly possessed her imagination, and in that thrilling crisis of her destiny, the image of an angry father rose between her and the idol of her soul. At this particular moment, a dark body, dropping from an elevation of more than fifty feet—even from the dome of that romantic bridal chamber —sounded upon its hollow, sepulchral pavement, actually sundering their hands, and ominously breaking the tender grasp of wedlock, in its fall ! Simultaneously with this mysterious incident, which carried consternation to the bewildered group, a still more startling sound fell upon the ear of the pale and paralyzed Matilda—it was the well-known boom of her father's gun !

Captain Johnston had been away, over bog and moorland, enjoying his favorite pursuit of the game, and with his fowling-piece over his shoulder, was returning homeward by the churchyard pathway, at the eventful instant I have described. A daw —one of that sable tribe whose favorite abode is the tenantless ruin and tottering dome—had just perched in one of the narrow fissures of McCarthy's Tower. The devoted bird, croaking his churchyard ditty, accidentally attracted the eye of the passing sportsman. The practiced aim of the adept sent him tumbling from his dizzy height, down, dead and heavy, upon the startled group beneath. The rest has been told. I have not been coloring the extravaganzas of a romance — nor do I now refer a painful sequel of conjugal infelicity—happily of short duration—to any preordination of evil, mysteriously indicated by an occurrence simply produced by accident alone. But before the next November winds came whistling through the crannys of McCarthy's Tower, the young bride of Clonmacnoise was the tenant of a narrower chamber, for the churchyard daisy had bloomed and faded upon Matilda's grave.

Like another Haidee,

"She died, but not alone—she held within
A sacred principle of life, which might
Have a fair and sinless child of sin—
But closed its little being without light,
And went down to the grave, unborn, wherein,
Blossom and bough lie withered with one blight.
In vain the dews of heaven descend alone,
The bleeding flower and blasted fruits of love !"

W. H.

Literary and Artistic News.

A picture, by Mr. Egg, of the "Council of War Deciding on the Attack of the Mamelon," is now on view in London. It is said to be a most effective picture, and fully worthy of the artist. It is thus described :

"Lord Raglan and Omar Pasha are seated at a three-legged work-table, upon which rests a plan that Pelissier is energetically marking with his nail. Lord Raglan wears a blue coat, to the breast of which the empty sleeve is lightly pinned. His head is covered with a white wide-awake, round which is wound, in rough impromptu of a turban, a white scarf or napkin. The face is singularly like Wellington's in old age—the same prominent bold chin, the same long upper lip and tight hard mouth. His face, excellently painted, and full of subtle grades of browns, grays, and dusk carnations, wears the pleased and satisfied expression of a mind fully convinced, and released from long and wearying doubts. The fact of the picture being founded on photagraphs taken at the moment insure the historical truth of this expression. Pelissier, squat and fat, his rough bulk buttoned in with a clipped surtout, bright with orders and orange ribbons, appears to be with difficulty restraining the fierceness and savagery of a wild and intemperate nature, which has not viewed altogether without dislike, perhaps contempt, the calmer prudence of the Fabii and Nestors of the Crimea. He looks like one of those old barons who used to gnaw their gloves and beards, and twitch at their dagger pommels, and pull off and on their rings, like Richard III., when such weary things as councils were holding. Omar Pasha appears, perhaps from not quite comprehending the language of the council, rather a dummy, convinced alternately by either argument. His red fez cap serves for color, and his blue coat and laced sleeves tell quaintly enough in the full daylight of the scene. In Pelissier's looks, gestures, and figure, the artist has thrown considerable humor; enough, indeed, to make the picture, even though not historical, an excellent work of Art. The weak points of the picture are the table, which is a little awkward, Omar Pasha's face, and the rather stiff figures in the dark of the back-ground. In color, the picture stands very high. Excellently conceived is Lord Raglan's glaring white hat against the dim wall behind, from which the three dark figures stand out so forcibly. Equally well is the touch of blue distance, with the cones of the tents ; and capital the flickering light on floor and chair and table. For character, too, the picture is eminent. What courteous and bland official dignity about Lord Raglan ! What puzzled and conscious subordination in the Pasha ! and what subdued fire and nerve in the Arab slayer, as he almost cuts the map in two with his thumb nail, in his eagerness to prove his plan of attack the best. Lord Raglan's strange head-dress and white neck-cloth give him rather the look of an old clergyman at a pic-nic, while Pelissier seems a dogged fire-eater, living to fight but not fighting to live. About the Englishmen there are proofs of a mind no longer creative or in its bloom of vigor—a mind that falls back on routine and form from mere habit, afraid of experiment or originality of effort. He remains, however, still a gentleman in word and deed, a true Englishmen in heart, and ready as the poorest drummer to give, as he did give, his life to the cause, and determined to let no ignorant clamor goad him to a madman's expenditure of blood and men.

The Vicomte M. du Moniel has just published the first volume of a new edition of his Exposé des Applications de l'Electricitié, and the second is to appear shortly. The volume now published, which is enriched with eight large plates, treats generally of the physical, chemical and mechanical means employed in the application of electricity to useful purposes; and the second one specially treats of the electric telegraph, the employment of electricity in apparatus for preventing accidents on railways, in scientific observations, domestic arts, the lighting of mines, medicine, surgery, &c. The Vicomte has not only paid great attention to the study of electricity, but has had the results of the observations and experiments of savants and inventors communicated to him. The book is consequently of great value.

The Literary Gazette states that a Mr. John Shakspeare, who claims a distant relationship to the poet, is about to cover Shakspeare's house at Stratford with a building of glass and iron, to protect it from the weather. The cost is estimated at about £3,000.

Mme. Grisi is playing Elvira, in "I Puritani," at the Italian Opera, London, and is to appear with Mario in Otello.

M. E. de St. Maurice Cabany, head of the Society of Archivists of France, under Louis Napoleon, has paid a grateful tribute to the documental research and literary talent of Mr. Wm. John Fitzpatrick, author of the "Life and Times, and Cotemporaries of Lord Cloncurry, &c.," by offering him the title of Director of the Society of Archivists for Ireland, with the right of appointing sub-directors, and of organizing the Society generally. That high official position which M. Cabany has so long filled with zeal and distinction, has lately received an additional strength of dignity, by his unanimous nomination as "Director-general Perpetual." Since the abdication of Louis Philippe, this literary society has made much progress, and is now the parent of various branches in several of the continental countries.

People thought they had heard the last of the idol manufactures of Birmingham, itself being the place where the renewed charge was made. At the Church Missionary meeting in our Town Hall, on Tuesday, Lieut. Colonel Martin, an Indian officer, affectionately begged the audience to "cease making idols," and to give him instead, a bell for a chapel at Peshawur. The Rev. Hugh Stowell, of Manchester, speaking of the same tempting subject, ingeniously combined an elemosynary appeal with vehement denunciation. He said :

"Let the manufacturers of Birmingham, if they had got money by the making of idols, bring forth fruit meet for repentance, and pay back every fraction of the accursed money into the treasury of the Church Missionary Society, and never again manufacture an idol lest they should be found to be worshippers of the god Mammon."

We regret that, of the Birmingham clergymen present on the platform, not one thought it his duty to rebut this slander on his fellow townsmen ; and we wonder that strangers to the town should have ventured to use a wholesale accusation of idol-making as an argument to induce larger subscriptions to the society whose cause they were sent to advocate. The charge having been so deliberately repeated in so public a manner, says the Birmingham Gazette, we are entitled to ask Col. Martin and Mr. Stowell for the proofs by which they support it. If they have proofs, our columns are open for their statement ; if, having none, these gentlemen remain silent, the public will know in future how to estimate the value of their "facts."

The Secretary of the Treasury has asked Congress to amend the Act of 1842, so that it will, in addition to the prevention of the importation of indecent prints, paintings, and transparencies, embrace statuettes and figures of similar tendencies.

Count d'Escayrac de Lauture, who is about to head an expedition to discover the sources of the Nile, has left Paris for Berlin, Dresden, Vienna, and London, with a view of forming an international scientific commission to accompany him.

The cathedral of Gran, in Hungary, is to be consecrated on the 31st of August, and Liszt, the pianist, who is an Hungarian, has composed a mass for the occasion.

Hector Berlioz, the celebrated musical composer and critic of the Debats, has been elected in the room of the late Adolph Adam, member of the Academie des Beaux Arts, in Paris, by a large majority.

The German papers announce that Baron Marie de Weber, son of the great composer, possesses the MS. of an opera by his father, which has never been published. It is entitled "Peter Schmoll."

The British Association for the Advancement of Science will meet at Cheltenham on the 6th of August, under the presidency of Professor Daubeny.

At a recent commencement at Georgetown College, D. C., the degree of Master of Arts was conferred on Eugene Casserly, Esq., formerly of this city, and now a prominent member of the San Francisco bar.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

Cousin Nicholas. By Rev. Richard Barham, author of "Ingoldsby Legends," &c. Illustrated ; from Ross & Tousey, New-York.	Buffalo, A. Burke.
United States Democratic Review. July. S. W. Cone, Editor	Lloyd & Campbell.
The Martin's of Cro' Martin. By Charles Lever...	Harper & Brothers.
Reynolds' Political Map of the United States. From (A. Rauney.)	Reynolds.
Walker's Expedition to Nicaragua. A History of the Central American War, and with a Memoir and Portrait of Genl. Walker. By William V. Wells, Consul-General of the Republic of Honduras	Stringer & Townsend.
Harper's Magazine for August	Harper & Brothers.
Harper's Story Books. August. Three Gold Dollars	"
History of Immigration to the United States, exhibiting the number, sex, age, occupation and country of birth of passengers arriving in the United States from Sept. 30, 1819, to December 31, 1855. From official data. By William J. Brownell	Redfield.
The Tongue of Fire ; or the true power of Christianity. By William Arthur, A. M., author of the "Successful Merchant."	Harper & Brother.
The Life and Adventures of James P. Beckwourth, Mountaineer, Scout, and Pioneer, &c., with illustrations	"

City News.

For some time past there has been an unkindly feeling among the members of the John street Methodist church, growing out of the desire of one party to move "up town." This comprises the richer part of the congregation, and they have influenced a majority of the Board of Trustees to accede to their wishes. Those who desire to keep the church down town tried to prevent this action, but were overruled, and the most angry feeling has resulted. For several weeks past, collisions have taken place at the meetings of the members, and on the 25th, a serious row ensued. Determining to hold the church for election purposes, the "up town" branch sent a constable and a gang of men to take possession. "Down town" had ladies inside and also held the door. "Up town" gets a ladder and enters through a window, bringing with them 'for the stomach's sake,' sundry brandy bottles to be emptied, and sundry viands to be eaten. Still "down town" held the door, and their friends hearing of their position surrounded the edifice. The upshot was a regular fight, in which the "up town" rowdies received a sound drubbing from the police whom they assailed, and the church remains in possession of the "down town" majority who will no doubt keep it until the 27th of August, when the election for trustees will be held. Great praise is due to his Honor the Mayor, who ordered a force of police to take possession of the church in order to prevent a disturbance, and Captain Leonard who was present, acted in a praiseworthy manner.

The Rev. Dr. Spring is the oldest pastor in New-York, having been in his present charge forty-six years. The pastorate of the Rev. Dr. Knox is second in extent of duration, and he is the oldest member of the Dutch Reformed Synod ; he has had but one settlement—that of the Collegiate Church in this city, and in that he has remained for the term of forty years. The ministry of the Rev. Dr. Seabury is the third in length : and that of the Rev. Dr. Marsellus of the Bleeker street Church fourth.

(Continued from Editorial Page.)

reign would end. The only question was,what will be their next move? who will they hang next? and ever and anon would you hear the smothered curse of some brave man on the head of Governor Johnston; and again would burst forth the exclamation, "Johnston has sold us! oh, that we had acted without him! he is with the enemy. Had we acted on our own account when he introduced the enemy into the Jail on that Saturday night, it would never have come to this. He has left us without arms—without means of defence. Why were we not called into camp?" Such were the exclamations of the unarmed who crowded the streets; but I must bear testimony to this fact, that although unarmed, unorganized, and almost defenceless, there was no sign of fear or shrinking among them. There was that cool, firm, resolute expression settled on their faces that bespoke the feelings within. An old veteran soldier standing by my side whispered to me—"Give me," said he, "five hundred such men as those (pointing to a number of men who were silently and sternly looking on), and I will sweep the streets in half an hour." The truth is, there has been unwarrantable apathy, if not treachery, on the part of the heads of some of our departments. Johnston, for so far, has to bear it all, being elected to office by the party who principally compose this organization; and being, as I believe, sincerely desirous to avoid a collision, he was entrapped into an interview with the Executive of the Vigilance Committee; and on pledges given by them, he persuaded the Sheriff to admit a guard into the prison. This he soon had reason to regret, for the pledges given were soon broken, and Johnston found himself sold. Now since he has issued his proclamation, and declared the city in a state of insurrection, they are his bitterest traducers. They have tried every influence they could bring to bear on him to withdraw the proclamation, but he stands firm. He is, however, without means, having neither money nor arms. Notwithstanding that the writer differs essentially with him in politics, he believes him to be sincere in his desire to maintain the constitution, and fulfil with integrity his oath of office. There are calm observers, however, who look on with cooler heads and clearer judgment, who say that the "Federal Officers" are much more to blame than he is. That the Controller of the Port—the highest "Federal Officer" here—has not rendered that assistance to the local authorities that he should have done, and that he is coquetting with the party for electioneering purposes. Even the Mint is not clear of this charge. The principal man in it has lent all the aid he could to this organization, and his employées are principally chosen from their ranks. In a word, the authorities at Washington have been unfortunate in their appointments here. Old General Wool, too, has given strength to them, by first promising them arms and ammunition, and subsequently refusing them, after the Governor had issued his proclamation. It is time this vain old man should be placed on the retired list, and replaced by some one with younger blood and more activity. It is a dangerous thing for the Republic to have a political General in command at such a distance from the seat of government. Even Commissioner Weller's brother comes in for a share of the public censure. He, too, with (no doubt) electioneering objects at bottom, has been slyly aiding them, and, being Postmaster here, they boast of his support; and hence they have gained strength. Dr. Ashe is an exception; his acts speak for themselves. The sloop of war, John Adams, is lying here, but her commander is powerless.

The lovers of this Republic—men who would maintain its unity and integrity with the best drop of their life's blood—look calmly on and await in stern silence the action of the President. If Pierce hesitates, there will be either a bloody intestine war, or else there will be an example set that will have sown the first seeds of the dissolution of this great confederacy. That he has the power no constitutional lawyer will for a moment doubt. The facts of their having committed treason is clear. That they have committed piracy on the high seas by boarding a vessel laden with State's Arms—capturing her, taking by force those arms, and making prisoners of both Captain and men—they don't attempt to deny. That the Governor's proclamation has placed them outside the pale of the law is plain. They are acting in defiance of it is clear. These and other grave reasons leave the President no option. He is bound by the Constitution to do so. An order to Gen. Wool to quell the rebellion would settle the whole matter, probably without a shot being fired. If force be necessary, and that the Militia and the Volunteers be called into camp, there will be such a response that the moral force of it will settle the matter, were their organization ten times its present amount. The August steamer will, we expect, bring orders from Washington. Her arrival will be waited for with deep interest. It is sincerely to be hoped that Pierce will act with decision. If not——

The following letter, printed in both the Herald and Sun, explains why it was written:—

San Francisco, July 2, 1856.

Eds. Herald—Since my arrival in San Francisco, (now over five years ago) I have religiously abstained from mixing myself up with either parties or politics, and I trust that the cause which now induces me to appear before the public, will plead its own apology. In your paper of this morning, I have read with considerable emotion a letter from Mrs. Terry, informing the public that she is refused admittance to see her husband, now in the hands of the Vigilance Committee, and on his trial for life or death before the executive of that body. Had this been an anonymous statement, I would have passed it over without notice; but I see attached to it the name of "Cornelia Terry," and to my regret and sorrow, I am bound to believe it true. As a citizen I blush for it; for the sake of some friendsof mine who are members of the Vigilance Committee, I regret it, and trust that for the honor of manhood it will be speedily rectified.

When myself and comrades were imprisoned and tried for life or death, for what the English law called "the crime of high treason," and although in the hands of our own and our country's enemy, and confined in cells contrived not only for safe-keeping, but also for punishment, we were not precluded the visits of our friends and families. True, we had to converse with them in the presence of a jailor, but none but the captive can tell the consoling feelings that even an hour's converse with a friend can bestow. It is, Sir, the recollection of those feelings and emotions that have induced me to address this card to you, trusting that it will meet the eye of some member of the Vigilance Committee, who will bring this matter before the Executive, and that the order precluding Mrs. Terry from visiting her husband will be rescinded, and that the Vigilance Committee will not put themselves on a footing with Sir Hudson Lowe, the tyrant jailor of Napoleon, or Sir William Dennison, now historically known as the "Black Snake of Van Diemen's land." In conclusion, allow me, Sir, to add, that I am wholly unknown to either Mr. or Mrs. Terry, having neither seen nor spoken to either of them.

I am Sir, with much respect, your obedient servant,

T. B. McManus.

The following is the oath the Vigilance Committee required the State Militia to take in their armory, corner of Clay and Kearney streets, June 21st, before marching them to Fort Vigilance, where they were placed in irons as prisoners of war. It speaks for itself:—

"I do solemnly promise and swear, in the presence of Almighty God and these witnesses present—by the hope of a future state—by the blessed Virgin Mary and all the saints in the calendar, that I will not bear arms against the Vigilance Committee of San Francisco. So help me God and the blessed Virgin."

Yesterday morning the prisoners were informed by Mr. T. J. L. Smiley that they were released, but if ever found with arms in their hands, acting against the committee or against good order, the severest penalties would be inflicted upon them. The prisoners were then all dismissed, with the exception of five, who were held, it is to be presumed, as hostages, for even they themselves knew not for what they were held. Among them, however, was a young man named Thomas White, jun'r, long and well known here, and much respected for his quiet and peaceable conduct. He had a host of warm friends, whose application to the Vigilance Committee induced them to liberate him, and with him the others held by them.

No parole or other obligation was demanded or given—the Committee having failed to get one man to forswear his allegiance to the State. The following prisoners, after having undergone the hard biscuit and salt beef diet for a few days, have been discharged:—James Kannaven, Chas. Roach, P. McCormick, Thos. White, A. J. Tice, and Jno. M. Currey.

John L. Durkee, who was arrested by the United States Authorities, charged with piracy, was discharged on bail. His sureties were J. W. Brittan, Mr. Soule, and Mr. Goddard, and the amount $25,000.

Attached is a statement of the materials of which this committee is composed. It is taken from their own books by one who joined their association with good intentions, but resigned when he discovered their enormities:

Total enrolled members of Committee, 4673

MATERIALS.

Prussians and Germans,	1518
French, - - -	450
English and Scotch, -	287
Irish, - - - - -	42

Total, 2297

Balance, made up of Yankees and Americans, 2376.

In case of a foreign invasion, how would this portion of the confederation stand, with a set of paid hirelings, who neither know nor understand the language of the country, her institutions or her principles, and led on by a set of designing men? Why, we would be ostensibly at the mercy of the enemy. But there is here a body of men that have not been calculated on; men who have recently taken the oath of allegiance to this republic, and who will maintain it at all risks. They are the stumbling-blocks in the way of those self-named Revolutioners.

All through the excitement, I have tried to keep your mercantile friends in the east posted up in regard to what they may expect from their agents and correspondents here. I will now add, that they may look out for a general "burst up" this fall. It is strange to see the falling off of business remittances that has taken place since the formation of this committee. The list of June 20 shows that among the non-remitters are those merchants who figure most largely in the V. C. Out of the $2,130,254 remitted, there is at least two-thirds of it capital sent here for investment, and which has been withdrawn. The most remarkable feature of it is, that the large houses who formerly remitted regularly, are in arrear this time (as I before predicted), and in a few months more will close their accounts with the present existing excitement, which they themselves have created.

For the remittances going by the steamer to-day I am unable to speak, but I have no doubt that many of the European merchants will find themselves seriously disappointed.

FOURTH OF JULY.

Heretofore, this day was celebrated here with the enthusiasm which every lover of liberty must bear to the anniversary that gave birth to a new era—an era that proclaimed the right of the people to govern themselves. But on yesterday a gloom hung over the scene. In place of the free open glance of the eye, and the firm manly grasp of the hand, there was that langour and doubt which betokens uncertainty among friends. In a word, the day passed off cheerless and unsocial. The streets were, for the most part, deserted, and none of the enthusiasm that formerly welcomed the Fourth was noticeable. It was, in fact, a day of mourning.

JULY 5, 1856.

The mail steamer is just about to leave. Nothing new or startling. Judge Perry is still a close prisoner, and Hopkins, the tool of the Executive Committee of Vigilance, still lives. There will in all probability be no hanging to-day; no telling what will occur to-morrow. Judges of the Supreme Court of the United States, beware; don't do your sworn duty before a a V. C. mob.

Yours, Humboldt.

Strangers frequently marvel, at the rush to the extensive Carpet Warerooms of Mr. Donnelly, whose advertisement appears on our last page. New-Yorkers know, that the cheapness and elegance of the goods he sells fully account for it.

OBITUARY.

Died, on the 21st inst., after a short but severe and painful illness, which she bore with Christian patience and resignation, Eleanor Teresa, the beloved wife of Mr. James Turner, and 3rd daughter of Mr. Hugh McManus, Ballinasloe, Co. Galway, Ireland, aged 24 years and 6 months. Her remains were on the 23rd inst., conveyed from her late residence, 99 Eighth Avenue, to Greenwood Cemetery for interment, followed by a number of sorrowing relatives aud friends, by whom her early demise is much felt. As a wife, mother, sister and daughter, she was all that could be desired. She died as she had lived, a good Roman Catholic, receiving the last consolation of her religion.

Requiescat in pace. Amen.

Ballinasloe and Galway (Ireland) papers please copy.

Died, on Wednesday, 23rd inst., in Newark, N. J., in the 57th year of his age, Mr. Michael Quinn, native of Ballymore Eustace, Co. Kildare, Ireland. His funeral was followed from St. Patrick's Cathedral, to St. John's Cathedral burial ground, by one of the largest corteges ever seen in Newark. May he rest in peace.

Died, July 15th, after a short illness, Dennis, second son of Richard Mooney, formerly of Killinmore, Kings county, Ireland. Requisescat in pace. Dublin papers please copy.

Special Notices.

The Meagher Guard, of Philadelphia, intend celebrating the Birthday of Thomas Francis Meagher—in consequence of its falling on Sunday this year—on Monday, the 4th of August instant. The celebration will consist of an evening parade, &c. &c.

If you wish a Portrait, call at Brady's Gallery, 359 Broadway. The Ambrotype.—Some members of the daguerrean fraternity have represented the Ambrotype—the latest and best improvement in the art—as unworthy of public confidence. Mr. BRADY, the introducer of the Ambrotype in New-York, has found in them a combination of rare qualities, never approached by any other style of camera pictures. 3m28ju

Photographs and Ambrotypes,—50 Franklin street, New-York. Persons wishing to have a true life-like Photograph or Ambrotype taken, will do well to call at this place; the pictures there made are finished in the best style, and no trouble or pains will be spared to suit the most delicate taste.

The prices will be lower than in any other establishment in town, the proprietor not having the expenses of artists to pay for the coloring of the pictures, or salaries of operators, the work being done by the proprietor himself.

Persons having black plain photographs, and wishing to have them colored or re-touched in China Ink, can have it done at low prices. The proprietor will also re-touch for any establishment in the city or country, that will ask for it, and those he has been coloring for can have their work done at the same rates and prices.

Instructions will be given to pupils in Photograph and Ambrotype. Good collodion for sale, and all kinds of chemicals for the business prepared to order. (3m12jly) A. Cosmes.

Mayor's Office, New-York, June 16, 1856.

Notice to Owners of Dogs.—Notice is hereby given that on and after Wednesday, June 25th inst., the ordinance respecting dogs found running loose or at large in any street south of Forty-second street, without being muzzled, will be strictly enforced. The sum of fifty cents will be paid for every dog brought alive to the Pound, on the corner of First Avenue and Thirty-first street, which shall have been found in the streets, running loose or at large without being properly muzzled. on presentation of the certificate of the pound-keeper to the Chief of Police at his office in the Park. Owners of dogs may reclaim them at the Pound between sunrise and sunset on the day on which they are received, on payment of expenses.

FERNANDO WOOD, Mayor.

Ladies going in the Country, wishing their supply of Shoes, can find Linen Gaiters at 12s. Slippers, Ties, Buskins and Toilet Slippers, from 6s. to 10s.: India Rubbers, &c., with Boys', Misses', and Children's Boots and Shoes, of all kinds and prices, at 4t19jly J. B. MILLER & CO'S, No. 184 Canal St.

Information wanted of Patrick Ryan, late of Nenagh, in the county of Tipperary, Ireland, aged about 30 years, farmer, who left Limerick in the month of May, 1851, and who when last heard from was in Orange county, N. Y., but is now supposed to be living in Vandalia, Fayette county, Indiana. Any information of his whereabouts sent to the office of the Commissioners of Emigration, New-York, will be thankfully received by his wife. jly19

Holloway's Ointment.—Martyrs to Scrofula rejoice! This subtle disease, descending from generation to generation, a fearful heirloom may be literally extirpated by this penetrating unguent. All eruptions and sores yield to its curative properties. Sold at the manufactories, No. 80 Maiden-lane, New-York, and No. 244 Strand, London; and by all druggists, at 25 cents, 62½ cents, and one dollar per pot. 2Aug

Proclamation.—500 Dollars reward.—I, Fernando Wood, Mayor of the City of New-York, by virtue of authority vested in me by law, do offer a reward of five hundred dollars, for the arrest and conviction of the person or persons who murdered Bartholomew Burke, on the night of Thursday the 17th, or on the morning of the 18th July, 1856, at the corner of Broadway and White-streets, said reward to be paid on the conviction of the offender or offenders, on the certificate of the District Attorney, that such conviction was had upon the testimony of the party claiming the same, but all claims for said reward not presented within twenty days thereafter, will be disregarded. Witness my hand and seal of Mayoralty, this 22nd July, 1856. 2aug [L. s.] FERNANDO WOOD.

Amusements.

BOWERY THEATRE.

THE PEOPLES TEMPLE OF THE DRAMA.

Open every night,

WITH A POWERFUL

Star Company.

Lessee and Manager.....John Brougham

PRICES OF ADMISSION:

Boxes	50 cents	Pit	12½ cents.
Gallery	12½ cents.	Orchestra Stalls	50 cents.
Private Boxes			Five Dollars.

Doors open at 7½; commence at 7½.

WALLACK'S THEATRE.

THE

SUMMER GARDEN.

MISS AGNES ROBERTSON'S

BENEFIT.

On Tuesday next, July 29th.

Bob Nettles.

Bob, as originally played by her throughout the United States.....Miss Agnes Robertson
Tourbillon.....Mr. Bourcicault

After which, the Musical Extravaganza,

THE INVISIBLE PRINCE.

Leander.....Miss Agnes Robertson

As originally played by her throughout all the cities of Great Britain with enthusiastic success.

Wednesday,

THE PHANTOM. THE INVISIBLE PRINCE.

PRICES OF ADMISSION.

Parquette and boxes.....50 cents
Family Circle.....25 cents

Doors open at a quarter past seven P. M.

BUCHANAN AND THE PRESS.

The Dublin Nation, in answer to a correspondent signing himself "a Donegal man," says Buchanan and Shields both hail from the North, but Buchanan is American born. They are intimate friends. It was Buchanan, indeed, who to the astonishment of Westpoint, picked out Shields, then a judge upon the Illinois Bench, and gazetted him to command a brigade in the Mexican war. Buchanan was then Secretary of State—in fact, Premier to Polk. It is mere English ignorance or arrogance to speak of Buchanan as a political adventurer and a new man. There never was an American statesman more above the imputation. He is one of the wealthiest men in the Union. He has been a prominent and consistent Democrat leader for forty years. He has had a character in the Senate, only second in their day, to Webster's, Calhoun's, and Clay's. His administration, which added California to the States, was one of the most brilliant, and will be one of the most memorable in American history. For his Presidency, we dare hope that a grander glory is reserved. We hope he may, and believe he will, get every Irish vote in the Union. Personally, there is the strongest attachment to him among the Irish. He has made his candidature anti-Know Nothing in the broadest and strongest terms. Personally, he is well known to be of the most liberal and tolerant principles. It is evinced in the fact that his niece, the heiress of all his immense wealth, has been educated at a Catholic convent in Washington. One may imagine with what sentiments such a man must have returned from England, after observing so closely her attitude for the last three years, towards his own nation and mother countries, and towards France and Russia. It is not at all unlikely that Shields may be a member of his Cabinet. If there be war, he is at all events certain to have high command. One has a kind of measure of Buchanan's capacity in the fact that he explored such a general from the Bench of a Western Court.

In another issue the same journal says:

Great is the fear in England lest James Buchanan, an Irishman of the second generation, may obtain the presidential chair of the United States; for the belief is that he would not let England slip out of the quarrel as easily and as gracefully as she desires.

The Mississippian says: "With joyous heart and bounding pulse we plant ourselves upon the platform of the convention, and rally to the support of the nominees. It is no diffucult undertaking for us to enlist in the support of James Buchanan and John C. Breckinridge. In the national convention of 1852, we well recollect how, with more than woman's devotion, thro' days of tedious ballotings, Mississippi clung to the fortunes of James Buchanan. For thirty-five ballotings, her vote was cast for him without variation. And although events have subsequently transpired to control her votes for another in the last convention, yet no act of that wise and eminent statesman and patriot has tended in the least degree to diminish the confidence which was then reposed in his capacity and fitness for the high position which has been assigned him. On the contrary, he has increased the debt of gratitude which his country owes him, and has furnished additional evidence of his worthiness to be placed at the helm of the affairs of this great and growing republic."

The Standard, of Bowling-Green, Kentucky, an old-line Whig paper, that has so far supported Fillmore and Donelson, has hauled them down, and hoisted the names of Buchanan and Breckinridge, seeing the former were deserted at the North, and believing the election of the latter was the only hope for the South.

The "Republicans" denominate the supporters of Mr. Buchanan as "Buccaniers." Wonder, says the Cincinnati Enquirer, if the Republicans might not with more propriety be styled "Free"-booters?

The following would seem to warrant the Enquirer's suggestion: The Syracuse, N. Y. Standard gives the following as the result of a vote taken in a car on the Central Railroad a day or two since: Buchanan, 19; Fillmore, 18; Fremont, 2. Before the train reached Buffalo the Conductor had both the Fremont voters confined in the saloon of the car, for picking a man's pocket.

The Know Nothing papers are making a great fuss about the withdrawal of Chas. Irving, Esq., from the Democratic Electoral ticket in Virginia. Why do they not state, says the Augusta, Ga., Constitutionalist, that Mr. Irving declined in consequence of his desire to aid the cause of Buchanan and Breckinridge, in the editorial columns of his paper? It was for this cause only that Mr. Irving declined.

Rich Gold Diggings in Honduras—Important Discovery.

Dr. J. C. Tucker, United States Consul to Honduras, who has just returned, informs the Daily News of the recent discovery of new gold placers, or gulch diggings, near Belfate, a small Indian village situated on the shores of the Carribean Sea, about 40 miles to the east and north of Truxillo. A large number of the residents of the latter town had left their business and gone to washing the auriferous earth, with success equal to that of the miners in California, making, with the pan alone, from a quarter to two ounces of the precious metal a day. Some Americans had returned from the diggings to Truxillo, to make rockers and long toms, to work the mines more effectually. From them Dr. Tucker obtained a few ounces of the gold as a sample. It is in coarse grains, and in lumps weighing from a pennyweight to an ounce, very pure, and of a beautiful bright color. This portion of the country, on the coast, is diversified with mountains and valleys, in the latter of which, during the rainy season, intermittent fevers prevail, as in the Mississippi bottom and on the Jersey shore. With this exception, the country is remarkably healthy. All the tropical fruits here grow wild, and, unlike the pioneer miners of California, in these diggings the miner can enjoy all the luxuries of good living, meat, vegetables, &c., at an average cost of 25 cents per day.

During eight months of the year, as in California, there is little or no rain, and miners could live, as the Caribs do, in huts built of a large palm leaf, convenient edifices, erected in a few hours, and affording shelter even against storms.

The Caribs, an industrious and good-humoured race, can be hired at 20 or 30 cents per day, to till the ground or work the mines. There are not many Americans—not more than five or six—in this part of the country, although a company of about twenty-four have gone into Olancho, to examine the gold-washing of the great River Patook and its tributaries, the richness of which has long been known, but from want of energy and enterprise on the part of the natives, has never been fully developed.

What the result of the discovery of these rival California placers will be we can scarcely predict. If these mines, situated in a beautiful land, only five days from here, by steam, continue to yield "the yellow drops" in such abundance, it will not be long before our enterprising countrymen will throng to this new and nearer El Dorado, to do what the Spanish American is morally and physically incapable of doing, develope the almost fabulous wealth of the fertile fields and boundless mines of Central America. It is the hand of destiny which leads them on.

IRISH MARRIAGES.

At Bantry, T. D. Sullivan, to Kate, daughter of the late Thomas Healy, of that town.

In Carlow, Isaac J. Murphy, of Belfast, to Caroline, daughter of the late Thomas Haughton, of Greenbank, Carlow.

At Brighton, Edward W. Unwin, to Henrietta Jane, daughter of the Captain George R. Camac, of the 3d Buffs.

At Brighton, Frederick J. Blackburne, of Rennie House, county Cork, son of the Right Hon. Francis Blackburne, of Rathfarnham Castle, to Annette, daughter of Eardly Hall, of Brunswick square, Brighton.

At Cairy, James Raeburne, jun., of Glasgow, to Agnes, daughter of the late William Middleton, merchant, Sligo.

At Castletown, Berehaven, Edward K. Supple, Sub-Inspector, Constabulary, to Emily Trotter, daughter of Lieut. Thomas Hungerford, Royal Navy, Coast Guard Service.

At the church of SS. Peter and Paul, John J. O'Mahony, to Mrs. Mary Blackledge.

At St. Luke's Church, Chelsea, Henry Somers, M. D., Surgeon on the Staff, and late of the 8th Hussars, to Mary Anne, daughter of Bache Wright, War Department, Dublin.

At Kingston, Jamaica, William Carr, of St. Thomas in the Vale, son of the late Robert Carr, of Sydney place, Cork, to Sarah, daughter of the Hon. Alexander Bravo, Auditor-General.

At the Catholic Chapel, Mullinahone, John Ryan, of Waterford, to Bridget, daughter of Peter Carey, of Clonagoose, county Tipperary.

Thomas, son of Joseph D. Lapham, of Newtown Lodge, Waterford, to Anne Louisa, only child of the late Major Richard Lambert, 16th Madras Native Infantry, and grand-daughter of the late George Little, of Cullentra, Wexford, solicitor.

At Paddington, Michael Parker Smith, of Graigue House, Kilkenny, to Adelina Rhodes, daughter of James Durham, of Leinster gardens, Hyde park, London.

At St. Peter's Church, Dublin, Maurice Cross, jun., of Calcutta, eldest son of Maurice Cross, Secretary to the Commissioners of National Education in Ireland, to Elizabeth Juliet, widow of John Faircloth, 84th regiment.

In Cork, the Rev. Edward Carr Carroll, son of John Carroll, M. D., New Ross, to Anna Arabella, daughter of the late John Hull, county Cork.

IRISH DEATHS.

At Queenstown, Honoria Anne, daughter of the late Michael Byrne, of Millicent, county Tipperary.

At Charlemont, street, Dublin, at an advanced age, Rachel, relict of Matthew Eaton.

At Rocheville, aged 81 years, Michael Roche, father of the Rev. Mr. Roche, of Ballingarry.

On his return from Gibraltar, Lieutenant W. F. Gilley, of the Royal Engineers, son of Captain Gilley, of the Provisional Battalion in Limerick.

At Charlemont street, Dublin, at an advanced age, Miss Isabella Steele Gurnell.

Aged 77 years, P. Mullally, of Jamestown, near Callan, county Kilkenny, father of the Rev. T. Mullally, of All-Hallows College, Drumcondra.

At Marlboro' street, aged 27, Michael, son of Nicholas M. Fitzgerald, C. E.

At Cloyne, Abraham Henry Travers, aged 71 years.

Of Scarletina, Carleton, son of Henry B. Foot, J. P., of Carrigacunna Castle Killavullen.

At the island of Trinidad, Lieut. Alfred A. Jones, of H. M.'s 67th Regiment, son of the late Captain Joseph Allingham Jones, of the 30th Regiment.

In Edinburgh, James Stein, late of the firm of Stein, Brothers & Co., of Thomondgate Distillery, Limerick.

At Dover street, London, the Countess of St. Germains.

At Barrack street, Nenagh, Bridget, wife of Sergeant Clancy, of Kilcommon station, and sister of Mr. John Hogan, of Nenagh.

At Clonmel, Anne, relict of the late J. O'Connor, brother of the Very Rev. Dr. O'Connor, Parish Priest of Templemore.

At Ballinagrana, near Kilteely, county Limerick, Philip Murphy, aged 64 years.

At Sea View, Queenstown, Mary, relict of John Beamish, of Cashelmore, county Cork, and daughter of the late Thomas Hewitt, of Cork.

At Morrison's Island, Cork, Frederick Hall, aged 78 years.

In London, Susan Cambridge, daughter of the late Samuel Grubb, of Coolville, Clogheen.

At Athy, of scarletina, John Peppard.

At Donore, county Carlow, Mrs. Donohoe, relict of the late Darby Donohoe.

At Castle Cottage, Cahir, aged 89 years, Susan, relict of William Vowell, late of Coole, county Tipperary.

At Springvale, county Mayo, aged 101 years, Thomas Coyne, father of the Rev. E. Coyne, the respected parish priest of Aughamore.

Card from Edward Dunigan & Brother.

James B. Kirker, the present representative of the firm of Edward Dunigan & Brother, learns with regret that an attempt is being made to persuade the public that a circular issued by Mr. John Gilmary Shea, with regard to his correspondents, is a malicious attempt of the house to injure another.

Mr. Shea continues to enjoy the highest esteem of the firm, still it has not and will not interfere in his private concerns.

The House of Edward Dunnigan & Brother has as yet issued no circular whatever, relative to the forthcoming History of the Catholic Church, by Mr. DeCourcy and Mr. John Gilmary Shea.

New-York, July 17th, 1856. (3t) 151 Fulton street.

Caution to the Public.—To distinguish the genuine magnetic powder, for the destruction of insects, from poisonous imitations, it is necessary to examine the wrapper. See that four national medals—those of England, France, Belgium, and the United States—are engraved thereon. Be sure also that a lithographic fac simile of Lyon's signature appears both on the wrapper and label. This caution is necessary to protect the proprietor from fraud and the public from danger and disappointment. The leading scientific societies, and the first chemists of Europe and America, have pronounced the magnetic powder the only poisonous insect bane in the world, as well as the most effective and fatal means for the destruction of bed-bugs, roaches, fleas, ants, flies, moths, &c., that was ever prepared or sold. The proprietors of the principal city hotels endorse it. Come and see the testimonials of Prince Albert, ex-President Fillmore, and hundreds of the nobility of Europe, as well as the sovereigns of America. The magnetic pills, for the extermination of rats and mice, are endorsed with equal emphasis by all who have tried them. Call and see the medals, diplomas, government orders, scientific certificates, letters, &c., at the Central Depot, No. 424 Broadway.

jun 21 3m EMANUEL LYON.

A perfumed breath.—What lady or gentleman would remain under the curse of a disagreeable breath, when by using the "Balm of a Thousand Flowers" as a dentrifice, would not only render it sweet, but leave the teeth white as alabaster? Many persons do not know their breath is bad, and the subject is so delicate their friends will never mention it. Pour a single drop of the Balm on your tooth-brush, and wash the teeth night and morning. A fifty cent bottle will last a year.

A Beautiful Complexion may easily be acquired by using the "Balm of a Thousand Flowers." It will remove tan, pimples, and freckles from the skin, leaving it of a soft and roseate hue. Wet a towel, pour on two or three drops and wash the face night and morning.

Shaving made Easy.—Wet your shaving brush in either warm or cold water, pour on two or three drops of the "Balm of a Thousand Flowers," ru the beard well, and it will make a beautiful soft lather, much facilitating the operation of shaving. Price only 50 cents. For sale by all druggists.

3mjly5 W. P. FETRIDGE & Co., Franklin Square, New-York.

Phrenology.—Examinations with charts, and written descriptions of character given daily by PROF. FOWLER, at the Phrenological Cabinet, Broadway, two blocks above the Park. Private rooms for gentlemen and ladies. 4t12jly

SARAH McFADDEN,

Maritime and National Flag Manufacturer,

198 Hudson street, four doors below Canal street, New-York.

Mrs. McFadden justly boasts of having made up for Thomas Francis Meagher, the Irish tri-color flag which he presented to the Confederate Club Men of '48, resident in New-York: also the beautiful U. S. Flag recently presented by Mr. William Kinsella to the Montgomery Guard of Bridgeport. y21june

DRILL ROOM GUIDE.

NINTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

TROOP A, (Irish Dragoons,) meet at the "Grape Vine Cottage," 45 Second Avenue, between Second and Third streets, on every Monday evening. JAMES MURPHY, Capt.

Company B, (Fitzgerald Guard) drill each Monday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." THOS. MAGUIRE, Capt.

Company D, (Guyon Cadets) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." THOS. MURPHY, Capt.

Company I, (Jackson Guard) drill each Thursday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." W. O. MURPHY, Capt.

Company H, (Erina Guard) drill Thursday Evening at "Military Hall." R. CODDINGTON, Capt.

Company —, (Irish Grenadiers) drill each Thursday Evening at 22 White street. FELIX DUFFY, Capt.

Company C, (Mitchel Guard,) drill each Wednesday Evening at the "Eagle Rooms." —— KEARNS, Capt.

Company J, (Carroll Guard,) drill each evening, at —— GALLAGHER, Capt.

TENTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company —, (Emmet Guard) drill each Thursday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." JOHN KENNEDY, Capt.

ELEVENTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company E, (Montgomery Guard) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." THOS. S. MURPHY, Capt.

FOURTEENTH REGIMENT, N. Y. S. M.

Company E, (Carroll Guard,) drill each Tuesday Evening, at the "Adelphi," Brooklyn. GEO. B. MAGRATH, Capt.

TWENTY-FOURTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company C, (Columbian Guard), drill each Tuesday evening, at Washington Hall, Troy, N. Y. RICHARD S. QUINN, Captain.

TWENTY-FIFTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company —, (Emmet Guard,) drill each Wednesday Evening at Albany, N. Y. P. H. GRIFFIN, Capt.

SIXTY NINTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Troop A, (Irish Dragoons,) drill each Thursday Evening at "Montgomery Hall." Lieut. B. O'CONNOR, Com'dt.

Company C, (—— ——,) drill each Wednesday Evening at the "Eagle Rooms." Lieut. M. KEATING, Com'dt.

Company D, (Irish Rifles) drill each Monday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." JAMES QUINLAN, Capt.

Company E, (Fag a Bealac Guard) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." GILBERT RIORDAN, Capt.

Company F, (Shields' Guard,) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Milleman's Hall," 7th avenue, corner of 26th street. JOHN R. MURPHY, Capt.

Company G, (Mechanic's Guard) drill each Thursday Evening at the "Eagle Rooms." JOHN B. MADDEN, Capt.

Company I, (Irish Fuseleers,) drill each Monday Evening at 42 Prince street. M. CORCORAN, Capt.

Company K, (Brian Boroihme Guard) drill each Monday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." JAMES HUSTON, Capt.

Engineer Corps, (Emmet Life Guard) drill each Monday Evening at "Worth's Military Head Quarters," 22 White st. T. LYNCH, Capt.

70th REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company D, (Napper Tandy Light Artillery) drill each Thursday Evening at Brooklyn City Armory. WM. H. HOGAN, Capt.

SEVENTY FIFTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company A, (State Rifles) drill each Wednesday Evening at cor. of 11th street and 1st Avenue. Lieut. JAS. KELLY, Com'dt.

Company B, (Irish National Guard) drill each Friday Evening at "Centre Market Rooms." JOHN LANE, Capt.

Company C, (Young Ireland Rifles) drill each Friday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." JOHN BURKE, Capt.

Company D, (Wolf Tone Volunteers,) drill each Tuesday Evening, at the "Eagle Rooms." JOHN NUGENT, Capt.

Company E, (T. F. Meagher Rifles) drill each —— at cor. of 11th street and 1st Avenue. J. B. DONNELLY, Capt.

Company F, (Mich'l. Doheny Rifles) drill each —— at ——. J. F. MAGUIRE, Capt.

Company G. (Emmet Rifles) drill each —— at ——. JOHN BEGG, Capt.

INDEPENDENT COMPANIES.

Company —, (O'Mahony Guard, E. M. A.,) drill each Tuesday Evening at "North America Rooms," cor. of Bayard and Bowery. JAMES CAVANAGH, Capt.

Company —, (Sons of '98,) drill each Friday Evening at the corner of 11th street and 1st Avenue, N. Y. M. H. SMITH, Capt.

Company —, (Wolfe Tone Guard,) drill each alternate Monday Evening at the "Second Ward Hotel," cor. of York and Pearl streets, Brooklyn. JOHN J. CLANCY, Com'dt.

Company —, (Irish American Grenadiers,) drill the first and third Thursday of each month at "Montgomery Hall," 76 Prince street, N. Y. MICHAEL DOYLE, Capt.

Company —, (Montgomery Guard,) drill each Monday evening, at Bridgeport, Conn. MICHAEL O'CONNELL, Capt.

Company —, (Republican Guard) drill every Friday Evening, at "Worth's Military Headquarters," 22 White street. W. H. LYONS, Capt.

Company —, (Keystone Rifles,) drill every Monday evening, in Port Carbon, Pa. MATTHEW BYRNES, Captain.

Company—(Emerald Guard), drill each Monday evening, at "Smith's Hall," corner of 11th and First Avenue. JOHN COX, Captain.

SECOND REGIMENT—HUDSON BRIGADE.

Company —, (Montgomery Guard,) drill each week at the "Armory," Grand street, Jersey City. —— FARRELL, Capt.

FIFTH REGIMENT N. J. S. M.

Company C, (O'Brien Columbia Rifles,) drill on the 1st and 3d Tuesdays in each month at their Armory, "Willow Hall," Orange, N. J. OWEN MURPHY, Captain.

SECOND REGIMENT PA. VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Hibernian Greens,) drill each Thursday Evening at 83 South Fifth street, Philadelphia. P. O'KEAN, Capt.

Company —, (Meagher Guard,) drill each Tuesday Evening at 404 Market street, Philadelphia. Lieut. THOMAS ASMITH, Com'dt.

Company —, (Emmet Guard,) drill each Friday Evening at "Ewen Hall," Hawley, Pa. M. W. MORRISS, Capt.

FIRST REGIMENT ME. VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Grattan Guard,) drill each Thursday Evening in Bangor, Me. JOHN CARROLL, Capt.

SIXTIETH REGIMENT ILL. S. M.

Company —, (Shields Guard,) drill each Thursday Evening in Chicago, Ill. CHAS. E. MOORE, Capt.

FIRST REGIMENT VA. VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Montgomery Guard,) drill each Monday and Friday Evenings in Richmond. P. S. MOORE, Capt.

SIXTEENTH REGIMENT S. C. S. M.

Company —, (Meagher Guard,) drill the second Thursday of each month in Charleston. GEO. SERGEANT, Capt.

SEVENTEENTH REGIMENT S. C. S. M.

Company —, (Irish Volunteers,) drill once a month in Charleston, S. C. EDWARD MAGRATH, Capt.

—— REGIMENT GEORGIA VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Irish Volunteers,) drill each —— evening, in the city of Augusta. EDWARD J. WALKER, Capt.

FIRST REGIMENT ST. LOUIS LEGION, MO.

Company—(St. Louis Washington Guard) drill each Tuesday evening, in the city of St. Louis, Mo. D. M. FROST, Capt.

FIRST WASHINGTON BATTALION OHIO S. M.

Company A, (Shields Guard), drill on each Thursday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati. DENNIS KAVANAGH, Captain.

Company B, (Sarsfield Guard), drill on each Monday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati. JOHN LEVY, Capt.

Company C, (Republican's Guard,) drill on each Saturday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati. JOHN ELITCH, Capt.

Company D, (Montgomery Light Artillery,) drill on each Wednesday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati. THOS. TIERNAN, Capt.

Company E, (Queen City Cadets, Rifles,) drill on each Tuesday and Friday evenings, at the "Cadets Armory," Pomeroy's Building, Third street, Cincinnati. JOSEPH H. BURKE, Capt.

N. B.—Commandants of Irish-American Military Companies throughout the United States, are respectfully tendered a place in the above "Directory," and requested to send such information as will enable us to represent them in it.

Continental Military Establishment.

J. PARKS,

195 FULTON, BELOW DUTCH, N. Y.

Hats, Caps, Ornaments, &c., made to order. 3m28ju

Business Directory.

NEW-YORK CATHOLIC LIBRARY ASSOCIATION.

"The objects of the Association are, 1st. The dissemination of Catholic and useful knowledge. 2d. To forward the moral and intellectual advancement of its members. 3d. To create among its members a spirit of harmony and good feeling, that will be conducive alike to their interest and pleasure. These to be attained by establishing a Library and Reading Room, and by Readings and Lectures when practicable."

Contributions of either books or money received at the office, No. 107 Nassau street.

M. T. COZANS, President.
JOSEPH MCGUIRE, Vice-President.

CORRESPONDING SECRETARY, D. Quinn.
RECORDING SECRETARY, James Fabb.
TREASURER, John Russell.
LIBRARIAN, T. S. Haughey.
DIRECTORS, R. T. Kelly, J. J. Mullen, M. B. Lynch, L. T. Cozans, P. J. McGuire.

m3jun14

PIANOS, MELODEONS AND MUSIC

The Cash system adopted!—Prices greatly reduced.

HORACE WATERS,

No. 333 Broadway, N. Y.,

AGENT FOR THE BEST BOSTON AND NEW-YORK INSTRUMENTS.

The largest assortment of

Pianos, Melodeons, Musical Instruments,

AND

MUSICAL MERCHANDISE,

of all kinds, in the United States, Pianos from ten different Manufactories, comprising those of every variety of style, from the plain, neat and subtsantial 6¼ octaves, in Walnut or Rosewood Cases, from $150 to $200, to those of the most elegant finish up to $1000. No house in the Union can compete with the above in the number, variety, and celebrity of its instruments, nor in the extremely low prices at which they are sold.

Horace Waters' Modern Improved Pianos,

WITH OR WITHOUT IRON FRAMES.

possessing in their improvements of over-strings and action, a length of scale power, and compass of tone equal to the Grand Piano, united with the beauty and durability of structure of the square Piano. They are justly pronounced by the Press and by the first Musical Masters to be equal to those of any other manufacturer. They are built of the best and most thoroughly seasoned material, and guaranteed to stand the action of every climate.

Each Instrument guaranteed to give satisfaction, or purchase money refunded. Second-hand Pianos at great bargains, constantly in store; price from $30 to $140.

Horace Waters' Melodeons,

SUPERIOR INSTRUMENTS IN TONE, TOUCH AND DURABILITY OF MAKE.

(Tuned the equal temperament.) Melodeons of all other styles and makes. Price, $45, $60, $75, $100, $125, $140; double Reeds, $150; double Reeds and two banks of Keys, $200. Less a liberal discount. Clergymen and Churches, an extra discount.

Martin's Guitars, Brown's Harps, Flutes, Flutinas, Accordeons, Violins, and Musical Instruments,

OF ALL KINDS, AT LOWER PRICES THAN EVER BEFORE OFFERED TO THE PUBLIC.

A large discount to Teachers and Schools. The trade supplied on the most liberal terms.

MUSIC.

One of the largest and best selected catalogues of Music now published, comprising many of the choice and most popular airs of the day, and will be sold at one-third off from the regular prices.

Music sent by mail to all parts of the country, post paid. Particular and personal attention paid to all orders received by mail. Satisfaction guaranteed in every instance. Pianos and Melodeons for rent, and rent allowed on purchase. Pianos and Melodeons for sale on monthly payments. Second-hand Pianos taken in exchange for new. General and select Catalogues and Schedule of prices forwarded to all parts of the country by mail.

☞ Great inducements offered to agents in all parts of the country, to sell the Horace Waters' Pianos, Melodeons, and Catalogue of Music.

PIANOS AND MUSIC.—We learn that Horace Waters, of 333 Broadway, N. Y., agent for the sale of many of the most celebrated makers of Pianos and Melodeons, is offering them at prices which we advise all who desire to purchase to avail themselves of. He is also selling his large and well-known Catalogue of Music at one-third off from the regular prices, and will forward the same free of postage. His offers to the trade, teachers and schools, are of the most favorable character, all of which he will be able to fill to the letter, for having wisely adopted the cash system. The Horace Waters' Pianos are known as among the very best. We are enabled to speak of those instruments with some degree of confidence, from personal knowledge of their excellent tone and durabe quality.—N. Y. Evangelist.

ap19ti

I. E. Tate's Pannus Corrium Boot and Shoe store, for tender feet. A large stock of Boots, Shoes and Gaiters always on hand, in great variety, and made to order at the shortest notice, for Gentlemen, Boys and Youths—wholesale and retail, at the lowest Cash prices. Particular attention is requested to the Pannus Corrium or Leather Cloth Boots and Shoes, for those troubled with corns, bunions or tenderness of the feet. Its qualities for summer boots or shoes, surpass anything ever got up in this country for real comfort, as it keeps the feet perfectly cool, and at the same time is susceptible of the finest polish; for a dress boot more so than any French calfskin, with one half the labor. ISAAC E. TATE, my 24, 3 mos. 427 Broadway New-York.

Massachusetts Advertisements.

BOSTON EMIGRANT SOCIETY.

OFFICE, CORNER OF SOUTH AND BEACH STREETS.

THE object of tho Society is to protect the Emigrant from imposition. The Office is open daily from 7 o'clock A. M. to 6 P. M. Emigrants and others furnished with employment. The Society, having made the necessary arrangements, is prepared to furnish tickets of transportation to every section of the West. Persons procuring tickets at this office may rest assured that they will reach their destination by the best route, with the least delay, and the lowest cost.

MARTIN GRIFFIN, President.
JAMES FERGUSON, Rec. Sec. | JAMES DACEY, Cor. Sec.
JAMES FLYNN, Treasurer.
M. J. FENELON, Agent.

THE GREAT RUSSIAN REMEDY.

Pro Bono Publico.

"EVERY MOTHER SHOULD HAVE A BOX IN THE HOUSE HANDY IN CASE OF ACCIDENTS TO THE CHILDREN."

REDDING'S RUSSIAN SALVE. It is a Boston remedy of thirty years' standing, and is recommended by physicians. It is a sure and speedy cure for Burns, Piles, Boils, Corns, Felons, Chilblains, and old Sores of every kind.

For Fever Sores, Ulcers, Itch, Scald Head, Nettle Rash, Bunions, Sore Nipples, (recommended by nurses); Whitlows, Sties, Festers, Flea Bites, Spider Stings, Frozen Limbs, Salt Rheum, Scurvy, Sore and Cracked Lips, Sore Nose, Warts and Flesh Wounds, it is a most valuable remedy and cure, which can be testified to by thousands who have used it in the city of Boston and vicinity for the last thirty years.

In no instance will this Salve do an injury, or interfere with a physician's prescriptions. It is made from the purest materials, from a recipe brought from Russia, of articles growing in that country, and the proprietors have letters from all classes, clergymen, physicians, sea captains, nurses, and others who have used it themselves and recommend it to others.

REDDING'S RUSSIAN SALVE is put in large tin boxes, stamped on the cover with the picture of a horse and a disabled soldier, which picture is also engraved on the wrapper. PRICE, 25 Cents a Box. Sold at all the stores in town or country, or may be ordered of any wholesale druggist.

ap19tf Redding & Co., Proprietors, No. 8 State st., Boston.

WEEMAN'S IRON RAILING MANUFACTORY.

No. 26 Merrimac street, Boston, Mass.

Where he has been for the past thirty years.

ALL persons in want of IRON FENCES, suitable for cemetery, house, garden, Balustrades, &c., can, by calling on the subscriber, purchase a better fence at a lower price, than at any other establishment in the state, as he makes it his entire business.

jun14m6 EBENEZER WEEMAM.

B. S. TREANOR,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,

15 MASSACHUSETTS BLOCK, COURT SQUARE, BOSTON.

Particular attention paid to Conveyancing, and the examination of titles to Real Estate.

Medical.

THE CAUSE OF CONSUMPTION.

BRONCHITIS.—WHAT PRODUCES BRONCHITIS?

FIRST STAGE OF DISEASE.

COSTIVENESS is the first link that connects disease in the System. It creates, induces, feeds and supports Bronchitis; and is slightly or indifferently treated, as though it was of no serious tendency: nevertheless, it has laid the fonndation of that destroying disease, without the knowledge of the sufferers, undermining and sapping the very vitals of their constitutions.

Among the numerous class of diseases which afflict man, there is none more silent or treacherous in its approaches or more certain to triumph over its slowly consuming victim, than that formidable and insidious leveller of humanity—Bronchitis, which is produced by catching cold, through a neglect of regulating the state of the bowels when arriving to adult age. It seldom excites attention or alarm in the mind of any person, until it has sown the seed of disease and suffering in the human system, by checking the circulation of the blood; and it is to this source alone that we attribute the awful mortality of Consumption.

The following is a simple but correct illustration, namely:—If the culverts and sewers of the city were choked or clogged up, accidentally or otherwise, what would be the result? An overflow of accumulated filth and slush on the surface of the earth in its neighborhood, until it fills every hole, corner and crevice. This is quite similar to the human body, when the channel or sewer of life, as I may term it, which is the bowels, is checked or confined through constipation or some unnatural obstruction, which prevents the blood from circulating through the general system.

What, then, is the consequence? An accumulation of diseased matter and bile. Where will this bile and poisonous substance go to when it is prevented from taking its natural exit, through the bowels? It must surge itself back again into the blood, to be infused through the entire frame by the agency of the blood, bringing in its passage disease and suffering, and exhibiting itself by pain, nervous sensations and irritation all over the body—producing a bad feeling at the stomach, sourness of the food, a rush of blood to the head, catarrh, bronchitis, a short dry cough, dizziness, pain in the shoulders, and through or under the shonlder blades, cold feet, a peevish and irritable temper, annoyed by this hacking cough, and then gradually begins the expectorating from the throat of a lightish phlegm, resembling boiled starch or tough jelly of various colors, from a light to a darkish substance, and hawked up like a string.

SECOND STAGE.

From this period the patient is aware of some unusual and disagreeable feeling, though he seldom takes the hint till it goes from bad to worse. Catching cold from the slightest exposure, which he cannot avoid in consequence of the blood being in a diseased and corrupt condition for a long time previous to the appearance of those troublous symptoms, through the impure state of the blood, that at every breath the patient draws he inhales a similar quantity of fresh air by the nostrils and mouth, which keeps the tickling that exists in the throat and bronchial tubes in a ferment of irritation—this is the reason why some people complain of catching cold, even when confined to their room. Hence the sufferer is hacking, hawking, or expectorating a little at a time, with the impression that there is something in his throat that wants to come out; and which he desires to get out. There is a frequent desire for heavy sighing, with a dryness of the nostrils, which inclines the patient to pick or scratch them; sleepy, drowsy, dull, and heavy loss of appetite, and confused memory; a stuffing, tightness, and oppression of the chest, with a rawness and soreness of the gullet of the throat. This is caused by the silent enemy that has lurked in the system for months, and even years, and has at last aroused your fears, and well it might; for out of one hundred persons who die of Consumption ninety-nine are owing to disease of the throat alone, though simply called Bronchitis; and wretchedly treated by this self-pretended and dignified class of sheepskin physicians termed M. D.'s, who have proved a curse to the human family. They treat their patient on the following abusive principle, by cutting the tonsols and palate from the throat, as you might cut the gills out of a fish—next comes the solution or wash of nitrate of silver or caustic, and the whalebone swab, to wash and burn away the disease that has occupied the throat. Then comes the application of blister, and Croton oil externally to the throat and neck, to draw out the inflammation, as the physicians suppose (what blind philosophy.) Then comes the quack sheet of their MATERIA MEDICA—Calomel, Antimony, Morphine and Opium, to salivate and lull the feelings of the pafient, which adds to the disease and increases the suffering, by giving the disease an opporiunity of triumphing over nature. What a delusive idea to think the above treatment would be available in having recourse to those debilitating and irritating remedies of cutting, burning, blistering, purging and starving, which is of itself sufficient to lower and reduce the constitution of an ox.

THE THIRD STAGE

Confirms the above remarks. While undergoing this torturing treatment, the constitution is gradually failing and giving away, in giving rise to more alarming symptoms, evidently preparing its victim for the shroud, while the physician and friends fail to see the cause until those confirmed symptoms of consumption set in, but foolishly assign the cause to some other besides the genuine one, till the disease has reached its meridian, with a complication of fresh symptoms, breathing short and hurried, cough frequent, with an accumulation of corrupted matter, sometimes streaked with blood; profuse night sweats, emaciation and debility; cold chills in the forenoon, with a burning fever after; flesh soft and flabby, the limbs scarcely able to support the body; a susceptibility of catching cold on the least exposure, attended with a hoarseness and loss of voice, with a very heavy expectoration in the forenoon; flying pains in the chest, sides and shoulders, with a severe fit of coughing in the morning, or awaking from sleep. The painful crisis is fast approaching, with a swelling and puffing of the feet and ankles, and frequent attacks of diarrhœa. In females, the symptoms are more distressing at an earlier period than in the male, with a weakness in the back and loins, a sinking and exhausted feeling at the stomach, nervous and excitable, with gradual and frequent interruptions of the monthly flow, and as the disease progresses, a total or final cessation of it, with the harbinger of a broken down constitution which is a discharge of whites, a symptom that proves very debilitating and irritating to females.

All the above symptoms and sufferings are the fruits of costiveness at an early period, accruing to the sufferer through neglect of keeping the bowels in gentle operation, which would circulate the blood, and prove as ventilation to the general system, from the age of 18 to 26, when this disease creeps on and grows on, until every organ in the body is totally disorganized.

My long experience and observations, and my unprecedented success in treating consumption, inclines me to devote the remainder of my life to the cause of suffering humanity. I have cured more consumptive patients in the last ten years than any other doctor in the world in that time, and not by steam, smoke or vapor, nor by smelling medicine through an India rubber or glass tube, but through the selection I make from the forest and verdant meadows. I can always determine on examination whether I can be successful or not, and I speak accordingly. I have made it a rule to treat no disease longer than three weeks. If I cannot check the fatal progress of the disease in that time, I give up the patient as lost, and lead the sufferer to no further expense.

☞ In compliance with the repeated solicitations of consumptive patients living in remote parts of the country, I have opened an hospital at No. 178 Bowery, for the exclusive treatment of those laboring under any species of the above disease, where I can bestow on them the unremitted attention which the seriousness of their cases require; where I can be able to regulate their diet and regimen according to circumstances. Three weeks under the supervision of my especial care is worth four months at a distance.

All persons desirous of medical information can obtain it by enclosing one dollar, when all information and communication will be forwarded on receipt.

D. Durkin, Chronic and Consumptive Doctor,

my31 No. 178 Bowery, New-York.

DR. B. F. ADAMS,

SURGEON DENTIST, (formerly of Barclay street,) feeling grateful for the patronage so liberally bestowed upon him for the last fourteen years, respectfully informs his friends and the public, that he has taken an elegant suite of rooms, at

NO. 122 CHAMBERS STREET,

(near the Sixth and Eighth Avenue Railroads,) where he may always be found, ready to perform all operations pertaining to his profession, in a manner unsurpassed, and on the most reasonable terms. Whole or part sets of incorruptible teeth inserted without pain, on gold plate or gutta percha, excelling nature in beauty and durability. No impure gold or dangerous amalgams used. Irregularities in children's teeth prevented, or of adults remedied. Cleansing, extracting, &c. &c., all at reduced prices. Sets of teeth inserted on Silver or Gutta Percha, for six shillings each. Teeth examined, and advice given free of charge. Please call.

8m7jun B. F. ADAMS, 122 Chambers street, New-York.

DR. J. VOORHIES,

MEDICAL ELECTRICIAN,

NO. 69 SANDS STREET,

Brooklyn.

Office hours from 9 A. M. to 4 P. M.

N. B. All chronic or nervous diseases cured by Electricity in some form. Electro Medicated Vapor Baths ready for operation. Dropsy can be cured by this treatment. Consultations free. m3jun14

WRITING INKS.

WE ask the attention of all who wish imperishable records,—a matter of great importance to State, County and Town Offices, Banks, and others, to Dr. Chilton's test of the prominent Inks in use, made with a view to show their different degrees of permanence by exposure. Engraved facsimiles of the test can be seen at our office.

Thaddeus Davids & Co.,

ap19 6m Manufacturing Stationers, 26 Cliff street.

Medical.

"Eye and Ear."—DOCTOR HENDERSON, Oculist and Aurist, 419 Broadway, corner of Canal street, treats all diseases of the eye and ear, without cupping, leeching, blistering or the use of calomel. Within the past two years upwards of thirty cases of blindness from inflamation have been restored to sight, to whom reference can be given, (hundreds of which can be seen in my circular,) by inclosing three postage stamps. Electro-chemical Medicated Vapor and Sulphur, hot and cold water BATHS. Office hours 9 A. M. to 5 P. M. Sundays and evenings by appointment. 419 Broadway, corner of Canal st., New-York.

my17 3m

ARTIFICIAL EYES inserted.

H. G. LUTHER,

SURGICAL AND MECHANICAL DENTIST,

No. 698 BROADWAY, Second House above Fourth st.

HAVING enjoyed an extensive practice during the last twelve years, feels confident of his ability to give perfect satisfaction to all who may honor him with their preference. He is prepared to perform all operations connected with his profession, in the most faithful manner, and in strict accordance with scientific principles, embracing all the recent improvements of the day.

References of the most respectable character given if desired. Patronage respectfully solicited.

☞ N. B. Teeth extracted without pain. my17 3m

Dr. J. J. McGowan, Physician and Surgeon, Graduate of Harvard University, Fellow of the Massachusetts and Rhode Island Medical Societies, etc., has removed to No. 69 Canal street, New-York, a few doors from Broadway, where he will attend to calls in every branch of the medical profession. Dr. McG. will devote particular attention to chronic diseases, and those of women and children. m10 1t

New School of Medicine and Pharmacy. The last Unfolding of the Art of Healing. My daily practice proves that I CURE CONSUMPTION, in all its varied forms and most advanced states, as readily as any other disease. Therefore I desire to treat all Consumptives, but particularly those who have tried all other physicians without relief. Mrs. M. J. MARIN, M.D., No. 37. Lafayette place, N. Y. (First street east of Broadway, between 4th and 8th sts.) Office hours: from 10 A. M. to 1 P. M., exclusively for Ladies; and from 2 to 5 P. M., for Gentlemen, Wednesdays excepted. All other hours by appointment. my31 3m

THE GREATEST WONDER OF THE AGE!

A REMEDY WHICH CURES IN FIVE MINUTES.—M. LEROUX'S FRENCH CHOLERA COGNAC BITTERS.—This wonderful and scientific compound is recommended by the most eminent and learned physicians of all Europe and America, and enjoys the best reputation of anything similar ever offered. It is without doubt the best, most efficient and generally acknowledged remedy against Cholera, dysentery, diarrhœa, and complaints of the stomach in general. The numerous patients who have tried it according to directions, have invariably found relief in a very short time, and the best proof of it is, that since this standard remedy was introducee in the armies of the allies in the Crimea, the mortality of the soldiers from Cholera and similar diseases was reduced by over 75 per cent.; in consideration of which, the inventor was presented by the French and English governments with a gold medal, bearing the inscription, "Hail! M. LEROUX, the great Chemist and inventor, by whose knowledge our armies are preserved from Cholera."

This invaluable preparation is also a remedy for biliousness, indigestion, weakness, and general derangement of the stomach. Upon being taken, it creates appetite, and prevents the heaviness attendant upon eating, by persons who are dyspeptic.

In this city, also, this remedy has been tried with the most undoubted success, and the undersigned can produce the best testimonials of our most celebrated physicians, as to its immediate and complete success, which he will be happy at any time to show to any that may wish to see them. S. STEINFELD, sole agent for the United States, No. 70 Nassau street, corner of John.

P. S.—Those not having money to pay, may call at my place from 3 to 5 P. M. and receive this remedy gratis. my17 3m

TO NERVOUS SUFFERERS.

A Retired Clergyman, restored to health in a few days, after many years of great nervous suffering, is anxious to make known the means of cure. Will send (free) the prescriptions used. Direct to

Rev. JOHN M. DAGNALL,
my10 3m No. 59 Fulton street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Best Hair Dye.—DR. O. M. BALLARD'S new article received the highest premium at the World's Fair and American Institute, where it was examined by the distinguished Chemists, Dr. Chilton, and Prof. John Torrey, and pronounced the best. For sale by the best Druggists. Principal office and store, 498 Broadway, New-York. my17 3m

The undersigned announces to the legitimate faculty that he has opened a store for the dispensing of pure medicines, chemicals, &c. Having obtained a knowledge of the profession in the best schools in the world, during twelve years, he will be able to compound prescriptions precisely as they are ordered. JOHN. C. GILES, Apothecary, 21ju8m 285 Bleecker, two doors above Barrow.

Reed's Celebrated London Cordial Gin, having gained much popularity in this country, being distilled the same as that in London, as he was formerly a distiller of the same kind of Gin in England, under the EXCISE LAWS.

This article is used in every hospital in and out of England's great metropolis. Its medicinal properties are invaluable.

☞ This Gin is not an imitation or a mixture of raw materials, of which much is sold in this city, under the name of London Cordial Gin, but a genuine and pure article, equal to any imported.

W. R. takes the opportunity of thanking the public for their liberal support, support, and begs a continuance of the same.

DISTILLERY,
118 East 29th st., New-York, between 2d and 3d avenues.

LABORATORY AND CHEMICAL OFFICE,
18 Exchange Place, N. Y., March 4, 1856.

MR. REED: Sir—I have submitted to close examination two samples of London Cordial Gin, manufactured by you, and purporting to equal the English article. I find on comparison with samples of Hodges' and Burnett's previously examined by me, and which I know to have been imported direct, that the quality of yours is by no meansinferior to their celebrated compounds while the perfect method you posess of rectifying, insures an article of a higher degree of purity and flaver, when it has the equal advantage of time to soften it, than much of the so-called imported London gin. As a medicinal agent and cordial, under proper advice, it may be depended upon, from the care with which you select the essential oils combined with it in the distillation. Yours, respectfully,

ISAIAH DECK, M. D.,
Consulting and Analytical Chemist.

Mr. REED'S Distillery, 118 East Twenty-ninth st., New-York. [my31 3m

MRS. HAYES' SYRUP.

For Dysentery and Bowel Complaints.

WARRANTED to cure the worst cases in less than twenty-four hours, if used according to directions. It has stood the test of thirty-five years and has never been known to fail, even when the most eminent physicians had pronounced the patient beyond the reach of medicine. Over two thousand satisfactory references and certificates can be produced, sufficient to prove its superiority over all other preparations for these complaints.

The Syrup can be given to a child a week old with perfect safety. It is pleasant to the taste, and harmless in its composition, it being free from opium, alcohol, &c. Prepared and sold by Mrs. M. Hayes, 175 Fulton st., Brooklyn. Sold also by Joseph W. Hayes, 159 Atlantic st., H. Parker, cor. of Fulton Avenue and Cumberland street, M. Evans, corner of Myrtle and Classon avenues, Brooklyn. In New-York by F. C. Wells & Co., 115 Franklin street, C. H. Ring, 92 Broadway, T. T. Green, 862 Broadway, Guion, corner of Bowery and Grand streets, W. S. Dunham, 476 Broadway. In Williamsburg, J. D. Norvill, 26 Grand street. In Newark, by R. VanBuskirk, cor. of Market and Broad streets. 3m19jly

Special Notices.

MAYOR'S OFFICE, NEW-YORK, May 28, 1856.

NOTICE is hereby given, that the Complaint Book, opened at this office on the 1st of January, 1855, is still open for the reception of complaints of municipal abuses of all kinds. So far as the Mayor has the power, he will continue to exercise it for the abatement of any such evils, when brought to his attention through the Complaint Book, or otherwise. The Mayor invites all persons to take this method of reporting to him all violations of corporation ordinances, nuisances, or dereliction of duty upon the part of the officers of the Corporation, and he will, as heretofore, use all the legal means at his command to see the laws enforced, and the interests of the public protected. By order of the Mayor. ALEXANDER MING, Chief Clerk.

OFFICE OF RECEIVER OF TAXES, No. 32 Chambers street, New Court house

To avoid the risks that must inevitably occur from the crowd of Tax Payers who put off to the latest day the payment of their taxes, I have determined to adopt the following rule, which will be rigidly adhered to during my term of office. I shall receive no money after 2 o'clock p. m. Every officer in this department is STRICTLY PROHIBITED from receiving ENVELOPES containing money or checks for the payment of Taxes. By order, 3mjly5 HENRY H. HOWARD, Receiver.

New-York, June 28, 1856.

Business Directory.

RICH CARPETING.

1856. SPRING IMPORTATION. 1856.

ARTHUR DONNELLY,

98 BOWERY, (West side,) BETWEEN GRAND AND HESTER STREETS.

IS now prepared to exhibit his New Spring Styles of

Foreign and Domestic Carpetings,

Comprising every grade and every description, from the Cheapest Fabric to the Richest.

Importing his goods direct and thus saving the commission and interest which most dealers pay, he is enabled to offer them at prices highly favorable to consumers, who will find at his store, among other Carpetings adopted to all varieties of taste, the following elegant descriptions:

Medallions,	at	14s to 18s per yard.
Velvet,	"	10s to 16s "
Tapestry,	"	6s to 12s "
Brussels,	"	7s to 12s "
Three-ply,	"	7s to 10s "
Ingrain,	"	3s to 7s "
Common Ingrain,	"	18d to 3s "

English and American Floor Oil Cloths,

of every imaginable width, pattern and style.

A complete and choice assortment of

STAIR AND HALL CARPETS, RUGS, MATS, MATTINGS,

and of everything else appertaining to the Carpet Trade.

ARTHUR DONNELLY, 98 Bowery, (West side,)

ap193m Between Grand and Hester sts., N. Y.

NEW STORE

AND

NEW GOODS.

THE subscriber having leased for a term of years the premises

374 Hudson street,

and made exthnsive additions thereto, and having laid in a large stock o

Carpeting and Oil Cloths,

mostly bought at Auction, for CASH, is now prepared to sell them at the following extremely low prices:

Tapestry Brussels,		8s. usually sold at 10s.
Three Ply Ingrain		8s. usually sold at 10s.
Superfine	do	6s. usually sold at 8s.
Fine	do	5s. usually sold at 6s.
Common	do	All WOOL 3s. 6d. per yard, a price absolutely unheard of.

Ingrain, Cotton Warp and Wool Filling 2s. 6d.
Oil Cloths 3s. per yard, usually sold at 5s.
Mats, Matting, Table and Piano Covers, Venetian and Hall Carpetting, Stair Rods, &c. &c.
Clergymen and Churches furnished at wholesale prices.
Goods in all cases warranted as represented.

J. R. Landon, 374 Hudson street, New-York,

3mjun a few doors from Hamersly.

JAMES CAIN,

MERCHANT TAILOR,

AND

CLOTHIER,

NO. 129 FULTON STREET,

(HERALD BUILDING,) New-York.

my31y

PHAIR & CO.,

STEAM JOB PRINTERS,

22 BEEKMAN STREET, NEW-YORK,

Are prepared to do Printing of all kinds in the best style and on reasonable terms. PARTIES desiring printing for BALLS, PARTIES, EXCURSIONS, CONCERTS, or PUBLIC MEETINGS, are invited to give us a call.

3mjly26

GEO. McDONNELL,

BOOT AND SHOE MANUFACTURER,

32 PARK ROW, NEXT DOOR TO LOVEJOY'S HOTEL, NEW-YORK.

☞ Boots, Shoes, and Gaiters of the best quality made to order.

3m.my10 Geo. McDonnell.

ROBERT IRWIN,

CHEAP BOOT AND SHOE STORE,

my10 156 Chatham street, opposite James' st., New-York. 3m

R. HOGAN,

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL

UMBRELLA AND PARASOL MANUFACTURER,

374 BOWERY, NEAR FOURTH STREET.

Repairing neatly executed. my17 3m*

M. GRADY.

27 FAYETTE STREET, LOWELL, MASS.

ju21 Agent for the IRISH NEWS and all the other choice literature of the day.

KNOX'S

OFFICE FURNITURE WAREROOMS,

59 BEEKMAN STREET, UP STAIRS.

DESKS! DESKS!! DESKS!!!

DOUBLE and Single counting-room DESKS, from 3 to 8 feet long. Office Desks from 3 to 6 ft., of Mahogany, blackwalnut and oak; cases for Books and pigeon-holes. Office chairs, cushions, lounges and Office Tables of every description. my17 tf

---

McLOUGHLIN & McSHANE,

(Successors to THOS. ANDREWS,

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALERS IN

CHOICE TEAS, COFFEES, WINES, BRANDIES, AND GROCERIES,

61 FULTON STREET, near Cliff street,

NEW-YORK. 3m

SHIP STORES SUPPLIED.

MRS. J. McCARTHY,

FASHIONABLE MILLINERY STORE,

44 THIRD AVENUE,

Third door from 10th Street, NEW-YORK.

Cheap Straw Hats, Ribbons, Flowers, Ladies' Straw Goods.

Straw Bonnets cleaned and altered to the newest fashions.

LADIES' OWN MATERIALS MADE UP TO THE LATEST STYLES. tf

Analytical and Metallurgical Chemistry and Mining Geology.

DR. ISAIAH DECK,

No. 18 EXCHANGE PLACE, NEW-YORK.

MAY be consulted on all subjects relating to Practical Chemistry, Mining- and Metallurgy. Assays of Ores, Analyses of Minerals, and Mining Products in general carefully and expeditiously conducted, and sound opinions delivered upon the most economical methods of working them, based on the latest chemical discoveries. Geological and Mining Surveys undertaken in any part of the world—Dr. DECK having had considerable experience in this branch of his profession. my31 3m

---

NICHOLAS WALSH.

SEXTON AND UNDERTAKER.

NO. 8 SIXTH AVENUE.

MEAGHER & CAMPBELL,

ATTORNEYS AND COUNSELLORS AT LAW,

NO. 82 BROADWAY.

NOTARY PUBLIC,

Commissioner for the U. S. Court of Claims.

THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER, having formed a partnership with MALCOLM CAMPBELL, for the general practice of the law, the firm will continue to devote their attention to such law business as may be intrusted to them, including conveyancing, practice in all the courts of the state of New-York and of the United States, and general collecting business in all parts of the world. Particular attention will be given to the prosecution of claims against the United States in the Court of Claims.

Mr. Meagher may be consulted daily, on law business only, at No. 82 Broadway, from three till five o'clock P. M.

THOS. H. HURLEY,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,

NO. 10 CENTRE ST., OPPOSITE CITY HALL.

WILLIAM E. ROBINSON,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR,

HAVING entered into partnership with ISAAC DAYTON, Esq., (author of the work on Surrogates,) and WILLIAM A. COURSEN, Esq., gentlemen long known, and of high standing at the New-York Bar, has removed to their new office at 267 BROADWAY, third door below Chambers street.

☞ All business either in the Criminal or Civil Courts, promptly and faithfully attended to. ap191y

---

JOHN O'ROURKE,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,

NO. 10 CENTRE STREET,

(Opposite the Superior Court Buildings,)

7jun NEW-YORK.

JAMES M. SHEEHAN,

Attorney and Counsellor at Law,

No. 13 Chambers Street, New-York.

2y1ju Collections promptly attended to, and Liens carefully filed, &c.

JOHN A. McSORLEY,

CUSTOM HOUSE AND SHIP BROKER, AND NOTARY PUBLIC,

7 BROAD STREET,

Clergymen, importing Vestments, Church Ornaments, &c., will be liberally treated with by calling on the subscriber.

REFERENCES:

Messrs. Thos. McClune & Co., C. Meletta, | Messrs. D. & J. Sadlier & Co., James Cook & Co. 6m

---

JAMES HARLIN,

WATCH, CLOCK MAKER, AND JEWELER.

236 HENRY STREET, BROOKLYN.

All watches and clocks bought or repaired at my establishment, warranted for twelve months.

JOHN FOLEY,

WATCHMAKER,

JEWELER AND FINISHER OF FINE WATCHES,

NO. 202 BOWERY.

(Between Spring and Prince Streets, New-York.

Watches of a superior quality made to order, and warranted not to err more than four minutes a year. Cases jointed, works jeweled, and chronometer balances set in the best style. Jewelry of every kind repaired in a jul2m6 workmanlike manner. All orders punctually attended to.

J. McCARTEN,

WATCH AND CLOCK MAKER,

154 SEVENTH AVENUE.

Between 20th and 21st streets, New-York.

Watches, Clocks, and Jewelry carefully repaired and warranted. A good 7jun assortment of watches and clocks always on hand. 8m

---

JOHN FOLEY,

MANUFACTURER OF FINE GOLD PENS

BEST QUALITY ONLY.

GOLD AND SILVER PENCIL CASES.

my24tf No. 163 BROADWAY, NEW-YORK.

JOHN KENNEDY'S

STEAM MARBLE WORKS,

35TH STREET, NEAR BROADWAY.

Statuary and Marble Mantle-Pieces, Monuments, Grave Stones, Tombs, &c. All orders thankfully received and punctually attended to.

THOMAS GAFFNEY'S

SOAP AND CANDLE

MANUFACTORY,

325 EAST SENECA STREET, BUFFALO,

NEW-YORK. 6mJune7

WILLIAM M. SMITH,

The Public Favorite, and only American Opposition

BILL POSTER AND DISTRIBUTOR,

THE OLDEST ESTABLISHED IN THE BUSINESS.

Work done promptly and faithfully—cheaper, quicker, and better than any other poster in the city. Work done either in New-York, Brooklyn, Williamsburgh, or Jersey City. Boards lent for concerts, or any kind of work.

OFFICE, 28½ SPRUCE STREET, NEW-YORK,

ap26tf (Between William and Gold streets.)

THE METROPOLITAN

FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY,

No. 108 BROADWAY,

(Cor. Pine Street.)

CASH CAPITAL $300,000.

JAMES LORIMER GRAHAM, President.

EDWARD A. STANSBURY, Secretary. my81y

WILLARD, FELT & CO.,

MANUFACTURERS OF ACCOUNT BOOKS,

AND IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN PAPER AND STATIONERY,

NO. 14 MAIDEN LANE,

3mos (near Broadway.)

MATTHEW WALLACE,

25 CLARK STREET, CHICAGO, ILL.,

WHOLESALE DEALER IN NEWSPAPERS, BOOKS, &c.

☞ "The Irish News," on hand, by the earliest moment, each week. tf

Hotels.

STEVENS HOUSE.

(LATE DELMONICO'S HOTEL.

21, 23, 25, & 27 Broadway, New-York.

THE undersigned avails himself of this opportunity of informing his friends and the public that he has leased the above named house for a term of years, and has made extensive alterations and repairs, and omitted nothing that will tend to the accomodations or comfort of guests. The house having been newly furnished throughout in the most thorough and modern style, with a view to convenience and comfort, and as it will be conducted on the European plan, and with an experienced caterer, and thorough cooks, he hopes to give satisfaction to those who favor him with their patronage which has never failed while in other Hotels in this city.

Catholic families and clergymen visiting New-York will find in the arrangements of this spacious establishment, elegance, convenience, and comfort, at moderate charges. JOHN O'GRADY, JR.,

3m5jly Formerly of Judson's Hotel and the Brandreth House.

NEW HOTEL.

LAFARGE HOUSE,

Broadway, New-York.

This new and beautiful First-class Hotel, is now open for the reception of guests. The location is the most pleasant part of Broadway, opposite Bond street, and in the immediate vicinity of the most fashionable places of amusement. The rooms are large and airy, and so arranged that they may be connected in suites for families, or used separately for single seasons. The patronage of the public is respectfully solicited.

3m19jly STONE & BURROUGHS, Proprietors.

JAMES McPYKE,

James McPyke respectfully informs his friends and the public that he has leased for a term of years the spacious and elegant premises 90 Prince street, three doors west of Broadway, which he will open for the reception of his old patrons, friends, and those who will honor him with their patronage on the 4th inst. The house has been newly painted and furnished in a commodious manner, for the comfort of his guests. His bar will contain the choicest and most approved brands of liquor, and his larder will always be stocked with the finest luxuries and delicacies of the season. Rooms for private parties. Families supplied with meals at all hours. 4t12jly

---

HOSEY & RILEY,

PACIFIC RESTAURANT,

600 BROADWAY, NEW-YORK.

Private entrance on the first floor, 134 Crosby street.

☞ Hosey & Riley invite their friends to give them a call.

my24 3m

Business Directory.

THE VIRGINIA TOBACCO AGENCY,

(ESTABLISHED IN 1836.)

45 Water street, New-York.

CHARLES M. CONNOLLY,

Commission Merchant and Agent for the sale of Manufactured Tobacco.

Has always on hand, at the above agency, a full supply of

Manufactured Tobacco,

Of all brands and descriptions, direct from the Virginia Factories, for sale on liberal terms. 3ly5y

---

P. COTTER,

DEALER IN

LONDON BROWN STOUT, SCOTCH & BURTON ALES,

PHILADELPHIA PORTER, ALE, CHAMPAIGNE CIDER AND SODA WATER.

Mercer House,

Corner of Broome and Mercer streets, New-York.

JOHN J. STAFF'S.

WINES, LIQUORS, SEGARS,
LONDON, DUBLIN, PHILADELPHIA,
PORTER and ALE,
SCOTCH, BURTON, and EAST INDIA ALES,
CHAMPAGNE CIDER, in quantities to suit purchasers,
at 333 Broadway,
tf corner of Anthony street, New-York.

P. MONAGHAN,

IMPORTER of the various and best brands of HAVANA SEGARS, &c. &c. Country and city merchants supplied in bond or in store. Duties paid or unpaid. 121 PEARL STREET, New-York.

N. B.—Sole Importer of the J. M. Vichot, La Union, and La Primavera brands. ap261y

---

WISE'S IRISH MALT WHISKEY.

IMPORTED by J. & P. Hogan, Nos. 6 and 12 West street, and 253 Third Avenue, corner of 21st street, New-York, and corner of Vanbrunt and Sullivan streets, Brooklyn. J. & P. Hogan wish to inform their friends and the public that they have just received a large quantity of WISE'S CORK MALT WHISKEY, which will be sold at a reduced price, out of bond and at the above establishment. They are the only firm who import the same in New-York. ap261y

---

DRY-DOCK DISTILLERY.

No. 291 East-thirteenth st., near Avenue B.

JAMES RUSSELL,

Rectifier and Manufacturer of Cordials,

IMPORTER AND DEALER

IN Foreign and Domestic Wines, Liquors, Cordials, &c. J. R. having had long experience in the liquor trade, he has facilities of selecting wines and liquors of the most superior quality, which he offers to dealers and families at the lowest market prices, and flatters himself that a single trial will be quite sufficient to secure custom.

Goods delivered free of expense in any part of the city, and country orders promptly attended to. 8m jun14

P. CUFF,

RECTIFIER AND DISTILLER,

NO. 306 EIGHTH AVENUE.

NEW-YORK.

Dealer in Foreign Wines and Liquors.

☞ Goods sent to all parts of the country. Orders of all kinds promptly attended to. y jly26

CALL ON

THOMAS LYNCH,

OF the "FULTON SHADES," Fulton Ferry, Brooklyn, for the best XX and XXX ales, brandies, and segars.

The Irish News.

THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.
JOHN SAVAGE, LITERARY EDITOR.

THREE DOLLARS PER ANNUM. SINGLE COPIES 6 CENTS
Publication Office, 29 Ann St., cor. of Nassau.

VOL. I. NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, AUGUST 9, 1856. NO. 18.

Publications.

CONTENTS OF NO. XVIII.

Editorial.

VOTES OF IRISH MEMBERS ON THE AMERICAN QUESTION IN PARLIAMENT.
NOTES ON DE TOQUEVILLE.
POPULAR EDUCATION—THE FREE ACADEMY.
FRANCE AND IRELAND—EGALITE, FRATERNITE!
THE SPANISH REVOLUTION.

Correspondence.

Letter from Dublin—by "Kilmainham."
" from Kilkenny—by "St. Canice."
" from California—by Capt. O'Regan.

Literature.

The Martins of Cro' Martin.
Paraphrase of a Sermon in a Stone—Putnam's Magazine.
Paragraphs from Irish Papers—Pen and Scissors Work.
Inequality of the Law—from the Courier des Etats Unis.

Poetry.

The Church Door—by Barrett.

Miscellaneous.

European News.—Irish Provincial News—Irish Press on Tipperary Riot—Memoir of Robert St. Leger—American News—Congressional Summary—Central America—Nicaragua, full particulars of the inauguration of Gen. Walker as President, &c., &c.

Answers to Correspondents.

THE IRISH NEWS,

EDITED BY THE PROPRIETOR,

THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER,

DEDICATED TO THE SERVICE OF THE

IRISH PEOPLE,

AT HOME AND ABROAD,

Will be published every Saturday, on and after the 12th of April, at 29 Ann street, corner of Nassau, New-York.

TERMS.

For subscribers, $3 per annum: 6 cents a copy.
For retailers and carriers, $4 per hundred.
For Clubs, 4 copies to one address, per annum, $10.
" 7 " " " " $17.
" 10 " " " " $20.

For advertising.—Each square of eight lines,

Transient	$1
Monthly	$2
Quarterly	$5
Yearly	$16

N. B. Four lines, or under, constitute half a square.

Agents or Postmasters who interest themselves in procuring and remitting subscriptions, may retain 50 cents out of each annual subscription of $3.

☞ Subscribers, Agents, and Advertisers will please send in their orders early, and observe that our terms are invariably, payments in advance.

Communications of a PRIVATE nature should always be marked so. Those connected with the editorial department are to be addressed to Thomas Francis Meagher, and those on business to Richard J. Lalor, Irish News Office, 29 Ann street, corner of Nassau.

☞ Subscribers, residing in New-York, Brooklyn, and Williamsburgh, who pay in advance, will have their papers neatly enveloped, addressed, and delivered on each Wednesday through Boyd's Express or some similar medium.

Wholesale Dealers.

DEXTER & BROTHERS, 14 Ann Street, New-York.
ROSS & TOUSEY, 108 Nassau Street, New-York.
SAMUEL YATES, 22 Beekman Street, New-York.
MIKE MADDEN, 22 Ann Street, New-York.
HAMILTON & JOHNSON, 30 Ann Street, New-York.
DE WITT & DAVENPORT, 160 & 162 Nassau Street, New-York.
HENRY TAYLOR, Baltimore, Md.
FEDERHEN & CO., 13 Court Street, Boston.
WM. HICKEY, 128 Federal Street, Boston.
REDDING & CO., 8 Court Street, Boston.
THOS. McLOUGHLIN, 42 South 4th Street, Philadelphia.
T. R. CALLENDER, 88 South-Third Street, Philadelphia.
DROVIN & CO., Philadelphia.
A. WINCH, 116 Chestnut street.
J. M. CRAWFORD, 30 and 32 Chestnut Street, St. Louis, Mo.
MATTHEW WALLACE, 25 Clark Street, Chicago, Ill.
McNALLY & CO., 75 Dearborn Street.
J. W. SULLIVAN, Kearney Street, San Francisco, Cal.
ROY'S, Detroit, Mich.
J. B. MAHONY, Cincinnati, Ohio.
J. P. WALSH, Cincinnati, Ohio.
—— COURTNEY, Charleston, South Carolina.
BRICE, 100 Exchange Place, New Orleans.
JOHN PLASTO, 144 Upper Abbey street, Dublin.
STILL & CO., 120 Montgomery street, San Francisco.
WM. BOYLE, News Carrier, San Francisco.
J. C. Morgan, next post office, New Orleans.

Retail Dealers.

NAGLE, Bangor, Me.
O'CONNELL, Cincinnati, O.
HASTINGS, Albany, N. Y.
McGOWANS, Portland, Me.
ADAMSON, Washington, D. C.
DOWNS, New-Haven, Conn.
MORRISEY, " "
DONOHUE, Newark, N. J.
JOHN H. TYSON, 89 Washington street, Hoboken, N. J.
JOHN C. CLARKE, 38 Newark avenue, Jersey City.
B. E. DOWLING, Jefferson st., next the Post Office, Newport, Ky.
M. GRADY, 27 Fayette st., Lowell, Mass.

Printed by Watters Brothers, 47 Ann street.
POWER PRESS OF J. B. WILLIAMS.

KEATING'S IRELAND.

A NEW TRANSLATION OF THE

FORAS FEASA AR ERINN;

OR, GENERAL HISTORY OF IRELAND.

From a Manuscript Copy of the Original Irish of the Rev. and Learned

GEOFFREY KEATING.

With Notes, Historical, Topographical, and Explanatory,

By JOHN O'MAHONY, Esq.

The work is now in course of preparation, and will be speedily published, in one large octavo volume of about 600 pages, with plates. Price to Subscribers, $2,00.

The book will be got up in superior style, and furnished to the address of Subscribers giving their names to a duly-authorized canvasser, or to

A list of subscribers will be printed in the work.

P. M. HAVERTY, Publisher,
110 Fulton street, N. Y.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., July 10, 1856.

Dear Haverty—I wish you to put down my name as a subscriber to Mr. O'Mahoney's translation of the Foras Feasa ar Erinn.

That is a book long wanted, and which the "Celtic Society ought to have given us long ago. If William Elliot Hudson had lived, it would have been accomplished. And it will be no small credit to you, if you can bring out here in America a work long acknowledged to be a desideratum in Ireland; executed, too, by a scholar so competent both to translate and to illustrate it with notes, as Mr. O'Mahony.

I hope it is well advanced in its preparation.

Faithfully yo JOHN MITCHEL.

Publications.

BENZIGER BROTHERS.

Publishers and Booksellers,

MANUFACTURERS AND IMPORTERS OF

Church Furniture,

Einsiedeln, Switzerland, and 172 William street, corner of Beekman, New-York.

BENZIGER BROTHERS beg leave most respectfully to call the particular attention of the Right Rev. and the Rev. Clergy, the Religious Communities, Educational Establishments, and of the Trade, to the large and varied stock they have just opened in their new store, 172 William street.

Their Book Trade.

The old established house of Benziger Brothers, Eisiedeln, well known to many of the Hierarchy and the Rev. Clergy of the United States who have visited Switzerland, established this house in New-York four years ago, and they trust they will receive for the greatly increased advantages they offer, a continuance of that support, which for a period of over forty years has enabled them to build up, at the Pilgrimage of Our Lady of the Hermits (Einsiedeln) an establishment in which over four hundred persons are daily employed in the fabrication of the various articles that are used in the Church.

They desire particularly to call attention to their publications of PRAYER and DEVOTIONAL BOOKS, in German, French, Italian and Latin, consisting of over 200 different sorts. Being in immediate and constant intercourse with nearly all the principal publishers of Europe, they are enabled to offer a large assortment of standard THEOLOGICAL and LITURGICAL WORKS, among which are, the editions of Mechline, Paris, Ratisbone, &c., at exceedingly low prices.

They are also prepared to supply any of the English Catholic Books published in the United States, at publishers' lowest prices.

An assortment of Dutch and Flemish Prayer Books, and of German School and Story Books.

2. They very respectfully invite an inspection of their extensive assortment of

Vestments and Church Vessels,

and, in doing so, feel confident that their stocks is more varied and of superior fabrication than any of the kind heretofore introduced into the United States, and from their facilities for purchasing in Europe, are enabled to sell at a lower price than any other house in the country.

3. Engravings, Beads, Crucifixes, &c.

ENGRAVINGS.—An immense variety of their own manufacture, including Altar, Baptismal, Confirmation, First Communion and First Confession Cards, Holy Water Pots, and

BEADS—Pearl, Garnet, Cornelian, Cocoa, Ivory, Wood, and Glass.

CRUCIFIXES, MEDALS, and RELIQUARIES, &c., in great variety. Also, STATUARY, in porcelain, biscuit, plastique, &c., &c.

4. Together with the above they have a large number of

Beautiful Statues,

suitable for Churches and Oratories, imported from Germany, France, and Belgium; amongst which are "The Immaculate Conception," "Virgin Mother" or "Our Lady of Victories," "St. Peter," "St. Paul," "Ecue Homo," "St. Joseph," "St. Aloysius," "St. Patrick," "The Resurrection," "Angel Guardian," "Angel Adoring," "The Infant Saviour in the Crib," "The Crucifixion," and many others. Any figure made to order, from design.

☞ Catalogues describing the Church Ornaments, Books, Pictures and Beads, can be had on application. jy19 3mos

Study the Life of Mary!

THE OLD ESTABLISHED CATHOLIC HOUSE

OF

EDWARD DUNIGAN & BROTHER,

(JAMES B. KIRKER,)

151 Fulton street, New-York,

Are now publishing, in monthly parts, at twenty-five cents each, and with the express approbation of the

MOST REV. JOHN HUGHES, D.D.,

ARCHBISHOP OF NEW-YORK,

The Life of the Blessed Virgin Mary,

By the

RIGHT REV. ROMUALD GENTILUCCI,

Chamberlain of Honor to His Holiness,

Dedicated to and honored with the suffrages of His Holiness

POPE PIUS IX.,

ILLUSTRATED with fine steel engravings, and vignettes, borders, and initials, designed expressly for this work. This Life, published at Rome in 1848, by a Prelate high in the esteem of the Holy Father, is approved by the Master of the Sacred Palace, and has already been translated into other languages. Amid the many lives that have appeared, Gentilucci's will ever be remarkable for its unction and beauty of style, no less than for the deep knowledge which it displays of the writings of the Holy Fathers, and all the monuments of Ecclesiastical History that can in any way throw light on the Life of the Immaculate Mother of our Lord, as handed down in the loving traditions of the faithful from the age in which she lived.

It is a book for the studious as well as for the fervent Christian; a book for every one who seeks to rouse in his heart feelings of devotion for Her, whom the unerring Judge selected for the greatest honor which the human mind can conceive.

Conditions of the Work.

Gentillucci's Life of the Blessed Virgin Mary will be published in semi-monthly parts of 48 pages each, with a steel engraving in every number, and several fine woodcuts. Printed on fine paper, from new type, it will, when complete, form a most unique and beautiful volume of six to seven hundred and fifty pages.

OBSERVATIONS OF THE PRESS.

No other work of our day, on the same subject, can be compared to it. It is unrivalled for beauty of style and depth of erudition. It is the offering of a learned and devoted son of the blessed Virgin, who enjoys the confidence and friendship of our most Holy Father, to whom the work is dedicated. We are not more edified at the piety of the author, than astonished at the wonderful erudition displayed in the book. The translator has performed his task admirably.—Pittsburg Catholic.

We cannot too highly recommend it to the consideration of our readers, whether we regard the intrinsic value of the work itself, or the beauty and exquisite ensemble of its getting up.—Truthteller.

Profusely illustrated with engravings and vignettes, this work is brought out in such an elegant style, as to make it, exclusive of its literary merit, a fitting library companion to the Bible of the same enterprising publishers.—Detroit Vindicator.

This work is one of devotion and merit. We do not know who translated it, but it seems better than average translations.—Freeman's Journal.

This work, translated from the Italian, and apparently well translated, is by an eminent author, is dedicated by permission to his Holiness Pius IX., and is spoken of in very high terms by competent judges. As far as we have seen it, we like it very much, and think it must prove a great favorite with the children of Mary and all devout Catholics.—Brownson's Review.

Inducement.

Each subscriber to this splendid work will receive with the last number a magnificent steel engraving, suitable for framing, of the

MOST. REV. JOHN HUGHES, D.D.,

ARCHBISHOP OF NEW-YORK.

Canvassers will find it to their advantage to address the publishers.

8t12jly EDWARD DUNIGAN & BROTHER.

Post Office Notice.—The MAILS FOR EUROPE, via Southampton and Havre, per U. S. steamer Washington will close at this office on SATURDAY, the 9th day of August, at 10½ o'clock, A. M.

Post Office Notice.—The Mails for California, per U. S. steamer Illinois, will close at this office on Tuesday, the 5th day of August, at 1 o'clock P. M. Isaac V. Fowler, Postmaster.

Publications.

SCARCE BOOKS RELATING TO IRELAND.

HE DUBLIN NATION for 1849, '50, '51. 3 vols., half-green calf, neat.
DUBLIN UNIVERSITY MAGAZINE—from the commencement to 1855, complete; 46 vols. in neat half calf.
RYAN'S IRISH WORTHIES. 2 vols., 8vo., cloth.
STUART'S HISTORY OF ARMAGH. 8vo. $3.
MONASTICUM HIBERNICUM. By Stevens. 8vo, calf, plates. $8.
SMITH'S HISTORY OF CORK. 2 vols., 8vo. $6.
McGREGOR'S HISTORY OF LIMERICK. 2 vols. $6.
IRISH QUARTERLY REVIEW. 5 vols., 8vo, containing Gilbert's Streets of Dublin—Life of John Banim—Celtic Records of Ireland—Memoirs of Irish Celebrities—Lady Blessington—Maturin—Dr. Maginn—Chief Justice Bushe—Rev. S. Madden—Tom Moore—Barry, the painter—Macklin, &c., &c. $16.
IRISH PENNY JOURNAL. 1 vol., quarto. $3 50.
DUBLIN PENNY JOURNAL. 4 vols., very scarce. $16.
ANCIENT IRISH HISTORIES. By Spencer Campion Hanmer and Marlborough. 2 vols., 8vo. $7 50.
PACATA HIBERNIA. $6.
IRISH PENNY MAGAZINE. Edited by Lover. $3 50.
ANNALS OF THE FOUR MASTERS. Translated by Connellan. 4to, cloth, map. $6 50.
HARDY'S LIFE OF CHARLEMONT. 2 vols. $3.
KEATING'S HISTORY OF IRELAND. 8vo. $4.
THE CITIZEN, a Dublin magazine. 4 vols., with a collection of ancient Irish music. $12.
O'BRIEN'S ROUND TOWERS. 8vo, half calf. $10.
MUSGRAVE'S IRISH REBELLIONS. 2 vols., 8vo, half calf. $4.
And a large collection of miscellaneous Irish books.
For sale by P. M. Haverty, Bookseller,
110 Fulton street, New-York.

VOLUNTEERS ASSEMBLED IN COLLEGE GREEN—A copy of this rare engraving (described in No. 10 Irish News) for sale. Price $5. jy12 tf

The Trade supplied on liberal terms with
MITCHEL'S JAIL JOURNAL.
MOORE'S LIFE OF LORD EDWARD FITZGERALD.
DAVIS'S POEMS, with an introduction by John Mitchel.

NAPIER'S PENINSULAR WAR.

LIBRARY EDITION.

J. S. REDFIELD, 34 Beekman street, will publish, on Saturday, Aug. 16, 5 volumes, 12mo., price $7 50,

The History of the War in the Peninsula,

and in the

South of Frane from A. D. 1807 to 1814.

By Major-General Sir W. F. P. Napier, K.C.B., Col. 27th Regiment, &c.

 This edition is a reprint of the revised English edition, recently published, and contains all the author's emendations and "justificatory pieces," with

FIFTY-FIVE MAPS AND PLANS OF BATTLES,

There has been also prepared for this edition,

A Complete Index

to the whole work, (wanting in all other editions,) and the following

Portraits,

beautifully engraved on steel:

1. NAPIER, (the author,)
2. NAPOLEON,
3. WELLINGTON,
4. SOULT,
5. JOSEPH BONAPARTE.

"You shou'd read Napier's volumes of the war in Portugal. He is a heroic fellow, equal to any thing in Plutarch; and, moreover, a long-headed, clever hero, who takes good aim before he fires."—Letters of Sydney Smith.

"Our English Thucydides, the historian of the Peninsular war."—Walter Savage Landor on Orthography. Fraser, Feb. 1856.

Billiards.

IMPROVED BILLIARD TABLES AND CUSHIONS.

MICHAEL PHELAN'S

MODEL TABLES AND COMBINATION CUSHIONS,

(Patented February 19, 1856,)

CORRECT in principle and perfect in action—so constructed as to insure mathematical correctness of angles when played upon, and warranted to possess the requisite elasticity in all seasons, having been tested by the best players in this conntry, and by them pronounced the most perfect of any hitherto constructed—are offered to the public as cheap as the ordinary tables of the day. Orders promptly attended to for fitting up private or public Billiard Rooms; new Cushions put on old Tables, &c.

Saloon and Salesroom No. 39 Chambers street, up stairs.

O'CONNOR & COLLENDER,

BILLIARD TABLE MANUFACTURERS.

53 ANN STREET, NEW-YORK.

Special Notices.

GRAND ANNUAL PICNIC

OF THE

YOUNG MEN'S ASSOCIATION

TO CELESTIAL GROVE,

On Thursday, August 21st, 1856.

Tickets one dollar, to admit gentleman and lady. Extra lady's ticket, 50 cents. To be obtained from the committee.

JEREMIAH QUINLAN, President.
D. J. CONLEY, Recording Secretary.
JOHN S. SCULLY, Treasurer. 3t9au

Proclamation.—500 Dollars reward.—I, Fernando Wood, Mayor of the City of New-York, by virtue of authority vested in me by law, do offer a reward of five hundred dollars, for the arrest and conviction of the person or persons who murdered Bartholomew Burke, on the night of Thursday the 17th, or on the morning of the 18th July, 1856, at the corner of Broadway and White-streets, said reward to be paid on the conviction of the offender or offenders, on the certificate of the District Attorney, that such conviction was had upon the testimony of the party claiming the same, but all claims for said reward not presented within twenty days thereafter, will be disregarded. Witness my hand and seal of Mayoralty, this 22nd July, 1856. 2aug [L. S.] FERNANDO WOOD.

Notice.—New-York and Liverpool U. S. M. S. S. Co., 56 Wall street.—New-York, May 27th, 1856.—The rate of freight by the steamers of this line from Liverpool to New-York, is reduced to four pounds per ton measurement until further notice. jly19tf E. K. COLLINS.

Shipping.

THE NEW-YORK AND LIVERPOOL

United States Mail Line.

The ships composing this line are the following:

The ATLANTIC .....Capt. Eldridge.
The ADRIATIC .....Capt. West.
The PACIFIC .....Capt. Eldridge.
The BALTIC .....Capt. Comstock.

These ships have been built by contract, expressly for the government service. Every care has been taken in their construction, as also in their engines to insure strength and speed; and their accommodations for passengers are unequalled for elegance and comfort.

Price of passage from New-York to Liverpool in first cabin, $130; in second do., $75. Exclusive use of extra size state rooms, $825. From Liverpool to New-York, 80 and 20 guineas.

An experienced surgeon attached to each ship.

No berth can be secured until paid for.

PROPOSED DATES OF SAILING.

FROM NEW-YORK.	FROM LIVERPOOL.
Saturday.....Aug. 2	Wednesday.....July 23
Saturday.....Aug. 16	Wednesday.....Aug. 6
Saturday.....Aug. 30	Wednesday.....Sept. 3
Saturday.....Sept. 13	Wednesday.....Sept. 17
Saturday.....Oct. 11	Wednesday.....Oct. 1
Saturday.....Oct. 25	Wednesday.....Oct. 15

Edw'd. K. Collins & Co., No. 56 Wall street, New-York.

Brown, Shipley & Co., Liverpool.

Stephen Kennard & Co., 27 Austin Friars, London.

B. G. Wainwright & Co., Paris.

The owners of these ships will not be accountable for gold, silver, bullion, specie, jewelry, precious stones or metals, unless bills of lading are signed therefor, and the value thereof therein expressed.

Shippers will please take notice, that the ships of this line cannot carry any goods contraband of war. ap26 6m.

C. H. MARSHALL & CO.,

Old Black Ball Line of Liverpool Packets.

CERTIFICATES

Furnished for Passage to and from Liverpool, on the 1st and 16th of every Month, by the following splendid ships:

James Foster, Jr.	Capt. J. W. Porter.
Neptune	" E. W. Peabody.
Harvest Queen	" E. Young.
Isaac Webb	" J. M. Bayer.
Great Western	" W. G. Furrier.
Manhattan	" T. Dixon.
Isaac Wright	" E. Abeel.
Columbia	" C. Hutchinson.
Fidelia	" W. A. Macgill.
Yorkshire	" C. A. Marshall.

REMITTANCES.

Drafts, for £1 and upwards, on the Royal Bank of Ireland, and on Messrs. Baring Brothers & Co., Bankers, Liverpool and London, payable on sight.

C. H. MARSHALL & CO.,
38 Burling Slip, N. Y.

Agents in Liverpool, Baring Brothers & Co.,

OLD LINE PACKETS,

Pier 23 East River, foot of Beekman street. 6m

WILLIAMS & GUION'S

Old Black Star Line of Packets. 1856.

Passage from any part of Great Britain and Ireland, secured at the lowest possible rates by this old-established line, sailing from Liverpool to New-York every five days, comprising the following magnificent Ships:

Ships.	Captains.	Tonage.
AUSTRALIA,	Smith,	2,000
BRIDGEWATER (new),	Barstow,	2,000
CULTIVATOR (new),	Austin,	2,000
CYNOSURE,	Bray,	2,000
CORNELIA LAWRENCE (new),	Knapp,	2,000
DE WITT CLINTON,	Funk,	1,800
ENTERPRISE,	Davis,	1,200
GUY MANNERING,	Dollard,	2,000
JACOB A. WESTERVELT,	Hoodless,	2,000
IRENE,	Williams,	1,400
JOHN BRIGHT (new),	Cutting,	2,000
MARMION,	Hanley,	1,200
NORTH AMERICAN,	Clark,	1,800
OSWEGO,	Stevens,	1,400
ROBERT KELLY,	Barstow,	1,500
SILAS WRIGHT (new),	Freeman,	2,000
SOUTHAMPTON,	Furlong,	1,600
THORNTON (new),	Collins,	2,000
TICONDEROGA,	Boyle,	1,400
UNIVERSE,	Cave,	2,000
VANGUARD,	Norton,	1,800

The ships of this line are the largest and swiftest in the trade, their accommodations for passengers are unequalled, and the frequency and punctuality of their departure offer advantages to the emigrant not to be had by any Line of Packets. Such passengers as decline coming out, the money paid for them will be promptly refunded without discount.

Provisions of best quality are provided for passengers; rations, consisting of Bread, Flour, Rice, Oatmeal, Tea, Sugar, Molasses, Salt, &c.

The increased patronage received by the proprietors of the Old Black Star Line has induced them to add to the Line several New Ships, which have taken their place this season; no expense has been spared to render the facilities for Emigration equal to the times, and add to the renown of these celebrated Packets.

The regular Sailing days are 1st, 8th, 11th, 18th, 21st, and 26th of each month; this will give passengers opportunity for embarking more frequent than by any other established Line, to which the attention of the public is respectfully called.

No Certificate of Passage will be issued for children under 12 years of age unless accompanied by an adult, who must be paid for on same certificate; for persons over 60 years of age, or with any impediment, without a Permit from Commissioners of Emigration.

REMITTANCES.

Persons wanting to send money to their friends can obtain drafts for any amount, which will be cashed at sight at the following Banks:

Ireland—National Bank of Ireland; Royal Bank of Ireland; Ulster Banking Co., and their Branches.

Scotland—National Bank of Scotland and Branches.

England—Messrs. GLYNN, MILLS & Co, Bankers, London; GUION & Co., Merchants, Liverpool.

For further particulars apply, if by letter post-paid, to

WILLIAMS & GUION,
40 Fulton street, New-York.

GUION & CO.,
115 Waterloo Road, Liverpool.

AGENTS—JOHN WHITNEY, Providence, R. I.
EDWARD RYAN, 2 Albany street, Boston.
THOMAS RATTIGAN, Pittsburgh, Pa.

BLACK BALL LINE

OF LIVERPOOL PACKETS,

Sailing to and from Liverpool on the 1st and 16th of each Month.

THE following ten magnificent clipper Packet Ships comprise the "Black Ball Line, viz:—

James Foster Jr.,	Manhattan,
Great Western,	Neptune,
Harvest Queen,	Columbia,
Isaac Webb,	Yorkshire,
Isaac Wright,	Fidelia.

DRAFTS AT SIGHT for any amount payable in every town throughout England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales.

Persons returning to the old country, or those sending for their friends, will find it to their interest to select the "Black Ball Line," as the accommodations in the above clippers for Cabin, Second Cabin, and Steerage Passengers, are well known by the travelling public to be far superior to any other.

☞ Apply or address by letter, post-paid; no letter will be answered unless a postage stamp is enclosed to pre-pay postage.

Jacob Wilson, 108 South street, New York,
Who is the only authorized Passenger Agent for the "Black Ball Line," which lay at Pier 23 East River, opposite this office. my3 3m

Shipping.

LIVERPOOL AND PHILADELPHIA

STEAMSHIP COMPANY,

Intend despatching their splendid Iron Screw Steamers as follows:

FROM LIVERPOOL	FROM PHILADELPHIA
Kangaroo.....30 July	City of Baltimore.....7 August
City of Manchester.....13 August	Kangaroo.....21 August
City of Baltimore.....27 August	City of Manchester.....4 Sept.
Kangaroo.....10 Sept.	City of Baltimore.....18 Sept.
Kangaroo.....2 October.

Steerage passage from Philadelphia, $30; from Liverpool, $40, including cooked provisions. Persons wishing to visit Europe or to send for friends from Great Britain and Ireland, by the above line of splendid Steamships, or by first-class sailing Packets, can purchase passage tickets on application to

Sabel & Cortis, 177 Broadway, New-York.

Or to their Agents in

Albany—A. T. Holmes.....Dubuque—Jas. C. Rattray.
Baltimore—Foard & Rodgers.....Hartford, Ct.—A. Rose.
Boston—F. S. Saxton.....New-Orleans—Jenkins, Williams & Co.
Buffalo—Robt. Hager.....Pittsburg—John Thompson.
Chicago—Lull & Mayer.....Pottsville—R. Edwards.
Cincinnati———.....Toronto C. W.—D. K. Feehan. tf24my

J. F. Meline & Co.

Bankers.

GREEN & SEWELL,

BANKERS,

No. 29 Wall Street, New-York.

DRAFTS on the Belfast Banking Co., available in any part of Ireland, for sale.

REMITTANCES from the interior, promptly forwarded to any address in Ireland, and receipt therefor returned to the sender. General Banking business transacted. my17 6m

---

BREWER & CALDWELL,

20 OLD SLIP, CORNER OF WATER STREET, N. Y.

ISSUE BANK OF CHARLESTON BILLS

ON

BANK OF LIVERPOOL,

In sums of one pound sterling and upwards, payable at any of the Banks in

ENGLAND, IRELAND, SCOTLAND, AND WALES. jun14

REMITTANCES TO IRELAND.

IRISH EMIGRANT SOCIETY,
Office, 51 Chambers street.

NOTICE.—The recent failures, by which a large amount of Bills remitted from this country to friends in Ireland, has been returned unpaid, afford to this Society the opportunity, and at the same time impose upon it the duty of informing the public, that such losses would have been prevented if the parties purchasing Bills had availed themselves of the advantages offered by the Society.

For the purpose of entire protection a fund is constantly kept on deposit in the Bank of Ireland, against which this Society issues its drafts, payable at sight (from sums of £1 sterling and upwards), on the Bank and all its branches, and has thereby for the last Ten Years afforded a mode of remittance perfectly safe and unquestionable.

New-York, December 29, 1851.

ANDREW CARRIGAN, President.

JOHN MANNING,
ROBERT J. DILLON,
HUGH KELLY,
} Vice-Presidents.

EDWARD C. DONNELLY, Corresponding Secretary.
PETER CREAR, Recording Secretary.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

Felix Ingoldsby,	John Nicholson,	William Redmond.
William Watson,	Hugh Kelly,	James Olwell,
John Manning,	Cornel Sheehan,	Daniel Devlin,
Terence Donnelly,	Romaine Dillon,	John McMenomy.

EMIGRANT INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS BANK.

No. 51 CHAMBERS STREET.

THIS Institution has been established for the purpose of affording to Emigrants and others, a safe place of deposit for their funds, to protect them from robbery and fraud.

It is conducted with the strictest economy—neither the Officers and Trustees, receive any compensation for their services. The entire profits belong to the Depositors, and will be divided amongst them, having due regard to the safety of the funds.

The last dividend was six per cent. upon all sums of $500 and under, and and will be continued or increased as the profits may justify.

Bank open to receive Deposits, daily, from 10 A. M., to 2, and from 5 to 7 P. M.

TRUSTEES.

William Watson,	John P. Nesmith,
John Nicholson,	John Milhau,
Andrew Carrigan,	Edward W. Tiers,
James Kelly,	Charles M. Connelly,
James Kerrigan,	Cornelius H. Sheehan,
Hugh Kelly,	Edward Bayer,
Charles O'Connor,	Daniel Devlin.
James Olwell,

JOSEPH STUART, President.
FELIX INGOLDSBY, 1st Vice-President.
JOHN MCMENOMY, 2d Vice-President.
TERENCE DONNELLY, Treasurer.
LOUIS B. BINSSE, Secretary.
PETER CREAR, Accountant.

JOHN MANNING, Comptroller. tf

REMITTANCES TO

ENGLAND, IRELAND AND SCOTLAND.

STERLING BILLS for sale on Messrs. Prescott, Grote & Co., Bankers, London, from £1 upwards, payable on demand, and negotiable in any part of the United Kingdom; also Bank of England Notes and Drafts of any of the English Banks or Bankers, bought and sold.

ap19 1y Prime & Co., 54 Wall street.

Coal.

COAL.

THE subscriber respectfully informs his friends and the public generally, that he has opened a new Coal Yard, cor. 27th Street and 9th Avenue, where he is prepared to sell the best quality of Red and White Ash Coal, at the lowest market price for cash. Weight warranted, or forfeit coal.

6mos* JOHN MACDONALD.

COAL of the very best quality both Anthracite and Bituminous, for family and manufacturing purposes, for sale by the subscriber from his Yards, 632 Washington, 123 McDougal, and 146 West Thirty-second streets. Also, Coal by the cargo.

ap19 1y Thomas Maher.

Business Directory.

HAMILTON & JOHNSON,

NEWS AGENTS,

30 ANN STREET, NEW-YORK.

DAILY, weekly and Sunday papers, Magazines, and Cheap Publications. The trade supplied. Orders from the country solicited and promptly filled.

JOHN HAMILTON,
S. W. JOHNSON.
} tf

Business Notices.

HERRING'S

PATENT CHAMPION FIRE AND BURGLAR PROOF SAFES.

THE great interest manifested by the public to procure more perfect security from Fire for valuable papers, such as BONDS, MORTGAGES, DEEDS, NOTES, and BOOKS OF ACCOUNT than the ordinary SAFES heretofore in use had afforded, induced the subscribers to devote a large portion of time and attention during the past fourteen years in making improvements and discoveries for this object, and they now beg leave to assure their numerous friends and the public generally that their efforts have been crowned with complete success, and now offer the "IMPROVED HERRING'S PATENT WORLD'S FAIR PREMIUM FIRE-PROOF SAFE," as the

CHAMPION SAFE OF THE WORLD!

Having been awarded Medals at both the

World's Fair, London, 1851, and in New-York, 1853,

As superior to all others. It is now undoubtedly entitled to that appellation, and, secured with HALL'S PATENT POWDER-PROOF LOCKS,) which also was awarded MEDALS as above), forms the most perfect Fire and Burglar Proof Safes ever offered to the public.

The subscribers also manufacture all kinds of Boiler and Chilled Iron Bank Chests and Vaults, Vault Doors, and Money Boxes or Chests, for Brokers, Jewelers, and Private Families, for Plate, Diamonds, and other Valuables, and are also Patentees (by purchase) and Manufacturers of

JONES' PATENT PERMUTATION BANK LOCK.

SILAS C. HERRING & CO., Patentees,
GREEN BLOCK, Nos. 185, 187 and 189 Water street, New-York. my10 tf

---

Important to the Ladies.

GLENFIELD PATENT STARCH.

FOR the dressing of Laces and all descriptions of fine goods. This celebrated starch is unrivalled.

ONE TRIAL WILL CONVINCE.

For sale by all respectable druggists and grocers.
8m26ju ROBERT HOSIE, 8 Pine Street, New-York,
Sole Agent for the United States.

S. CAHILL'S

BOOT AND SHOE STORE,

NO. 377 BROADWAY,

(One door below White street), New York.

S. CAHILL respectfully informs his friends, customers, and the public generally, that, having made an extensive addition to his Store, for the better accommodation of his customers, he has now the largest and most extensive BOOT AND SHOE STORE in the world, and is prepared to exhibit the most extensive assortment of

LADIES, MISSES, AND CHILDREN'S, GENTLEMEN'S, BOYS, AND YOUTH'S
BOOTS AND SHOES
EVER BEFORE OFFERED TO THE CITIZENS OF NEW YORK.

His facilities for manufacturing on an extensive scale, together with his superb assortment of FRENCH BOOTS and SHOES, received direct from Paris by every steamer, enable him to sell a much better article at much lower prices than can be purchased at any other house in the city. BOOTS AND SHOES OF ALL DESCRIPTIONS MADE TO MEASURE AT THE SHORTEST NOTICE. je28 3mos

Monday, June 16th, and during the week—

LATEST FASHIONS.

THE New Hat Company would here lay before their readers a few of the advantages to be derived from their system of doing business, which is ONE QUALITY, ONE PRICE, AND NO ABATEMENT. In the first place, any gentleman, whether he be a judge of the article or not, can rely upon receiving our first and only quality. Secondly, our price is so low, that the man of the most limited means is enabled to procure a fine and fashionable hat, (at the same time we wish it to be distinctly understood that our hats are not to be excelled by those sold at four dollars by any other establishment,) and lastly, we strive to please. If any gentleman desiring a hat differing from the usual style, will call and leave his order, we shall endeavor to suit him in every respect. The inducements which we offer to wholesale purchasers, and the trade in general, are not to be exceeded by those of any other establishment.

Also, a large assortment of CLOTH CAPS, CHILDREN'S FANCY HATS, UMBRELLAS, &c., constantly on hand at the lowest rates. Nos. 146 and 148 Nassau st. ap26 3m

---

FASHIONABLE HATTER, 223 THIRD AVENUE.

COWHY'S Spring style of Hats, now ready, are superior to anything hitherto offered in Beauty of Shape, and Elegance of Finish. Being a practical hatter himself, Cowhy is enabled to sell A SUPERIOR HAT AT A VERY MODERATE PRICE.

His young gent's hat is one of great beauty, and his assortment of children's fancy hats and caps cannot be surpassed by any other establishment in the city.

N. B.—Hats and Caps made to order, and warranted to fit, by COWHY, 223 Third Avenue, between 19th and 20th streets. my3 1y

---

Furniture.—F. FITZSIMMONS respectfully calls the attention his of customers and the public to his stock of elegant and substantial FURNITURE, (not made for the auction room) consisting of rich Parlor Suites in rosewood; oak Dining and Chamber Sets of every description; Upholstery in all its branches executed in the best mechanical manner. Prices unexceptionable. Warerooms No. 8 Astor place, near Broadway. my24 3m

---

Lumber and Timber for Export and City Trade.—THOS. RIGNEY & Co. offer for sale AT THEIR YARD FOOT OF THIRTIETH-STREET, North River, a general assortment of LUMBER AND TIMBER, suitable for export and the city trade. SHIPPERS AND BUILDERS will find it to their advantage to examine their stock previous to buying. Apply as above, or to J. PICKARD, Agent, 26 Bridge street. my17 3m*

"TERRA COTTA"

CHIMNEY TOPS,

PLAIN and Ornamental. Drain Pipes of all sizes, superior manufacture lowest rates. LONG ISLAND POTTERY. Depot, 82 Nassau street New-York. my10 3m

---

JAMES O'FLYN.

HOWARD HOTEL,

176 BROADWAY, NEW-YORK.

Advertising Envelope Manufacturer, Embosser, Die Sinker, and General Engraver. Notarial and Lodge Seals, Crests, and Coats of Arms. Seal Presses of every description constantly on hand. 14ju3m

---

Sewing Machine Depot.—Sewing Machines of all kinds sold, improved and repaired, on reasonable terms, in the most substantial manner. Superior Machine Oils for sale. A large assortment of Machine Silk Twist and Needles for sale at reduces prices.

my 24, 3 mos. F. S COATES & Co., 345 Broadway, New-York.

Employment.

EMPLOYMENT OFFICE FOR SERVANTS.

275 BOWERY, NEW-YORK.

MALE and Female Servants can be promptly suited at the above number, with any situation in the city or country, at good wages, in first-rate families, without delay.

N. B. Employers quickly supplied.
3m may 31 ALEXANDER F. RUNGE, Agent.

Wanted, at 766 & 648 Broadway, (near 8th st.) Places procured for conductors, Bookkeepers, Clerks, Salesmen, Firemen, Brakemen, Barkeepers, Porters, Waiters, men on Steamers and Railroads, boys for trades, and girls of every description. 21my3m

French, English, and German spoken. LOUIS KAUFMAN, Agent.

EMPLOYMENT OFFICE for Servants, 129 Waverley Place, two doors from Sixth avenue, New-York.—A large number of competent help can be suited with good situations, in city and country, without delay. Employers in the city and country supplied with the best of female help. [my17 3m] WM. O'BRIEN, Proprietor.

NEW-YORK EMPLOYMEMT OFFICE.

480 Broadway.

HONEST, capable, and faithful servants can at all times find good situations at this office. Protestant and Catholic have equal privilege. Established in 1844 by [3m21ju] T. P. SAUNDERS.

European News.

Spanish Affairs.

The Commission inquiring into the acts of the Queen Mother and ex-Regent Maria Christina, presented its report to the Cortes just before their adjournment. She is charged with having forfeited the benefit of the will of King Ferdinand, either by an indecent and hasty marriage to Senor Munoz, three months after the death of the King her husband, or if the marriage could not be proved, by giving birth to a host of illegitimate children. In either case she has forfeited her claim to the Regency. She is besides charged with the theft of the royal jewels; with the wilful and premeditated destruction of the inventories of the royal property; with using her position for swindling jobs in rail ways, canals, &c., in order to enrich her problematic second husband, subsequently raised to the rank of Duke, and with aiding and abetting the fillibustering expedition of General Flores, who was to conquer a throne in South America for the sons of Munoz. The report is to be d scussed by the Cortes as soon as they meet again. Accordingly, in order to prevent disreputable revelations affecting the dignity of royalty and exposing the deep immorality of the royal races of Europe, a revolution becomes indispensable, beginn ng with the dismissal of Espartero, and ending with the dictatorship either of O'Donnell or of Narvaez. Espartero, though in public affairs always a friend of compromises and half-measures, is a thorough hater in his own cause, and therefore wishes to destroy the reputation of Maria Christina, who had humiliated and cruelly used him. So long as he was at the head of the Government, Christina could not hope to stifle the inquest. To overturn him became the most important duty of the men of "Law and Order" all over Europe, and especially of the Roman Catholic clergy. By dint of money, spent by bishops, disturbances and riots were created in the Spanish provinces, which were denounced as Socialist and Communistic outbreaks, and impu'ed to Espartero's leaning toward the Progresistas. He was assailed by the French press as a Republican in disguise, and the foreign diplomatists in Madrid countenanced every intrigue against him. The old man, weary of such attacks, resigned at last, and O'Donnell, the enemy of the Progresistas, is now at the head of affairs. He will soon be supplanted by Narvaez and the Polaccos, unless he lends himself to Christina's intrigues, dissolves the Cortes, and overturns the new Constitution. As long as Christina lives, who is the evil genius of Spain, the country never will enjoy peace and internal reforms.

The Paris Correspondent of the London Times, (July 15) says, the new ministerial combination was reported in that dispatch as follows: Marshall O'Donnell, president of the council; Rios Rosas, interior; Ros De Olano (an agent of General Narvaez, and with whose name and character you are probably acquainted,) minister of marine; Pastor Diaz, foreign affairs, and Cantero, finance. A second dispatch received in the early part of to-day, announces some additions to, and one change in the first. The departments of justice, and public works, it will be seen, were not mentioned as being provided for; the second dispatch states that M. Luzuriaga had been appointed to the former, and M. Jose Manuel Collado to the latter; and that Ros de Olano was not continued in the new combinations, but that the marine department was entrusted to M. Bayarri. A cabinet completed as in the first dispatch gave us a notion of a cabinet of unmitigated reac ion, though, strong as it might be, it would not have held good against the instinctive treachery of one of its members, whose name is identical with the basest political bad faith. I hope that the news of M. Luzuriaga's appointment, as that of M.M. Bayarri and Collado, will be confirmed.

The first combination was a moderado with a slight shade; but the addition to it contains a liberal element. Luzuriaga, who was the predecessor of General Zabala in the foreign department, under the Presidency of Espartero, is a liberal of the good old honest school, of unimpeached and unimpeachable probity, political and personal. When they could not have him in the Government, they would name him President of the Supreme Court of Justice—a post which he has filled for a considerable time.

M. Bayarri is, comparatively speaking, a new man; but, among men of probity and honor, he is spoken well of. He fills the post of Secretary to the Cortes, and was chosen by the liberal party for that office. Jose Manuel Collado is already known to the public. He was for some months Minister of Finance in the Espartero Administration, but his spirit and strength gave way before the Herculean labor of regulating the Spanish finances, and providing, under adverse circumstances, and with a treasury that had been drained to the last by profligates and adventurers, for the exigencies of the public service. He is a native of San Sebastian, the son of a poor fisherman, and the fabricator of his own fortune, which is considerable, by many years of successful industry.

The Independance Belge says that common rumor attributes the ministerial changes at Madrid to the influence of the French government. A letter published in the same journal, and dated Madrid, July 10, says: "Reports of the most afflicting character are in circulation to-day; on all sides we hear of troubles, incendiarism, and attempts at disorder. At Guardia, in the province of Toledo, the crops have been burned by the hands of brigands, and similar crimes have been committed at Lillo, Vich, and Sina, in the provinces of Catalonia, Toledo, and Aragon. Several factories have been burned at Rhoda and Bilbau, and in different parts of Catalonia. At Igualada, the Mayor himself attempted to incite the populace to insurrection; this functionary has been taken to a place of security with seven or eight persons known to belong to Cabrera's bands. At Albacete, Calatayud, Alcira, Tavita, and Commillas, the public authorities have been obliged to resort to arms. In the latter locality, the insurrection assumed an alarming aspect; more than a thousand miners presented themselves to the authorities, demanding that the price of bread be lowered, and that a stop be put to what they call the excess of the speculators in grain and meal. After a resistance of some hours, the authorities believed it expedient to consent, and promised that 'justice,' the expression of the insurgents, should be done. At Maragena and Almerie the dearness of the first necessaries of life has led to a conflict, in which a considerable number of persons were killed and wounded. As if all this did not suffice to render our situation intolerable, the cholera has broken out in Andalusia. The brother of the Minister of Public Works and Mme. Cortina were amongst the first victims of this scourge. Sinister rumors are heard as to approaching troubles in the capital. The gas factory is guarded by an imposing force; the Regiment of Madrid has to-day been brought within the walls, and other troops cantoned provisionally in the environs, hold themselves ready for events. M. Escosura has been called to Madrid at the moment he was about to leave for Palencia, where troubles broke out simultaneously with those at Valladolid and Rioseco. The cabinet councils are frequent, and it is generally reported that the government are only waiting for the first symptoms of insurrection to carry out great projects. Rev. P. Cuevas, the intimate friend of the Archbishop of Toledo, and implicated in the affair at Valladolid, has been arrested at Santander. Several members of the higher orders of the clergy are the objects of an extraordinary surveillance on the part of the police, occasioned by extraordinary revelations. The language of our journals continues to be interesting. The semi-official organ, La Nacion, is very gloomy in tone, and seems to have a presentiment of great things. El Occidente, la Espana, El Diario Espanol, el Parlamento, la Epocha, and all the conservative fraternity, cheer themselves with the necessity of a coup d'etat. The Socialist journals, fearing an accusation that they are the instruments of reaction, pronounce against any attempts at disorder. The Progresista journals, with the Clamor at their head, recognize the duty of the Government to take measures to prevent the continued dearness of the necessaries of life, but declare themselves ready for any sacrifice, so that Espartero remain at the head of affairs."

Paris (July 17) Correspondence of the London Times.

A private telegraphic dispatch announced that not only Saragossa, but all Arragon is in insurrection—all Arragon, troops and people. By all Aragon is, I suppose, meant the larger towns that have followed in the wake of Saragossa, with their respective garrisons. We have no details, as far as I can ascertain; but the main fact, if correct, or even approaching correctness, is most important. Of Barcelona we knew nothing. No dispatch, as yet, announces her rising, but it is not difficult to say what effect will be produced on her people, troops, and her National Guards, by the news from Madrid of the success of the coup d'etat, if coup d'etat it has been. That we have, as yet, no news from Barcelona is not extraordinary. From Madrid to that place there is no electric, nor indeed any telegraph, and from Barcelona the telegraph does not extend beyond Mataro, a distance of 13 or 14 miles; but from Mataro to the French frontier there is none. The news of the success of O'Donnell will, therefore, be a long time reaching Barcelona. Should Barcelona unite with Saragossa, the example will probably be followed by other places, and then it would be very doubtful that O'Donnell could maintain his position, though he is in possession of the capitol, and the Queen is now there. The latest accounts from Madrid are of this morning; they have been already telegraphed to you. They are to the effect that the fighting continued for upwards of 24 hours, but that the revolt was at last repressed, with the exception of the bull-fighter, Pucheta, who refused all conditions of surrender, life, money and distinction, and who still held out against, as he said, the 'Traitor O'Donnell,' with a few desperate followers. I have since then seen a dispatch which announces the death of this man, who fought to the last. The National Militia of Madrid have been dissolved, and their arms are to be delivered over to the Government. A more recent dispatch announces that the members of the Cortes remaining in Madrid were dispersed. The Cortes, it must be added, was not prorogued, but only its sittings suspended, and 50 made what I suppose it is proper to call a quorum. In Madrid, O'Donnell now rules supreme. Since the insurrection, Espartero's name has not been heard. Since writing the above, a telegraphic dispatch announces that General Gurrea has arrived at Saragossa. It was rumored on the frontier that the insurgents have had the upper hand at Saragossa."

SUPPRESSION OF THE INSURRECTION—LATEST TELEGRAPHIC DISPATCHES.

"MADRID JULY 16, (EVENING).—At eight o'clock this morning the insurrection was overcome on all points. Gen. Concha obtained possession of the Toledo Gate. As some of the insurgents still held the Plaza Sevaldo, measures were taken to attack them. The various bodies of the lower orders were commanded by Pucheta. At 10 o'clock the last remains of the insurgents dispersed throughout the city, were annihilated. Pucheta was killed. Twelve pieces of artillery were in position in the Plaza Sevaldo. The Queen visited the wounded. Happily the victims were not numerous. The Government has been admirably supported. The disarming of the National Guard is actively carried on. The thoroughfare is re-established. All is tranquil in the provinces, except at Saragossa.

"MADRID, July 17.—To-day order is completely re-established at Madrid. The Queen, accompanied by the King and by Marshal O'Donnell, has just reviewed the garrison. The troops and the people received their Majesties and the Marshal with enthusiasm. To-morrow will take place the solemn burial of the soldiers who have died gloriously in defending the throne and order. P. S.—The twelve pieces of cannon posted on the Plaza Sevaldo belonged to the insurgents. They were captured by the royal troops after some hours of fighting."

The Daily News has published the following dispatch from its Paris correspondent, dated Madrid, Thursday: "The insurrection here has been suppressed, after a combat which lasted thirty hours, and was fiercely obstinate. The dead are very numerous. The National Guard has been disarmed. Forty of the deputies, now present at Madrid, have associated themselves to convene the Cortes in a legal manner, were dispersed by the troops. The whereabouts of Espartero is still unknown; he is probably at Saragossa or at Logrono. It is asserted that the garrison there go along with the people. By the news from Barcelona it would appear that Catalonia is also in a state of insurrection."

PARIS, Friday, 6 P. M.—There is no later intelligence from Madrid. La Patrie says that the report of a movement at Saragossa is confirmed. It is asserted that General Falcon, who commanded the place, and who was formerly an aide-de-camp of Espartero, made his pronunciamento with the concurrence of a part of the inhabitants; but, according to private intelligence, he was not followed by the troops, who, on the contrary, retired to the heights and castle which commanded Saragossa.

A later telegraphic message from the Captain-General of Catalonia, dated the 17th inst., states that all was tranquil in that principality.

Lord Palmerston and the United States.

From the London Morning Star.

Nothing can be more erroneous than the notion that Lord Palmerston's imperious and swaggering demeanor is directed only against the heads of arbitrary governments. If he makes any distinction at all, it is that implied in the cutting sarcasm addressed to him by Montalembert, in his recent letter on Italy, when he speaks of his "prudent longamity" toward the powerful. Most certainly the character of the governments with which he has to deal has no influence on that braggart and bumptious temper in which he delights to indulge. He has shown the same alacrity to quarrel with the constitutional monarchy of France under Louis Phillippe, and with the Democratic Republic of America, as with Russia and Austria. M. Guizot and Mr. Webster have complained as bitterly as Prince Schwarzenburgh or Count Nesselrode of the difficulty of conducting any negotiations with a man of such a porcupine soul. Miss Martineau, in her History of the Peace, after describing the change of administration in 1841, by the accession of Sir R. Peel to office, remarks that the appointment of Lord Aberdeen as Foreign Secretary was peculiarly fortunate at that crisis, in consequence, among other things, of the alarming state in which Lord Palmerston had left our relations with America. She then adds, in allusion, it is supposed, to a conversation between herself and Mr. Webster: "It seems strange," observed an eminent American statesman to an English traveller, "that we republicans should be glad when you Tories come into power. One would think that our sympathies should be with your reform governments; but the truth is, we cannot get on with your Whig Ministers. They do not understand business, and they do not understand official good manners. Your Tory Ministers are able and attentive and courteous, and when we do not agree we are not likely to quarrel. But with the Whigs we have to forbear, and nothing goes on smoothly." In like manner, when the debates about the right of search took place in the French Chambers in 1842, it was openly declared by Guizot and Soult, that all the difficulties on that question had occurred during Lord Palmerston's term of office, and that when Lord Aberdeen succeeded him none had arisen.

And we confess that, so far from feeling any assurance on the ground of liberal sympathies, we look with special anxiety to the prospect of abandoning, at the present critical moment, our relations with America to the unchecked caprices of the Prime Minister. Symptoms are not wanting to warrant the darkest apprehensions. We believe it is no secret in political circles that Lord Palmerston was bent upon the summary dismissal of Mr. Dallas, and would have succeeded in that determination but for the opposition of his colleagues, and probably the significant hints of Mr. Hayter as to the state of feeling in the House and in the country. Every one must have remarked the suppressed bitterness which he betrayed towards the American Government in the debate on Mr. Crampton's motion; and if he feels, as it is impossible for him not to feel, that he stands humbled and rebuked before the Great Western Republic, we believe he is just the man to look for an opportunity to wreak his grudge against her. For, let it be observed, that no successor to Mr. Crampton has been appointed, that no intelligence has been communicated to the country as to the state or prospects of the negotiations respecting Central America, and that additional naval forces continue to be sent out to the West India waters. Is there no man in the House of Commons that has the courage to insist upon some explications being given on these points before Parliament is prorogued? Will the representatives of the people be content to disperse themselves over the four points of the compass without making an attempt to ascertain, at least, for what purpose are these enormous reinforcements of our maritime armaments in the West?

Rights of Protectorship.

The Turin correspondent of the Daily News transmits the following particulars of a disgraceful occurrence which took place on the 4th of May, 1856, at Lodi:—The officers of an Austrian squadron of Cavalry were giving a dinner to another squadron of their regiment which was ordered to Crema. This dinner took place in the Hotel del Solino, No. 174, in the street St. Nabore, in Lodi. The greater part of the dinner bill was settled by a very rich young cadet, Coppari, and Lieut. Sieger, of the 4th batallion of infantry, Regiment Ayeroldi, No. 24. All the officers got tipsy, but more especially the officers of Prince Reutz, No. 7 Hussars, commanded by Col. Hall. At this dinner the officers brought some of the most infamous prostitutes of Lodi from the quarter called Ludino. It is impossible to commit to paper the disgraceful scenes which occurred from beginning to end of this dinner. When finished, the officers throttled the master of the hotel, named Pietro Scabardini, threw him down on the ground, stripped him naked, walked round him, and as they passed worse than spat upon the poor man, the prostitutes looking on and applauding. They then began to throw every bit of furniture out of the window. A young employé, who was in the hotel attending his mother, who was dangerously ill, requested them civilly to be quiet, mentioning the reason. They drew their sabres and flogged him with the flat sides. They then went to the streets, where they beat and insulted all whom they met. They first met a monk, Giuseppe Sommariva, "prelato domestico," &c., they bonneted him to the great scandal of the crowd. From this they entered the military café, which belongs to Boconi. Here they met Major Trubin, who formerly commanded the fifth battalion of the Regiment Ayeroldi, they insulted him in the grossest manner, but he did not care to complain, as no redress is ever given. They then went to the Café dei Tedeschi, (a German coffee-room,) and here they beat a certain Kulad, a military intendant, and afterwards thrashed De Andrei, a superior commissary of police; the ringleader in every instance being Count Stadion, First Lieutenant Seventh Hussars, son of Field Marshal Stadion, who has replaced Gen. Giulay at Milan, and nephew of Count Stadion who is now Governor of Vienna. They rolled the gentlemen I have named on the ground and then threw them out of the café. Here was a young lawyer of the name of Ciengo, who is particularly delicate and handsome. They insulted him with the most infamous proposals, in the presence and hearing of the mistress of the café, a respectable person. They forced champagne down a husband's throat to make him drink to the health of his wife, saying all injuries against her. They then seized the little waiter, 12 years old, stripped him naked, and subjected his body to infamous treatment. Chasing the boy, they met Count Bergamo and a young Francisca Picoli, and beat them unmercifully; got hold of an officer of the Octroi, forced him to dance to their singing "Viva Pio IX."—in short the whole town of Lodi was in terror but the police never interfered. They then went to the Cours de Puerta Cremona, broke the windows, and laid hold of some young girls who were working in the shop of Mme. Mamoli, first extinguishing the gas. The girls escaped screaming and alarming the whole town. From this these protectors of Italy and friends of order went to Mme. Negri's millinery shop, and did the same. From this they went to a barber's shop, stripped him and then proposed that he should shave himself in a peculiar manner. From this they placed themselve before the balconies of the Ladies S. B. and M. C., exposed themselves indecently, and called these ladies infamous names. They seized a body of street musicians, took them to a brothel, made them play, guarded by one body of officers, while the other half were up stairs, and so passed a greater part of the night. The musicians were punished by the police next day, and expelled the town. The affair was reported at Vienna, and of course will go unpunished, as all attacks on Italians pass unpunished. Every town in Italy is exposed to

Correspondence.

A great day for Ireland--Political hacks harnessed to the low-backed car--The Lord Mayor in the "dickey"—John Reynolds, the "Jarvies" and a corpulent female—Hackney reminiscences of Mr. Lalor, Dr. Gray, "Lame Reilly," and Sir Tim—The vice-regal court, a "court of Appeal" to the Dubliners—Loyal spoonies and the violated tay-tray—Smith O'Brien's reception—A party at Trabolgan—A new Irish peer, and an old "young Ireland"—The peer introduces the poet to "His Excellency"—Rebel apparition of a "Spirit of the Nation"—Matrimonial speculations—The King of Mosquito and the princess royal—Foreign influence during Fillmore's Administration, &c.

DUBLIN, JULY 18, 1856.

Assuredly, Monday last, the 14th instant, was a great day for Ireland. On that day there was held within the walls of the Music Hall, Lower Abbey street, one of the most important, influential, and enthusiastic meetings Dublin has ever witnessed. The high-minded citizens, without distinction of creed or sect or class or party or denomination, were there in their strength, actuated by one common sentiment, impelled by one majestic impulse, swayed by one holy passion. It was indeed a grand sight to see the bigots in religion, the exclusives in politics, the Lamberts and the Longs, standing side by side on the same platform with those unflinching patriots and staunch friends of the people, the Reynolds, the Grays, the Reillys and the Sir Tims. I will not insult the understandings of your readers by stating the object which brought this great assemblage together. You know, sir, and your readers know, that there is but one object which could have thus reconciled men differing most sturdily in politics and religion—that object was to memorial the Lord Lieutenant that he would be pleased graciously to use his influence to have the 45th rule of the Hackney-Car bye-law regulations removed! Surely a grander object never evoked the sympathies, or aroused the enthusiasm of a free people.

The Lord Mayor presided. The principal orator was John Reynolds. His denunciation ot the 45th bye-law was scathing, and was one of the most powerful pieces of invective ever delivered. His tribute however to the "Jarvies" of Dublin—to their sobriety, morality, and civilization—was most touching and effective, Not a man of them, he said, was implicated in the disturbances of 1848, and yet their necks are hourly to be placed in jeopardy by this iniquitous law. I may here explain, that the 45th rule requires the "jarvey," when driving, to occupy the box-seat. The consequence is that accidents innumerable and ludicrous are daily occurring. Thus, a corpulent female took a car a few Sundays ago, with the intention of taking an airing out towards Dollymount. Passing Aldboro' House—see Freeman report—the wheel of the vehicle slightly grazed the curb-stone, in consequence whereof the female aforesaid was precipitated into the street, receiving many severe contusions, by which her already ample proportions were considerably distended.

A Mr. Lalor, a Town Councillor, mentioned in the course of his speech a circumstance which, according to the admirable report of the Freeman's Journal, produced a profound sensation in the meeting. A jarvey, driving his car through Dame street, was pitched from this abominable box-seat. He alighted upon his head. Immediately, a policeman ran at him, and seizing him by the collar, commanded him to give an account of himself. Being speechless, said the orator, the man was unable to answer. He was dragged accordingly to the station house. Being here again questioned, and being still speechless, he would not, could not speak. "What do you think?" said Mr. Lalor, "the magistrate actually committed him for being drunk!" (Profound sensation—see Freeman.)

Dr. Gray also, in the course of his truly patriotic speech, mentioned a thrilling incident. He was taking a drive on the Howth road. The horse's toe came in contact with a stone, in consequence whereof the animal stumbled. The driver, being in the box-seat, was pitched on his head and stunned; "but I," added the Doctor, "being on the side, landed safely on my legs." (Great applause.)

I may add, en parenthese, that the Doctor has a happy knack of always alighting upon his legs—reason why—he always keeps on the safe side.

Reilly, yclept the Tailor, but better known perhaps as Lame Reilly, (notwithstanding his lameness he has managed to hobble into a snug place under the Corporation), was very facetious, and fraternized most beautifully with the jarvies. He did not want to be deprived of his cheap jaunts by this cruel bye-law. You must know that since your time the fare for a "set-down" has been reduced from a shilling to sixpence. Father Marshal, (one of the English converts), a very large man, being over here lately, called a car. While he was getting up, the jarvey shaded most carefully the horse's head with his coat tail.

"What do you do that for, my man?" said Father Marshal.

"Oh, begorra, yer honor," replied the jarvey, "if the baste saw the load he's goin' to carry for sixpence, the divil a foot he'd stir out of this spot."

Tim O'Brien (Sir Tim) made a most eloquent speech. "Every one," he said, "who valued the lives and limbs as well as the rights and privileges of the citizens, should come forward and sustain this movement." (Hurrah, and three cheers for the ladies.)

Do you remember Sir Tim's first speech at the Repeal Association, after his election for Cashel? "In my opinion," said he, "the man who is not in favor of a repale of the corn laws, hasn't a sowl in his body."

For a full account of this glorious demonstration, I must refer you to the Freeman's Journal. The report occupies eight columns, besides which the Freeman gives a leading article. I must not omit, however, to allude to Dr. Gray's peroration. "Let us go before the Lord Lieutenant," he said, "and thank God that court of appeal is still left to us!" I need not say that these touching words produced a deep sensation.

For an account of the Lord Lieutenant's visit to Limerick, I must refer you to the Freeman, (what would become of us without that paper?) "Our Special Correspondent" accompanied his Excellency throughout. The only thing I find omitted in the Freeman's report is Father Kenyon's letter. That was not quite to the Doctor's taste. Limerick, on this occasion, truly sustained the character of the "City of the violated tay-tray."

Regardless of all this nonsense, humbug, jarvey slang, congregated palaver and servility, Smith O'Brien quietly, noiselessly, and with dignity, has resought the halls of his fathers. Except in Clare, no public demonstrations have taken place, but every where, I am happy to state for the credit of our people, men of all classes and parties came forward to extend to him a respectful and cordial welcome. In this way the reception he has met with is creditable to the country, and, as I have reason to know, most acceptable to his own feelings. Having served the country in Parliament for twenty years; having endured for that country trial, sentence, banishment, obloquy, and wrong—he is surely now at liberty to return quietly to Cahirmoyle, and there devote himself undisturbed to the practise of those domestic virtues in which he so excels. Should, however, a public life still possess any charms for him, unpledged in any way to the Government, he is free to enter Parliament to-morrow. In this respect he need only consult his own inclinations and sense of right and duty. The county Tipperary is at present at his command, and Clare may be his whenever a vacancy occurs. I believe, however, his present determination is not to enter Parliament, at least under existing circumstances.

After leaving Limerick, His Excellency, Lord Carlisle proceeded to Cork on a visit to Lord Fermoy, (Burke Roche).

A distinguished party was assembled at Trabolgan to meet him—among the rest Michael Joseph Barry. "Ireland," said Lord Fermoy, addressing His Excellency, "may claim the distinction of having produced the Historian and the Poet of the war—allow me to present to your Excellency, the Poet." M. J. B., made his lowest bow, placing at the same time in His Excellency's hand a neat copy of, as he supposed, his "Lays of theWar." His Excellency graciously received it, but after he had read a little, it was observed that a cloud gathered on his noble brow. What can it mean, thought Barry—what can it mean, thought Lord Fermoy. A glance at a small table explained the mystery. Instead of "Lays of the War," His Excellency had been given a pocket edition of the "Spirit of the Nation?" Nefandum! Lord Fermoy apologised. Barry slunk into a corner. With his usual urbanity, however, His Excellency overlooked the mistake, and the festivities of the evening were in no way damped, by the untoward incident.

I find the following spicy bit of scandal in the Nation.

"On dit that the Prince of Prussia is likely to find a rival for the hand of a certain royal princess, in the person of His Majesty the king of Mosquito. Rumor adds that Lord Clarendon favors the pretensions of the Mosquito King, being anxious to cement in the closest manner, the alliance between the kingdoms of Great Britain and Mosquito. His Majesty it is said would long since have pressed his suit in person, but that his royal breeches, the measure for which was taken some years back by a distinguished military tailor, are not yet completed."

What a capital subject this Mosquito king, his coronation, &c., at Jamaica, would be for a farce.

John Brougham could make a splendid thing of it—it would have immense success at the Bowery.

People here, unacquainted with American politics cannot understand how it is that Fillmore is put forward as the champion of the Know-nothing party—the "no foreign influence" party. They ask with astonishment if, during Fillmore's administration, foreign influence did not prevail to an alarming extent in Washington. If Sir H. Bulwer did not then exert an extraordinary influence over the foreign affairs of the Republic—if, during that period the Prometheus were not fired at by a British man-of-war at San Juan de Nicaragua—if the colony of the Bay Islands were not established—and the violation by Great Britain of the Clayton Bulwer Treaty, were not silently acquiesced in? They ask these questions, and not receiving a satisfactory answer, they conclude that the "no foreign influence" cry of Fillmore to the Know-nothings means, no toleration to the peoples of Europe; but closest alliance with, collusion with, and submission to the Governments.

IMPORTANT.

I have just seen the Freeman. His Excellency has arrived in town, and will receive the Jarvey Deputation this day at four o' clock P. M. at the Vice-regal lodge. The Lord Mayor will head the deputation. Great results are anticipated. KILMAINHAM.

Letter from Kilkenny.

KILKENNY, July 10th, 1856.

According to promise, "St. Canice" must send something in the shape of a letter to you. Yet, believe me, being one who is inadequate to the task of writing for such a journal as yours, I find it not very easy to get up a letter.

"But what's the news?" you ask.

> "Through the middle of Kilkenny there runs a clear stream,
> In the middle of Kilkenny there lives a pretty dame—
> Her lips like the roses, her cheeks much the same,
> Like a plate full of strawberries all smothered in cream."

These were the words Tom Steele commenced his speech with at the Black Abbey (if I mistake not), when called on to respond to "the Ladies," at the last Banquet given to O'Connell in this city. That was a good start of Tom's. He at once won his audience by praising their city and all but offering to kiss some of its pretty dames.

The Board of Guardians met last week. I went up there. Patt Blanchfield took the chair. Capt. Hamilton, P. L. I., wrote to the Board, informing them of his being afflicted with a sore toe, which prevented his being present, and sending a new plan or specification for the Chronic Hospital, which, if the Board adopted it, would incur an additional expense beyond what had been already voted, of from £50 to £75. The Captain's communication closed abruptly, as if the toe was getting rebellious, by informing the Board, he considered "the additional expense would be real economy." The Board, however, seemed not to concur. Not one of them even showed any sympathy for the Captain with the bad toe. William J. Maher, always outspoken and honest, said he never met the word "economy" coming from the Commissioners without having a tail of £200 or £300 coming after it. Maher was right. No man knows better than he does how many of these public officials have their tools and jobbers to whom they give the contracts, and, when they can, rob the poor rate-payers.

Lieutenant Cane, son of the Doctor, has returned home and is now on a visit to his father. It's a horrid sight to see the son of a man who was reputed as the head of the Young Ireland party in Kilkenny, proudly strutting about in the Queen's livery. I'd sooner have sent my son, with a red flannel shirt (I believe that is the usual dress of your pioneers,) and a good axe, off to the backwoods of America, and made him hew his way before him.

Our Town Council have come to the resolution of doing something in aid of the suffering French people who lost their all in the late terrible rains and floods. The Journal is out in an eloquent article, calling on its readers to remember the ties which bind us to France. The Journal, also, has a leading article headed, "The Brothers Sadleir," in which the base duplicity of Palmerston's government, and of the Irish Attorney-General in particular, is laid bare. It says:—

"Mr. James Sadleir has escaped—and without the dramatic spectacle of the fictitious suicide at Hampstead Heath! Thanks to the considerate negligence of the British Government, he has been enabled to make a leisurely arrangement of his affairs, and start for some fair region at the other end of the earth, where he will probably be rejoined by his infamous brother, and the two greatest scoundrels of modern history will enjoy themselves upon the money of the plundered people, and gloat over the success with which they have labored for the ruin of Ireland."

Dr. Walsh, the R. C. Bishop of Ossory, has returned home from his visit to the Holy See. He appears in good health, and has just issued a Pastoral, soliciting aid from the Catholics of his diocese towards the completion of the new Cathedral.

Father Rowan has received and published an acknowledgment from Mr. Golding, of Gowran, of the sum of £1, restitution money, made through him to Lord Clifden.

By the way, I see that the Agricultural Society of Ballinasloe have determined on having a grand exhibition of Sires during their next fair. The animals are to be kept, for three days previous to the prizes being given away, at the Earl of Clancarty's. Many of those exhibited in Paris are expected, and it is even said that the Emperor himself will enter the lists for some of the prizes. Well, that's good. The father of "that Blessed Baby" coming to Ballinasloe to exhibit himself among the Sires! It beats Banagher out and out. I hope his stall-fed neighbors won't get republican notions, least they might give him a rip. I'd promise to go see him and report to you how things will go on, were it not that your Argus-eyed "Kilmainham" will be surely there, even though he had no other way of getting down than in the big van in which Moses, the Ready-Made Clothing Man, transports his establishment every year, for the fair week, from Dublin to Ballinasloe.

I often thought how mad with Eugenie the Emperor must have been for not giving him "the blessed baby" in time to enter him for the prize at that great baby show your renowned citizen, Barnum, got up in New-York. I'm told he's a mighty fine boy! He may one day be the King of All-jeers.

The Summer Examinations at St. Kyran's College have passed off with their wonted eclât. The anxiety for "places" was quite as vehement as when your correspondent was a competitor therefor within the walls of old Burrell's Hall, now the site of our magnificent Cathedral.

All the old dodges to "get out the sentence" (that is, to discover the exact paragraph selected by the examiners), were, I am told, in full play, and as many new ones as the parties concerned had the talent to invent, for the important occasion. As usual, the least worthy procured most honors.

Mr. John Rice, of Dunbell, a most respectable old gentleman, having attained near to his hundredth year, has at last passed from amongst us. His funeral was most numerously attended.

Towards the end of the long walk, which extends through the pleasure-grounds attached to Ormond Castle, and just from where bubble up the beauteous, cold and sparkling waters of the "Seven Springs," in the sewer running down by the the old "Mile-Tree" on the Canal-Walk, a brace of otters have for some time resided, much to the annoyance of the dogs and fishermen, and the destruction of the trout and salmon in the vicinity—which destruction I protest against. Recently these old pests have produced a litter of young ones. The denizens about the "Black Quarry" describe the antics of the youngsters, while disporting in our "Stream without mud," as being most amusing. The greatest desire to capture them exists. As yet (as always with us) this desire has only produced a moral-force conclusion, and strong resolutions to expel the plunderers. Meantime, my chances of a nice speckled trout or a slice of curdy salmon now and then, daily decrease.

Pierce Somerset Butler, one of the old stock, but degenerated so that he is good neither for king nor couuntry, has again gone over to London to make one last effort for the title of Viscount Mountgarrett. You know it has been decided in half-a-dozen tribunals already, the last decision being adverse to Pierce. I like, however, to see him determined to die game. You must have known him. With all the advantages derivable from family prestige, one of the finest men to be met anywhere, with that easy air which at once marks the gentleman, professing honest principles, yet he never acquired the rank to ensure his power of commanding even a minor situation for himself or a friend. Strange indeed were the vicissitudes with which the whole family of the Butlers had to contend. It was like as if they were destined to dwindle away with their beautiful island home. The best and most energetic of the family, to my mind, was Tom, who lived in Littlefield, now occupied by E. J. Maher, the agent of George Bryan, Esq. Then there was Edmund, the Minister, who delighted in a gallop with the hounds. He was a constant follower of Stannard's glorious pack of hare-hounds. Some said Edmund was a thought touched in the brain. However, I am told, at the death of the late Earl of Kilkenny, Edmund took it on himself to expostulate with death. He roamed through every room in Ballyconra House that night, calling aloud, "Go, death! go take blind Tom, but don't touch the Earl of Kilkenny!" However, death spared blind Tom, and took the Earl.

ST. CANICE.

PARAGRAPHS

FROM THE KILKENNY, WATERFORD, AND WEXFORD PAPERS—PEN AND SCISSORS WORK.

They have had the brightest of times down in Limerick. More than three-fourths of the Irish papers say so. The Freeman's Journal is bursting with adjectives about it. An old crab-tree, the viceregal sunshine has brought out pink and white blossoms all over it. All the other patriotic papers of the like root and sap appear in the same style. Even such an old stick as the Wexford Independent has given birth to a votive daisy or two. The Tipperary Vindicator, however, is sullen on the subject. A slip from it, in another part of the NEWS, establishes this. The Kilkenny Journal, also, refuses a smile to the Castle cortege, as it dashes by with its golden aiguillettes and snow-white plumes. With a proud curl of the lip, the Journal flings its scorn on the flunkeyism of Limerick.

"Yes, indeed, it was one of those spectacles which have unhappily become too frequent among us, of late—a declaration on the part of those who represent the civic wealth of Ireland, that their necks at last repose pleasantly in their collars of gold, and that, for the first time, a generation of Irishmen is content to subside into the ignominious slough of provincialism.

So the Journal writes. "And so," it adds, "they hug their glittering chains, and surrender the Green Flag which never before touched the ground, during a struggle of centuries." The Journal follows this up, denying a statement of the Munster News to the effect, that the Mayor of Kilkenny was present at the Limerick pro-consulate ovation:

"The Chief Magistrate of Kilkenny will scarcely take any extravagant pains to compliment a Lord Lieutenant, who hampered us with an additional police force, treated the Memorial of our Grand Jury with disdain, and branded Kilkenny as the scene of 'disgraceful disturbances.'

This is the language of the journal. May its wholesome inkstand never fail!

Under the head of The Romantic Literature of Ancient Ireland, we have an interesting account of the first Irishman who died for Christ. His name was O'Connor McNessa.

The Kilkenny ladies, it appears, are subscribing bountifully for a Ladye Chapelle, now being completed in their city. A sum of £780 has been realized. No less than £250 were voted at the last meeting of the subscribers for the Statue and altar brought over by Bishop Walsh recently from Rome. Corry Connellan, private secretary to Lord Clarendon in '48, has been inspecting the Kilkenny county and city jails. He's exquisitely qualified for that sort of work. Nothing can knock him over. He can cordially handle a birch, that has been steeped in the most virulent filth. From the report at the last weekly meeting of the Callan Union, we give the following statistics:—

"Remaining on previous Saturday, 482; admitted during the week, 30; discharged, 21; remaining on last Saturday, 473; of this number 112 were in the infirmary, 14 in fever hospital, and 347 in main house. Corresponding week in 1855, 585.

The cost of provisions and necessaries received during the week was, £57 18 6; the cost of ditto consumed during the week was, £49 7 7; general average cost, 1 1*s* 10½*d.*; average in infirmary, 3*s.* 1*d.*; average in fever hospital, 4*s.* 8*d.*

The cost of out door relief during the week was £1 14 4. By the Treasurer's book it appeared that there had been received during the week, £6 18 1; paid out during the week, £89 2 4; balance against the Guardians, £268 4 10; outstanding cheques, £165 13 5; leaving a total balance against the Guardians of £433 18 3."

Then, there's been a meeting of the Kilkenny Literary Society, at which a vote of thanks was passed to Dr. Johnson for his kindness in providing the members with gratuitous accommodation for their Museum during the past year. Nothing else at all notable transpires in the published account of the meeting. The Journal should let us know more about the Society. Most things done there, would prove more instructive and agreeable to the public generally, than the fact, which we ascertain from another column, that at a meeting of the Town Commission, two or three days ago, Ald. Dr. Kane proposed that Mr. Michael Flynn be appointed Inspector of Nuisances at Five Pounds a year. Corry Connellan should have had the appointment. There was, however, another vote passed, which smells more sweetly than the former. It was a vote to Mr. D. Ferguson for his liberality in encouraging a grand system of Water Works in the city of the limpid Nore. Dr. Cane proposed the vote. In proposing the vote, the Doctor was eloquent.

"I have known Mr. Ferguson for many years," said the speaker, "and I never knew a man of a more philantrophic turn of mind—one more disinterestedly resolved upon doing public good. He has no pecuniary interest in the matter—to him its success can only bring honor and public gratitude. I have always expressed the opinion, and expressed it many years ago, that the time should come when water would be supplied to every house and inhabitant of Kilkenny through public pipes—water pure and wholesome, instead of the foul fluid given from wells and pumps, poisoned by the public sewerage."

Kilkenny is looking up. A pump in New-York would be as queer a sight as a hall-door knocker. 'Twould be an awkward intrusion on the civilization of Croton reservoirs and hydrants. Mr. Ferguson deserves a silvery fountain beside his grave when laid there,—one that in frost and summer-heat should perpetually, and with the tinkling of a thousand fairy bells and bubbles' play above his bones, and keep them fresh.

There's a paragraph about the Dispensary. A mere mention of names, notifying that Matthew Rowan, Esq., was in the chair at the last meeting of the Committee, that Dr. Kearns, medical officer of the Institution was in attendance, and that a letter respecting fever patients, was read by Mr. Dunply, the Secretary. A sentence or two concerning the state of the Borris Wool Market, follows. Referring to something about which we heard nothing, they set us an enigma in type, and leave us as wise as we were. A list of subscribers to the Relief Fund for France, slips in close after the enigma on Wool. The Mayor contributes £2; Dr. Cane, ditto; Edmund Smithwick, ditto, repeated; and so on. Some men never die. Some purses never fail. The Smithwick's have never yet dried up. They run freely, and their course is pleasant. A letter from A Celt, follows the French sympathy subscription list. It begins with a quotation from Watty Cox—as vagabond a genius as ever flashed Irish diamonds out of a pen upon paper: "The worst use you could make of a man was to hang him." Thus wrote Watty, the Massaroni of Magazines. The Celt, in the Kilkenny Journal, adopts the sensible aphorism as a text, and puts the question—

"Have the Irish Militia been treated after the latter fashion? If they have, they should not complain too much; they put themselves, voluntarily, under arms for the ostensible purpose at least of supporting English dominion in Ireland, and accordingly, after the real downright English rule, have they been paid off for their loyalty and alacrity."

The Celt is right. Men who put their legs into English trowsers, put their leg in it, and do so with the help of spectacles of the power of seven centuries to direct them otherwise, and deserve, and certainly excite, very slight compassion for their mistake. The Celt is a man. A sensible man. A man who manfully reserves his sympathies for those who wisely and gallantly win them.

One hundred and fifty of the Kilkenny Militia have left the regiment. The regiment is completely disembodied by this. It appears that the County Grand Jury is to provide accommodation for the permanent staff. The House of Correction, on the Kells Road, we learn from the Journal, is likely to be put in a state of permanent repair for the purpose. It's an appropriate place. The Staff of the Militia in Kilkenny, and every other city and county in Ireland, richly deserve the House of Correction. After the Militia news, we are happy to find, in the smallest of type, that the lady of Alderman Daniel Smithwick has given birth to a daughter. With which item—a very pleasant and bright one—we gracefully toss off the Journal, and take to the Waterford News. What says the Waterford News? Under the head of Correspondents, it has, first of all, this right manly sentiment à prôpos to the return of O'Brien:

"We agree with you that William Smith O'Brien ought not to accept any 'public demonstration of gas' or 'congratulatory addresses' on his return to a country which hurra'd him into his peril, and when he was doomed to a fate of exile leaving, his wife widowed and his children fatherless for eight years, threw up their hats to greet his most embittered foe. 'Patriotism' of the present day, as we see it under our own eye, is composed of the most hollow and rotten material. The laws are liberal and generous enough, if the minds were not so much debased."

We give that without a word of comment. 'Twill stand. The Column of July, Place Bastille, needs no Immortelles. It is stately and sublime, majestic with the memory of countless martyrdoms for freedom—of itself and by itself a monument ever speaking, like the colossal Moses of Michael Angelo, to the great heart and intellect of humanity—and wants nothing to help it in the deep solemnity of its silent preaching. So, too, can such bold truths as the Waterford News, in the sentence quoted, build up in the midst of a people prostrate to the earth, with their bustles to the sun, like the Musselmen in a Mosque. Such truths want no confirmation. They are solid of themselves. They stand in need of no embellishment, wrought with goose-quill or elastic diamond-pointed pen. They are beautiful and ornate from the affluence of their own nature.

A Dungarvan correspondent of the Waterford News communicates the fact, that the Ring fishermen killed in one day, three weeks back, no less than 200 porpoises, some of them measuring from 20 to 30 feet. Then there's been a storm sweeping up the Suir from Hook Tower. The News says that the sea rose to an enormous height in the harbor and about the coast, and that much damage it is to be feared, has been done to the wheat and potato crop. The ferry-boat at Passage was upset when trying to take off passengers from the Duncannon steamer. The two men pulling her had to swim ashore.

After a storm comes a calm. The saying is applicable if a meeting in Dungarvan Court-house, even on Railway qnestion, dead as it usually is, can be called a calm. The Waterford people want to have their noble county, from the Suir to the Blackwater, and from Mount-Misery to the tip of the Clonmel spur of the Commeraghs, opened. They want a track of fire through their rich fields from estuary to river-head, from sea-cliff to mountain-top. The meeting in Dungarvan, over which Sir John Keane, presides, expresses this wish, and Mr. Charles Tarrant, Civil Engineer, gives a practical and shining shape to it. To give particulars is out of the question. We compress a multitude of minutiæ into the smallest package possible. We throw out facts like hand grenades. A world in a wall-nut. The Clonmel railroad from Waterford will cost £187,747. The Dungarvan road, £191,504. The latter leaves the Tramore railroad east of Butlerstown castle, passes south of Whitfield (Mr. Christmas demesne), through the valley of Ballyduff, near Kilmacthomas, to about one mile west of the village of Stradbally. Then it crosses the Tay, and afterwards the Ballyvoile rivers, from which point it shortly strikes the Waterford coach-road. Lord Stuart de Decies spoke at the meeting. So did Coroner Delahunty, once the parochial King of Repealers. Extremes meet in adversity, the old proverb tells us they do. In peace, likewise. The report of the Dungarvan meeting establishes the proverb.

A section of a column, devoted to the Dredge boat, and the minutest slice (hardly a line and a quarter) informing us that the People's is progressing at a "snail's pace," completes the Arabia, that is if we except a letter, signed Longinus, which appears in the last column of the Waterford Chronicle of the 11th of July. This letter, however, we are not disposed to seal with black sealingwax, and throw amongst the dead. It is headed Lynch Law in Kilmacow, and contains the following facts:—

"An old horse has been in the habit of straying into the chapel-yard burial-ground of Kilmacow, to graze amongst the graves of the dead, and as the owner would not keep him from rambling, some of the peasantry resolved to execute Lynch Law on the truant. Having caught him in the fact, they procured a shears and divested him of his mane and the hair of his tail, leaving the latter mighty like a pump-handle, to scare away the flies. A wag then tied a lot of brass buttons around the tail, as if in mockery or compensation. The buttons very much resembled old guineas, and some supposed that the animal had returned from an expedition to California and escaped with a few nuggets. The owner of the beast was at first overjoyed at what appeared to be precious metal, and hoped to be able to purchase a snug farm; but alas! the buttons were all brass, and his hopes were blasted."

"From the grave to the severe," wrote Boileau in his fables, and so we jump on. Or rather, so we juump back. For we return to a Wexford paper, the People, and give the extract it quotes from the St. Louis Leader, of St. Louis:—

"Look at Ireland at this moment. Representative government exists there, and if the Irish members of Parliament truly represented the interests and wishes of their constituents, Tenant-right would soon be established, and the brutal and desolating eviction process would be at an end, and that monster nuisance, the Established Church in Ireland, would be swept from the face of the Earth. What is the reason this is not done? It is because the Irish constituencies do not require fidelity at the hands of their representatives, because they do not select men proved to be faithful, or known to be reliable, in place of the base minions of power, or the favored scions of nobility, as their representatives in Parliament. What can be more absurd, for instance, to give it no harsher name, than the conduct of Dr. Cahill, in writing long letters to Lord Carlisle in favor of the rights of Ireland, in order to support a paper, which is pledged to the defence of a system of selling the rights of Ireland by its representatives to the government!"

These are admirable views; admirably worded, and the Irish in Ireland, as well as the Irish in America and elsewhere, will be all the better for taking them calmly and seriously to heart, and thinking and doing as they faithfully dictate.

The Irish Press on the Nenagh Militia Riot.

The Leinster Express writes that—

Nothing could justify such an outbreak as has been witnessed in Nenagh; but it is worth considering whether it was expedient to allow a pretext to the unruly spirits of which the North Tipperary militia is composed. The retention of a pair of cloth trowsers appears to have been that which more immediately led to the emeute—the holder was placed in custody, and his comrades rose in a body for his rescue. No sufficient force was at hand to overawe the rioters; the officers had not influence enough to restore order; whilst the worst passions of the men were influenced by the mauvais sujets who can be easily found in the lanes and alleys of every considerable town. Fortunately there was little ammunition to be had, or the consequences might have been much worse.

The Waterford Chronicle, speaking of the matter, writes in this style—

Excitable men, smarting under injury, cannot always be made to hear reason; and we do believe the North Tips, and every Irish militiaman, have many injuries to complain of, and we hope one good effect, at least, will spring from the scene, and that is to turn the attention of the Government to the just claims of the Irish Militia, and induce them to do them full and ample justice, to which as a body, they are so fully entitled.

The Tipperary Vindicator says—

It is feared that there has been a much greater loss of life on the part of the Militia than was at first reported. Four soldiers of the line were killed; and from all we can ascertain there have not been less than eight or nine of the Militia shot dead, whilst numbers have been most seriously and it is apprehended mortally wounded. English governments are so fond of breaking treaties with Ireland and the Irish, from the earliest to the latest days, that it is not to be wondered at they should tamper with the feelings of, and trample on and scorn the claims—the legal, legitimate claims of men who answered the summons to rally around England's standard in the moment of her difficulty and danger, and produce a state of irritation which has had no parallel in the chequered history of the times.

The Dublin Nation, has the following epitomization of Mr. Fillmore's Presidential career—

Millard Fillmore, the Know-Nothing candidate for the American Presidency, is the weakest in intellect, perhaps, of any of the leading public men of the States. He obtained the office of President before by the accident of General Taylor's death—he at the time having been Vice-President. During the period that he occupied the Presidential chair, Sir H. Bulwer, as was stated by an American paper, directed the foreign affairs of America, and the English Government appeared to have CARTE BLANCHE to act as they pleased on the American Continent. Thus, the Colony of the Bay Islands was established in 1852 without a murmur from Fillmore. Thus also an American mail steamer was fired at by a British man of war in the harbor of San Juan de Nicaragua. The Clayton-Bulwer treaty was allowed to be trampled on with impunity. During Fillmore's Presidency the United States commanded little respect from foreign powers, and were only saved from absolute contempt by one or two masterly dispatches from Daniel Webster. Surely a strange champion is Fillmore for the Know-Nothings—that party which declaims against "foreign influence." Never, we say, was foreign influence so rampant at Washington as during Fillmore's term of office. But he has no chance of success at present. The American people have taken his measure, and the real contest will be between Buchanan and Fremont. We think there can be little doubt but that the former will be elected.

The Ulsterman, published in Belfast, says—

That the riot of the Tipperary Militia is not disgraceful to the men, but eminently disgraceful to the authorities. The Government have been guilty of a fraud in the matter which we blush to record. A mean and beggarly spirit of economy tempted the precious Government of which Lord Palmerston is the fitting head, to violate the contract they had entered into, and cheat these men of their stipulated pay. The same beggarly economy went farther. The poor fellows who formed the Tipperary Militia belonged necessarily to the humblest portion of the population. A year or more ago they exchanged their rags for the government uniform. When the order for their disbandment was given, they were required to strip off every portion of their uniform and find their rags again.

One poor fellow stripped till he came to his breeches. He had none to replace them with; and delicacy stopped him there. For this "act of mutiny" he was clapped into the black hole, and the other men, savage at the disgraceful treatment they had got, and specially indignant at being cheated out of their pay, rebelled and rescued their comrade.

Irish News.

The Limerick Reporter, in giving a full account of the visit of the Earl of Carlisle to Limerick, says: There has been no popular enthusiasm—no excitement—no display, except of a merely official character—no gatherings—no congratulations—nothing whatever, except what was cold and formal—what was divested of those brilliant characteristics which would greet the arrival of the Earl of Carlisle in other times, when the name of Morpeth was a household word among the people, and when the Whig party declared itself in favor of Ireland. The Reporter intimates that his Lordship is not thought to sympathise with those great principles which at one period were so closely associated with his exalted public character. He is believed to have gone backwards with the Whig school to which he belongs, rather than advanced with the age, of which he might be one of the master spirits. He is suspected of having a leaning towards the continuance of the church establishment unreformed, and with its combrous, complicated, and costly machinery, far and away greater than becomes a Reformer of its abuses and monstrosities.

The Cork Examiner understands that at the usual period of granting spirit licenses, an attack is about to be made on the firmness with which the Recorder and Magistrates have resisted the increase of public houses in that city. There are already, according to the information collected by the magistrates, over 500 public houses in Cork, and to this enormous number, which ought to be further reduced instead of increased, a large addition, the Examiner regrets, is now sought to be made. The persons already in the trade, following the example of those in Dublin, have combined to resist this indefinite increase of public houses.

From the Cork Southern Reporter we learn that a special meeting of the Town Council will be shortly held to take into consideration the purchase of the water works—to consider the application of the ladies of the Presentation Convent in reference to the rating of the convent—to consider the expediency of rescinding the order in Council for letting the Ferries by auction, and suggesting the same should be let by tender.

Archdeacon O'Reilly, of Athlone, has purchased the house, offices and premises, lately occupied by Mrs. O'Bierne, for a convent of the Order of Mercy. The house is in perfect order. There is a good garden and a large field. Steamers ply each alternate day to and from Athlone to Limerick and Carrick-on-Shannon; this, with the railroad, will afford to parents and guardians every facility to visit their intimate friends who may be inmates of the convent.

A wordy war took place in Dublin, very lately, between two gentlemen from the West of Ireland. One of them applied his his whip to his antagonist and gave him a sound flogging. The gentleman who suffered, summoned him before the Police Magistrates, who inflicted the penalty of £2, and bound the offender in sureties to keep the peace for the future.

TheRev. James O'Shea, P. P. of Stonehall, having been deputed by the Right Rev. Dr. Ryan, R. C. B., to proceed to Scotland, for the purpose of soliciting subscriptions in aid of the fund for erecting St. John's new Catholic cathedral, the rev. gentleman has left on his mission.

The Archbishop of Tuam has lately administered the sacrament of Confirmation to upwards of four hundred children in the parish of Islandeady. A most eloquent and impressive discourse in the Irish language was delivered on the occasion by the Rev. Patrick Greene, R.C.C., Castlebar.

The Earl of Dunraven, Sir Vere de Vere, Lady de Vere, and Thomas Boyse, J. P., a few Sundays since attended at Adare parish, where High Mass was celebrated by the Right Rev. Dr. Ryan. The Rev. Mr. Anderton, nephew to Archdeacon Manning, and chaplain to Earl Dunraven, attended on the occasion.

A fine screw steamship, called the Vivandiere has arrived in Cork harbor from Glasgow. The Vivandiere is intended to trade regularly between Cork, Waterford and Glasgow, and will supply a want long felt by the mercantile and trading communities of those cities.

Lieutenant Pierce, who was murdered recently near Varna, was a native of Cork and son to Mr. Pierce who was at one time Governor of the old Cork House of Industry. He was about 45 years of age, and before his appointm entto the Transport Corps was in the London Police.

The sheep of the British Isles number about 35,000,000; England alone possesses about 27,000,000; Scotland, according to the agricultural statistics of 1854, has 4,787,235, and Ireland, in 1833, had 3,142,656.

We learn from the Reporter, that the brewers of Cork, have reduced the price of porter from 40s to 35s a cask, which leaves the retail price 2d per pint. This reduction is consequent upon a similar movement adopted by the Dublin brewers.

The Hon. Luke Gerald Dillon, eldest son of Lord Clonbrock, at present employed in the Foreign Office, was offered and refused the office of attache, to the Minister at Washington. The Hon. Mr. Dillon, will shortly be connected with the British Embassy at Vienna.

Three drays, heavily laden with household furniture, arrived in Carlow, three weeks ago, from Tipperary. They were stated to be the property of Mr. James Sadleir, and on their way to Dublin.

The town of Ennis, New-market-on-Fergus, Corofin, and Clare, were all illuminated on the arrival of Mr. O'Brien at Dromoland, the seat of his brother, Lord Inchiquin. Bonfires blazed on every hill in the entire of Burren.

The Rev. Dr. O'Brien recently preached a charity sermon in New Ross, when a sum of £27 was received at the doors. In the evening the rev. gentleman inaugurated the Young Men's Society, and 200 members were entered.

Major Massey of the Tipperary Artillery, and Laurence Waldron, Esq., of Rathgar, will, in all likelihood, be candidates for the representation of Tipperary county, whenever a vacancy occurs.

Sir Thomas Redington and James Daly, Esq., have subscribed £25 and £20 respectively towards erecting a nunnery in Gort.

The Town Commissioners of Tuam have given the usual grant of £30 towards the races.

The Right Rev. Dr. Ryan, Bishop of Limerick, has gone on a visit to Sir Vere de Vere, Bart., Curragh Chase, near Adare.

Mr. Bateson, M. P., is still confined to his bed by severe gastric fever.

A blue book of 300 pages contains the 34th Report of the Inspectors-General on the general state of prisons in Ireland during the year 1855. The Report bears testimony to the fact that crime, which reached its climax in 1850, has been steadily decreasing ever since, and is rapidly returning to the position in which it stood in 1846, the year latterly taken as the standard of measurement in consequence of its melancholy notoriety as the first year of famine. The number of prisoners immured in prison on New Year's Day last amounted to 3,561, against 5,080 on the 1st of January, 1855, and the total number of prisoners incarcerated during the year 1855 amounted to 54,531 against 73,733 in 1854, 83,805 in 1853, 92,638 in 1852, 113,554 in 1851, and 115,871 in 1850. The daily average has fallen from 11,496 to 4,418.3. 98 deaths of prisoners occurred in 1856 against 102 in 1854. The decrease of the number of prisoners confined in county gaols is very remarkable. It is shown that in six county gaols the daily average for the last five years has fallen far below that for the seven years ending with 1846, and that in many others a similar result is fast approaching.

A correspondent of the Dublin Evening Mail informs us, that Mr. Cane, of the town of Tours, in France, mentioned in the Times as having subscribed the sum of 10,000f. or £400 British, for the sufferers by the late inundations, is of Irish descent. He is the son of Mr. Cane, who is described by Lord Blaney, as a gentleman of great influence, and who was known by the name of "Claret Cane," on account of his unbounded hospitality. Mr. Cane, the father, was a native of the North of Ireland, who settled in France previous to the revolution; his son, the present Mr. Cane, was born in Tours, where he possesses property.

A circular has been received from Dublin Castle allowing any of the men of the Royal Longford Rifles to return to their homes, although the regiment is now 400 strong only. A guard of honor, consisting of 60 men, along with the band and bugles of the regiment, under the command of Capt. Loftus Bush Fox, were drawn up at the Carlow railway station to receive the Judges of Assize. It was truly gratifying, writes the Express, to Chief Justice Monahan, to recognize the voice, when arms were "presented" to him, of an old member of the Bar. Capt. Fox was a barrister of six years' standing, and on Chief Justice Monahan's circuit.

We understand from the Nation that out of six constituencies which had called upon him, Mr. Duffy has selected to sit for the united counties of Heytesbury and Villiers, in compliment, the Nation presumes, to the two Viceroys of those names who prosecuted him for rebellion at home. The Nation further observes that the Australian racing people appear to have taken a mania for calling their horses "Gavan Duffy." At the races, on Patrick's Day, one of the best running was made by a fine Australian nag called "Smith O'Brien;" and two "Gavan Duffys" exhibited their paces to the delight of the course.

The Limerick Athenæum has been opened by the Lord Lieutenant, attended by General Chatterton and Staff. Right Rev. Dr. Ryan, Lord Bishop of Limerick, was present. An address from the President and Council of the Athenæum was read by Mr. W. L. Joynt, who handed it to His Excellency, who returned a reply. The Earl of Dunraven read an address to His Excellency from the Limerick School of Art. His Excellency returned an eloquent answer. The performance of the Harmonic Society on the occasion was splendid.

The military districts of Belfast and Limerick are about to be discontinued. Major-General Sir James Chatterton, who commands at Limerick, is to command the brigade of cavalry at the Curragh. Major-General Gough is to have command of one of the brigades of infantry at the Curragh. The headquarters of the Cork district are to be moved to Fermoy, where a large body of troops are to be concentrated. The only staff officer to be left at Cork is the Assistant-Quartermaster-General, who remains to superintend the embarkation and disembarkation of troops.

The Derry Journal, speaking of a recent storm in that quarter, informs us that houses were stripped, trees rooted up, and early potatoes much injured. At Bundora the storm was dreadful. A trolling yacht, the property of Mr. Johnston, of Magheramena, was driven from her anchorage on the rocks, and in the morning was found to be a total wreck, scarcely a piece of her remaining together.

An inquest has been held on some of the men killed in the riot of the Tipperary Militia. The jury returned a verdict in the case of Hurley, a private of the 31st Regt., who had fought in the three great battles of the Crimea, that he was killed with a gun shot by some one unknown. In the case of Gibbons, a pensioner, they found a verdict that he was killed by a soldier of the 53d Regt., who fired into his house.

On the eve of the Twelfth of July, the Belfast Mercury states that shortly before midnight a brisk fire of blank cartridge began in Durham street, and was taken up in other neighboring quarters where Orangeism prevails. The noisy amusement was kept up for some time, having been heralded in by the sound of drum and fife.

The Wexford Independent says that Mr. Wynne, the newly-elected Secretary to the Wexford Grand Jury, gives universal satisfaction by the able manner in which he discharges the duties pertaining to his office.

Three detachments of the Grenadier Guards have arrived in Dublin. The troops were cordially cheered as they marched from the station to Richmond Barracks.

Two hundred and forty soldiers of the South Mayo Militia, lately stationed at the Curragh, were disbanded. They were allowed to carry away with them their fatigue dress and kit.

At the close of the Waterford Assizes, Baron Pennefather was presented with a pair of white gloves by Sir John Keane, Bart., the High Sheriff of that county, in token of the total absence of criminal business.

The Hon. G. P. O'Callaghan, son of Lord Lismore, has formally announced his intention of offering himself as a candidate for the representation of the county of Tipperary.

The bishop of Ossory, the Right Rev. Dr. Walshe, has arrived in Kilkenny after his sojourn in Rome. The reverend prelate is in the enjoyment of excellent health and spirits.

The shop of Mr. Eldon Graham of Mountmelick, has been robbed of £4 in coppers.

The Londonderry Militia, for some time back stationed in Derry, has been disembodied.

The subscription to the testimonial to the late Veneralbe Archdeacon MacHale already amounts to £100.

The Kerry Post, exults in the fact that there was not a single prisoner in the county jail for trial at the past assizes.

At the Ballickmoyler Petty Sessions lately, the magistrates signed warrants for the apprehension of Robert Wilson, of Garrendenny, and others, for the abduction of Miss Anna Maria Hoskins, of Clonbrock, near Newtown Colliery. It seems the young lady and her abductor were on terms of great intimacy, and that her parents sanctioned the addresses of her admirer. But a wealthier suitor appearing, in the person of one Mr. Harcourt Lees, from the north of Ireland, the old couple prohibited all further intercourse between their daughter and young Wilson. Mr. Lees pressed his suit so successfully with the parents, that a day was named for the wedding. The day before, she, her sister, brother, and north country admirer, went to spend the day at an uncle's house. In the evening, when returning, and just at the entrance of her own residence, Wilson and party surrounded the jaunting-car, and bore away the prize. Mr. Harcourt Lees got a bloody nose and a pair of black eyes, for daring to aspire to the fair hand of the "rose of Clonbrock." There is no clue since to the whereabouts of Miss Hoskins and her abductor. Rumor ascribes to the young lady the credit of planning this episode in rural life.

We learn from the Cork Examiner that the Earl of Kenmare is owner of a large tract of country; and that in the neighborhood of Bantry tenants upon his lordship's estate are made to feel that their landlord is more concerned about advancing their interests than he is about increasing his own income. The Examiner also informs us that the present Earl has not been in possession of the title three years in full, and that during that period he has contributed largely to the funds raised for the purpose of completing the chapels in the parish of Bantry. His latest act of generosity consists in granting a valuable piece of ground adjoining the town of Bantry, as a site for a Convent. His lordship has also contributed £50 towards the convent building fund.

Two years ago, on Easter Monday, the Rev. Mr. Barett laid the first stone of a new church at Drumlyon, a retired district of the parish of Croghan. By the exertions of the people, who contributed with a liberality beyond their means, together with the aid of many kindhearted persons, both Protestant and Catholic, the Rev. Mr. Barett has been enabled to finish the building. It has been solemnly dedicated by the Lord Bishop of Ardagh. The very Rev. Dr. Cahill preached the dedication sermon.

Mr. Roebuck, we are informed by the Tipperary Vindicator, has given notice of a motion to expel Mr. James Sadleir from the House of Commons unless he surrender himself shortly. That Mr. James Sadleir will not appear during the period of his natural life, the Vindicator thinks is pretty evident, unless he should prefer penal servitude for the rest of his dishonored days to the free life he may enjoy in Christinia or whatever country has not exchanged with England a treaty of extradition.

The tenantry on Mr. Pollock's estate at Cregg have been favored with a circular requesting their attendance on a day and hour named, to meet their landlord and discuss matters. This looks amicable, says the Roscommon Message, and we sho'd be happy to believe it so, were we not informed that a second circular, in the shape of an ejectment process, was delivered to the same parties within an hour after the receipt of the first.

The Limerick Reporter deeply regrets that a desperate faction fight occurred at the fair of Hospital, between the old rivals, the "two-year-olds" and the "three-year-olds." Blood was profusely shed on both sides. The Liddanes and the Mitchels were the principals. Upwards of twenty of them have been arrested and lodged in bridewell. The fair was otherwise well attended, and the number of horses sold was enormous.

The Tablet believes the gates of Clonmel gaol have been thrown open to Mr. John Carden, who proceeded on horseback, as privately as possible, to the Limerick junction en route to Cork, where he is to remain for a few days, and afterwards to go to the Continent on a visit to a relative. Mr. Carden appeared pale and careworn. While in Clonmel prison he was engaged principally in artisan pursuits. He made a considerable variety of small articles which manifested much ingenuity.

Notwithstanding the vigilance of Attorneys-General, Crown solicitors, and detective police, writes a correspondent of the Daily Express, James Sadleir found no difficulty in escaping; was three days in London, going about openly, calling at the Reform Club for his letters, and was met by twenty members of the House of Commons to whom he was known; nay more, continues the correspondent, it is asserted that Sadleir, within the last few days, has been seen in Paris as a regular and daily frequenter of Galignani's library.

The case of Poland, observes the Tablet, has been brought before the House of Lords by Lord Lyndhurst, who commenced his speech by an allusion to the contrast drawn by the Count Montalembert between the interference of England in Italy, where she had no footing, and her abstention from interference in Poland, where she had treaties and solemn stipulations to appeal to.

On the 9th of this month a profession took place at the Presentation Convent, Bagnalstown, county Carlow. Miss Kehoe and Miss O'Donohoe, made their solemn vows in presence of the Right Rev. Dr. Walshe, Bishop of Kildare and Leighlin, of the Mother Superior of the Convent and Community, and of a numerous attendance of clergymen. Some lovely children bearing baskets of flowers, walked in the procession.

The fair of Ballymoney was well supplied with cattle of every description. Good young milch cows and fat cattle of every kind were in requisition at high prices. Horses, of which there was an ample supply, brought high prices.

The Tuam Herald believes that Ireland was never so bound up, hand and foot, within the meshes of English corrupting influences. For a few paltry places to the most worthless and venal, says the Herald, national rights of immense magnitude and importance are being daily sacrificed.

James Frost, Esq., of Derra, county Limerick, a highly intelligent and respectable farmer, and formerly one of the guardians of the Limerick Union, has been publicly received into the Catholic Church.

Two hundred and fifty, rank and file, of the Queen's County Militia have been disbanded. Very few of the men had more than two or three pence to commence life again. Their old clothing is very bad, and they are begging for old vests.

The first session of the Senate of the Catholic University has taken place. That statutes are now formally given to the body, and by this corporate act it has inaugurated its corporate existence.

The Twelfth of July in Belfast and the adjoining districts passed off this year with great tranquillity. Some shots were fired in several places, but there was no public exhibition.

American News.

The house occupied by William Penn still stands. It is in Second street, opposite the Pennsylvania bank, Philadelphia. It is two stories high, about forty feet front, with projecting wings, but the centre is boarded out to the line of the latter. It is very venerable and very dirty. A sort of old Jewry—a locksmith shop, retail fruit stalls, &c., distinguish the once gubernatorial precinct. The walls are honestly built, of old-fashioned thickness, and so the little squat old concern is tough, and if cleared up it would last a few lustrums to come as a Quaker memento of early times. But the whole, with other property adjoining, will soon be offered for sale, and then—where will it go? It will be improved away, unless pious antiquarian sentiment buy it and consecrate it to colonial memories and the spirit of the past. The late Elliot Cresson left ten thousand dollars toward buying it for civic acquisition and preservation, but it will take a much larger sum than that to save the venerable relic of Leni-Lenape times. The indifference of Americans to such acts of filial retrospection and preservation is in wide contrast with the prevalence of the opposite sentiment in Europe, where such large sums are affectionately expended for the conservation of things of the olden time.

Dr. Bernhisel, the delegate in Congress from Utah, has a copper medal, found recently ten feet under the ground in Utah. It is dated November 22d, 1739, and is commemorative of the capture of Porto Bello by Admiral Vernon. On one side is a full figure of the Admiral, with the words, "England's glory revived by Admiral Vernon." On the reverse are represented six ships of war, with the inscription, "He took Porto Bello with six ships only.' If it is remarkable that this medal should be exhumed in Utah, it is equally so that a grandson of Admiral Vernon is now a citizen of Utah. He immigrated to this country in 1822. So says the National Intelligencer.

A committee of ladies, in Syracuse, N. Y., actuated by the kindest feelings, lately visited the woman who calls herself Albert Guelph, and who married a Miss Lewis, of that city, and satisfied themselves that the pretended husband is a woman. The visit was for the purpose of convincing Miss Lewis that her supposed husband is a female. The health, happiness, and future usefulness of this young lady depended on her being undeceived; for notwithstanding all that had been said, she still clung to her with all the devotedness of a true wife, and never until this visit has she been satisfied of the deception practised upon her. She then, in the presence of all, declared herself to be perfectly convinced, and renounced her pretended husband forever.

John Forsyth, Esq., the newly appointed United States Minister of Mexico, reached this city on the night before last, and was yesterday at the Kirkwood House. He came, we presume, to have the usual consultations with the Department of State necessary to enable a new Plenipotentiary fully to comprehend all the points in the subjects to be committed to his care. We predict for him a successful diplomatic career; for we really know no other gentlemen better fitted by natural mind, attainments, manners and character, to exercise effective influence in such a position, and more especially with such a people as the Mexicans. He is said to have left Washington this morning for New-York, to return hither in a few days; when he will probably speedily close up his business with the State Department and at once depart on his mission in a Government vessel.

The Richmond Whig says: A general alarm from the mountains to the seaboard is felt for the corn crop. The rains have been partial and limited in quantity, the chinch-bug universal, and like the sand of the sea-shore for numbers. Many corn-fields are entirely destroyed by them already, and others can only be saved by timely and copious rains.

Henry Loop, one of the horse-thief and counterfeiting gang, who was confined in Almira jail, awaiting trial, made his escape on the night of the 18th, by knocking the turnkey down with a bar of iron as he was entering the cell in which the prisoner was confined. L. D. Chasworth, awaiting his trial for the same offence, also made his escape at the same time. The turnkey is pretty badly hurt.

A delicate case has just been decided in New-Orleans. A lady had ordered and received on artificial leg from the manufacturer for $250, and afterward declined paying for the same. The maker had a writ issued, requiring the sheriff to take the leg into his possession. That gentleman gave his deputy the disagreeable job, and the latter functionary, after some trouble, obtained the litigated limb, and it is now in the sheriff's office at New Orleans.

Commodore Stockton's opinion of Col. Fremont—expressed at all times and on all occasions—was that "Fremont never was in the right place at the right time;" and as a proof that Commodore Stockton was not wrong in his man, at the time when both the army and the navy were in frequent conflicts, and always with a superior force, Fremont was not in a single battle.—Rochester American.

The Buffalo Commercial announces the death of Capt. Billy Baird, the earliest comer to Buffalo, and, at the time of his demise, the eldest in years of all the old settlers. Capt. Billy Baird died at the advanced age of eighty-four. For something like half a century Capt. Baird has resided in Buffalo, and its neighborhood, and he clung to the land of his choice with earnest and lasting affection.

An exchange informs us that Rev. Mr. Conway, Unitarian minister at Washington city, who has been indiscreet enough to turn his pulpit into a political rostrum to fulminate black republican abolitionism from, has been respectfully invited to vacate the position he desecrates. It is a good example, and one which we earnestly hope may be universally imitated.

A heavy rain and thunder-storm occurred at Carlisle, Pa., on the night of the 30th ult. Five barns and one dwelling-house were destroyed by lightning. The barns were filled with the entire crops. The losses are heavy.

Almost a tornado occurred at Cincinnati on the afternoon of July 30. Rain fell in torrents. Trees were uprooted and awnings demolished. On third street some buildings were blown down, killing one man and wounding five or six others.

The steamer John Jay, on Lake George, was destroyed by fire near Garfield, July 29. A number of the passengers and crew perished. The bodies of four ladies have been recovered.

General Tom Thumb has had his valuable box of jewels and presents stolen, at Cincinnati, valued at twenty thousand dollars.

Wm. Howes, a journeyman printer, in Montgomery, Alabama, recently came into possession of $75,000—the fattest 'take' he ever had.

Some half-educated philosophers, says the Daily News, are gloating over the discovery that cockroaches were made to destroy bed-bugs, and are publishing the fact that the two, like small-pox and measles, can't co-exist. We have already a stack of letters from boarding-house keepers, denying the alleged fact. We don't publish them, because, as they give names and numbers, we suspect that they are only adroit puffs. The true use of cockroaches, as all truly wise people have known for years, is to flavor fine old Burgundy with.

The Charleston Mercury of the 30th ult. contains the particulars of a duel between Col. Cunningham, editor of the Evening News, and Mr. Hatch, editor of the Standard, Mr. Taber, editor of the Mercury, was one of the seconds. The parties met on the 28th ult., exchanged shots without doing any injury, and then were reconciled.

General Sam Houston is said to have completed a letter to his constituents, in which he defines his political position, and declares himself in favor of Filmore and Donelson.

Congressional.

Thirty-Fourth Congress—First Session—Senate.

July 28.—The Dipiomatic and Consular bill was considered. Mr. Clayton proposed a ten years' contract at $16,680 the round trip, one trip per month, for carrying the mails to and from England. This is the Vanderbilt scheme. One or two improvement bills were passed.

July 29.—An appropriation was refused to test the practicability of the atmospheric telegraph. The internal improvement bills on the calendar were considered, and several of them passed.

July 30.—The bill to regulate the compensation of members of Congress was referred to the Committee on Finance. The bill authorizing the Postmaster General to make a mail contract with Mr. Vanderbilt was reported back from the Post Office Committee with amendments, and made the special order for Monday.

July 31.—The bill directing the manner of payment of the California Bonds was passed. A resolution was adopted calling for information from the Secretary of War in relation to roads connecting with West Point. A number of internal improvement bills were passed.

August 1.—The memorial of Lieut. Bartlett, relative to the action of the Naval Board in his case, was ordered printed. Petitions were presented from citizens of Michigan, for the admission of Kansas with the Topeka Constitution. A resolution was adopted directing the Committee on Commerce to inquire as to the expediency of requiring the fire-rooms of steam vessels to be made fire-proof. The report of the Committee on Indian Affairs was considered.

House.

July 28.—The Des Moines Improvement bill was passed. Mr. Dunn moved a suspension of the rules to introduce a bill for the admission of Kansas, failed. The Army Appropriation bill was taken up, and Mr. Sherman moved to amend by prohibiting the army from enforcing the bogus laws of Kansas. After a sharp debate, the amendment was adopted (in Committee) by a vote of 88 to 40.

July 29.—The amendments of the Committee of the Whole to the Army Appropriation bill were considered. Mr. Barbour's amendment, adding a disapproval of the alleged laws of Kansas and providing against the employment of the Government forces for their enforcement, and the amendment to this declaring the laws of Kansas null and void, were rejected. Mr. Sherman's amendment, offered on Monday, was concurred in by 91 to 86, and the bill was ordered to be engrossed, and was finally passed by a vote of 89 to 80. Mr. Dunn made a motion, which was agreed to, to reconsider the vote referring to the Committee of the Whole the bill to annul certain acts of the Kansas Legislature, and submitted a substitute for the reorganization of the Territory, providing against the continuance and recurrence of the outrages which have transpired, under color of the Territorial laws or otherwise. After an unsuccessful motion to table the bill, the substitute was agreed to, and the bill thus amended was passed by a vote of 88 against 74.

July 30.—The bill providing for the settlement of Revolutionary Claims was passed. The bill expediting the issuing of patents for California land claims was tabled. The Fortification Appropriation bill was discussed, but no action taken.

July 31.—The Kansas contested election case was taken up, and a long debate took place. After some objection, the House decided to hear a statement from Mr. Reeder, setting forth his claims to the seat, but adjourned before its conclusion.

August 1.—Notice of Brook's re-election was received. Mr. B. came forward and was sworn in. The Kansas case was resumed, and the reading of Mr. Reeder's statement concluded. Mr. Whitfield replied to some of the points, and charged unfairness upon the Investigating Committee. Upon coming to a vote, the resolution declaring Mr. Whitfield not entitled to the seat as Representative from Kansas was adopted, 110 yeas to 92 nays. The next resolution, declaring Mr. Reeder entitled to the seat, was rejected, yeas 88, nays 113.

City News.

Life Illustrated gets up some smart paragraphs. We extract a few city items therefrom:—

A mathematical locksmith reckons that forty one thousand five hundred pounds of brass, in the shape of door-keys, are carried daily up and down New York in people's pockets.

A costly foolscap is displayed in a Broadway window—being a Panama hat marked to cost a hundred and seventy-five dollars! The buyer will crown himself Emperor of the Noodles.

The public libraries of New York city contain three hundred and thirty-six thousand volumes. The single library of Gottingen University contains three hundred and sixty thousand, and the National Library at Paris, eight hundred and twenty-four thousand.

Many citizens in New York very prudently carry a card in their pockets with their name and address in full, that if they are murdered or disabled, there need be no doubt whither to carry them. A significant commentary on the safety of the city!

The mirrors in the St. Nicholas Hotel cost $40,000; the whole building, furnished and in operation, represents an invested capital of one million nine hundred thousand dollars!

BUCHANAN AND THE PRESS.

At a Democratic ratification meeting, held in Springwells, Michigan, a few days since, Judge Bacon, an active and zealous Old line Whig, was called to the chair. The Detroit Free Press says:—

"Upon taking the chair, the Judge stated he had heretofore acted with the Whig party; that he had been a warm and earnest supporter of Mr. Clay; that he had loved the old party and revered its gallant and patriotic leader, and that it was with regret that he found himself, in common with thousands, without a party. He had witnessed the old Whig organization broken into fragments, each of which was warring directly or indirectly against the Union. In this national crisis—when there was danger threatening our confederacy—he found but one course to pursue, but one party with which to unite, and that to-day he identified himself with that party which professed an earnest and sincere desire to preserve the Union at all hazards. With it he would take up his political habitation, and with it remain so long as it proved true to the Constitution and the Union."

So they come—so they will continue to come—those patriotic Old Line Whigs.

If there is any one place more than another, in the United States where the Germans would be likely to sustain Fremont or Freesoil principles, it would be in Springfield, Mass, and yet "A German" in the Springfield Argus, of 14th inst., says: "Two thirds of the Germans here will vote for Buchanan and the Union."

Col. Black, of Pennsylvania, said in his speech on the Fourth of July: "It is related of Henry of Navarre, that before going into his greatest engagement, he said to his troops, 'when you are in doubt, follow my white plume.' May I be pardoned for saying to you, my countrymen, when doubt comes over you, in peace or war, in prosperity or adversity, follow the flag of the American Union." Don't look at the sixteen-star bunting flying over the Fremonters.

The Hon. William Preston, of Virginia, Secretary of the Navy under General Taylor's Administration, refuses to support Fillmore for the Presidency. The same remark applies to Messrs. Echolls and Caperton, of Monroe County, Va., and Mr. Pendleton, of Culpepper. Thus it is throughout the entire South; the Whigs of distinction are generally arraying themselves on the side of the Constitution, notwithstanding bogus Whig alias Know-Nothing Conventions.

The son and all the immediate personal friends of Daniel Webster support Buchanan.

Judge Dibble, of South Bend, Ind., for twelve years Chairman of the Whig Committee, a powerful stump speaker, has come out boldly for Buchanan and Breckinridge.

A Wilmington correspondent of the Washington Union protests against Delaware being set down as "doubtful" in the Presidential contest. He says Mr. Buchanan will get seven hundred majority over Fillmore and Fremont. The New York Tribune, a Black-Republican sheet, also gives its opinion that Delaware will vote for Buchanan, owing to the division of the opposition between Fillmore and Fremont.

The Charleston Evening News is now supporting Buchanan and Breckinridge. That paper heretofore has been an advocate of "Americanism," and its editor, John Cunningham, Esq., was a delegate to and one of the Vice-Presidents of the first Philadelphia and Know-Nothing Convention.

The Staats Zeitung, says that the circulation of the Democratic German press in New York City, amounts to twenty-six thousand three hundred, and the Black Republican German press to twelve thousand.

A writer in a leading western journal says: Since the New-York Herald was bought up by the abolitionists, a large number of its subscribers have discontinued it and taken other papers. The New-York Daily News, for instance, a very spirited and ably conducted Democratic newspaper, has run its circulation up since the commencement of the campaign to thirty thousand subscribers one half of whom are daily. The N. Y. Day-Book, also Democratic, has now a weekly circulation of twenty-three thousand. The Journal of Commerce, the great organ of the commercial interest, which supports Buchanan, has also increased its circulation. These are good evidences of the popular favor in New-York for the Democratic cause.

On the other hand, the Washington Sentinel says: In the days of General Jackson, a favorite mode of electioneering by the opponents of the Democratic party was the enumeration of newspapers favoring respectively the Democratic party and the Opposition. And truly, had victory depended on the number of papers respectively supporting the pretensions of each party, the Opposition would have had good reason to claim a triumph; but it turned out on nearly every election that tho' the Opposition had three papers to one, they had hardly more than one third of the votes.

In a similar manner, votes were taken on steamboats, railroads, and at watering places, and General Jackson was always beaten at these bastard tests, beaten every where except at the ballot-box, and never beaten there.

A moral may be drawn from this lesson.

In regard to the press, an anomalous state of things has ever existed and now most strikingly exists. For instance, in the city of New-York, the black republicans, out of about sixty thousand votes, cast about six thousand. Yet they are represented by the Daily Times, Evening Post, Herald, Courier and Enquirer, and the Tribune, and some four or five other papers, having an aggregate circulation of a million, and receipts of many millions of dollars, drawn mainly from Democratic pockets, while the News and Day Book, democratic papers, eke out a starving life, powerless to do good for want of a circulation. We may extend these remarks to Philadelphia and Baltimore, where similar spectacles are exhibited.

One Hundred Dollars Reward.—The Constitutionalist and Republic, of Augusta, Ga., contains the following card:—

FIFTY DOLLARS REWARD BY A MECHANIC.

To the Editor of the Constitutionalist:

I authorize you to offer a reward of fifty dollars for the proof that James Buchanan said, in a speech in the United States Senate in 1838, as stated in some of the newspapers, that he "considered ten cents a day was enough for a laboring man."

It is the general belief with the Know Nothings that mechanics have no sense. I have found no one that could make good this statement about "Old Buck," so I thought I would offer a reward for the desired information, that those who have got so much more sense than the mechanics, can turn their knowledge to some profit. A Mechanic.

Augusta, Ga., June 20, 1856.

The editor adds that he "will give fifty dollars more."

Answers to Correspondents.

Our Kilkenny correspondents ("A Kilkenny Man," and "W. F. B ") are excessively pointed for this warm weather. We must warn them to less exertion, else some other of our witty contributors shall be reminding us and them of the ever-famous, though we suppose fabulous, celebrities of Kilkenny, who "rubbed each other out," as the Indians say, and of whose spunk their lamentable tales alone remained the chroniclers:

To the Editor of the Irish News: W. F. B is unnecessarily jealous of me. He need not lose his rest, because I simply claimed kinship to one who, if living, would blush for him. I did not question, expressly or impliedly, his assumption of closer relationship. Nor does his assertion invalidate my claim. Had I any apprehension that by merely stating a fact I should so alarmingly disturb the placidity of W. F. B., I, in the excess of my "proverbial leniency," would most certainly have avoided what seems to have given him such extraordinary uneasiness. It is a dangerous season for the nervous, and charity alone would prompt me to spare his "feelinks."

W F. B. condescends to advise me. His object is very laudable; but he should strive to discipline himself ere he volunteers to counsel others. He is too obviously a disguised Thersites to palm himself off as a genuine Ulysses. I doubt his disposition, not alone to learn who I am, but to have anything more to do with me. For his consolation and my own freedom I shall take no further cognizance of him.

Benignantly yours, "A Kilkenny Man."

New-York, July 31, 1856.

F. W. S.—"Have the poems of Shamrock, The Belfast Man, or Frazer (De Lean,) been published in this country?" No. There are two volumes of The Belfast Man's poems published in Belfast. Of Frazer's writings, there are also two volumes, published in Dublin, but some of his best efforts were omitted, in the hope that by keeping the political out of the book it would be more popular, which turned out to a very great mistake. All of these books can be had, occasionally, in New-York; and can, no doubt, be ordered through an Irish or other bookseller. Shamrock's poems have never been published in book form, and more is the pity. We, of the Irish News, hope, after the excitement of the Presidential election has abated, to set in motion the publication of a series of Literary and Historical works, which relating to Ireland will also interest American readers, and thereby bring the authors prominently into the transatlantic field of literary glory and profit. In such a series, Williams' poems—patriotic, sentimental and humorous, of course, will be an early link.

E. L. M., Chicago.—Miss Agnes Robertson is, we believe, a native of Edinburgh. Your other question is one, the peculiarity of which must be evident to yourself. At present we would not advise you distinctly on the subject. It would be criminal in us to do so. We thoroughly estimate your patriotism—what you have suffered in the past, and what you ambition for the future, but to advise you to a course by which your time and earnings will be swamped without any tangible show of reason or hope of success, would be traitorous on our part to men who, like you, have already perilled life, and suffered imprisonment for the cause. There is no society which can at the present give any honest or logical reason to hold out such hopes as you desire. Look well before you. We opine that you do not care very much for a useless routine of moving and seconding resolutions; or to believing that the more time you so idle the more you are forwarding the interests of Ireland.

The following "first effort" we give in its entire originality. Improvement would only spoil it. To make it more readable would be to ruin it:—

Dear Sir—As the eagle soars aloft at her pleasure so does the Cuckoo fly from tree to tree and from shore to shore always following the spring and chaunting to the schoolboys ears the soft music of her summer lays as he wanders through the flowry paths of the woodland forests. So too does man follow the revolutions of his own mind and haunt those golden visions which is most dear to him therefore I hope you will excuse me if I should explode some of my ungramatical poetry knowing that you can correct it if it strikes anything like the right chord so here goes for a flight into dream land.

I dreamed I saw a virgin queen appeared in green attire
Saying arise awake my countrymen your service I'll require
Unsheath your sword and learn to be ready at my command
For I will lead you onward boldly to the glorious freedom's stand.

And then sprung up the millions, with arms stout and brave
And forced their enemys for to flee, through the surges of the waves
How the pikes and muskets rattled, and the cannons they did roar
And the sound of the great conquest was heard from shore to shore.

Again the trumpets rattled and the joybells they did chime
And the news of regained liberty sent forth to every clime
Then the mountains they did gladden and the valleys lit with joy
And the red flag tore asunder from beara to clannaboy.

With gold and myrr and frankinsence we did the virgin crown
For she steered us on to victory with honor and renown
Then I saw the sky lark, floating in the air
Warbling the song of liberty to the morning's dawning glare.

I dreamed I saw thomas davis over the grave of poor wolfe tone
With a square and trowel in his hand, saying I'll lay the corner stone
I'll build for you a monument your memories for to save
And the howling winds of winter shall no longer round the rave

I dreamed I saw some myriads of angels in the sky
Praising the Great Jehovah in songs of mystery
And our ancient ruined monasterys in their former splendor shone
And the prayers of priests and sisters unto the stars had flown.

I have traversed glens and forests mountains rivers bogs and streams
And now I am returned from out land of dreams
For my flight was all a vision without cannon sword or war
I awoke in merry Cambridge beneath the stripes and stars.

Fraternity.

Our California Correspondent.—The two last communications from one of our California Correspondent, signed "Humboldt," should have had the signature of "Hard Facts." This is the more to be regretted as "Humboldt" and "Hard Facts" take widely antagonistic views of the deeply interesting subject, which they both so vividly describe. "Humboldt" is a determined upholder of the Vigilance Committee. "Hard Facts," on the contrary, is as determinedly opposed to it. By the mistake in our paper, both of these able gentlemen are made to suddenly recant their own opinions and adopt those which they had previously condemned; and we can well fancy their individual horror on receiving the Irish News in San Francisco, when they will behold the principles for which each would risk his life and limb, represented as being the most hateful to them. We sincerely trust this explanation will calm the gentlemen, and exonerate to their friends what may seem as a wilful change of political faith on their part. The hurry in which both letters were "set up," the steamers having arrived as we were preparing for press, led to the mistakes, which we guarantee shall not occur again.

Declined.—"Story of a Shanghai," by a literary tailor—(too extensive for the small stock of ideas therein: friend tailor, remember the adage, "Cut your coat according to your cloth.") "A Song for the Times"—(song and subject out of joint) "Murder by Steam," by a joker—(more clearly by a stoker, but it is no joke.) "Lines to a Shad at breakfast"—fishing-lines—we, are not informed whether the author or the shad was at breakfast. We learn, however, that the shad was broiled, but so is every one these days.) "Apostrophe to a Politician"—(let the dead rest.)

☞ Subscribers receiving the News in a white wrapper, will please consider it an intimation that the term they paid for has expired, and do us the favor to renew their subscription.

Received—Shadow Worship, F. O'R. The Shadow on the Earth, M. C. Lines to a Redbreast, M. O'K. Filibuster's Song; dedicated to the Ostend Conference. The Young Squire—The Old Fogy.

An Old Joker thinks he is a practical one, by sending us a heap of puns and such like commodities. We never make a pun and never read one, if we can help it. Send them to "Pierce Pungent," who, in his sketches in the Daily News, makes everybody's jokes except his own, and they come to him "kind o' natural."

An Enthusiastic Reader suggests that we make a daily paper of the Irish News. Surely that would be too much of a good thing.

THE IRISH NEWS.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, AUGUST 9, 1856.

VOTES OF IRISH MEMBERS ON THE AMERICAN QUESTION IN PARLIAMENT.

The list of the division on Mr. Moore's motion, respecting the conduct of the British Government in their dealings and correspondence, during the last year or so, with the Government at Washington, exhibits a strange jumble of parties. Catholics and Protestants, Radicals and Tories, Peelites and Derbyites, the most opposite elements are huddled together. Roses and thistles, butter-cups and nettles, the ugliest weeds and sickliest exotics, with just a sprig or two of withered shamrock, strew the floor of the Commons in the most addling confusion and contrast.

It is a pity that so strange a horticultural show should be swept away, without a few words appropriate to the occasion. It were an injustice to Ireland to permit so many flowers to blush unseen, and waste their fragrance without the slightest recognition. The subject is inviting and fertile.

Mr. Moore can afford to stand aside. He has flashed through statelier columns than ours. The cheers of thousands, the benediction of the diocese of Tuam, and the praises of the popular press in Ireland, have waited on his words. In the midst of disorder produced by the rankest venality and foul play, he has stood true, resolute, and strong. Of the very few—the poor handful of Irish members—who have redeemed in Parliament their promises on the hustings, he has been the foremost. His eloquence renders his honesty conspicuous. In the dull waste of the Irish benches in Westminster, his cultivated mind and graceful fluency of speech rescues from contempt the intellectual credit of his country. Whilst such men as Moore, of Mayo, and Maguire, of Dungarvan, have seats in Parliament, the statues of Curran, Sheridan, Shiel, and O'Connell need not be veiled. With less opulence of fancy and power of thought it is no exaggeration for us to say that such men still keep the space, from which their great predecessors have departed, warm, luminous and fruitful.

Nor, indeed, are we much disposed to speak in praise of the gentlemen who backed Mr. Moore in declaring the conduct of Lord Clarendon and his accomplices, in relation to America, to be "unworthy of the confidence of Parliament,"—for such was the gentle wording of the motion, though Mr. Moore's speech, with a rush of eloquence and compact logic, established the conduct in question as something very ignominious and beggarly. They simply did their business in voting against Mr. Crampton's patron and paymaster. It cost them nothing to do so. They lost no pension, blue ribbon or garter—not a stitch of court-livery—not a penny of palace-charity or wages—by being independent. Going through the names of the minority carefully, we find not a pauper amongst them. Such men as Devereux, of Wexford, Green, of Kilkenny, Dunne, of Portarlington, and Bellew, of Galway, can afford to vote against a legion of Clarendons. No thanks to them, then, but a respectful smile and salute.

From the minority we turn to the majority (we are speaking of the Irish members only), and we do so with a strong desire for a bottle of smelling salts. The odor sticking to the Treasury benches, on the right of the Speaker, is far from being the odor of sanctity. The flowers we have mentioned, are not over fresh in that quarter. Besides, there are a quantity of yellow weeds run to seed—seedy dock-leaves and dandelions—among them. Moreover, it is the quarter of the market where the loaves and fishes are for sale, and the perfume of the latter interferes with the sweetness of the flowers. In plain language—throwing aside both flowers and fishes—the minority is a musty miscellany of damaged goods. There are decent men, so far as Christianity is concerned, upon that list. So far as income and family can render them independent, there are independent men sitting there in the shadow of Lord Palmerston's embroidered skirt. The Caulfields, the Monsells, the Herberts, may be fairly placed in the category of decent and independent men—that is, as we have said, so far as Income and Christianity are concerned.

But the Caulfields have been for generations diseased with Whiggery. Like the gout, it has been an incurable family affliction. Like the gout, it keeps them to this day, even in the Senate-house, cripples rolled up in West of England blankets, hobbling and fumbling on Melbourne crutches. Mr. Monsell is Clerk of the Ordnance. In case of his failing to obey the Ordnance, he becomes Clerk of the Weather; and that is a poor business, as Murphy, the Almanac-maker, or Professor Meriam can state. Mr. Monsell's Income and Christianity, consequently, go for nothing in Parliament. He derives his independence from his pay, and, strictly speaking, has no conscience whilst he remains a clerk. In like manner, Mr. Herbert, having a desk in the War Department, must keep to his desk. Hence it is, that ample as his fortune is, and practical good Protestant as he is, he submits his private judgment to Lord Panmure, and lives upon the loose guineas of the Horse Guards to the advantage of his rental in Kerry. In all this, however, neither the Caulfields, nor the Monsells, nor the Herberts, do anything which scandalously contradicts their political faith or public vows. English in heart and soul, though Irish by birth, they do the bidding of England on all political occasions, wear her livery and eat her bread, from an humble opinion and consciousness of the inferiority of Ireland.

Viscount Castle-Rosse might be similarly excused, had he mind enough to conceive even a poor opinion of any thing beyond an ottoman or fire-screen. Pecuniarily too well off, and intellectually too scantily supplied, to need the assistance of the Treasury, or be of the smallest service to those who hold the key, he does well enough as a bit of aristocratic plaster-of-Paris, to relieve the more vulgar whitewash and brickwork of Palmerston house. It catches the eye of dowager match-makers and diplomatists in hoops—the ambitious and busy Sultanas of London—and brings many a fair convert from Toryism, in blushing expectancy, to the soirees and balls of the Palmerston celebrities, from the Prime Minister down to the Clerk of the Ordance. It is an enlightened constituency which huzzahs so charming a noodle into a back-seat in Parliament.

After the decent drudges and noodles, come the slaves and scullions. After the poor amiable souls who play second and third fiddle in Downing-street theatre, come the call-boys, scene-shifters, the helps in faded plush shorts and flimsy stained cravats, who place the chairs, snuff the candles, lay the dust with watering-pots, bring in a knife and fork, and do all the small work for the Stars. And so, after the Caulfields, the Monsells, the Herberts, and that handsome dumb supernumerary, Lord Castle-Rosse, come the Esmondes, the Keatings, the Tim O'Briens, the Militia-men O'Connells, the Magans, the Deasys and the Balls.

The barber in Nicholas Nickleby draws a distinction between a baker and a coal-porter. He shaves the baker, and bows out the coal-porter. We are not so fastidious. Our columns are open to all who come our way. We have given an outline of a few of the Irish Upper Ten in Parliament. We hold over, for our next, the portraits in rough-chalk of less aristocratic offenders.

NOTES ON DE TOCQUEVILLE.

De Tocqueville, in his able work on American Democracy, says:—"Democratic laws generally tend to promote the welfare of the greatest possible number; for they emanate from a majority of the citizens, who are subject to error, but who cannot have an interest opposed to their own advantage. The laws of an aristocracy tend, on the contrary, to concentrate wealth and power in the hands of the minority. It may therefore be asserted, as a general proposition, that the purpose of a Democracy, in the conduct of its legislation, is useful to a greater number of citizens than that of aristocracy."

The italics are our own. We marked the passage because we wish to allude to the doubtful conclusions the lines italicised might lead to, as regards Democracy.

Man individually is subject to error; but if the majority of the men who make up a nation agree on one point, it is but reasonable to suppose that on that point, they, as a body, do not err. So various are the minds, so opposite the natures, so antagonistic the interests, so diversified the local prejudices and partialities of the millions, that the philosophic mind must look upon, as human perfection, that which, having passed through such a refining alembic, comes out with the approval of all, and representing, as it is, the amalgam of all.

In a nation, such as this Republic, where opinion is, or ought to be, free of speech and action, and where the People can represent and vote for the People, the majority of the nation is the nation, for it makes the laws which typify, extend over and bound the nation; and we scarcely think it possible that the nation—the Democracy—so constructed, can err.

A man may err, but the People never.

In other countries than America, where the People are not represented in the legislature in consequence of the voting power being vested in certain monetary qualifications, and not on the ennobling right of being born in the image of God—in such nations, the People alone are national though they do not govern. They are the majority, but without voice or means. Even when such a nation leaps into a threatening attitude, and agrees on the one vital point, their ideas may be temporarily overwhelmed by conspiring and interloping powers and circumstances, as in the attempted revolutions of Hungary, Rome and Ireland in '48 and '49; but still, as Democracies, constructed of the majority of the nation, they did not err.

The patriot fathers of this Republic did not err, nor, had they failed, could they be said to have erred.

De Tocqueville, pursuing the subject, says: "Aristocracies are infinitely more expert in the science of legislation than Democracies ever can be * * * Aristocratic government proceeds with the dexterity of art; it understands how to make the collective force of all its laws converge at the same time to a given point. Such is not the case with Democracies, whose laws are almost always ineffective or inoperative. The means of the Democracy are, therefore, more imperfect than those of aristocracy, and the measures which it unwittingly adopts are frequently opposed to its own cause; but the object it has in view is more useful."

Here, also, the italics are ours. We believe that aristocracies, which our author admits, "concentrate wealth and power," legislate not for the people, but for themselves, and to the more feasible concentration of "wealth and power" into their own hands, and that the "given point" to which they "converge" the "collective force of their laws," is that point which interests alone the concentration of wealth—the money market, irrespective of national honor or national dignity.

The policy of aristocracy is that of the miser, solely personal aggrandizement. The miser sedulously acquires and condemns to an inactive, unreproductive grave, the gold he grasps. It is of no use whatever to the State, to society, and not even to himself. Aristocracies legislate to draw all power toward themselves from the people, and the more they make laws, the further the people are distanced from justice. The power so vested is alone reproductive for the aristocracy, and in the using of it alone, is there a difference suggested from the miser.

As to the "expertness" and "dexterity of art" in aristocratic governments, we believe that the less intrigue, the better the governments; the simpler the form, the wiser; and that "it is that governs best which governs least." In fact, there is no such word in the Democratic dictionary as "govern," nor in the Democratic principle such an idea of "government" as is recognised by European writers. The movement which they mistake for "government" in a Democracy, is the making a fact of the spontaneous and approved thought of the people. It is not the realization of the opinion of one man, uncontrolled by the people, but the opinion of the people speaking in one voice.

Though there is some ground for what De Tocqueville says of the ineffectiveness of the means of democracies, still it is palpable to all, that place and circumstances materially mould that assertion into a fact or a falsity. The writer could not entirely divest himself, when viewing this country, of the European democracies, and on such was led to his conclusions. In our day, for instance, the revolutions alluded to in Europe, would, to some extent, substantiate such an opinion; but the efficacy of the converging power of this country will stand forward to refute the idea of inefficiency of democratic means. However, De Tocqueville, be it said, looked forward for our coming strength. But then the revolution had been consummated, and it did not take much philosophic energy to arrive at the fact, that the power so efficiently converged for democratic purposes—so steadily, so determinedly used—was not of a nature to die out in a decade. While he canvasses the imperfection of democratic measures, he confesses "the object is more useful" than that of aristocracy. Then, say we, in Heaven's name—if it is more useful—if it is right—if it is truth—let no expediency, however perfect in darkness, keep men from the light!

We cry with the German poet, "More light—let in more light!"

POPULAR EDUCATION—THE FREE ACADEMY.

Unlettered strength, in an agony of unquiet, may achieve a revolution; but popular knowledge can alone sustain a republic. Political sophistry, "renewed assurances," temporary concession may overturn the labor of the revolutionary patriot; or make time to overcome him; but a comprehensive knowledge, not only of wrongs avenged, but of rights to be enjoyed, and a system to inaugurate them, to generously extend, calmly dignify, and manfully sustain them; is the only guaranty for a maintenance of those blessings suggested by the overthrow of a despotism.

Popular education is the safeguard of the state; and for this reason the Public Schools may be compared to well-chosen outposts of a grand army, which furnish intelligence to the main body. It is only in a community so bastioned that the pen is mightier than the sword; and it is only mightier there, because the secret springs of humanity it touches, the identity of opinion it accelerates, by a clear and vivid expansion of the needs and duties of the hour, awakens so much of the popular strength as to render the sword a needless resource.

The pen, acting through the Public School, is the equalizer at home. It explains petty jealousies and humbles ignorant ambitions. It teaches forbearance and self-restraint; and links, by a common intelligence, and by a universal desire to find out the reason of everything, the most discordant elements of the body politic in a self-protective rampart for all.

If the European steamer were to bring us such a continuous chain of exciting events as it has carried of late to the old world from this country, we should be all alive for the barricade scenes, for news of the provisional governments, the burning of thrones, the flights of monarchs, and all the other reasonable concomitants of a spicy revolution. In many instances Americans are incited to regard the occurrences in their own country as not at all worthy of unusual note by the views given through the distorted vision of the English press.

They wonder that such had happened without waking their especial surprise at the time, and feel as strange almost on confronting the prognostications of the London press, as Rip Van Winkle after his twenty years' snooze.

The canard of John Bull is dissected, the brotherly love in which it is beautifully and carefully embalmed is rolled off it, and the American not admitting the joke, thinks John rather a stupid "creetur," to try and "skeer him" in that manner.

These excitements here are the natural consequences of the popular education of the masses, and their desire in the plenitude of such education to examine and agitate the questions of the day, to shake them through the political shams in which they are shrouded by one party, and bedizened with rhetorical glitter by the other. Europe cannot understand it, because its governing classes have no such people to deal with, fortunately for the governing classes. They cannot comprehend them any more than free-born Americans can comprehend why Europe is in such a slough of dark and feudal slime.

The diffusion of a plain, useful education among the people gives its great strength to Americans; but if the pen, as we believe, is the equalizer of home troubles, the sword is the most effective with those abroad who believe in the sword. Happily with the sword we are "not slow."

Our thoughts ran in this direction somewhat a couple of weeks since, when present at the commencement of the Free Academy.

As Congress is to the States, so the Free Academy is to the Public Schools of New-York. It is the congress of the youthful intelligence of the city, and might well be regarded as a type of the young intellect and industry of any city in the Union.

The Commencement presented one of the most beautiful sights we have ever beheld. The thoughts inspired by the scene, to all thinking men, must have been such, as to guarantee peace to their ashes, and power on the land, when the beholders were no more, and when those students would step from that stage of their young victories, to the more uneven, but more inspiring one, of the world and its public affairs.

All the beauty, fashion, and rank, left in the city, was present, crowding the Academy of Music so, that almost the decorations of the place, were entirely hid, or dimmed, by the flowering fabrics, the clustered profusion, the dazzling heartiness of the dresses, the bouquets, and the beauty of the immense group.

We are very much opposed to the displays made at commencements, and regard the ordeal put upon the student as unfair, unmeaning, and useless. The making of an oration on the occasion is no test at all of the power of the student. The most distinguished scholars are often and indeed generally the worst speakers and vice versa. If the public were made aware that these commencement speeches were not made to exhibit the powers of the pupils, but merely to conform to an old and stupid system, then it would be well. The public, however, is not aware of the fact, and discuss freely the merits of the young speakers, qualifying their good or ill opinion of them, just in the ratio of the popular nature of the "palaver" of the occasion. Besides all this, we have a horror of being bored with boyish "philosophy," beardless dogmas, and ponderous shallowness, culled from the literary pot pourri of some school professor, who dilutes the spirit of the best essayists and critics with the muddy water of his own brain. That the sight at the Academy was most grateful to such as have the true interests of the City and State at heart, there is no doubt, and although the occasion did not warrant the changing of our opinion on the exercises usual at such times, still we must make honorable mention of Messrs. Arthur McMullen, Charles H. Pratt, and Lyman Van Beuren. The composition of the two first young gentlemen were highly creditable, as was the elocution of the last named.

FRANCE AND IRELAND—EGALITE, FRATERNITE.

The Courier des Etats Unis has had an article a propos to the trial of Herbert, of California, for the murder of Keating. We give it in full. It is gratifying to us to find so intelligent an exposition of the circumstances and bearing of that case, from a gallant friend, speaking a language different from our own, and bound to us by no other ties than those which humanity enforces. The just views, the dispassionate recapitulation of circumstances, the sad warning to the community which the article in question involves—all give it the importance which the intelligent appreciation of our readers will recognize. France and Ireland have long been friends. That France does not forget the services which our exiled fathers rendered her on the fields of her most splendid wars, we have, in the article referred to, evidence the most eloquent and genial. The English flags, captured by the Irish Brigade under Clare and Dillon, may still be seen in the Church of the Invalides. When Paris was in the hands of the Garde Mobile—when Ledru Rollin and Lamartine were seated, with their tri-colored sashes about their waists, in the Hotel de Ville—we paid our pilgrimage to that church, and bowed our homage to those flags. There and then we felt that France and Ireland were one. The article we quote confirms the proud conviction. We drop our pen, when the Editor of the Courier des Etats Unis, becomes the champion of the allen. His sincerity, intelligence, and the perfect simplicity with which he enunciates his sentiments, relieves us from a duty, which, were it not for the honest work we thus acknowledge, we should be forced to undertake.

THE SPANISH REVOLUTION.

The Atlantic brought us news on Monday, that the Spanish revolutionists are still enjoying, or striving to enjoy, a fandango. Fate and Marshall O'Donnell are against them, and we doubt not but that by next mail we shall hear the tune was changed to a break down. The revolutions in Spain are like those of Mexico and the Central American Republics—"always on hand." The Spanish element, however, is better in Spain than any where else; but it wants a lightning-rod to concentrate it. It scatters and strikes nothing, and wastes nothing but itself.

At the latest dates Madrid was tranquil. When was it quoted as anything else? The provinces of Biscaye, Navarre, Guipascoa, were quiet. The militia were disarmed in Madrid, Barcelona and other places; and Saragossa appeared to be the chief seat of insurrection.

The friends and adherents of Espartero had defeated the garrison; and a report had received currency stating that a legal quorum of the Cortes had assembled there, had proclaimed liberty to the people, and given them a constitution. The statements, however conflicting with regard to other places, appear to have some exhibition of truth regarding the Saragossa movement.

Before Madrid was made tranquil, two hundred of the people were killed in encounters with the army. It would appear that O'Donnell had previously prepared to crush any manifestation, and had assembled in and around Madrid, 18,000 troops. Against this force, the National Guard and citizens held their ground for thirty hours, and at length gave in and were disarmed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Spanish Legation at Paris says the difficulty between Spain and Mexico has been honorably settled.

The Patrie, of July the 22d, says:—"We have received private letters from Saragossa, which place beyond doubt the news that this city and the whole of the province of Aragon are in open revolt. A committe has been formed under the presidency of General Falcon, which has addressed a proclamation to the people inviting resistance. French troops were about to assemble on the Spanish frontier.

The news from England was not important. The London Times of July 19 states, that Mr. Dallas is empowered to proprose to the British government the establishment of San Juan as a free port, under Nicaraguan sovereignty, reserving to the republic of Costa Rica the right of traffic through it, and through such portions of the river San Juan as may be necessary; the Mosquito Indians to be concentrated in a definite territory, which shall leave clear the mouth of the river of San Juan and the town; but their rights to be guaranteed, and an annuity for a term paid to their Chiefs; the Bay Islands to be restored to the state of Honduras, but Balize to remain a British possession, with the same territorial limits as in 1850.

The Times goes on to say: "By this arrangement we merge our separate protectorate of the Mosquitos into what may be called a general American protectorate, and we give up the Bay Islands, to which a desultory occupation had given us an uncertain and still questioned claim. On the other hand, we avoid urging the United States to abrogate the treaty of 1850, which would expose this part of the world to many evils which the treaty, inconclusive as it may appear, has dissipated. We fully establish the neutrality of Central America, and raise a moral prohibition against any future filibustering or annexation. That we lose any thing material by such an arrangement, no one can believe; but still the arrangement should be clearly understood to be a compromise, in which this country does not give up its construction of the treaty, but only makes concessions corresponding to those of the American government, in abandoning its own extreme views.

"A fifth point in the proposal of Mr. Dallas is that the Central American States shall make grants similar to that promised by Honduras, respecting any actual or prospective plan for a communication between the two oceans. If the consent of these republics can be obtained to such an arrangement, it will, no doubt, be a great advantage to the cause of civilization, and cause us less to regret the temporary differences which shall end in such a result."

The London Globe is informed that the prorogation of Parliament, which was to have taken place on the 24th of July, was postponed till the 26th.

On the 22d, Lord Panmure was to communicate to the House of Lords the intention of the English Cabinet in regard to the commissions for the military Crimean investigation.

In financial and commercial affairs there is nothing particularly striking to note. Three per cent. Consols closed at 95 5-8. The cotton and breadstuff markets had experienced no change of importance. Provisions were a trifle more active.

Literature.

THE MARTINS OF CRO' MARTIN. By CHARLES LEVER. Harper and Brothers.

This work is not so funny as Harry Lorrequer, nor so full of dashing life and five-bar-gate incidents as Charles O'Malley or Jack Hinton, but it is not the less characteristic. In our opinion, it is one of the author's best productions, and we relish it the better, that the style, in full keeping with the theme, is more subdued than is usual with the Anacreontic and dare-devil inspiration of the distinguished author. Some of the London critics think The Martins tame; but we opine these gentlemen hoped to relieve their cockney lassitude by a dash over the country with O'Malley, by wooing some dark-eyed Senorita of Andalusia with Dick Power, or stealing from the murky precincts of Bow-bells to the pleasant presence of Mickey Free, and attempting to appreciate the drollery of that wild and worthy valet, fancy themselves for the nonce the "Men for Galway." With such hopes Cockneydom was disappointed. They met none of the "old sort" beneath the towers of Cro'Martin, nor in the dilapidated bathing residence of the family, where the "osprey's nest" in broken beauty overhangs the bay of Kilkieran, like a melancholy eaves-dropper, listening to the awful monotony of the Atlantic, breaking the tidings it had brought from Labrador and the Gulf-stream upon the wild and solemn coast of the West of Ireland.

If the reader of The Martins does not meet any of Lever's old friends reproduced in new costumes, and with fresh occupations, he is introduced to a number of individuals not less interesting, and not less characteristic of the time and place. Mr. Lever has lost none of his powers of description. The book is full of masterly landscapes and bold coast sketches, through which a fine vein of meditative poetry bursts out amid the more practical and personal episodes. The period of the story is 1829, immediately after O'Connell's triumphant forcing of the Emancipation act; and though we expect to find the narrative more illustrative of that particular phase of the national life than it proves to be, still we cannot find fault with the writer on this ground. The chief effect of the Catholic Relief Bill, as here shown, is in giving the voters of the borough of Oughterard sufficient daring to contest the election with the Martins who own it, and in putting into Parliament Jack Massingbred, a man they knew nothing about, who, on a "loafing" tour, drops into the place, and who, using the people who believed they were using him, also acts a very dishonorable part respecting his friends the Martins, whose hospitality he at the time was enjoying. Moreover this Massingbred, the impromptu friend and humbugger of the electors of Oughterard, is the son of one who notoriously sold his country, and was glad he had a country to sell. The electioneering movements of the shopkeepers of Oughterard, their first breaking the political shell to look for a representative on their own account; the newly-felt importance of the thrifty and successful traders; he clergy, and the drinking, riotous, broken squirearchy, one of whom, a Magennis, like Tom Steele, is full of petty reminiscences of his "August leader, O'Connell," are all capitally described. These movements, exhibiting so much honest feeling on the part of the people; showing how easily they were, and are, led by the nose, or by a mock patriotism, which is all the same; how they are flattered into an importance, which struggles hard to overcome the love and vassalage they bear, under almost all circumstances, the hereditary dwellers in "the Great House;" these are unfortunately too true.

Jack Massingbred, though secretly laughing at his constituency and their principles, acts the liberal, and being a fellow of flashy parts, makes a noise in Parliament, but ultimately, under the combined influence of disgust, contrition for the manner in which he had used his friends the Martins, and love for a remarkable girl and governess, Kate Henderson, accepts the Chiltern Hundreds, and turns out a clever fellow. His character is very ably sustained. Godfrey Martin is a good-natured upright man, without energy to make his natural qualities available, and who takes refuge from everything, the most trivial as well as the most gigantic calamity, by believing himself "unprepared to meet it." His wife, the Lady Dorothea, is a cold, dignified, heartless woman, who having spent her youth in the French Court, is in perfect desolation in the midst of her delightful Cro' Martin demesne. Between her and the people there was not, nor could not be the slightest sympathy. The great estate is thus left to the sole control of Mary Martin, Godfrey's niece, who is an angelic "baby Blake." Young, beautiful, bounding with love and strength, growing up like a wild flower in this wild region, mixing with the people, and understanding them. Beholding her uncle's weakness and her aunt's cold hate, she devotes her life to the amelioration of the people's wants, the employment of their strength, the tending of their sick, the comforting of their poor. She isthe guardian angel of the place and people. She puts a soul into them. She is shining over them in the midst of storms; shielding them from the breath of plagues; and ever thinking and acting for their welfare. The election of Massingbred so irritates the Martins, that they become absentees, leaving Mary like a lost pleiad still wandering through her Western heaven. The place is dismantled, all her improvements cut short, her funds curtailed, her hopes for the people blasted, and though still toiling and tending unceasingly, her darling objects are fading away like the mist from her native hills; her letters to her uncle are counter-balanced by those of Maurice Scanlan, his local law agent, and Henderson, a Scotch steward, who only look upon he poverty and turbulence of the people as things which ever were, and ever will be, and who believe the only way to manage the people is not to give into them. They insinuate that Miss Mary spoils the peasantry. Martin, of course, is "unprepared," and lady Dorothea beholds in Mary's endeavors only a romantic affectation, so that nothing is done. The people, without employment, grow lawless when not stricken with disease, and Mary, still narrowing her own personal expenditure, devotes her little means and her great energies to her poor flock, until the quiet grave closes over her almost at the same time that her uncle Godfrey is brought a corpse from Baden-Baden to the old towers of Cro' Martin, now passing from the hands of his race from an accumulation of incumbrances brought upon it by his son Harry Martin, an officer in the English army. Mary Martin's illness was superinduced by rescuing a poor runaway girl from one of the Brannock Islands and restoring her to Magennis, who acknowledged her as his wife. The scene is vividly told, and reminds us of the famous storm on the Shannon, so powerfully delineated in Gerald Griffin's Collegians:

"Come, come, dear Joan, remember that you have a home now that you can rightfully return to;" whispered Mary. "It is not in shame, but in honor, that you go back to it."

It was already dark ere they left the Brannocks: a long, heavy swell, too, the sign of a storm, coming from the westward, made the boatmen eager to hasten their departure. As yet, however, the air was calm and still, but it was with that oppressive stillness that forebodes change. They hoisted their sail, but soon saw that they must, for a while at least, trust to their oars. The unbroken stillness, save by the measured stroke of the rowers, the dense dark atmosphere, and the reaction, after a day of toil and an event of a most moving kind, so overcame Mary that, leaning on Joan's shoulder, she fell off fast asleep. For a while, Joan, proud of the burden she supported, devoted all her care to watch and protect her from the night air, but at last weariness stole over herself, and she dropped off to slumber.

Meanwhile the sea was rising; heavy waves struck the boat, and washed over her in sheets of spray, although no wind was stirring.

"We'll have rain, or a gale of wind before long," said one of the men.

"There's some heavy drops falling now," muttered another. "Throw that sail over Miss Mary, for it will soon come down heavily."

A loud clap of thunder burst forth, and as suddenly, like a torrent, the rain poured down, hissing over the dark sea, and filling the air with a dull, discordant noise. Still they slept on, nor heard nor felt aught of that gathering storm.

"There now, sure enough, it's coming!" cried a boatman, as the sail shook tremulously; and two great waves in quick succession, broke over the bow.

"We'll have to run for Innishmore," said another, "and lucky if we get there before it comes on worse!"

"You ought to wake her up, Loony, and ask her what we are to do."

"I'll make straight for the harbor of Kilkieran," replied the helmsman. "The wind is with us, and she's a good sea-boat. Take in the jib, Maurice, and we'll shorten all sail on her, and—"

The rest of his speech was drowned in the uproar of a tremendous sea, which struck the boat on her quarter and nearly overset her. Not another word was now uttered, as, with the instinct of their calling, they set about to prepare for the coming conflict. The mainsail was quickly lowered and reefed, the oars and loose spars secured, and then, seating themselves in the bottom of the boat, they waited in silence. By this time the rain had passed over, and a strong wind swept over the sea.

"She's going fast through the water, any way!" said one of the men. But though the speech was meant to cheer, none felt or acknowledged the encouragement.

"I'd rather than own Cro'Martin Castle Miss Mary was safe at home!" said Loony, as he drew the rough sleeve of his coat across his eyes, "for it's thicker it's getting over yonder!"

"It would be the black day that any thing happened her," muttered another.

"Musha! we've wives and childer," said a third, "but she's worth a thousand of us!"

And thus, in broken whispers, they spoke; not a thought save of her, not a care save for her safety. They prayed, too, fervently, and her name too, was in all their supplications.

"She's singing to herself in her sleep," whispered Loony. And the rough sailors hushed to hear her.

Louder and louder, however, grew the storm, sheets of spray and drift falling over the boat in showers, and all her timbers quivering as she labored in the stormy sea. A Sailor whispered something in Loony's ear, and he grumbled out in reply

"Why would I wake her up?"

"But I am awake, Loony," said Mary, in a low calm voice, "and I see all our danger; but I see, too, that you are meeting it like brave men, and, better still, like good ones."

"The men were thinking we ought to bear up for Innishmore, Miss Mary," said Loony, as though ashamed of offering on his own part such counsel.

"You'll do what you think best and safest for us all, Loony."

"But you were always the captain, Miss, when you were aboard!" replied he, with an effort to smile.

"And so I should be now, Loony, but that my heart is too full to be as calm and resolute as I ought to be. This poor thing had not been here now, but for me." And she wrapped her shawl around Joan as she spoke. "Maybe it's anxiety, perhaps fatigue, but I have not my old courage to-night!"

"Faix! it will never be fear that will distress you," said he.

"If you mean for myself and my own safety, Loony, you are right. It is not for me to repine at the hour that calls me away, but I cannot bear to think how you and others, with so many dear to you, should be perilled just to serve me! And poor Joan, too, at the moment when life was about to brighten for her?" She held down her head for a minute or two, and then suddenly, as it were, rallying, she cried out, "The boat is laboring too much for'ad, Loony; set the jib on her!"

"To be sure, if you ordher it, Miss Mary: but she has more sail now than she can carry:"

"Set the jib, Loony. I know the craft well; she'll ride the waves all the lighter for it. If it were but daylight, I almost think I'd enjoy this. We've been out in as bad before."

Loony shook his head as he went forward to bend the additional sail.

"You see she won't bear it, Miss," cried he, as the boat plunged fearfully in the trough of the seas.

"Let us try," said she, calmly; "stand by, ready to slack off, if I give the word." And so saying, she took the tiller from the sailor, and seated herself on the weather-gunwale. "There, see how she does it now! Ah, Loony, confess I am the true pilot. I knew my nerve would come back when I took my old post here. I was always a coward in a carriage, if I wasn't on the box and the reins in my hands. and the same at sea. Sit up to windward, men, and don't move; never mind baling, only keep quiet."

"Miss Mary was right," muttered one of the men; "the headsail is drawing her high out of water!"

"Is that dark mass before us cloud or the land?" cried she.

"Its the mountains, Miss. There, to the left, where you see the dip in the ridge, that's Kilkieran. I think I see the lights on shore now.

"I see them now myself," cried Mary. "Oh, how the sight of land gives love of life! They called earth truly who named her mother!" said she to herself. "What was that which swept past us, Loony?"

"A boat, Miss; and they're hailing us now," cried he, peeping over the gunwale. "They've put her about, and are following our course. They came out after us."

"It was gallantly done, on such a night as this! I was just thinking to myself that poor old Mat Landy would have been out were he living. You must take the tiller now, Loony, for I don't understand the lights on shore."

"Because they're shifting every minute, Miss. It's torches they have, and they're moving from place to place; but we'll soon be safe now."

"Let us not forget this night, men," said Mary, in a fervent voice. And then, burying her face within her hands, she spoke no more.

It was already daybreak when they gained the little harbor, well-nigh exhausted, and worn out with fatigue and anxiety. As for Mary, wet through and cold, she could not rise from her seat without assistance, and almost fainted as she put her foot on shore. She turned one glance seaward to where the other boat was seen following them, and then, holding Joan's hand, she slowly toiled up the rocky ascent to the village. To the crowd of every age that surrounded her she could only give a faint, sickly smile of recognition, and they, in deep reverence, stood without speaking, gazing on her wan features and the dripping garments which clung to her.

While in Paris, the Martins were in time for the revolution of 1830. Kate Henderson is deeply implicated in it, being in communication with the leaders of the revolt. Massingbred, to sustain his love for the brilliant and calm girl, fights on the side of the Barricades; while Lady Dorothea, outraged by La Hendersons' conduct, is forced to admit of her protection, and submit to her guidance.

Of the other characters, Joe Nelligan is a hard-working Trinity student, son of old Dan Nelligan, a shop-keeper in Oughterard, and who works his way to a Chief-Justiceship on the Queen's Bench. He is evidently introduced to exhibit the career opened to a poor student by the Emacipation. His character is considerably suggestive, at our earlier meetings with him; but on the whole is unsatisfactory. We expected him to have been the hero, and he turns out, from being a prize student, whose bashfulness and evident shame of his father's position makes him dull, to be a very common, if lucky, placeman.

Val Repton, the old lawyer, is a capital portraiture, full of legal lore and wit's quaint revelry. When we meet him for the first time and learn that he is "father of the bar," that he had "refused a silk gown," and that he was not unconnected with sterner epochs of Irish life, we almost feel we are about to open a friendship with Robert Holmes; but as Val's life-history proceeds we find we are disappointed. It is very probable, however, that Lever has rolled somebody else and Holmes together, as Colman rolled his two gentlemen into one.

Another great character is Herman Merl, the Jew money lender. The masterly manner in which this rascal is set before us would insinuate a belief that the author must have some well-based antipathy to the race of Merls. The audacious ease of the scoundrel, the self-reliant feeling of full pockets in the presence of deeply involved aristocrats, who despise and are obliged to tolerate him, meets us in a variety of effective scenes and under a number of naturally concocted occurrences. The growth of the Jew's power over the "blooded" swells, and especially over young Martin, his ambition for good society, and the use of his debtors for the purpose; his deferential demeanor while he believes his dupes wealthy, and his sudden closing up when he finds out he has swamped them, are made the links of a series of racy sketches of fashionable life.

Maurice Scanlan is a type of the cunning Irish country attorney, who like the Mercury in the thermometer rises and falls according to the warmth or coldness of the personal atmosphere in which he moves. Hiding an astute, selfish and mean soul under an outside sporting appearance, he knocks his betters off their guard, is recognized because he is useful to them, and in turn tolerates with vulgar attempts at aristocracy the people he believes beneath him.

Old Dan Nelligan, and the society of Oughterard, the few glimpses at the vice-regal court in Dublin, the fashionable season in Paris, and Baden-Baden; and the conversations of Val Repton, are each in their way very good. The story winds up by the saving of the Cro' Martin estate from the clutches of Herman Merl by the appearance of Barrey Martin, twin and older brother of Godfrey, who of course is the rightful heir. He is the father of Mary, who does not survive to put in practice the good ideas which her father's position would confer the power to do. Kate Henderson, supposed to be the daughter of the old Scotch steward, turns out to be the child of Barry Martin, who now receives her. With her and Jack Massingbred he leaves Ireland all to spend their days in the solitude and among the glorious scenery of the Rocky Mountains, taking with them also Simmy Crow, a crazy artist, who with every feeling for painting, had too sublime a notion of it, ever to arrive at anything great himself.

Victor Hugo is improving his exile at Guernsey, in completing his last work, the "Contemplations," a poem of ten thousand verses, embodying his experiences of human life. A portion of it has already been published. With him are living his wife, two sons and a daughter, who are all devoted to the pursuit of literature and art. Victor, the youngest son, is engaged upon a new translation of Shakspere, which it is said, will be an unusually faithful one, based strictly upon the early folio edition. Charles, the other son, besides manifesting an extraordinary talent for painting, writes poems, tales, dramas, and articles for the magazines; and in fertility of genius is said to resemble his father.

Madame Hugo is writing a memoir of her husband. She is said to have genuine capacity for the task, and her participation in all that her husband has done or thought during his married life gives her unusual facilities for it. Such a memoir, analogous in character to that written by Shelley's widow, will prove a valuable contribution to literature. Mlle. Hugo possesses remarkable talent as a pianist, and is a woman of genius.

A few friends share with M. Hugo his exile, upon whom the influence exerted by the poet is somewhat remarkable. His hatred of Louis Napoleon is unrelenting, and the prospect of his return to France, while the present dynasty is in power, is very slight. Apparently, however, his exile, alleviated by the presence of family and friends, is not a bitter one.

THE CHURCH DOOR.

At the door she stands,
  Bow'd down with grief and care;
She clasps her trembling hands,
  And seems a statue there.

Her garments, ah! how worn,
  Her countenance how pale;
How truly Want and Scorn
  Reveal their blighting tale.

She gazes at the light
  Which gleams from Chancel pane,
Thro' darkness of the night
  And darkness of the brain.

How blest to enter in,
  To sue and be forgiven;
To be absolved from sin,
  And feel the grace of Heaven!

Oh! peace of childhood's days,
  Wilt thou return no more?
Or is she lost always,
  Who's weeping at that door?

Ah! no, those very tears
  Have turned to founts of Grace;
They wash the stains of years,
  And leave no earthly trace.

The portals open wide—
  'Tis MARY bids her rest;
She guides her step inside,
  And clasps her to her breast!

Tho' Faith and Hope seemed lost,
  Yet MARY's heart within,
Had only longed the most,
  To purge her Soul from Sin.

BARRETT.

PARAPHRASE OF A SERMON IN A STONE.

The opening article in Putnam's Monthly for August is devoted to a rather pleasant retrospection of the works of noted authors which were suggested by others. It is entitled Literary Imitations, and was suggested by a late article in Fraser's Magazine, which exposed some of Bulwer's pilfering from Laurence Sterne. The writer proceeds to whittle down Sir Edward's claims to originality in a very self-satisfactory and readable manner. Burns does not come off unscathed, nor Shakspere, nor Swift, nor Rabelais, nor Cervantes, nor Milton, nor Tennyson, nor indeed many others. One sentence we adopt freely, to wit, that Thackeray cannot understand Swift. Coming immediately after this article, in Putnam, and very appropriately, is a poem entitled "The Genius of America," which may be taken as an illustration of the "Literary Imitations" aforesaid. The poem is a very plain and very creditable paraphrase of a well known effort by Thomas Davis. "The Genius of America" is addressed to a sculptor, on his statue of "America," and is a close adaptation of the celebrated lines by Davis to Hogan the Sculptor, regarding the statue of O'Connell. If not a downright imitation, the coincidence is somewhat remarkable and noteworthy. In the first place, both poems are to Sculptors, engaged on national themes; in the second, the metre is the same; in the third, the treatment is identical, the poets using their peculiar national reminiscences and hopes to illustrate the glory and character of the subject under notice. A couple of quotations will interest our readers. The first is from Davis:—

But would you by your art unroll
His own, and Ireland's secret soul,
And give to other times to scan
The greatest greatness of the man?
Fierce defiance let him be
Hurling at our enemy.
From a base as fair and sure
As our love is true and pure,
Let his statue rise as tall
And firm as a castle wall.
On his broad brow let there be
A type of Ireland's history;
Pious, generous, deep, and warm,
Strong and changeful as a storm;
Let whole centuries of wrong
On his recollection throng—
Strongbow's force and Henry's wile,
Tudor's wrath and Stuart's guile,
And iron Strafford's tiger jaws,
And brutal Brunswick's penal laws;
Not forgetting Saxon faith,
Not forgetting Norman scaith,
Not forgetting William's word,
Not forgetting Cromwell's sword.
Let the Union's fetter vile—
The shame and ruin of our isle—
Let the blood of 'Ninety-Eight'
And our present blighting fate—
Let the poor mechanic's lot,
And the peasant's ruined cot,
Plundered wealth and glory flown,
Ancient honors overthrown—
Let trampled altar, rifled urn,
Knit his look to purpose stern.
Mould all this into one thought,
Like wizard cloud with thunder fraught;
Still let our glories through it gleam,
Like fair flowers through a flooded stream,
Or like a flashing wave at night,
Bright—mid the solemn darkness bright.
Let the memory of old days
Shine through the statesman's anxious face—
Dathi's power, and Brian's fame,
And headlong Sarsfield's sword of flame,
And the spirit of Red Hugh,
And the pride of 'Eighty-Two.
And the victories he won,
And the hope that leads him on!

Let whole armies seem to fly,
From his threatening hand and eye;
Be the strength of all the land
Like a falchion in his hand,
And be his gesture sternly grand.

Here is the Putnam writer:—

Sculptor of the daring hand,
Shape the genius of the land;
Shape him rough, and bold, and keen,
Stalwart mould and dauntless mien;
As when youth, his course just ended,
Is with mightier manhood blended;
Show him, like one spirit-stirred,
With his hand upon his sword,
And his vision forward glancing,
And his firm step half advancing;
And upon his form and brow,
With thy hand's best cunning show,
Show the signature and trace
Of each old ancestral race,
Whence the living, centering forces
Mingle from a hundred sources;
As the rills their tributes blending,
Swell the conquering river trending,
Thus the spirit let us see
Of the pontine ancestry.
Bearing venturous, thwart the brine,
England's name and Alfred's line,
Or, at home, by mound and zee,
Warring 'gainst a priest's decree,
'Gainst the Rhineland ritter's doom
Round the oak of Upstalboom;
And that Cymric flood of old,
Like the torrent, tempest-rolled
Thro' the gorge of Snowdon boiling,
'Gainst the Roman ranks recoiling;
And the courage, rude and stark,
Of the Norland beresark,
Restless rider of the surge,
England's lord, and Adria's scourge,
Breaking first the enchanted rest
Of old Ocean's shadowy West;
And the manly port and free
Of great-hearted Germany—
Sire of many a mighty strain,
Hermann's brand and Luther's brain;
And the Italian glance of power,
Like Vesuvius' pausing hour;
And the Magyar's lofty scope,
And the Pole's undying hope;
And the strength pervading all—
Flush of Eiré and the Gaul,
And the pride of sword and lyre,
And the old chivalric ire,
Sinewy hold and heart of fire.

Sculptor! thus with daring hand,
Shape the Genius of the Land;
Shape him, tho' in youth unworn.
As befits the battle-born—
Born when war-clouds rolled in thunder,
And the ground grew red thereunder;
Victory nursed and fire-baptized,
Show his aspect cicatrized,
Darkened, graceful, with the scars
Won in three victorious wars;
These delineate if thou canst,
So from look and gesture glanced,
With a spell so true, that we,
As we gaze shall seem to see
All the historic epopee:—
Lexington, the startled farms,
And the first grand cry, To arms!
And ten thousands bells a-tolling,
And the deeper war-storm rolling;
Hudson calling thro' the air
To the answering Delaware,
O'er the strife conflicting sorest
'Twixt the rivers and the forest,
And the horizon lowering black
Round the valley bivouac,
And the calm, heroic Will,
Suffering, hoping, steadfast still
By the wintry watch-fire chill;
And the immortal morning-break
O'er the hosts of Chesapeake,
And the tyrant's falchion shivered
On the exulting soil delivered;
Then the gallant later story
Of Lake Erie's waves of glory
And the fields of Ocean gory;
And that rampire red-renowned—
Mississippi's sulphury mound;

And the triumphs frequent flushing
By the Rio Grande rushing;
And the banners borne elate
Through the Cordillera gate,
And the crest of Mexico
Shorn upon her high plateau,
And her Alameda ringing
To the conqueror's bugle singing.

Thus, in lineament and limb,
Daring sculptor fashion him:
Blend with memory in his gaze,
The prophecies of coming days,
As of one whose spirit sees
All his mightier destinies.

There are several readable and well illustrated papers in Harper, of which we would mention in especial Addison Richards' "Valley of the Connecticut;" prime passages of "Eastern Travel;" "Virginia Illustrated;" the paper on Epidemics, and last not least, those capital "Experiments in Photography." Little Dorrit is continued.

The Knickerbocker and Schoolfellow rival each other in their endeavors to please the rising generation.

Household Words continues to be filled with very pleasant stories, and capital short essays.

On the 17th of the present month the first step was made towards the recognition of the rights of dramatic authors in this country. A bill for the protection of dramatic property on that day passed the Senate. This bill, one which was nothing more than an act supplemental to the present copyright act, was drawn up under the superintendence of Mr. Boker, Judge Conrad, and Dr. Bird, and brought before the Senate, by Mr. Seward. Nothing now remains but to have it put through the House, as we trust it will, before the end of the present session.

Swift declared that he was too proud to be vain. The distinction is a nice one.

Literary and Artistic News.

We have been struck with a passage of Lieut. Maury's Physical Geography of the Sea, in which he computes the effect of a single inch of rain falling upon the Atlantic Ocean. The Atlantic includes an area of twenty-three thousand square miles. Suppose an inch of rain to fall upon only one-fifth of this vast expanse. "It would weigh," says our author, "three hundred and sixty thousand millions of tuns; and the salt, which as water, it held in solution in the sea, and which, when this water was taken up as a vapor, was left behind to disturb the equilibrium, weighed sixteen million more tuns, or nearly twice as much as all the ships in the world could carry at a single cargo each. It might fall in a day; but occupy what time it might in falling, this rain is calculated to exert so much force—which is inconceivably great—in disturbing the equilibrium of the ocean. If all the water discharged by the Mississippi river was taken up in one mighty measure and cast into the ocean at one effort, it would not make a greater disturbance in the equilibrium of the sea, than would the fall of rain supposed. And yet so gentle are the operations of nature, that movements so vast are unperceived."

What a multitude of people are born now-a-days with their fingers blackened with ink! says "Malakoff," in the Times, and as an evidence gives a list of sons of illustrious fathers in French Literature. There are Alexandre Dumas fils, H. de Kock fils, Guillame Guizot fils, Salvandy fils, De Broglie fils, Jaime fils, Delangle fils, Barbiere fils, Dupenty fils, Gautier fils, etc. etc. The great question of cotemporary literature is the sons! the sons! The public seem disposed to believe that it must be hereditary, and thus they accept Mr. So-and-So fils, successor of his father, absolutely as if it were an affair of succession to a grocery store.

Alexandre Dumas fils is just now laid on the shelf by a new piece after his own style played at the Vaudeville, and called Les Amours Forces (Forced Loves). Take from Dumas fils the equivocal habits of Paris and he is lost to literature. He has written three great comedies: La Dame aux Camelias, (a lady who has flowered under many names in America), Diane de Lys and Le Demi Monde—one and the same lorette under three different costumes. With these he has gained three hundred thousand francs! And now M. Dacourcelli supersedes him on the boards of the Vaudeville with Les Amour Forces.

A letter from Berlin, in the Presse Belge, says: "The great painter Cornelius, of this place, has finished a picture representing Lady Macbeth endeavoring to cleanse her blood-stained hand. All who have seen this work, and their number is very limited, pronounce it to be admirable. The expression of the countenances of Lady Macbeth, of her waiting-maid, and of the Doctor, are said to be full of effect."

A new daily paper, to be called the Dial, is to be started in London, on the limited liability principle. The originators are chiefly non-conformists. The conception is on a magnificent scale—no fewer than two hundred and fifty thousand shareholders at ten pounds each, which yields a capital of two and a half millions. As soon as one hundred thousand are procured the paper will be started.

A Cairo letter states that a short time back a fellah, in digging a hole to plant a tree, in a field near the city, found, at the depth of three or four feet, a bust in red prophyry of the size of life, admirably sculptured and in a remarkable state of preservation. The personage represented is supposed to be Diocletian, and it is probable that the bust was the principal ornament of some temple. M. Delaporte, the French consul, has purchased the bust.

T. J. Fox Alden, an old and eminent lawyer of Pittsburg, and the author of several legal works, died on the morning of the 1st at that city.

[From the Courier des Etats Unis.]

INEQUALITY OF THE LAW.

Mr. Herbert, the representative of California, has been triumphantly acquitted on his trial for the murder of Thomas Keating. The jury have rendered a verdict of Not Guilty.

Whatever defence may be felt for the person judged, it is impossible to pass without reflection this new and astonishing proof of the utter powerlessness of the law in the United States towards certain individuals.

No one can forget the details of this sad affair. One morning in the month of May, Mr. Herbert descended to the dining-room of Willard's Hotel, and demanded his breakfast. He was told that the hour for that meal had passed, and by the regulations of the house he could get none at that time, to which he replied in language of violence and insult to the servant. The quarrel, thus begun, grew warm. Mr. Herbert drew a pistol from his pocket, and shot the waiter Keating dead at his feet.

The evidence, as disclosed at the trial, simplified the facts. Mr. Herbert was the acknowledged and avowed author of the murder. The only point to be decided was, how far the incidental circumstances extenuated the facts and justified the act which he had been guilty of. To pronounce him innocent, it was necessary that the jury should find that he had acted in legitimate self-defence.

Yet, we hesitate not to say, that if instead of Thomas Keating it was Mr. Herbert who had lost his life in this encounter, if it had been the matter of the Cook who, when threatened, had seized a table-knife and killed the Representative, the finding would have been entirely different. Nevertheless, the presumption of self-defence would have been much more in favor of Keating than Herbert—rather in favor of the man of peaceable disposition than of insolent arrogance. More in favor of the man who takes up a weapon by chance than he who goes to breakfast with a pistol in his pocket.

At first sight, and without entering into the technical detail of the testimony as developed, there is no one who does not feel instinctively that the provocation came from Mr. Herbert. This comes naturally, so to speak, from the nature of the event. Admitting that the quarrel once commenced, chanced to put his life in danger, the fact that he was the instigator, ought of necessity to be against him. But it is a fact of public notoriety that he had not the benefit of this supposition. It was clearly established on the first investigation, that at the moment of the murder, the strife, if strife there was, had not arrived at that critical point, in view of which the law admits the excuse of self defence. In other words, we boldly assert, that if Mr. Herbert had not been armed with a pistol, or had not fired, we should not have had to deplore the death of any one.

To explain the verdict of the jury in the face of such circumstances, it is necessary to look at the influences of every kind that were brought to bear upon it; it is necessary to measure the extraordinary power that American Law puts into the hands of the judge who presides over the trial. In France, the juries are only permitted to pronounce according to their consciences and their understanding on the material facts submitted to their decisions. In the United States, they are called upon to decide on legal distinctions often extremely subtle. The summing up, by which the Court terminates and condenses the process, is no longer necessarily a simple review of the facts and testimony; it is, at the same time, a prolix, obscure and almost invariably partial explanation of the law. We have not, for our part, ever listened to one of these "summings up" which did not indicate in a palpable manner to the meanest apprehension on which side leaned the personal opinion of the Court, and on which side it wished the verdict.

That this course exercised a powerful influence in the case of Mr. Herbert, no one can doubt, when they know that the judge developed to the jury the novel doctrine "that it was sufficient to think ourselves in danger to be in the condition in which a homicide is justifiable." Such a theory, as our judicial reports have within these few days vigorously developed, would give to cowardice a right of murder almost without limit. Whatever may have been the disposing causes of the verdict we have under consideration, it is the denouement of the action itself we have to look at.

We repeat, with the conviction that the public voice will sustain us, that for an obscure criminal the result would have been altogether different; nor would a poor man have been at large without bail during the whole trial. The murder of Keating did not subject Mr. Herbert to forty-eight hours close imprisonment.

In France—in that country which the whole American press calumniates so much and knows so little of—when a crime is committed in certain circles, the high position of the guilty party gives but more eclat to his fall and his punishment. In the United States, we have yet to find—within ten years past—that a man of political or pecuniary influence has not found means to avoid the law after having violated it. The case of Mr. Herbert, nevertheless, is one of those facts which pass all bounds and call for the energetic intervention of the press. With such administration of justice, Vigilance Committees become a necessity.

LETTER FROM CALIFORNIA.

To T. F. Meagher, Esq., Editor of the N. Y. Irish News.

San Francisco, July 5, 1856.

Dear Sir:—By this time you will be aware of the difficulties existing in this city—which it is not necessary for me to dwell upon, as you will receive a full and authentic account in the Herald which I send you by this mail. We were the first company that filled up, and reported ourselves in compliance with the Governor's Proclamation, June 3rd. We elected our officers on the 7th of June, and were mustered into service on the 11th. Our Company is called the "Jackson Guards." The following are the officers elected:

Captain, Daniel O'Regan; 1st Lieut., C. Grant; 2nd Lieut., James Cusick; 1st Orderly Sergeant, Joseph J. Byrne; 2nd, Robert Dolan; 3rd, M. Kiernan; 4th, Thos. Connelly. Clerk of the Company, Henry J. Duff; 1st Corporal, Edwd. Fanning; 2nd, John Ballard; 3rd, Patrick Murphy; 4th Thos. Kierns.

The company is composed entirely of Irishmen.

It is the wish of the Company that you publish the card in the Herald, and you will much oblige,

Yours respectfully, Daniel O'Regan, Capt.

CARD FROM THE JACKSON GUARDS.

Editor of the Herald:—In consequence of a falsehood which appeared in a morning paper on the 23d instant, under the head of "Important Events in this city," and purporting to be "an authentic version," we, the liberated prisoners of the Jackson Guards, Company C, deny that we either directly or indirectly "denied all intention of again participating in the movements of the Law and Order party, and that we were very complimentary to the Committee with respect to 'our' treatment while in their 'Bastile.'" Neither have we collectively or individually spoken of the "entire futility of any force the Law and Order party could raise," to cope with the Vigilance Committee.

It is true, that Mr. Smiley of the Committee, did repeat a sort of advice, or lecture, which we then and now disregard—in substance—that if we were again found taking up arms against the Committee, we would meet with the severest punishment. Before we responded to the Governor's call, we understood our duty and our calling; we took an oath to support and defend the Constitution and laws of this State, and of the United States, and to obey the President of the United States, the Governor of this State and our superior officers. We still adhere to that oath, and when ordered, we will obey to the best of our ability. We would also state, that on Saturday, June 21st, before we were marched off as prisoners of war, we were asked—as a condition of our liberty—to take an oath, composed of sectarian insolence and intended to wound religious feelings, not to bear arms again against the Vigilance Committee. We unanimously and indignantly declined to do so.

The following is the oath the Vigilance Committee required the State Militia to take in their Armory, corner of Clay and Kearney streets, June 21st, before marching them to Fort Vigilance, where they were placed in irons as prisoners of war:

"I do solemnly promise and swear, in the presence of Almighty God and these witnesses present—by the hope of a future state—by the blessed Virgin Mary and all the saints in the calendar, that I will not bear arms against the Vigilance Committee of San Francisco. So help me God and the blessed Virgin."

A person then addressed us, and said: "In consideration of your taking this oath, we will liberate you; if you do not take it, you will be imprisoned; and if you take it and break it, you will be liable to immediate death."

Captain D. O'Regan,	P. O'Regan,
P. Murphy,	John Kelly,
E. Slaine,	Edw. Durham,
Thos. Casey,	P. Burns,
John Dorney,	E. O'Callagan,
John Bolan,	Robert Dolan,
Hugh Flynn,	M. McLaughlin,
Bernard Keegan,	P. Nooman,
J. J. Burns,	E. Fanning,
P. O'Brian,	Thos. Kiernan,
James McMahon,	Sergt. Connelly.

A Monetary Scheme at the Bottom of Fremont's Presidential Nomination.

That a corrupt monetary scheme, which ought to startle and alarm the whole country, is at the bottom of the nomination of Fremont for the Presidency, is now as well ascertained as any fact can be by circumstantial testimony. Without experience—without ability—with nothing to recommend him to the support of the people for the high office of the Presidency—his name would never have been thought of in that connection had not a few money-brokers and corrupt political jobbers in the city of New-York, who for years have been seeking to make fortunes out of illegitimate drippings of the Treasury, perceived an opportunity so to do in Fremont's great Mariposa land claim, involving so many millions of dollars in California. Members of Congress and delegates to the convention which nominated him, with their hands full of Mariposa scrip, are anxiously awaiting the opportunity when, with the person most deeply interested in it at the head of the general government, steps can be taken to clear the grant of its many thousand of actual settlers, and they can thus come into the possession of great wealth and affluence.

It is this dazzling prospect in view which brought the mercenary partisans in New-York, who had previously been in favor of George Law, to the support of Fremont. When the latter was elected to the United States Senate from California, the N. Y. Herald of May 4, 1850, thus alluded to him, and indicated the reason why he was sent. The Herald then said:—

"We believe that Col. Fremont knows something of land claims held by certain people in California, to the enormous amount of over one hundred millions of dollars. Indeed, it is said he is largely interested (some say to the extent of five million) in them; and if he can secure the passage of a law by Congress, confirming all Mexican laws and titles, he will become the richest man in the world. The importance of getting these titles confirmed by Congress, induced a few of the citizens of California to send Fremont there, knowing that he could get the aid of his father-in-law, Col. Benton.

"The value of the land in dispute, if Congress confirms all sorts of Mexican titles, it is said will reach six hundred millions. No wonder that Col. Benton is as wide awake for California now as he was fast asleep at all former periods. As Walpole once said, every man has his pocket-handkerchief, whether he be Secretary or Senator. Col. Benton rolled up his eyes in pious horror at the assertion made by the glorious Calhoun, that the conquest of Mexican territory, and its annexation to the United States, abrogated all Mexican laws in said territory, even those against Slavery. Mr. Benton saw where this action would end, unless discovered, and opposed it, not that he loved slavery less, but Mexican land scrip more.

"As soon as California is admitted, Col. Benton will move for confirming all the Spanish and Mexican land titles by Congress, and we should not be surprised if he as well as Senator Fremont held some millions of them."

Fremont has managed to secure a sort of Mexican title to to the immense Mariposa grant, but it is not of much account until those in possession are dispossessed, who will make a strong resistance. Give him the command of the army and navy of the United States to back up the State authorities, in case the latter are unequal to the task of dispossessing, and Fremont becomes far wealthier than the Rothschilds, and could count it by tens of millions of dollars.

Will not the people rise in their might and put a veto upon this design of prostituting the Presidency, the highest and most dignified station in the world, at the feet of mammon, in order that a few corrupt politicians may revel in the possession of ill-gotten wealth. Let the alarm be sounded, or the American Presidency, like the crown of the Roman Empire in the days of its degeneracy, will be bought and sold.—Cincinnati Daily Inquirer.

ROBERT ST. LEGER:

We are indebted to the Tablet newspaper for the following faithful and feeling account of the Life and Death of the Very Rev. Robert St. Leger, S. J.:

This distinguished Divine was a native of Waterford. At an early age he was sent to Stonyhurst, where he received his education in that celebrated seminary where were educated Shiel and Wyse and others not less eminent. Among his contemporaries at College, Dr. St. Leger was distinguished, and he stood high in the estimation of the masters and professors, who were men of great intellectual endowments. On leaving Stonyhurst, being intended for the church, he went to Sicily to join the Society of Jesus. At that period the Continent of Europe was closed by war to all subjects of the British crown. The Neapolitan territory was occupied by the hostile hosts of Napoleon, and Dr. St. Leger had to go by sea to Sicily. The ship he sailed in was attacked in the Mediterranean by pirates—by those lawless Corsairs that then infested the coast of Africa. It was a lovely evening, some hours before sunset, when the captain announced to the passengers on board the alarming intelligence of a suspicious craft on the horizon. Preparation was immediately made for action. Soon the pirate gained on them, and when within range poured in a deadly volley, which was quickly responded to by a shower of grape and canister; a desperate fight ensued; but after a sanguinary struggle, the pirate was compelled to sheer off disabled. Each young Irish student stood manfully to his gun on that eventful evening, directing and encouraging the crew, and it was mainly owing to their determined bravery that the vessel was not plundered, and themselves probably sold to slavery.

After finishing his studies in Sicily, Dr. St Leger repaired to Rome where he remained for some years. He was ultimately nominated by the Holy See Vicar-Apostolic of the East Indies. At Calcutta he took a high position. He was frequently the guest at the table of the Governor-General, and as member of council, was consulted on everything appertaining to the interests of the Metropolitan Catholic Church in India. It was there he became acquainted with the celebrated historian, Macaulay, whom he met in council, and who has spoken and written of him in terms of high regard and admiration. After a long residence in the East, he was appointed Provincial of his Order in Ireland, and was chosen for that prominent position in succession to the learned Dr. Kenny.

Dr. St. Leger was a remarkable man—a sound theologian, an accomplished scholar, of profound learning and deep research, of large and comprehensive mind, of the highest order of intellect. He was well read and informed on every subject, and there was no topic that he treated that he did not adorn by his eloquence. Always accessible to juniors, and ever ready to assist them with counsel and advice, he refrained, however, from replying to arguments, if merely introduced for purposes of display, which he despised. But, mild and gentle in his manners, he listened to them with patient and courteous attention; then drawing on the vast stores of his richly-endowed mind, words of wisdom flowed from his lips as if from an inspired source.

The remains of this eminent Ecclesiastic have been interred in the Cemetery of Glasnevin, Dublin. His funeral was attended by a numerous circle of friends and admirers, both by Clergy and laity, by all classes of citizens, and what would have most pleased that gentle spirit, if on earth, by the orphan children of the parish, whom he had watched over while living. It was an affecting incident to see those little ones praying at the grave of their lost benefactor, "May his soul rest in peace." His memory will be long cherished by those who had the happiness and the honor of his intimacy and friendship. His name will be long remembered with affectionate regret.

John Grady, a laborer, was killed on the Waterford and Kilkenny Railway, on Friday, by some of the wagons passing over him.

Central American News.

NICARAGUA.

INAUGURATION OF PRESIDENT WALKER.

The U. S. mail steamship Granada, Capt. Griffin, arrived at New Orleans on the 25th ult., from San Juan 21st. She brought the following news:—

An American brig, name unknown, was swamped by a waterspout and foundered off Carthagena. All hands lost except the captain.

We have news of the inauguration of Gen. Walker as President. The aggregate vote was 23,236; of which Walker received 15,835; Ferrer, 4,447; Rivas, 867; Salazar, 2,087.

The following is the decree:—

REPUBLIC OF NICARAGUA.

Department of State,
Granada, July 11, 1856.

Sir: The Supreme Executive Power has been pleased to dictate the following decree:

Fermin Ferrer, Provisional President of the Republic of Nicaragua, to its inhabitants:

The Presidential elections, which are to rule the destinies of the nation having been effected in conformity with the decree bearing date of the 10th ult., and having in view the returns of the different electoral districts forwarded by the cities of the Republic, and having executed the accustomed scrutiny of the candidates which appeared in said returns, I have been pleased to decree, and do

DECREE.

1. Declared elected by a majority of votes as President of the Republic of Nicaragua, Gen. William Walker.

2. That the same be announced in the most solemn manner, and communicated to the elected candidate, who shall take possession of his office on the 12th day of the present month.

Given in Granada, this 10th day of July, 1856.

F. Ferrer.

To Minister-General, Gen Abateo Pineda.

By superior orders, this is forwarded to you for your intelligence, and proper action, in expectation, also, of your acknowledgment of the same. Pineda.

The following general order was issued yesterday by Brig. Gen. Fry, Commander of the Oriental Department:

General Order—No. 7.

Head-Quarters, Oriental Department,
Granada, July 11, 1856.

The garrison of the city (except the guard and the sick examined by a surgeon) will appear under arms on the parade to-morrow, at 11 o'clock, A. M.

All men belonging to the Qurter-Master's, Commissary's, Medical and Ordnance Departments will form on the left of the troops of the line, under the command of Col. T. F. Fisher.

All men on detached duty will parade with their companies, or if their companies be absent, will report to Colonel Fisher.

B. D. Fry.
Brig. General Commanding Department.

CEREMONIES OF INAUGURATION.

A supplemental sheet to El Nicaragueuse of the 12th inst. gives the following account of the inauguration:

As soon as the decision was announced, which was late on the evening of the 10th, the enthusiastic citizens gave vent to their feelings by displays of fireworks, throwing fireballs, and otherwise. The day following was spent in mutually congratulating each other upon the brightening prospect before them under the Presidency of General Walker. Notices were immediately issued that the President would be inaugurated on Saturday, the 12th of July. Early in the morning of the inauguration day, a staging at the west end of the plaza was finished and decorated with the flags of the United States, France, the Lone Star of Cuba, and that of Nicaragua. At 11 o'clock the procession formed on the plaza, in accordance with the following programme:

One Company, by platoons; Band; Flag of the Republic; one Company, by platoons; President and President Elect; Cabinet and Suites of the Presidents; Ministers of the United States and Nicaragua and their Suites; Foreign Consuls; Municipal Authorities; Committee of Arrangements; General Officers and Aides-de-Camp; Officers of the General Staff; other Officers not attached; Officers of the Navy; Troops (marched by flank under their officers); Citizens (by twos). The Flag of the Republic was escorted from the house of the President to the Plaza. The procession then marched to escort the President and President Elect to the place of inauguration, and there formed line. Valedictory and Inaugural Addresses. Salute of twenty-one guns. Thence to the Cathedral—"Te Deum." Column reformed. Marched through the principal streets, and escorted the President to his house. Thence to the Plaza. Flag of the Republic escorted by a company to the house of the President installed.

When the procession reached the place of installation, President Fermin Ferrer delivered the following:

Mr. President: You hold in your hands the destinies of Nicaragua—the keys of a vast continent—of an unhappy people who hope for a brighter future. Of a people who, great and flourishing even in adversity, will prove themselves, in prosperity, second to none, because nature is ever superior here to the effects of man's discord.

You have been called to your present eminence by the people, in despite of a multitude of impostures and insidious stratagems, practised by the demagogues and enemies of progress in Central America, because an instinctive sense of self-preservation and high aspirations gave rise to this result of a universal and popular suffrage. With sincere and heartfelt pleasure I deliver to you the supreme command of the Republic, in the certainty that you will bestow upon it tranquillity, progress and respectability.

I know this, and the people also know it, since they have deposited their confidence in you, which you have accepted.

In the present situation of the country, the free people of Nicaragua who have elected you, promise themselves abundant fruit from your labors, and your fame will be transmitted to all posterity, illuminated by a never-fading light.

This having been read in English by Charles Callaghan, Esq., Don Fermin Ferrer turned to William Walker, and administered the oath of office. While the words of the oath were being read, General Walker was on his knees, and in this position took upon himself the obligation of the Presidency of the Republic.

The oath was read and responded to in the Spanish language, which we translate thus:

OATH OF OFFICE.

You solemnly promise and swear to govern the free Republic of Nicaragua, and sustain its independent and territorial integrity with all your power, and to execute justice according to the principles of Republicanism and religion.

"I promise and swear," responded the President.

You promise and swear, whenever it may be in your power, to maintain the law of God, the true profession of the Evangelists, and the religion of the crucifixion.

"I promise and swear," responded the President.

In the name of God and the sainted Evangelists, you swear to comply with these obligations, and to make it your constant guard to fulfil all that is herein promised.

"I swear," responded the President.

And for this, the succession is committed to you firmly by these presents; by authority of the Secretary of Government, charged with the General Dispatches.

After the oath had been administered, cheer after cheer rose from the Americans assembled, mingled with the lusty vivas of the natives.

After silence had been restored, President William Walker delivered the following INAUGURAL ADDRESS:

In assuming the duties of the Presidency of the Republic, I feel deeply the difficulties and the responsibilities which the office involves. The state is menaced by dangers from without and within, and there is need of sleepless vigilance and untiring energy to preserve the government from the enemies which threaten it. In order, therefore, to administer properly the affairs of the republic, I require all the assistance I can derive from the patriotism of its citizens, and from the skill, courage and self-restraint of the soldiers. On them and on the Divine Providence which controls and directs the course of States and Empires, I rely for assistance in the proper discharge of the duties I this day assume.

The republic has reached an era in its history not second in importance to the day of her independence from the Spanish monarchy. The 15th of September, 1821, was the opening of the revolutionary epoch of Nicaragua. I hope this day may be its close. The struggles of thirty-five years have, it is to be hoped, taught the people that liberty is not to be obtained amidst the petty feuds of contending chieftains, and that prosperity does not result from a constant state of civil broils and intestine commotions. After a long series of bloody conflicts, the republic has need of internal peace and quiet for the development of its varied resources. I sincerely trust that all good citizens will assist me in the maintenance of that order which is the first requisite of a well governed State, and without which all national development or individual welfare is impossible.

Not only is internal order required for the advancement of material wealth and prosperity, but also for the proper defence of the republic from the external enemies which threaten its repose. The other four States of Central America, without reason and without justice, have undertaken to interfere in the domestic affairs of Nicaragua. Conscious of their own weakness, and fearful lest the prosperity of Nicaragua should detract from their wealth, these neighboring States are enviously endeavoring to interrupt our progress by force of arms. The imbecile rulers of these States, too, feeling that they have failed to perform their duties to the people they undertake to govern, dread lest their impoverished countrymen may finally fly for refuge to those who have redeemed Nicaragua from anarchy and ruin. Moved by such ignoble sentiments, these miserable relics of a once powerful aristocracy are striving to impede the march of events in this republic. But the impotence of their efforts is beginning to be made manifest to themselves and to the world, and they are now appearing as blind instruments in the hand of an all-wise Providence, which, out of the bad passions and unworthy motives of men, educes good and improvement.

In our relations with the more powerful nations of the world, I hope they may be led to perceive that although Nicaragua may be comparatively weak, she is yet jealous of her honor, and determined to maintain the dignity of her independent sovereignty. Her geographical position and commercial advantages may attract the cupidity of other governments, either neighboring or distant, but I trust they may yet learn that Nicaragua claims to control her own destiny, and does not require other nationalities to make treaties concerning her territory without asking her advice and consent. While pursuing a course of strict justice towards foreign citizens and foreign governments, we only ask that the same equity may be granted to ourselves.

The principles which shall guide me in the administration both of the foreign and domestic affairs of the government are few and simple. To allow the utmost liberty of speech and action compatible with order and good government, shall be the leading idea of my political conduct. Therefore, the greatest possible freedom of trade will be established, with the view of making Nicaragua what nature intended her to be, the highway for commerce between the two oceans. And with this freedom of trade will come the arts of a civilization which grows and increases by the wants and necessities itself creates. While facilitating, as far as possible, the material developement of the State, I shall not be unmindful of its intellectual and moral requirements. To promote the proper education of the people, and to encourage them in the practices of that Divine religion which constitutes the basis of all modern civilization, shall be objects of primary importance. And for carrying out these intentions with success, I humbly invoke the aid of Him, without whose assistance all human exertions are but as bubbles on a stormy sea.

Then followed an impressive religious ceremony by the Bishop of Granada; and after that a dinner, at which the "President of the United States" was the first toast, "General Walker" the second, and the "ballot box (amended by some gallant gentleman into the "band box") the third. After many others, the assembly broke up, happy and enthusiastic.

(From the New-Orleans Courier, July 26.)

We understand that Rivas, the late President, has fortified himself in Leon, and openly avows his connexion with the invaders from Guatemala, and his intention to drive the North Americans into the sea. A party of Walker's troops, who entered that city, were fired upon and retired. Rivas is making every possible effort to combine all influences against Walker.

The health of the army remains good, but some fever is produced by the imprudences of new recruits unaccustomed to the climate.

The Fourth of July was celebrated at Granada by an oration and a dinner. Colonel Wheeler, the American Ambassador, presided at the latter. Among other toasts was one to Mr. Crampton—over the left.

The following from the special Granada correspondent of the N. O. Picayune, will give a key to the movements and rumors of movements in the locality:

At five o'clock this afternoon, Gen. Walker was proclaimed through the streets of this city as the duly elected President of Nicaragua. The manner of doing this was somewhat curious to a stranger, particularly one from the United States, accustomed to receiving all his political information through the public prints. All the troops were assembled in the plaza under arms, and the band attached to head quarters played a lively air. After this a decree from the Minister of Relations, announcing the result of the recent elections, and proclaiming General Walker President of Nicaragua, was read in Spanish by one of the Government officers, which was followed by three vivas from the natives for el Presidente, the troops presenting arms. The procession then moved through the principal streets of the city, the same ceremony being repeated at every corner. The decree being in Spanish, it was some time before the troops and the American outsiders who congregated around got it "through their wool" what it all meant; but when they learned they joined in the cheering, and their hearty hurrahs, given with a spirit and lustiness which showed their hearts were in them, drowned the equally hearty but feebler vivas of the natives.

I have not yet been able to learn the exact number of votes given, but I understand that returns have been received from all the departments of State, certainly from all the large towns and villages, and that the direct vote of the people for Walker was nearly unanimous. The inauguration is to take place on the 12th.

For several days past a variety of rumors have pervaded the city. First we had news that Gen. Valle had been taken prisoner in the city of Leon, and that he was threatened with instant death; next came a proclamation from Col. Mendez, recently a great friend of Walker's, denouncing the Americans as robbers, &c., who were endeavoring to overthrow the prevailing religion of the country, and to drive out the native population. A gentleman who arrived from Leon, however, stated that Gen. Valle was walking about the streets of Leon, in no sort of danger, and also brought a secret message from Mendez to Walker, stating that he meant nothing by his proclamation, which he signed when he was drunk, and that he was as strong a friend of the Americans as ever. Then we had the startling rumor that Leon had been entered by a force of 3,000 Guatemalans, or Chipinos, as the natives call them, and this received some color from the fact that night before last, the entire ranger force, under Major Waters, was ordered to march at once in the direction of Leon.

The facts, as near as I have been able to get at them, appear to be that a force of several hundred Chamorristas were a short distance from Leon, and that Rivas, the late President, was anxious that they should enter, but the citizens of Leon would not consent. They told Mr. Rivas, in tolerably plain terms, that they preferred Walker and his Americans to the Chamorristas, and that they were determined not to admit the latter, nor any invading force from the northern states.

Poor Rivas was in a quandary. His adviser, Salazer, the man who placed him in his present ridiculous position, has not been heard from since he started off, in company with two others, in the direction of San Salvador; and there is every reason to believe that they have been murdered by the Chamorristas, to whom Salazar had rendered himself extremely obnoxious during the last civil war. His mission was to expedite the march of the Guatemalan troops into Nicaragua; and if he has fallen in his traitorous attempt, we can only call it a species of retributive justice well deserved. As for the Guatemalans, our last accounts left them still in San Salvador, to the number of about six hundred, and yet I adhere to the opinion that there will be no movement from that quarter until the rainy season is over.

Last night a courier was intercepted between Managua and Mateares, who had on his person a number of despatches from the Rivas party to their friends in this city and elsewhere. Some curious disclosures were made by these letters, and among other things were proclamations from Jerez, one of the late Cabinet, offering inducements to the Americans to abandon Walker, and join his party. This, coming after the proclamation of Mendez, in which the Americans were denounced so furiously, is rather a curious commentary upon the manner of doing things in Central America. Another proclamation, from the same source, I believe, offered the Americans a free passage from the country, and authorized the Transit Company to take them free and charge the same to the government. Rather "icebergish," that.

To-day a courier arrived from Leon, bringing news that everything was quiet there, and that there would be no opposition to the peaceful entrance of Major Waters and his command into the city. Rivas will doubtless again take to the woods, but should he remain he will be taken prisoner and brought to this city. In either case there will be no opposition to the government of President Walker in Nicaragua, at least none that dare show its head.

It is of course not yet known who will form the new Cabinet, but I have good reason to believe that a change will be made in the present system of government, and that new civil, judicial and administrative officers will be appointed, and new regulations made, which will assimilate the government somewhat more to that of the United States. The old system, which appears to have been formed for the sole purpose of creating a lot of useless offices with large salaries, does not suit the progressive spirit of the age.

A special dispatch from Washington, in the N. Y. Daily Times, August 2, says:

Intelligence, upon which the Government of the United States relies, indicates that another and overwhelming combination of Central American States against Walker is organizing to proceed against him at an early day. From present appearances, the force to be brought against him will render his position most desperate, and in all probability will seal his downfall.

Colonel Carew and the officers of the Wexford Militia, recently gave a splendid pic-nic ball at the Royal Hotel, Malahide. It was attended by a fashionable party, including many members of the nobility. The band of the regiment performed in the spacious pleasure grounds, and a private band also attended in the ballroom.

Judge Keogh, in opening the Sligo Assizes, congratulated the Grand Jury on the peace and good order of the county. The calendar, he said, appears free from any case of an aggravated nature, and those that were in it were very few in number.

Mr. Justice Ball congratulated the grand jury of Armagh, in the same manner. There were only three prisoners in custody, charged with the commission of crime.

Foreign Miscellany.

Dunn, so long a devoted and disregarded admirer of Miss Burdett Coutts, has lately transferred his affections to the Princess Mary. He was, however, brought before a London police magistrate last week, with a view to an inquiry into the state of his mind. A letter of his, addressed to the Princess, was read, in which he told her that "all the empire knows money could not buy his heart, but that he loved her with truth and sincerity, feelings awakened in his breast by the encouragement she bestowed on him, and requiring to know if she thought him worthy of her esteem and fair hand." After several medical men had been examined, the magistrate said it was clear he was a person of unsound mind, and ordered him to be placed under restraint.

According to the Moniteur de l'Armee, the number of deaths from May 1, 1854, the date of the landing of the army in Turkey, and from that to March 30, 1856, when peace was signed, was as follows:—Officers of all grades, 1,284; non-commissioned officers, 4,403; and rank and file, 56,805—or in all, 62,492 men. The deaths which occurred in other portions of the French army during the same period are set down at 5,246 for the army of Algeria, 1,088 in Italy; in the Baltic, during the expedition of 1854, there died 1,059, and in France 13,635—making a total of 21,028, which, added to the deaths in Turkey and the Crimea, give a sum of 83,520.

The following details of the losses of the Piedmontese army in the Crimea are official. The Piedmontese force in the East was augmented by successive reinforcements to 18,584 men. Up to the 31st of October, 1855, it lost 1,632 men of whom 1,211 died of cholera, 170 typhus fever, and 251 from wounds and other causes. Of this number 56 were officers, 13 employees in the commissariat, and 1,563 rank and file. The official returns, from the 31st of October to the time of the evacuation, are not yet completely made up, but the loss may be estimated at 900; so that the total loss of the Piedmontese army engaged in the war, will be about 2,532 men.

A splendid ship has been launched from the yard of the Belfast Ship Building Company, Queen's Island. She is one of the finest specimens of wooden naval architecture ever completed at Belfast. She is the property of Mr. Edward Bates, of Liverpool, and intended for the India Trade.

Mr. and Mrs. Bianconi, family and suite, have arrived in Dublin, from Pisa, en route to Longfield, county Tipperary. The prosperous tenantry at Longfield are prepared to give an enthusiastic reception to this excellent family.

Another of the Tipperary Militia has succumbed to the wounds received in the late conflict of that regiment with the line. Private William Doyle, a recruit, has died after intense suffering.

The Rev. Daniel O'Sullivan, Adm., Killarney, has been appointed parish priest of Dingle, in the room of the late lamented Dr. O'Sullivan.

Special Notices.

If you wish a Portrait, call at Brady's Gallery, 359 Broadway.

THE AMBROTYPE.—Some members of the daguerrean fraternity have represented the Ambrotype—the latest and best improvement in the art—as unworthy of public confidence. Mr. BRADY, the introducer of the Ambrotype in New-York, has found in them a combination of rare qualities, never approached by any other style of camera pictures. 8m28ju

Photographs and Ambrotypes,—50 Franklin street, New-York. Persons wishing to have a true life-like Photograph or Ambrotype taken, will do well to call at this place; the pictures there made are finished in the best style, and no trouble or pains will be spared to suit the most delicate taste.

The prices will be lower than in any other establishment in town, the proprietor not having the expenses of artists to pay for the coloring of the pictures, or salaries of operators, the work being done by the proprietor himself.

Persons having black plain photographs, and wishing to have them colored or re-touched in China Ink, can have it done at low prices. The proprietor will also re-touch for any establishment in the city or country, that will ask for it, and those he has been coloring for can have their work done at the same rates and prices.

Instructions will be given to pupils in Photograph and Ambrotype. Good collodion for sale, and all kinds of chemicals for the business prepared to order. (3m12jly) A. Cosmes.

Ladies going in the Country, wishing their supply of Shoes, can find Linen Gaiters at 12s. Slippers, Ties, Buskins and Toilet Slippers, from 6s. to 10s.: India Rubbers, &c., with Boys', Misses', and Children's Boots and Shoes, of all kinds and prices, at 4t19jly J. B. MILLER & CO'S, No. 184 Canal St.

Holloway's Pills.—The cynics of the medical schools are constrained to admit that Holloway's Pills banish disease from the stomach, liver and bowels, without reducing the strength of the patient. This is the greatest medical triumph of the nineteenth century. Sold at the manufactories, No. 80 Maiden Lane, New-York, and No. 244 Strand, London, and by all druggists, at 25 cents, 62½ cents, and $1 per box. aug9

Amusements.

BOWERY THEATRE.

THE PEOPLES TEMPLE OF THE DRAMA.

Open every night,

WITH A POWERFUL

Star Company.

Lessee and Manager.....JOHN BROUGHAM

PRICES OF ADMISSION:

Boxes.....50 cents | Pit..... 12½ cents.
Gallery.....12½ cents. | Orchestra Stalls..... 50 cents.
Private Boxes.....Five Dollars.

Doors open at 7½; commence at 7½.

WALLACK'S THEATRE.

THE

SUMMER GARDEN.

BENEFIT

OF

MR. DION BOURCICAULT.

On which occason

MISS AGNES ROBERTSON

Will appear

FOR THE LAST TIME

BUT FOUR.

On Tuesday next, August 5,

The Life of an Actress.

Violet.....Miss Agnes Robertson
Grimaldi.....Mr. Bourcicault

PRICES OF ADMISSION.

Parquette and boxes.....50 cents
Family Circle.....25 cents

Doors open at a quarter past seven P. M.

THE ACQUITTAL OF HERBERT.

We have seen no act in Washington which deserves more general or determined condemnation than the acquittal of Mr Herbert, of California, for killing the waiter at Willard's Hotel. We will not say that Mr. Herbert is guilty of deliberate murder, but he most assuredly committed manslaughter, and should be punished accordingly. The very fact that he is a member of Congress is a reason why justice should be meted out to him without favor. We shall have as poor an opinion of the administration of justice in Washington as in our own city or even in San Francisco, if such men as Herbert escape the penalty of their crimes. Some reckless presses have been disposed to make a political capital out of this occurrence, by representing that Mr. Herbert is a southerner, whereas he hails from California. They have then asserted that he was born in the South! as if all the villains in the world came from that section. It makes no difference where Herbert was born, his crime is the same, and he ought to have been punished for its commission. There is no political feature to the case. Herbert's acquittal is simply the result of powerful influence, and of able counsel against poverty! This is the simple fact of the case.

We have seen the effects of this in our city time and again, and unless there is a reform in this matter, an indignant people will be aroused, who will sweep the pretended administrators of justice away, as they have in California. Less than three years ago there were two men confined in the Tombs, in this city, on the charge of murder. One was a Frenchman, of considerable wealth and very influential connections. He shot a man in open day in this city, without excuse, and evidently with premeditation. The other was an Irishman who was charged with killing his wife, though there was no positive proof against him. The writer of this conversed with both of these men during their confinement, and he was forcibly impressed with the probable innocence of the Irishman, but with the certainty of the guilt of the Frenchman. In the former case the proof was unquestionable, in the latter it was, at the best, doubtful. But mark the sequel. The Frenchman's friends rallied around him; the best lawyers in the city were obtained, and he got off with a short imprisonment for manslaughter, of which he was relieved by the Governor. The Irishman had a small grocery up-town, at the time of his arrest. He turned it over to his lawyer, who sold it out, pocketed the money, and left for parts unknown. The poor man thus had not a cent left to prosecute his defence. The court assigned him some boxwood counsel, and he was convicted and hanged! Such was the difference between money and no money. And such is the case of Herbert. His acquittal is a subject of interest to every person, for it is another melancholy evidence of the laxity of justice in our courts, and may be a forerunner of some reign of terror.—N. Y. Day Book.

GOLD AND SILVER IN THE WORLD.

A Russian counsellor of state has recently published a work styled "Gold and Silver—their origin, and the amount extracted from all the countries of the known world, from the most remote times to the year 1856." The following particulars are interesting:

"The amount of gold and silver annually taken from the mines of Europe, including Russia, is 26,805 kilogrammes of the former, (2 7-10 pounds to the kilogramme,) and 161,444 kilogrammes of the latter, valued together at $25,000,000.

"In America, including California, the annual product is 169,834 kilogrammes of gold, and 735,180 kilogrammes of silver, worth, in all, $146,000,000.

"In Asia, the annual product is 2,700 kilogrammes of gold, and 110,000 of silver, amounting in value to $22,000,000.

"In Africa, no silver mines are wrought, and only 4,020 kilogrammes of gold are produced, valued at $2,000,000.

"Australia, too, yields no silver, but the annual product of gold amounts to 290,260 kilogrammes, valued at $200,000,000.

"Sum total, in all parts of the world, 510,199 kilogrammes of gold, and 1,026,624 kilogrammes of silver, valued together at 1,988,000,000 francs, or over $397,000,000. The whole sum extracted from the earliest times up to the present will amount to 15,314,653 kilogrammes of gold; and 254,410,170 of silver, worth together something more than $20,536,000,000."

The annual production of the precious metals at the present time is enormous. At the present rate we gain more in fifty years than our ancestors did in fifty centuries. The annual increase of gold and silver for the period of three years ending 1851, more than doubled that of any previous year, amounting to 601,000,000 francs; and in the last four years, ending 1855, it has increased nearly 150 per cent, and now amounts to 1,592,631,651 francs, or $318,526,350.

America has furnished more gold and silver—double the amount—than Europe, Africa, and Australia put together, and only $20,000,000 less than Asia has furnished since the beginning of the world.

SWEDISH LAWS REGARDING DRUNKENNESS.

Whoever is seen drunk in Sweden, is fined, for the first offense, three dollars; for the second, six; for the third and fourth a still further sum; and is also deprived of the right of voting at elections, and of being appointed a representative. He is, besides, publicly exposed in the parish church on the following Sunday. If the same individual is found committing the same offense a fifth time, he is shut up in the house of correction, and condemned to six months' hard labor; if he is again guilty, to a twelve months' punishment of a similar description. If the offence has been committed in public, such as at a fair, an auction, etc., the fine is doubled; and if the offender has made his appearance at a church, the punishment is still more severe. Whoever is convicted of having induced another to intoxicate himself, is fined three dollars, which sum is doubled if the person is a minor. An ecclesiastic who falls into this offense loses his benfice; if it is a layman who occupies any considerable post, his functions are suspended, and perhaps he is dismissed.

Drunkenness is never admitted as an excuse for any crime, and whoever dies when drunk is buried ignominously, and deprived of the prayers of the church. It is forbidden to give, and more especially to sell, any spirituous liquors to students, workmen, servants, apprentices, and private soldiers. Whoever is observed drunk in the streets, or making a noise in a tavern, is sure to be taken to prison and detained till sober, without, however, being on that account exempted from the fines. One half of these fines go to the informers, (who are generally police officers), the other half to the poor. If the delinquent has no money, he is kept in prison until some one pays for him, or until he has worked out his enlargement. Twice a year these ordinances are read aloud from the pulpit by the clergy, and the tavern-keeper is bound, under the penalty of a heavy fine, to have a copy of them hung up in the principal rooms of his house.

IRISH MARRIAGES.

At Greenwich, John Richard Manifold, of the War Department, Woolwich, son of the late John Manifold, of Ballymoney, county Wicklow, to Arabella, daughter of James Tryfe, of Greenwich.

At St. Mary's, Donnybrook, George Rollo Massy, son of the late George Massy, of Glenwilliam Castle, county Limerick, to Harriet Ursula, daughter of the late William De Montmorency, of Upper Court, county Kilkenny.

At the church of Our Immaculate Lady of Refuge, Rathmines, Christopher Plunket, of Bracklyn, county Westmeath, son of the late Michael Plunket, Mountpleasant square, Rathmines, to Catherine, daughter of Terence Hughes, of Rathmines, and Lackagh, county Kildare.

At the Presbyterian Church, Mary's Abbey, Thomas Rainey, Bridgefoot street, to Anne, daughter of P. Mooney, of Enniscorthy.

At Cork, Richard Garde, of Philadelphia, Penn., to Charlotte, daughter of Lieut. David Kirby, of Bantry.

At Russborough, county Wicklow, Captain Edmund Turton, of the 3d Dragoon Guards, to Lady Cecilia Leeson, daughter of the Earl and Countess of Milltown.

At Moneymore, in the county of Londonderry, John Watson Wakefield, Lieutenant in the Royal Navy, to Juliana, daughter of the Hon. and Rev. John P. Hewitt, rector of Moneymore.

At London, J. H. O'Callaghan, of Riverview, county Cork, to Minnie, second daughter of the late Charles Bastible, of Kanturk, in the same county.

At Paris, Charles, son of Henry Hodgson, of Ballyrain, county Wicklow, to Elizabeth Maria, daughter of Michael Law.

At St. Mary's Church, Limerick, Mr. Frederick Brew, to Ann, third daughter of the late Sub-Inspector James Clements.

Margaret, daughter of the late Capt. Robert Johnston, Brookhill, county Leitrim, D.L., J. P., to Henley Thorp, M. D., Letterkenny.

At Port Elizabeth, Cape of Good Hope, James, son of John Geoghegan, of Knockraheen, county Wicklow, to Eliza Mary, daughter of N. Ennis, of Kilmore, county Wexford, and niece to the late lamented Right Rev. A. Devereux, Bishop of the Cape.

IRISH DEATHS.

At London, Henry H. Burge, of Herbert street, Dublin.

At 73, Queen street, aged 34 years, Catherine, wife of Thomas Taylor.

At Dublin, Lieut. Edward Moore, of the Royal Navy, son of the late Stephen Moore, of Salisbury, county Tipperary, and younger brother of the Right Hon. Judge Moore.

At Ranelagh, county Dublin, Mary Bridget, the beloved child of John Connick.

At Rio Janeiro, of yellow fever, aged 29 years, W. G. Scovell, First Lieutenant of Her Majesty's ship Express, son of Henry Scovell, of Ferney, Stillorgan, county Dublin.

At Somerton Lodge, Booterstown, aged 71 years, Elizabeth, daughter of the late John Younge, of Sheffield, Yorkshire.

At Blackrock, Elisabeth, daughter of the late Jeremiah Kelleher, Q. C.

At Dysartmore, county Kilkenny, A. Lambert.

At Waterford, William Bell, formerly Lieutenant in the Kilkenny Militia.

At Galeen House, county Cork, T. M'Carthy.

At Kinsale, Captain Connor, of the West Cork Artillery, formerly of the 66th regiment.

At Clombrayney, county Meath, Frances, wife of Robert C. Wade, shortly after giving birth to a daughter, stillborn.

At the Presentation Convent, Bandon, aged 70 years, Mrs. Catherine O'Neill

At Carrowkeel, county Galway, Mary, relict of Roderick Kealy.

At Kilernane, county Clare, John Healy, sen., at the advanced age of 106 years.

At Surat, Bombay, Andrew Stewart, C. E., formerly of the Waterford and Limerick Railway.

At Pernambuco, South America, M. A. Borthwick, engineer, brother of John Borthwick, of Belfast.

At Cologne, the Hon. Mrs. J. J. Whaites, daughter of the late Lord Woodhouse.

At Waterfall View, Richmond, near Dublin, Maria, wife of Andrew Kirwan, and daughter of the late James Craig, of Scoutbush, who represented the borough of Carrickfergus for many years.

At Brompton, aged 78 years, Frances, relict of Wm. Willshire, Captain in the 11th regiment, and daughter of the late Robert Shearman, of Kilcreen House, county Kilkenny.

At Blakefield, Rathangan, county Kildare, in the 77th year of his age, Mr. Felix Byrne, formerly of Quoniamstown, Downpatrick.

At Greenville, near Listowel, on Monday, Denis W. Nolan.

At Balaklava Hospital, of fever, Nicholas O'Connor, M. D., First Class Staff Surgeon, formerly of Mallow, county Cork.

At Mitchelstown, Isabella, wife of Thomas Carroll.

At Carrickfergus county Antrim, drowned by the upsetting of a pleasure-boat, Lieut. Joseph Donelan, Royal Antrim Artillery, second son of Stephen Donelan, Kilagh, county Galway, and grandson of the late Robert French, of Monivea Castle.

James Brown, late chief boatman of Coastguards, port of Belfast, aged 54 years.

At his residence, Verner street, Belfast, Robert Owen.

At Maragall, near Lisburn, Jeremiah Gill, formerly of Strabane, county Tyrone.

At Shore street, Donaghadee, J. Sloan, late of Donegall Arms, Belfast.

Card from Edward Dunigan & Brother.

James B. Kirker, the present representative of the firm of Edward Dunigan & Brother, learns with regret that an attempt is being made to persuade the public that a circular issued by Mr. John Gilmary Shea, with regard to his correspondents, is a malicious attempt of the house to injure another.

Mr. John Gilmary Shea continues to enjoy the highest esteem of the firm, still it has not and will not interfere in his private concerns.

The House of Edward Dunnigan & Brother has as yet issued no circular whatever, relative to the forthcoming History of the Catholic Church, by Mr. DeCourcy and Mr. John Gilmary Shea.

New-York, July 17th, 1856. (3t) 151 Fulton street.

Caution to the Public.—To distinguish the genuine magnetic powder, for the destruction of insects, from poisonous imitations, it is necessary to examine the wrapper. See that four national medals—those of England, France, Belgium, and the United States—are engraved thereon. Be sure also that a lithographic fac simile of Lyon's signature appears both on the wrapper and label. This caution is necessary to protect the proprietor from fraud and the public from danger and disappointment. The leading scientific societies, and the first chemists of Europe and America, have pronounced the magnetic powder the only poisonous insect bane in the world, as well as the most effective and fatal means for the destruction of bed-bugs, roaches, fleas, ants, flies, moths, &c., that was ever prepared or sold. The proprietors of the principal city hotels endorse it. Come and see the testimonials of Prince Albert, ex-President Fillmore, and hundreds of the nobility of Europe, as well as the sovereigns of America. The magnetic pills, for the extermination of rats and mice, are endorsed with equal emphasis by all who have tried them. Call and see the medals, diplomas, government orders, scientific certificates, letters, &c., at the Central Depot, No. 424 Broadway.

jun 21 3m EMANUEL LYON.

A perfumed breath.—What lady or gentleman would remain under the curse of a disagreeable breath, when by using the "Balm of a Thousand Flowers" as a dentrifice, would not only render it sweet, but leave the teeth white as alabaster? Many persons do not know their breath is bad, and the subject is so delicate their friends will never mention it. Pour a single drop of the Balm on your tooth-brush, and wash the teeth night and morning. A fifty cent bottle will last a year.

A Beautiful Complexion may easily be acquired by using the "Balm of a Thousand Flowers." It will remove tan, pimples, and freckles from the skin, leaving it of a soft and roseate hue. Wet a towel, pour on two or three drops and wash the face night and morning.

Shaving made Easy.—Wet your shaving brush in either warm or cold water, pour on two or three drops of the "Balm of a Thousand Flowers," ru the beard well, and it will make a beautiful soft lather, much facilitating the operation of shaving. Price only 50 cents. For sale by all druggists.

3mjly5 W. P. FETRIDGE & Co., Franklin Square, New-York.

Phrenology.—Examinations with charts, and written descriptions of character given daily by Prof. Fowler, at the Phrenological Cabinet, Broadway, two blocks above the Park. Private rooms for gentlemen and ladies. 4t12jly

SARAH McFADDEN,

[Marltime and National Flag Manufacturer,]

198 Hudson street, four doors below Canal street, New-York.

Mrs. McFadden justly boasts of having made up for Thomas Francis Meagher, the Irish tri-color flag which he presented to the Confederate Club Men of '48, resident in New-York: also the beautiful U. S. Flag recently presented by Mr. William Kinsella to the Montgomery Guard of Bridgeport.

y21june

DRILL ROOM GUIDE.

NINTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

TROOP A, (Irish Dragoons,) meet at the "Grape Vine Cottage," 45 Second Avenue, between Second and Third streets, on every Monday evening. JAMES MURPHY, Capt.

Company B, (Fitzgerald Guard) drill each Monday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." THOS. MAGUIRE, Capt.

Company D, (Guyon Cadets) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." THOS. MURPHY, Capt.

Company I, (Jackson Guard) drill each Thursday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." W. O. MURPHY, Capt.

Company H, (Erina Guard) drill Thursday Evening at "Military Hall." R. CODDINGTON, Capt.

Company —, (Irish Grenadiers) drill each Thursday Evening at 22 White street. FELIX DUFFY, Capt.

Company C, (Mitchel Guard,) drill each Wednesday Evening at the "Eagle Rooms." —— KEARNS, Capt.

Company J, (Carroll Guard,) drill each evening, at —— GALLAGHER, Capt.

TENTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company —, (Emmet Guard) drill each Thursday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." JOHN KENNEDY, Capt.

ELEVENTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company E, (Montgomery Guard) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." THOS. S. MURPHY, Capt.

FOURTEENTH REGIMENT, N. Y. S. M.

Company E, (Carroll Guard,) drill each Tuesday Evening, at the "Adelphi," Brooklyn. GEO. B. MAGRATH, Capt.

TWENTY-FOURTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company C, (Columbian Guard), drill each Tuesday evening, at Washington Hall, Troy, N. Y. RICHARD S. QUINN, Captain.

TWENTY-FIFTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company —, (Emmet Guard,) drill each Wednesday Evening at Albany, N. Y. P. H. GRIFFIN, Capt.

SIXTY NINTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Troop A, (Irish Dragoons,) drill each Thursday Evening at "Montgomery Hall." Lieut. B. O'CONNOR, Com'dt.

Company C, (—— ——,) drill each Wednesday Evening at the "Eagle Rooms." Lieut. M. KEATING, Com'dt.

Company D, (Irish Rifles) drill each Monday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." JAMES QUINLAN, Capt.

Company E, (Fag a Bealac Guard) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." GILBERT RIORDAN, Capt.

Company F, (Shields' Guard,) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Milleman's Hall," 7th avenue, corner of 26th street. JOHN R. MURPHY, Capt.

Company G, (Mechanic's Guard) drill each Thursday Evening at the "Eagle Rooms." JOHN B. MADDEN, Capt.

Company I, (Irish Fuseleers,) drill each Monday Evening at 42 Prince street. M. CORCORAN, Capt.

Company K, (Brian Boroihme Guard) drill each Monday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." JAMES HUSTON, Capt.

Engineer Corps, (Emmet Life Guard) drill each Monday Evening at "Worth's Military Head Quarters," 22 White st. T. LYNCH, Capt.

70th REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company D, (Napper Tandy Light Artillery) drill each Thursday Evening at Brooklyn City Armory. WM. H. HOGAN, Capt.

SEVENTY FIFTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company A, (State Rifles) drill each Wednesday Evening at cor. of 11th street and 1st Avenue. Lieut. JAS. KELLY, Com'dt.

Company B, (Irish National Guard) drill each Friday Evening at "Centre Market Rooms." JOHN LANE, Capt.

Company C, (Young Ireland Rifles) drill each Friday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." JOHN BURKE, Capt.

Company D, (Wolf Tone Volunteers,) drill each Tuesday Evening, at the "Eagle Rooms." JOHN NUGENT, Capt.

Company E, (T. F. Meagher Rifles) drill each —— at cor. of 11th street and 1st Avenue. J. B. DONNELLY, Capt.

Company F, (Mich'l. Doheny Rifles) drill each —— at ——. J. F. MAGUIRE, Capt.

Company G. (Emmet Rifles) drill each —— at ——. JOHN BEGG, Capt.

INDEPENDENT COMPANIES.

Company —, (O'Mahony Guard, E. M. A.,) drill each Tuesday Evening at "North America Rooms," cor. of Bayard and Bowery. JAMES CAVANAGH, Capt.

Company —, (Sons of '98,) drill each Friday Evening at the corner of 11th street and 1st Avenue, N. Y. M. H. SMITH, Capt.

Company —, (Wolfe Tone Guard,) drill each alternate Monday Evening at the "Second Ward Hotel," cor. of York and Pearl streets, Brooklyn. JOHN J. CLANCY, Com'dt.

Company —, (Irish American Grenadiers,) drill the first and third Thursday of each month at "Montgomery Hall," 76 Prince street, N. Y. MICHAEL DOYLE, Capt.

Company —, (Montgomery Guard,) drill each Monday evening, at Bridgeport, Conn. MICHAEL O'CONNELL, Capt.

Company —, (Republican Guard) drill every Friday Evening, at "Worth's Military Headquarters," 22 White street. W. H. LYONS, Capt.

Company —, (Keystone Rifles,) drill every Monday evening, in Port Carbon, Pa. MATTHEW BYRNES, Captain.

Company—(Emerald Guard), drill each Monday evening, at "Smith's Hall," corner of 11th and First Avenue. JOHN COX, Captain.

SECOND REGIMENT—HUDSON BRIGADE.

Company —, (Montgomery Guard,) drill each week at the "Armory," Grand street, Jersey City. —— FARRELL, Capt.

FIFTH REGIMENT N. J. S. M.

Company C, (O'Brien Columbia Rifles,) drill on the 1st and 3d Tuesdays in each month at their Armory, "Willow Hall," Orange, N. J. OWEN MURPHY, Captain.

SECOND REGIMENT PA. VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Hibernian Greens,) drill each Thursday Evening at 88 South Fifth street, Philadelphia. P. O'KEAN, Capt.

Company —, (Meagher Guard,) drill each Tuesday Evening at 404 Market street, Philadelphia. Lieut. THOMAS ASMITH, Com'dt.

Company —, (Emmet Guard,) drill each Friday Evening at "Ewen Hall," Hawley, Pa. THOM. CAAS. FITSGIBBON, Capt.

FIRST REGIMENT ME. VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Gratian Guard,) drill each Thursday Evening in Bangor, Me. JOHN CARROLL, Capt.

SIXTIETH REGIMENT ILL. S. M.

Company —, (Shields Guard,) drill each Thursday Evening in Chicago, Ill. CHAS. E. MOORE, Capt.

FIRST REGIMENT VA. VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Montgomery Guard,) drill each Monday and Friday Evenings in Richmond. P. S. MOORE, Capt.

SIXTEENTH REGIMENT S. C. S. M.

Company —, (Meagher Guard,) drill the second Thursday of each month in Charleston. GEO. SERGEANT, Capt.

SEVENTEENTH REGIMENT S. C. S. M.

Company —, (Irish Volunteers,) drill once a month in Charleston, S. C. EDWARD MAGRATH, Capt.

—— REGIMENT GEORGIA VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Irish Volunteers,) drill each —— evening, in the city of Augusta. EDWARD J. WALKER, Capt.

FIRST REGIMENT ST. LOUIS LEGION, MO.

Company—(St. Louis Washington Guard) drill each Tuesday evening, in the city of St. Louis, Mo. D. M. FROST, Capt.

FIRST WASHINGTON BATTALION OHIO S. M.

Company A, (Shields Guard), drill on each Thursday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati. DENNIS KAVANAGH, Captain.

Company B, (Sarsfield Guard), drill on each Monday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati. JOHN LEVY, Capt.

Company C, (Republican's Guard,) drill on each Saturday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati. JOHN ELITCH, Capt.

Company D, (Montgomery Light Artillery,) drill on each Wednesday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati. THOS. TIERNAN, Capt.

Company E, (Queen City Cadets, Rifles,) drill on each Tuesday and Friday evenings, at the "Cadets Armory," Pomeroy's Building, Third street, Cincinnati. JOSEPH H. BURKE, Capt.

N. B.—Commandants of Irish-American Military Companies throughout the United States, are respectfully tendered a place in the above "Directory," and requested to send such information as will enable us to represent them in it.

Continental Military Establishment.

J. PARKES,

195 FULTON, BELOW CHURCH, N. Y.

Hats, Caps, Ornaments, &c., made to order. 3m28ju

Business Directory.

NEW-YORK CATHOLIC LIBRARY ASSOCIATION.

"The objects of the Association are, 1st. The dissemination of Catholic and useful knowledge. 2d. To forward the moral and intellectual advancement of its members. 3d. To create among its members a spirit of harmony and good feeling, that will be conducive alike to their interest and pleasure. These to be attained by establishing a Library and Reading Room, and by Readings and Lectures when practicable."

Contributions of either books or money received at the office, No. 107 Nassau street.

M. T. COZANS, President.
JOSEPH McGUIRE, Vice-President.

CORRESPONDING SECRETARY, D. Quinn.
RECORDING SECRETARY, James Fabb.
TREASURER, John Russell.
LIBRARIAN, T. S. Haughey.
DIRECTORS, R. T. Kelly, J. J. Mullen, M. B. Lynch, L. T. Cozans, P. J. McGuire. m3jun14

PIANOS, MELODEONS AND MUSIC

The Cash system adopted!—Prices greatly reduced.

HORACE WATERS,

[No. 333 Broadway, N. Y.,

AGENT FOR THE BEST BOSTON AND NEW-YORK INSTRUMENTS.

The largest assortment of

Pianos, Melodeons, Musical Instruments,

AND

MUSICAL MERCHANDISE,

of all kinds, in the United States, Pianos from ten different Manufactories, comprising those of every variety of style, from the plain, neat and subtsantial 6½ octaves, in Walnut or Rosewood Cases, from $150 to $200, to those of the most elegant finish up to $1000. No house in the Union can compete with the above in the number, variety, and celebrity of its instruments, nor in the extremely low prices at which they are sold.

Horace Waters' Modern Improved Pianos,

WITH OR WITHOUT IRON FRAMES.

possessing in their improvements of over-strings and action, a length of scale power, and compass of tone equal to the Grand Piano, united with the beauty and durability of structure of the square Piano. They are justly pronounced by the Press and by the first Musical Masters to be equal to those of any other manufacturer. They are built of the best and most thoroughly seasoned material, and guaranteed to stand the action of every climate.

Each Instrument guaranteed to give satisfaction, or purchase money refunded. Second-hand Pianos at great bargains, constantly in store; price from $30 to $140.

Horace Waters' Melodeons,

SUPERIOR INSTRUMENTS IN TONE, TOUCH AND DURABILITY OF MAKE.

(Tuned the equal temperament.) Melodeons of all other styles and makes. Price, $45, $60, $75, $100, $125, $140; double Reeds, $150; double Reeds and two banks of Keys, $200. Less a liberal discount. Clergymen and Churches, an extra discount.

Martin's Guitars, Brown's Harps, Flutes, Flutinas, Accordeons, Violins, and Musical Instruments,

OF ALL KINDS, AT LOWER PRICES THAN EVER BEFORE OFFERED TO THE PUBLIC.

A large discount to Teachers and Schools. The trade supplied on the most liberal terms.

MUSIC.

One of the largest and best selected catalogues of Music now published, comprising many of the choice and most popular airs of the day, and will be sold at one-third off from the regular prices.

Music sent by mail to all parts of the country, post paid. Particular and personal attention paid to all orders received by mail. Satisfaction guaranteed in every instance. Pianos and Melodeons for rent, and rent allowed on purchase. Pianos and Melodeons for sale on monthly payments. Second-hand Pianos taken in exchange for new. General and select Catalogues and Schedule of prices forwarded to all parts of the country by mail.

☞ Great inducements offered to agents in all parts of the country, to sell the Horace Waters' Pianos, Melodeons, and Catalogue of Music.

PIANOS AND MUSIC.—We learn that Horace Waters, of 333 Broadway, N. Y., agent for the sale of many of the most celebrated makers of Pianos and Melodeons, is offering them at prices which we advise all who desire to purchase to avail themselves of. He is also selling his large and well-known Catalogue of Music at one-third off from the regular prices, and will forward the same free of postage. His offers to the trade, teachers and schools, are of the most favorable character, all of which he will be able to fill to the letter, for having wisely adopted the cash system. The Horace Waters' Pianos are known as among the very best. We are enabled to speak of those instruments with some degree of confidence, from personal knowledge of their excellent tone and durable quality.—N. Y. Evangelist. ap19tt

I. E. Tate's Pannus Corrium Boot and Shoe store, for tender feet. A large stock of Boots, Shoes and Gaiters always on hand, in great variety, and made to order at the shortest notice, for Gentlemen, Boys and Youths—wholesale and retail, at the lowest Cash prices. Particular attention is requested to the Pannus Corrium or Leather Cloth Boots and Shoes, for those troubled with corns, bunions or tenderness of the feet. Its qualities for summer boots or shoes, surpass anything ever got up in this country for real comfort, as it keeps the feet perfectly cool, and at the same time is susceptible of the finest polish; for a dress boot more so than any French calfskin, with one half the lavor. ISAAC E. TATE.
my 24, 3 mos. 427 Broadway New-York.

Massachusetts Advertisements.

BOSTON EMIGRANT SOCIETY.

OFFICE, CORNER OF SOUTH AND BEACH STREETS.

THE object of tho Society is to protect the Emigrant from imposition. The Office is open daily from 7 o'clock A. M. to 6 P. M. Emigrants and others furnished with employment. The Society, having made the necessary arrangements, is prepared to furnish tickets of transportation to every section of the West. Persons procuring tickets at this office may rest assured that they will reach their destination by the best route, with the least delay, and the lowest cost.

MARTIN GRIFFIN, President.
JAMES FERGUSON, Rec. Sec. | JAMES DACEY, Cor. Sec.
JAMES FLYNN, Treasurer.
M. J. FENELON, Agent.

THE GREAT RUSSIAN REMEDY.

Pro Bono Publico.

"EVERY MOTHER SHOULD HAVE A BOX IN THE HOUSE HANDY IN CASE OF ACCIDENTS TO THE CHILDREN."

REDDING'S RUSSIAN SALVE. It is a Boston remedy of thirty years' standing, and is recommended by physicians. It is a sure and speedy cure for Burns, Piles, Boils, Corns, Felons, Chilblains, and old Sores of every kind.

For Fever Sores, Ulcers, Itch, Scald Head, Nettle Rash, Bunions, Sore Nipples, (recommended by nurses); Whitlows, Sties, Festers, Flea Bites, Spider Stings, Frozen Limbs, Salt Rheum, Scurvy, Sore and Cracked Lips, Sore Nose, Warts and Flesh Wounds, it is a most valuable remedy and cure, which can be testified to by thousands who have used it in the city of Boston and vicinity for the last thirty years.

In no instance will this Salve do an injury, or interfere with a physician's prescriptions. It is made from the purest materials, from a recipe brought from Russia, of articles growing in that country, and the proprietors have letters from all classes, clergymen, physicians, sea captains, nurses, and others who have used it themselves and recommend it to others.

REDDING'S RUSSIAN SALVE is put in large tin boxes, stamped on the cover with the picture of a horse and a disabled soldier, which picture is also engraved on the wrapper. PRICE, 25 Cents a Box. Sold at all the stores in town or country, or may be ordered of any wholesale druggist.
ap19tf Redding & Co., Proprietors, No. 8 State st., Boston.

WEEMAN'S IRON RAILING MANUFACTORY.

No. 26 Merrimac street, Boston, Mass.

Where he has been for the past thirty years.

ALL persons in want of IRON FENCES, suitable for cemetery, house, garden, Balustrades, &c., can, by calling on the subscriber, purchase a better fence at a lower price, than at any other establishment in the state, as he makes it his entire business.
Jun14m6 EBENEZER WEEMAM.

B. S. TREANOR,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,

15 MASSACHUSETTS BLOCK, COURT SQUARE, BOSTON.

Particular attention paid to Conveyancing, and the examination of titles to Real Estate.

Medical.

THE CAUSE OF CONSUMPTION.

BRONCHITIS.—WHAT PRODUCES BRONCHITIS?

FIRST STAGE OF DISEASE.

COSTIVENESS is the first link that connects disease in the System. It creates, induces, feeds and supports Bronchitis; and is slightly or indifferently treated, as though it was of no serious tendency: nevertheless, it has laid the fonndation of that destroying disease, without the knowledge of the sufferers, undermining and sapping the very vitals of their constitutions.

Among the numerous class of diseases which afflict man, there is none more silent or treacherous in its approaches or more certain to triumph over its slowly consuming victim, than that formidable and insidious leveller of humanity—Bronchitis, which is produced by catching cold, through a neglect of regulating the state of the bowels when arriving to adult age. It seldom excites attention or alarm in the mind of any person, until it has sown the seed of disease and suffering in the human system, by checking the circulation of the blood; and it is to this source alone that we attribute the awful mortality of Consumption.

The following is a simple but correct illustration, namely:—If the culverts and sewers of the city were choked or clogged up, accidentally or otherwise, what would be the result? An overflow of accumulated filth and slush on the surface of the earth in its neighborhood, until it fills every hole, corner and crevice. This is quite similar to the human body, when the channel or sewer of life, as I may term it, which is the bowels, is checked or confined through constipation or some unnatural obstruction, which prevents the blood from circulating through the general system.

What, then, is the consequence? An accumulation of diseased matter and bile. Where will this bile and poisonous substance go to when it is prevented from taking its natural exit, through the bowels? It must surge itself back again into the blood, to be infused through the entire frame by the agency of the blood, bringing in its passage disease and suffering, and exhibiting itself by pain, nervous sensations and irritation all over the body—producing a bad feeling at the stomach, sourness of the food, a rush of blood to the head, catarrh, bronchitis, a short dry cough, dizziness, pain in the shoulders, and through or under the shonlder blades, cold feet, a peevish and irritable temper, annoyed by this hacking cough, and then gradually begins the expectorating from the throat of a lightish phlegm, resembling boiled starch or tough jelly of various colors, from a light to a darkish substance, and hawked up like a string.

SECOND STAGE.

From this period the patient is aware of some unusual and disagreeable feeling, though he seldom takes the hint till it goes from bad to worse. Catching cold from the slightest exposure, which he cannot avoid in consequence of the blood being in a diseased and corrupt condition for a long time previous to the appearance of those troublous symptoms, through the impure state of the blood, that at every breath the patient draws he inhales a similar quantity of fresh air by the nostrils and mouth, which keeps the tickling that exists in the throat and bronchial tubes in a ferment of irritation—this is the reason why some people complain of catching cold, even when confined to their room. Hence the sufferer is hacking, hawking, or expectorating a little at a time, with the impression that there is something in his throat that wants to come out; and which he desires to get out. There is a frequent desire for heavy sighing, with a dryness of the nostrils, which inclines the patient to pick or scratch them; sleepy, drowsy, dull, and heavy loss of appetite, and confused memory; a stuffing, tightness, and oppression of the chest, with a rawness and soreness of the gullet of the throat. This is caused by the silent enemy that has lurked in the system for months, and even years, and has at last aroused your fears, and well it might; for out of one hundred persons who die of Consumption ninety-nine are owing to disease of the throat alone, though simply called Bronchitis; and wretchedly treated by this self-pretended and dignified class of sheepskin physicians termed M. D.'s, who have proved a curse to the human family. They treat their patient on the following abusive principle, by cutting the tonsols and palate from the throat, as you might cut the gills out of a fish—next comes the solution or wash of nitrate of silver or caustic, and the whalebone swab, to wash and burn away the disease that has occupied the throat. Then comes the application of blister, and Croton oil externally to the throat and neck, to draw out the inflammation, as the physicians suppose (what blind philosophy.) Then comes the quack sheet of their MATERIA MEDICA—Calomel, Antimony, Morphine and Opium, to salivate and lull the feelings of the patient, which adds to the disease and increases the suffering, by giving the disease an opporiunity of triumphing over nature. What a delusive idea to think the above treatment would be available in having recourse to those debilitating and irritating remedies of cutting, burning, blistering, purging and starving, which is of itself sufficient to lower and reduce the constitution of an ox.

THE THIRD STAGE

Confirms the above remarks. While undergoing this torturing treatment, the constitution is gradually failing and giving away, in giving rise to more alarming symptoms, evidently preparing its victim for the shroud, while the physician and friends fail to see the cause until those confirmed symptoms of consumption set in, but foolishly assign the cause to some other besides the genuine one, till the disease has reached its meridian, with a complication of fresh symptoms, breathing short and hurried, cough frequent, with an accumulation of corrupted matter, sometimes streaked with blood; profuse night sweats, emaciation and debility; cold chills in the forenoon, with a burning fever after; flesh soft and flabby, the limbs scarcely able to support the body; a susceptibility of catching cold on the least exposure, attended with a hoarseness and loss of voice, with a very heavy expectoration in the forenoon; flying pains in the chest, sides and shoulders, with a severe fit of coughing in the morning, or awaking from sleep. The painful crisis is fast approaching, with a swelling and puffing of the feet and ankles, and frequent attacks of diarrhœa. In females, the symptoms are more distressing at an earlier period than in the male, with a weakness in the back and loins, a sinking and exhausted feeling at the stomach, nervous and excitable, with gradual and frequent interruptions of the monthly flow, and as the disease progresses, a total or final cessation of it, with the harbinger of a broken down constitution which is a discharge of whites, a symptom that proves very debilitating and irritating to females.

All the above symptoms and sufferings are the fruits of costiveness at an early period, accruing to the sufferer through neglect of keeping the bowels in gentle operation, which would circulate the blood, and prove as ventilation to the general system, from the age of 18 to 26, when this disease creeps on and grows on, until every organ in the body is totally disorganized.

My long experience and observations, and my unprecedented success in treating consumption, inclines me to devote the remainder of my life to the cause of suffering humanity. I have cured more consumptive patients in the last ten years than any other doctor in the world in that time, and not by steam, smoke or vapor, nor by smelling medicine through an India rubber or glass tube, but through the selection I make from the forest and verdant meadows. I can always determine on examination whether I can be successful or not, and I speak accordingly. I have made it a rule to treat no disease longer than three weeks. If I cannot check the fatal progress of the disease in that time, I give up the patient as lost, and lead the sufferer to no further expense.

☞ In compliance with the repeated solicitations of consumptive patients living in remote parts of the country, I have opened an hospital at No. 178 Bowery, for the exclusive treatment of those laboring under any species of the above disease, where I can bestow on them the unremitted attention which the seriousness of their cases require; where I can be able to regulate their diet and regimen according to circumstances. Three weeks under the supervision of my especial care is worth four months at a distance.

All persons desirous of medical information can obtain it by enclosing one dollar, when all information and communication will be forwarded on receipt.

D. Durkin, Chronic and Consumptive Doctor,
my31 No. 178 Bowery, New-York.

DR. B. F. ADAMS,

SURGEON DENTIST, (formerly of Barclay street,) feeling grateful for the patronage so liberally bestowed upon him for the last fourteen years, respectfully informs his friends and the public, that he has taken an elegant suite of rooms, at

NO. 122 CHAMBERS STREET,

(near the Sixth and Eighth Avenue Railroads,) where he may always be found, ready to perform all operations pertaining to his profession, in a manner unsurpassed, and on the most reasonable terms. Whole or part sets of incorruptible teeth inserted without pain, on gold plate or gutta percha, excelling nature in beauty and durability. No impure gold or dangerous amalgams used. Irregularities in children's teeth prevented, or of adults remedied. Cleansing, extracting, &c. &c., all at reduced prices. Sets of teeth inserted on Silver or Gutta Percha, for six shillings each. Teeth examined, and advice given free of charge. Please call.
8m7jun B. F. ADAMS, 122 Chambers street, New-York.

DR. J. VOORHIES,

MEDICAL ELECTRICIAN,

NO. 69 SANDS STREET,

Brooklyn.

Office hours from 9 A. M. to 4 P. M.

N. B. All chronic or nervous diseases cured by Electricity in some form. Electro Medicated Vapor Baths ready for operation. Dropsy can be cured by this treatment. Consultations free. m8jun14

WRITING INKS.

WE ask the attention of all who wish imperishable records,—a matter of great importance to State, County and Town Offices, Banks, and others, to Dr. Chilton's test of the prominent Inks in use, made with a view to show their different degrees of permanence by exposure. Engraved facsimiles of the test can be seen at our office.

Thaddeus Davids & Co.,
ap19tm Manufacturing Stationers, 26 Cliff street.

Medical.

"Eye and Ear."—DOCTOR HENDERSON, Oculist and Aurist, 419 Broadway, corner of Canal street, treats all diseases of the eye and ear, without cupping, leeching, blistering or the use of calomel. Within the past two years upwards of thirty cases of blindness from inflamation have been restored to sight, to whom reference can be given, (hundreds of which can be seen in my circular,) by inclosing three postage stamps. Electro-chemical Medicated Vapor and Sulphur, hot and cold water BATHS. Office hours 9 A. M. to 5 P. M. Sundays and evenings by appointment. 419 Broadway, corner of Canal st., New-York. my17 3m

ARTIFICIAL EYES inserted.

H. G. LUTHER,

SURGICAL AND MECHANICAL DENTIST,

No. 698 BROADWAY, Second House above Fourth st.

HAVING enjoyed an extensive practice during the last twelve years, feels confident of his ability to give perfect satisfaction to all who may honor him with their preference. He is prepared to perform all operations connected with his profession, in the most faithful manner, and in strict accordance with scientific principles, embracing all the recent improvements of the day.

References of the most respectable character given if desired. Patronage respectfully solicited.

☞ N. B. Teeth extracted without pain. my17 3m

Dr. J. J. McGowan, Physician and Surgeon, Graduate of Harvard University, Fellow of the Massachusetts and Rhode Island Medical Societies, etc., has removed to No. 69 Canal street, New-York, a few doors from Broadway, where he will attend to calls in every branch of the medical profession. Dr. McG. will devote particular attention to chronic diseases, and those of women and children. m10 1t

New School of Medicine and Pharmacy. The last Unfolding of the Art of Healing. My daily practice proves that I CURE CONSUMPTION, in all its varied forms and most advanced states, as readily as any other disease. Therefore I desire to treat all Consumptives, but particularly those who have tried all other physicians without relief. Mrs. M. J. MARIN, M.D., No. 87. Lafayette place, N. Y. (First street east of Broadway, between 4th and 8th sts.) Office hours: from 10 A. M. to 1 P. M., exclusively for Ladies; and from 2 to 5 P. M., for Gentlemen, Wednesdays excepted. All other hours by appointment. my31 3m

THE GREATEST WONDER OF THE AGE!

A REMEDY WHICH CURES IN FIVE MINUTES.—M. LEROUX'S FRENCH CHOLERA COGNAC BITTERS.—This wonderful and scientific compound is recommended by the most eminent and learned physicians of all Europe and America, and enjoys the best reputation of anything similar ever offered. It is without doubt the best, most efficient and generally acknowledged remedy against Cholera, dysentery, diarrhœa, and complaints of the stomach in general. The numerous patients who have tried it according to directions, have invariably found relief in a very short time, and the best proof of it is, that since this standard remedy was introducee in the armies of the allies in the Crimea, the mortality of the soldiers from Cholera and similar diseases was reduced by over 75 per cent.; in consideration of which, the inventor was presented by the French and English governments with a gold medal, bearing the inscription, "Hail! M. LEROUX, the great Chemist and inventor, by whose knowledge our armies are preserved from Cholera."

This invaluable preparation is also a remedy for biliousness, indigestion, weakness, and general derangement of the stomach. Upon being taken, it creates appetite, and prevents the heaviness attendant upon eating, by persons who are dyspeptic.

In this city, also, this remedy has been tried with the most undoubted success, and the undersigned can produce the best testimonials of our most celebrated physicians, as to its immediate and complete success, which he will be happy at any time to show to any that may wish to see them. S. STEINFELD, sole agent for the United States, No. 70 Nassau street, corner of John.

P. S.—Those not having money to pay, may call at my place from 3 to 5 P. M. and receive this remedy gratis. my17 3m

The Best Hair Dye.—DR. O. M. BALLARD'S new article received the highest premium at the World's Fair and American Institute, where it was examined by the distinguished Chemists, Dr. Chilton, and Prof. John Torrey, and pronounced the best. For sale by the best Druggists. Principal office and store, 498 Broadway, New-York. my17 3m

The undersigned announces to the legitimate faculty that he has opened a store for the dispensing of pure medicines, chemicals, &c. Having obtained a knowledge of the profession in the best schools in the world, during twelve years, he will be able to compound prescriptions precisely as they are ordered. JOHN. C. GILLES, Apothecary,
21ju3m 235 Bleecker, two doors above Barrow.

Reed's Celebrated London Cordial Gin, having gained much popularity in this country, being distilled the same as that in London, as he was formerly a distiller of the same kind of Gin in England, under the EXCISE LAWS.

This article is used in every hospital in and out of England's great metropolis. Its medicinal properties are invaluable.

☞ This Gin is not an imitation or a mixture of raw materials, of which much is sold in this city, under the name of London Cordial Gin, but a genuine and pure article, equal to any imported.

W. R. takes the opportunity of thanking the public for their liberal support, support, and begs a continuance of the same.

DISTILLERY,
118 East 29th st., New-York, between 2d and 3d avenues.

LABORATORY AND CHEMICAL OFFICE,
18 Exchange Place, N. Y., March 4, 1856.

MR. REED: Sir—I have submitted to close examination two samples of London Cordial Gin, manufactured by you, and purporting to equal the English article. I find on comparison with samples of Hodges' and Burnett's previously examined by me, and which I know to have been imported direct, that the quality of yours is by no means inferior to their celebrated compounds while the perfect method you posess of rectifying, insures an article of a higher degree of purity and flavor, when it has the equal advantage of time to soften it, than much of the so-called imported London gin. As a medicinal agent and cordial, under proper advice, it may be depended upon, from the care with which you select the essential oils combined with it in the distillation.

Yours, respectfully,
ISAIAH DECK, M. D.,
Consulting and Analytical Chemist.

Mr. REED'S Distillery, 118 East Twenty-ninth st., New-York. [my31 3m

MRS. HAYES' SYRUP.

For Dysentery and Bowel Complaints.

WARRANTED to cure the worst cases in less than twenty-four hours, if used according to directions. It has stood the test of thirty-five years and has never been known to fail, even when the most eminent physicians had pronounced the patient beyond the reach of medicine. Over two thousand satisfactory references and certificates can be produced, sufficient to prove its superiority over all other preparations for these complaints.

The Syrup can be given to a child a week old with perfect safety. It is pleasant to the taste, and harmless in its composition, it being free from opium, alcohol, &c. Prepared and sold by Mrs. M. Hayes, 175 Fulton st., Brooklyn. Sold also by Joseph W. Hayes, 159 Atlantic st., H. Parker, cor. of Fulton Avenue and Cumberland street, M. Evans, corner of Myrtle and Classon avenues, Brooklyn. In New-York by F. C. Wells & Co., 115 Franklin street, C. H. Ring, 92 Broadway, T. T. Green, 862 Broadway, Guion, corner of Bowery and Grand streets, W. S. Dunham, 476 Broadway. In Williamsburg, J. D. Norvill, 26 Grand street. In Newark, by R. VanBuskirk, cor. of Market and Broad streets. 8m19jly

Special Notices.

OFFICE OF RECEIVER OF TAXES, No. 32 Chambers street, New Court house

To avoid the risks that must inevitably occur from the crowd of Tax Payers who put off to the latest day the payment of their taxes, I have determined to adopt the following rule, which will be rigidly adhered to during my term of office. I shall receive no money after 2 o'clock p. m. Every officer in this department is STRICTLY PROHIBITED from receiving ENVELOPES containing money or checks for the payment of Taxes. By order,
8mjly5 HENRY H. HOWARD, Receiver.
New-York, June 28, 1856.

Mayor's Office, New-York, June 16, 1856.

Notice to Owners of Dogs.—Notice is hereby given that on and after Wednesday, June 25th inst., the ordinance respecting dogs found running loose or at large in any street south of Forty-second street, without being muzzled, will be strictly enforced. The sum of fifty cents will be paid for every dog brought alive to the Pound, on the corner of First Avenue and Thirty-first street, which shall have been found in the streets, running loose or at large without being properly muzzled. on presentation of the certificate of the pound-keeper to the Chief of Police at his office in the Park. Owners of dogs may reclaim them at the Pound between sunrise and sunset on the day on which they are received, on payment of expenses.

FERNANDO WOOD, Mayor.

Information wanted of Patrick Ryan, late of Nenagh, in the county of Tipperary, Ireland, aged about 30 years, farmer, who left Limerick in the month of May, 1851, and who when last heard from was in Orange county, N. Y., but is now supposed to be living in Vandalia, Fayette county, Indiana. Any information of his whereabouts sent to the office of the Commissioners of Emigration, New-York, will be thankfully received by his wife, jly 1

Business Directory.

RICH CARPETING.

1856. SPRING IMPORTATION. 1856.

ARTHUR DONNELLY,

98 BOWERY, (West side,) BETWEEN GRAND AND HESTER STREETS.

IS now prepared to exhibit his New Spring Styles of

Foreign and Domestic Carpetings,

Comprising every grade and every description, from the Cheapest Fabric to the Richest.

Importing his goods direct and thus saving the commission and interest which most dealers pay, he is enabled to offer them at prices highly favorable to consumers, who will find at his store, among other Carpetings adopted to all varieties of taste, the following elegant descriptions:

Medallions,	at	14s to 18s per yard.
Velvet,	"	10s to 16s "
Tapestry,	"	6s to 12s "
Brussels,	"	7s to 12s "
Three-ply,	"	7s to 10s "
Ingrain,	"	3s to 7s "
Common Ingrain,	"	18d to 3s "

English and American Floor Oil Cloths,

of every imaginable width, pattern and style.

A complete and choice assortment of

STAIR AND HALL CARPETS, RUGS, MATS, MATTINGS,

and of everything else appertaining to the Carpet Trade.

ARTHUR DONNELLY, 98 Bowery, (West side,)
ap198m Between Grand and Hester sts., N. Y.

NEW STORE

AND

NEW GOODS.

THE subscriber having leased for a term of years the premises

374 Hudson street,

and made exthnsive additions thereto, and having laid in a large stock o

Carpeting and Oil Cloths,

stly bought at Auction, for CASH, is now prepared to sell them at the owing extremely low prices:

Tapestry Brussels, 3s. usually sold at 10s.
Three Ply Ingrain 8s. usually sold at 10s.
Superfine do 6s. usually sold at 8s.
Fine do 5s. usually sold at 6s.
Common do All WOOL 3s. 6d. per yard, a price absolely unheard of.

Ingrain, Cotton Warp and Wool Filling 2s. 6d.
Oil Cloths 3s. per yard, usually sold at 5s.

Mats, Matting, Table and Piano Covers, Venetian and Hall Carpetting, Stair Rods, &c. &c.

Clergymen and Churches furnished at wholesale prices.

Goods in all cases warranted as represented.

J. R. Landon, 374 Hudson street, New-York,
3mjun a few doors from Hamersly.

JAMES CAIN,

MERCHANT TAILOR,

AND

CLOTHIER,

NO. 129 FULTON STREET,

(HERALD BUILDING,) New-York.
my31y

PHAIR & CO.,

STEAM JOB PRINTERS,

22 BEEKMAN STREET, NEW-YORK,

Are prepared to do Printing of all kinds in the best style and on reasonable terms. PARTIES desiring printing for BALLS, PARTIES, EXCURSIONS, CONCERTS, or PUBLIC MEETINGS, are invited to give us a call.
3mjly26

JAMES CRAFT,

FANCY CARD AND JOB PRINTER,

CORNER ANN AND NASSAU STREETS,

Entrance 29 Ann street, New-York. tf9au

GEO. McDONNELL,

BOOT AND SHOE MANUFACTURER,

82 PARK ROW, NEXT DOOR TO LOVEJOY'S HOTEL, NEW-YORK.

☞ Boots, Shoes, and Gaiters of the best quality made to order.

3m.my10 Geo. McDonnell.

R. HOGAN,

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL

UMBRELLA AND PARASOL MANUFACTURER,

374 BOWERY, NEAR FOURTH STREET.

Repairing neatly executed. my17 3m*

M. GRADY.

27 FAYETTE STREET, LOWELL, MASS.

ju21 Agent for the IRISH NEWS and all the other choice literature of the day.

KNOX'S

OFFICE FURNITURE WAREROOMS,

59 BEEKMAN STREET, UP STAIRS.

DESKS! DESKS!! DESKS!!!

DOUBLE and Single counting-room DESKS, from 3 to 8 feet long. Office Desks from 3 to 6 ft., of Mahogany, blackwalnut and oak; cases for Books and pigeon-holes. Office chairs, cushions, lounges and Office Tables of every description. my17 tf

---

McLOUGHLIN & McSHANE,

(Successors to THOS. ANDREWS,)

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALERS IN

CHOICE TEAS, COFFEES, WINES, BRANDIES, AND GROCERIES,

61 FULTON STREET, near Cliff street,
NEW-YORK. 18m

☞ SHIP STORES SUPPLIED. ☜

MRS. J. McCARTHY,

FASHIONABLE MILLINERY STORE,

44 THIRD AVENUE,

Third door from 10th Street, NEW-YORK.

Cheap Straw Hats, Ribbons, Flowers, Ladies' Straw Goods.

Straw Bonnets cleaned and altered to the newest fashions.

LADIES' OWN MATERIALS MADE UP TO THE LATEST STYLES. tf

Analytical and Metallurgical Chemistry and Mining Geology.

DR. ISAIAH DECK,

No. 18 EXCHANGE PLACE, NEW-YORK.

MAY be consulted on all subjects relating to Practical Chemistry, Mining- and Metallurgy. Assays of Ores, Analyses of Minerals, and Mining Products in general carefully and expeditiously conducted, and sound opinions delivered upon the most economical methods of working them, based on the atest chemical discoveries. Geological and Mining Surveys undertaken in any part of the world—Dr. DECK having had considerable experience in this branch of his profession. my31 3m

---

NICHOLAS WALSH.

SEXTON AND UNDERTAKER.

NO. 8 SIXTH AVENUE.

Business Directory.

MEAGHER & CAMPBELL,

ATTORNEYS AND COUNSELLORS AT LAW,

NO. 82 BROADWAY.

NOTARY PUBLIC,

Commissioner for the U. S. Court of Claims.

THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER, having formed a partnership with MALCOLM CAMPBELL, for the general practice of the law, the firm will continue to devote their attention to such law business as may be intrusted to them, including conveyancing, practice in all the courts of the state of New-York and of the United States, and general collecting business in all parts of the world. Particular attention will be given to the prosecution of claims against the United States in the Court of Claims.

Mr. Meagher may be consulted daily, on law business only, at No. 82 Broadway, from three till five o'clock P. M.

THOS. H. HURLEY,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,

NO. 10 CENTRE ST., OPPOSITE CITY HALL.

WILLIAM E. ROBINSON,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR,

HAVING entered into partnership with ISAAC DAYTON, Esq., (author of the work on Surrogates,) and WILLIAM A. COURSEN, Esq., gentlemen long known, and of high standing at the New-York Bar, has removed to their new office at 267 BROADWAY, third door below Chambers street.

☞ All business either in the Criminal or Civil Courts, promptly and faithfully attended to. ap191y

---

JOHN O'ROURKE,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,

NO. 10 CENTRE STREET,

(Opposite the Superior Court Buildings,)

7jun NEW-YORK.

JAMES M. SHEEHAN,

Attorney and Counsellor at Law,

No. 13 Chambers Street, New-York.

2yljn Collections promptly attended to, and Liens carefully filed, &c.

JOHN A. McSORLEY,

CUSTOM HOUSE AND SHIP BROKER, AND NOTARY PUBLIC,

7 BROAD STREET,

Clergymen, importing Vestments, Church Ornaments, &c., will be liberally treated with by calling on the subscriber.

REFERENCES:

Messrs. Thos. McClune & Co., | Messrs. D. & J. Sadlier & Co.,
C. Meletta, | James Cook & Co. 6m

JAMES HARLIN,

WATCH, CLOCK MAKER, AND JEWELER.

236 HENRY STREET, BROOKLYN.

All watches and clocks bought or repaired at my establishment, warranted for twelve months. *

JOHN FOLEY,

WATCHMAKER,

JEWELER AND FINISHER OF FINE WATCHES,

NO. 262 BOWERY.

Between Spring and Prince Streets, New-York.

Watches of a superior quality made to order, and warranted not to err more than four minutes a year. Cases jointed, works jeweled, and chronometer balances set in the best style. Jewelry of every kind repaired in a jul2m6 workmanlike manner. All orders punctually attended to.

J. McCARTEN,

WATCH AND CLOCK MAKER,

154 SEVENTH AVENUE.

Between 20th and 21st streets, New-York.

Watches, Clocks, and Jewelry carefully repaired and warranted. A good
7jun assortment of watches and clocks always on hand. 3m

JOHN FOLEY,

MANUFACTURER OF FINE GOLD PENS

BEST QUALITY ONLY.

GOLD AND SILVER PENCIL CASES.

my24tf No. 163 BROADWAY, NEW-YORK.

JOHN KENNEDY'S

STEAM MARBLE WORKS,

35TH STREET, NEAR BROADWAY.

Statuary and Marble Mantle-Pieces, Monuments, Grave Stones, Tombs, &c. All orders thankfully received and punctually attended to. *

THOMAS GAFFNEY'S

SOAP AND CANDLE

MANUFACTORY,

825 EAST SENECA STREET, BUFFALO,

NEW-YORK. 6mJune7

WILLIAM M. SMITH,

The Public Favorite, and only American Opposition

BILL POSTER AND DISTRIBUTOR,

THE OLDEST ESTABLISHED IN THE BUSINESS.

Work done promptly and faithfully—cheaper, quicker, and better than any other poster in the city. Work done either in New-York, Brooklyn, Williamsburgh, or Jersey City. Boards lent for concerts, or any kind of work.

OFFICE, 28½ SPRUCE STREET, NEW-YORK,
ap26tf (Between William and Gold streets.)

THE METROPOLITAN

FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY,

No. 108 BROADWAY,

(Cor. Pine Street.)

CASH CAPITAL $300,000.

JAMES LORIMER GRAHAM, President.

EDWARD A. STANSBURY, Secretary. my31y

WILLARD, FELT & CO.,

MANUFACTURERS OF ACCOUNT BOOKS,

AND IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN PAPER AND STATIONERY,

NO. 14 MAIDEN LANE,

3mos (near Broadway.)

MATTHEW WALLACE,

25 CLARK STREET, CHICAGO, ILL.,

WHOLESALE DEALER IN NEWSPAPERS, BOOKS, &c.

☞ "The Irish News," on hand, by the earliest moment, each week. tf

Hotels.

STEVENS HOUSE.

(LATE DELMONICO'S HOTEL.

21, 22, 25, & 27 Broadway, New-York.

THE undersigned avails himself of this opportunity of informing his friends and the public that he has leased the above named house for a term of years, and has made extensive alterations and repairs, and omitted nothing that will tend to the accomodations or comfort of guests. The house having been newly furnished throughout in the most thorough and modern style, with a view to convenience and comfort, and as it will be conducted on the European plan, and with an experienced caterer, and thorough cooks, he hopes to give satisfaction to those who favor him with their patronage which has never failed while in other Hotels in this city.

Catholic families and clergymen visiting New-York will find in the arrangements of this spacious establishment, elegance, convenience, and comfort, at moderate charges. JOHN O'GRADY, JR.,
3m5jly Formerly of Judson's Hotel and the Brandreth House.

NEW HOTEL.

LAFARGE HOUSE,

Broadway, New-York.

This new and beautiful First-class Hotel, is now open for the reception of guests. The location is the most pleasant part of Broadway, opposite Bond street, and in the immediate vicinity of the most fashionable places of amusement. The rooms are large and airy, and so arranged that they may be connected in suites for families, or used separately for single seasons. The patronage of the public is respectfully solicited.

3m19jly STONE & BURROUGHS, Proprietors.

JAMES McPYKE,

James McPyke respectfully informs his friends and the public that he has leased for a term of years the spacious and elegant premises 90 Prince street, three doors west of Broadway, which he will open for the reception of his old patrons, friends, and those who will honor him with their patronage on the 4th inst. The house has been newly painted and furnished in a commodious manner, for the comfort of his guests. His bar will contain the choicest and most approved brands of liquor, and his larder will always be stocked with the finest luxuries and delicacies of the season. Rooms for private parties. Families supplied with meals at all hours. 4t12jly

---

HOSEY & RILEY,

PACIFIC RESTAURANT,

600 BROADWAY, NEW-YORK.

Private entrance on the first floor, 134 Crosby street.

☞ Hosey & Riley invite their friends to give them a call.

my24 3m

Business Directory.

THE VIRGINIA TOBACCO AGENCY,

(ESTABLISHED IN 1836.)

45 Water street, New-York.

CHARLES M. CONNOLLY,

Commission Merchant and Agent for the sale of Manufactured Tobacco.

Has always on hand, at the above agency, a full supply of

Manufactured Tobacco,

Of all brands and descriptions, direct from the Virginia Factories, for sale on liberal terms. jly5 y

---

P. COTTER,

DEALER IN

LONDON BROWN STOUT, SCOTCH & BURTON ALES,

PHILADELPHIA PORTER, ALE, CHAMPAIGNE CIDER AND SODA WATER.

Mercer House,

Corner of Broome and Mercer streets, New-York.

JOHN J. STAFF'S.

WINES, LIQUORS, SEGARS,
LONDON, DUBLIN, PHILADELPHIA,
PORTER and ALE,
SCOTCH, BURTON, and EAST INDIA ALES,
CHAMPAGNE CIDER, in quantities to suit purchasers,
at 333 Broadway,
tf corner of Anthony street, New-York.

P. MONAGHAN,

IMPORTER of the various and best brands of HAVANA SEGARS, &c. &c. Country and city merchants supplied in bond or in store. Duties paid or unpaid. 121 PEARL STREET, New-York.

N. B.—Sole Importer of the J. M. Vichot, La Union, and La Primavera brands. ap261y

---

WISE'S IRISH MALT WHISKEY.

IMPORTED by J. & P. Hogan, Nos. 6 and 12 West street, and 253 Third Avenue, corner of 21st street, New-York, and corner of Vanbrunt and Sullivan streets, Brooklyn. J. & P. Hogan wish to inform their friends and the public that they have just received a large quantity of WISE'S CORK MALT WHISKEY, which will be sold at a reduced price, out of bond and at the above establishment. They are the only firm who import the same in New-York. ap261y

---

DRY-DOCK DISTILLERY.

No. 291 East-thirteenth st., near Avenue B.

JAMES RUSSELL,

Rectifier and Manufacturer of Cordials,

IMPORTER AND DEALER

IN Foreign and Domestic Wines, Liquors, Cordials, &c. J. R. having had long experience in the liquor trade, he has facilities of selecting wines and liquors of the most superior quality, which he offers to dealers and families at the lowest market prices, and flatters himself that a single trial will be quite sufficient to secure custom.

Goods delivered free of expense in any part of the city, and country orders promptly attended to. 3m jun14

P. CUFF,

RECTIFIER AND DISTILLER,

NO. 306 EIGHTH AVENUE.

NEW-YORK.

Dealer in Foreign Wines and Liquors.

☞ Goods sent to all parts of the country. Orders of all kinds promptly attended to. y jly26

CALL ON

THOMAS LYNCH,

OF the "FULTON SHADES," Fulton Ferry, Brooklyn, for the best XX and XXX ales, brandies, and segars.

The Irish News.

THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.
JOHN SAVAGE, LITERARY EDITOR.

THREE DOLLARS PER ANNUM. SINGLE COPIES 6 CENTS.
Publication Office, 29 Ann St., cor. of Nassau.

VOL. I. NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, AUGUST 16, 1856. NO. 19.

Publications.

CONTENTS OF NO. XIX.

Editorial.

IRISH VOTES IN THE BRITISH PARLIAMENT ON THE AMERICAN QUESTION.
SMITH O'BRIEN—THE EXILE'S RETURN.
CASUALTIES AND HOMICIDES.
THE YOUNG MEN'S PIC-NIC.
"MADRID IS TRANQUIL."
THE QUEEN'S SPEECH.

Correspondence.

Letter from Dublin—by "Kilmainham."
Paragraphs from Irish Papers—Pen and Scissors Work.

Literature.

PERSONAL RECOLLECTIONS.—The Galway Election—The Last of it.
The Epidemic in the Rocky Mountains—The Medicine-Calf of the Crows.
Plagiary or no Plagiary—The Poet of Putnam's Magazine.
Ranney's Maps.—Democratic Review.—Life of the Blessed Virgin.

Poetry.

A Breeze through the Forest,—by "Shamrock."

Miscellaneous.

European News.—Irish Provincial News—Irish Assizes Intelligence.—Gen. Walker, John Mitchel and Devin Reilly, by Joe Brennan.—Buchanan and the Press.—American News—Congressional Summary, &c.

Answers to Correspondents.

THE IRISH NEWS,

EDITED BY THE PROPRIETOR,

THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER,

DEDICATED TO THE SERVICE OF THE

IRISH PEOPLE,

AT HOME AND ABROAD,

Will be published every Saturday, on and after the 12th of April, at 29 Ann street, corner of Nassau, New-York.

TERMS.

For subscribers, $3 per annum: 6 cents a copy.
For retailers and carriers, $4 per hundred.
For Clubs, 4 copies to one address, per annum, $10.
" 7 " " " " $17.
" 10 " " " " $20.

For advertising.—Each square of eight lines,

Transient - - - - - - - - - - - - - $1
Monthly - - - - - - - - - - - - - $2
Quarterly - - - - - - - - - - - - - $5
Yearly - - - - - - - - - - - - - $16

N. B. Four lines, or under, constitute half a square.

Agents or Postmasters who interest themselves in procuring and remitting subscriptions, may retain 50 cents out of each annual subscription of $3.

☞ Subscribers, Agents, and Advertisers will please send in their orders early, and observe that our terms are invariably, payments in advance.

Communications of a PRIVATE nature should always be marked so. Those connected with the editorial department are to be addressed to Thomas Francis Meagher, and those on business to Richard J. Lalor, Irish News Office, 29 Ann street, corner of Nassau.

☞ Subscribers, residing in New-York, Brooklyn, and Williamsburgh, who pay in advance, will have their papers neatly enveloped, addressed, and delivered on each Wednesday through Boyd's Express or some similar medium.

Wholesale Dealers.

DEXTER & BROTHERS, 14 Ann Street, New-York.
ROSS & TOUSEY, 108 Nassau Street, New-York.
SAMUEL YATES, 22 Beekman Street, New-York.
MIKE MADDEN, 22 Ann Street, New-York.
HAMILTON & JOHNSON, 30 Ann Street, New-York.
DE WITT & DAVENPORT, 160 & 162 Nassau Street, New-York.
HENRY TAYLOR, Baltimore, Md.
FEDERHEN & CO., 18 Court Street, Boston.
WM. HICKEY, 128 Federal Street, Boston.
REDDING & CO., 8 Court Street, Boston.
THOS. McLOUGHLIN, 42 South 4th Street, Philadelphia.
T. R. CALLENDER, 88 South-Third Street, Philadelphia.
DROVIN & CO., Philadelphia.
A. WINCH, 116 Chestnut street.
J. M. CRAWFORD, 30 and 32 Chestnut Street, St. Louis, Mo.
MATTHEW WALLACE, 25 Clark Street, Chicago, Ill.
McNALLY & CO., 75 Dearborn Street.
J. W. SULLIVAN, Kearney Street, San Francisco, Cal.
ROY'S, Detroit, Mich.
J. B. MAHONY, Cincinnati, Ohio.
J. P. WALSH, Cincinnati, Ohio.
—— COURTNEY, Charleston, South Carolina.
BRIOE, 100 Exchange Place, New Orleans.
JOHN PLASTO, 144 Upper Abbey street, Dublin.
STILL & CO., 120 Montgomery street, San Francisco.
WM. BOYLE, News Carrier, San Francisco.
J. C. Morgan, next post office, New Orleans.

Retail Dealers.

NAGLE, Bangor, Me.
O'CONNELL, Cincinnati, O.
HASTINGS, Albany, N. Y.
McGOWANS, Portland, Me.
ADAMSON, Washington, D. C.
DOWNS, New-Haven, Conn.
MORRISEY, " "
DONOHUE, Newark, N. J.
JOHN H. TYSON, 89 Washington street, Hoboken, N. J.
JOHN C. CLARKE, 88 Newark avenue, Jersey City.
B. E. DOWLING, Jefferson st., next the Post Office, Newport, Ky.
M. GRADY, 27 Fayette st., Lowell, Mass.

Printed by Watters Brothers, 47 Ann street.
POWER PRESS OF J. B. WILLIAMS.

KEATING'S IRELAND.

A NEW TRANSLATION OF THE

FORAS FEASA AR ERINN;

OR, GENERAL HISTORY OF IRELAND.

From a Manuscript Copy of the Original Irish of the Rev. and Learned GEOFFREY KEATING.

With Notes, Historical, Topographical, and Explanatory,

By JOHN O'MAHONY, Esq.

The work is now in course of preparation, and will be speedily published, in one large octavo volume of about 600 pages, with plates. Price to Subscribers, $2,00.

The book will be got up in superior style, and furnished to the address of Subscribers giving their names to a duly-authorized canvasser, or to

A list of subscribers will be printed in the work.

P. M. HAVERTY, Publisher,
110 Fulton street, N. Y.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., July 10, 1856.

Dear Haverty—I wish you to put down my name as a subscriber to Mr. O'Mahoney's translation of the Foras Feasa ar Erinn.

That is a book long wanted, and which the "Celtic Society ought to have given us long ago. If William Eliot Hudson had lived, it would have been accomplished. And it will be no small credit to you, if you can bring out here in America a work long acknowledged to be a desideratum in Ireland; executed, too, by a scholar so competent both to translate and to illustrate it with notes, as Mr. O'Mahony.

I hope it is well advanced in its preparation.

Faithfully yo JOHN MITCHEL.

Publications.

BENZIGER BROTHERS.

Publishers and Booksellers,

MANUFACTURERS AND IMPORTERS OF

Church Furniture,

Einsiedeln, Switzerland, and 172 William street, corner of Beekman, New-York.

BENZIGER BROTHERS beg leave most respectfully to call the particular attention of the Right Rev. and the Rev. Clergy, the Religious Communities, Educational Establishments, and of the Trade, to the large and varied stock they have just opened in their new store, 172 William street.

Their Book Trade.

The old established house of Benziger Brothers, Eisiedeln, well known to many of the Hierarchy and the Rev. Clergy of the United States who have visited Switzerland, established this house in New-York four years ago, and they trust they will receive for the greatly increased advantages they offer, a continuance of that support, which for a period of over forty years has enabled them to build up, at the Pilgrimage of Our Lady of the Hermits (Einsiedeln) an establishment in which over four hundred persons are daily employed in the fabrication of the various articles that are used in the Church.

They desire particularly to call attention to their publications of PRAYER and DEVOTIONAL BOOKS, in German, French, Italian and Latin, consisting of over 200 different sorts. Being in immediate and constant intercourse with nearly all the principal publishers of Europe, they are enabled to offer a large assortment of standard THEOLOGICAL and LITURGICAL WORKS, among which are, the editions of Mechline, Paris, Ratisbone, &c., at exceedingly low prices.

They are also prepared to supply any of the English Catholic Books published in the United States, at publishers' lowest prices.

An assortment of Dutch and Fleuish Prayer Books, and of German School and Story Books.

2. They very respectfully invite an inspection of their extensive assortment of

Vestments and Church Vessels,

and, in doing so, feel confident that their stocks is more varied and of superior fabrication than any of the kind heretofore introduced into the United States, and from their facilities for purchasing in Europe, are enabled to sell at a lower price than any other house in the country.

3. Engravings, Beads, Crucifixes, &c.

ENGRAVINGS.—An immense variety of their own manufacture, including Altar, Baptismal, Confirmation, First Communion and First Confession Cards, Holy Water Pots, and

BEADS—Pearl, Garnet, Cornelian, Cocoa, Ivory, Wood, and Glass.

CRUCIFIXES, MEDALS, and RELIQUARIES, &c., in great variety. Also, STATUARY, in porcelain, biscuit, plastique, &c., &c.

4. Together with the above they have a large number of

Beautiful Statues,

suitable for Churches and Oratories, imported from Germany, France, and Belgium; amongst which are "The Immaculate Conception," "Virgin Mother" or "Our Lady of Victories," "St. Peter," "St. Paul," "Ecce Homo," "St. Joseph," "St. Aloysius," "St. Patrick," "The Resurrection," "Angel Guardian," "Angel Adoring," "The Infant Saviour in the Crib," "The Crucifixion," and many others. Any figure made to order, from design.

☞ Catalogues describing the Church Ornaments, Books, Pictures and Beads, can be had on application. jy19 3mos

NAPIER'S PENINSULAR WAR.

LIBRARY EDITION.

J. S. REDFIELD, 84 Beekman street, will publish, on Saturday, Aug. 16, 5 volumes, 12mo., price $7 50,

The History of the War in the Peninsula,

and in the

South of France from A. D. 1807 to 1814.

By Major-General Sir W. F. P. Napier, K.C.B., Col. 27th Regiment, &c.

 This edition is a reprint of the revised English edition, recently published, and contains all the author's emendations and "justificatory pieces," with

FIFTY-FIVE MAPS AND PLANS OF BATTLES,

There has been also prepared for this edition,

A Complete Index

to the whole work, (wanting in all other editions,) and the following

Portraits,

beautifully engraved on steel:

1. NAPIER, (the author,)
2. NAPOLEON,
3. WELLINGTON,
4. SOULT,
5. JOSEPH BONAPARTE.

"You should read Napier's volumes of the war in Portugal. He is a heroic fellow, equal to any thing in Plutarch; and, moreover, a long-headed, clever hero, who takes good aim before he fires."—Letters of Sydney Smith.

"Our English Thucydides, the historian of the Peninsular war."—Walter Savage Landor on Orthography. Fraser, Feb. 1856.

NATIONAL POLITICAL MAP

OF THE

United States.

JUST Published, containing accurate Portraits, from life, of FREMONT, BUCHANAN, FILLMORE, DAYTON, BRECKINRIDGE and DONALDSON, with the Platform of their respective parties, together with their letters of acceptance and a vast amount of statistical matter, interesting to all parties. This Map is beautifully colored, size 34 by 40 inches, extends through to the PACIFIC COAST, showing the exact boundaries of all the States and Territories, Missouri Compromise Line, &c.

It also contains a valuable Diagram, showing the ups and downs in relative rank, as to the population of the several States of the Union for the last Sixty years. Politicians of all parties, wishing to have before them material for being fully posted at a single glance, must possess a copy of this Map. Price in sheet form, 25 cents; price in pocket form, 50 cents.

N. B.—Copies sent (post-paid) on receipt of price. 100,000 Agents wanted to sell them. Address

A. Ranney, Publisher, No. 195 Broadway, N. Y.

N. B.—Editors of papers giving the above one insertion, shall receive a copy of the Map. A. R. aug16 2t

Special Notices.

GRAND ANNUAL PICNIC

OF THE

YOUNG MEN'S ASSOCIATION

TO CELESTIAL GROVE,

On Thursday, August 21st, 1856.

Tickets one dollar, to admit gentleman and lady. Extra lady's ticket, 50 cents. To be outained from the committee.

JEREMIAH QUINLAN, President.

D. J. CONLEY, Recording Secretary.

JOHN S. SCULLY, Treasurer. 3t9au

Publications.

SCARCE BOOKS RELATING TO IRELAND.

HE DUBLIN NATION for 1849, '50, '51. 3 vols., half-green calf, neat.
DUBLIN UNIVERSITY MAGAZINE—from the commencement to 1855, complete; 46 vols. in neat half calf.
RYAN'S IRISH WORTHIES. 2 vols., 8vo., cloth.
STUART'S HISTORY OF ARMAGH. 8vo. $3.
MONASTICUM HIBERNICUM. By Stevens. 8vo, calf, plates. $8.
SMITH'S HISTORY OF CORK. 2 vols., 8vo. $6.
McGREGOR'S HISTORY OF LIMERICK. 2 vols. $6.
IRISH QUARTERLY REVIEW. 5 vols., 8vo, containing Gilbert's Streets of Dublin—Life of John Banim—Celtic Records of Ireland—Memoirs of Irish Celebrities—Lady Blessington—Maturin—Dr. Maginn—Chief Justice Bushe—Rev. S. Madden—Tom Moore—Barry, the painter—Macklin, &c., &c. $16.
IRISH PENNY JOURNAL. 1 vol., quarto. $3 50.
DUBLIN PENNY JOURNAL. 4 vols., very scarce. $16.
ANCIENT IRISH HISTORIES. By Spencer Campion Hanmer and Maribborough. 2 vols., 8vo. $7 50.
PAUATA HIBERNIA. $6.
IRISH PENNY MAGAZINE. Edited by Lover. $3 50.
ANNALS OF THE FOUR MASTERS. Translated by Connellan. 4to, cloth, map. $6 50.
HARDY'S LIFE OF CHARLEMONT. 2 vols. $3.
KEATING'S HISTORY OF IRELAND. 8vo. $4.
THE CITIZEN, a Dublin magazine. 4 vols., with a collection of ancient Irish music. $12.
O'BRIEN'S ROUND TOWERS. 8vo, half calf. $10.
MUSGRAVE'S IRISH REBELLIONS. 2 vols., 8vo, half calf. $4.

And a large collection of miscellaneous Irish books.

For sale by P. M. Haverty, Bookseller,
110 Fulton street, New-York.

VOLUNTEERS ASSEMBLED IN COLLEGE GREEN—A copy of this rare engraving (described in No. 10 Irish News) for sale. Price $5. jy12 tf

The Trade supplied on liberal terms with
MITCHEL'S JAIL JOURNAL.
MOORE'S LIFE OF LORD EDWARD FITZGERALD.
DAVIS'S POEMS, with an introduction by John Mitchel.

Study the Life of Mary!

THE OLD ESTABLISHED CATHOLIC HOUSE

OF

EDWARD DUNIGAN & BROTHER,

(JAMES B. KIRKER,)

151 Fulton street, New-York,

Are now publishing, in monthly parts, at twenty-five cents each, and with the express approbation of the

MOST REV. JOHN HUGHES, D.D.,

ARCHBISHOP OF NEW-YORK,

The Life of the Blessed Virgin Mary,

By the

RIGHT REV. ROMUALD GENTILUCCI,

Chamberlain of Honor to His Holiness,

Dedicated to and honored with the suffrages of His Holiness

POPE PIUS IX.,

ILLUSTRATED with fine steel engravings, and vignettes, borders, and initials, designed expressly for this work. This Life, published at Rome in 1848, by a Prelate high in the esteem of the Holy Father, is approved by the Master of the Sacred Palace, and has already been translated into other languages. Amid the many lives that have appeared, Gentilucci's will ever be remarkable for its unction and beauty of style, no less than for the deep knowledge which it displays of the writings of the Holy Fathers, and all the monuments of Ecclesiastical History that can in any way throw light on the Life of the Immaculate Mother of our Lord, as handed down in the loving traditions of the faithful from the age in which she lived.

It is a book for the studious as well as for the fervent Christian; a book for every one who seeks to rouse in his heart feelings of devotion for Her, whom the unerring Judge selected for the greatest honor which the human mind can conceive.

Conditions of the Work.

Gentilucci's Life of the Blessed Virgin Mary will be published in semi-monthly parts of 48 pages each, with a steel engraving in every number, and several fine woodcuts. Printed on fine paper, from new type, it will, when complete, form a most unique and beautiful volume of six to seven hundred and fifty pages.

OBSERVATIONS OF THE PRESS.

No other work of our day, on the same subject, can be compared to it. It is unrivalled for beauty of style and depth of erudition. It is the offering of a learned and devoted son of the blessed Virgin, who enjoys the confidence and friendship of our most Holy Father, to whom the work is dedicated. We are not more edified at the piety of the author, than astonished at the wonderful erudition displayed in the book. The translator has performed his task admirably.—Pittsburg Catholic.

We cannot too highly recommend it to the consideration of our readers, whether we regard the intrinsic value of the work itself, or the beauty and exquisite ensemble of its getting up.—Truthteller.

Profusely illustrated with engravings and vignettes, this work is brought out in such an elegant style, as to make it, exclusive of its literary merit, a fitting library companion to the Bible of the same enterprising publishers.—Detroit Vindicator.

This work is one of devotion and merit. We do not know who translated it, but it seems better than average translations.—Freeman's Journal.

This work, translated from the Italian, and apparently well translated, is by an eminent author, is dedicated by permission to his Holiness Pius IX., and is spoken of in very high terms by competent judges. As far as we have seen it, we like it very much, and think it must prove a great favorite with the children of Mary and all devout Catholics.—Brownson's Review.

Inducement.

Each subscriber to this splendid work will receive with the last number a magnificent steel engraving, suitable for framing, of the

MOST. REV. JOHN HUGHES, D.D.,

ARCHBISHOP OF NEW-YORK.

Canvassers will find it to their advantage to address the publishers.

8t12jly EDWARD DUNIGAN & BROTHER.

HUMAN ABORIGINES,

Omnivora, Herbivora, Carnivora,

WITH CHIEF REFERENCE TO

The Nations of Europe and their Descendants in America.

Illustrated with above Four Hundred Lithographic Portraits, Cranial forms, &

BY

JOHN M'ELHERAN,

MEMBER OF THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF SURGEONS, EDINBURGH.

Natural History is the Key to all Human History.

Quarto price, $5. The first edition having the most perfect impression of the Lithogrophs, will be given to subscribers only. The work will go to press when a sufficient list is completed.

☞ Please send your orders to the Messrs. Appleton & Co., or to Dr. M'Elheran, 196 McDougal street, New-York.

4t16au D. Appleton & Co.

Shipping.

THE NEW-YORK AND LIVERPOOL
United States Mail Line.

The ships composing this line are the following:

The ATLANTIC.....Capt. Eldridge.
The ADRIATIC.....Capt. West.
The PACIFIC.....Capt. Eldridge.
The BALTIC.....Capt. Comstock.

These ships have been built by contract, expressly for the government service. Every care has been taken in their construction, as also in their engines to insure strength and speed; and their accommodations for passengers are unequalled for elegance and comfort.

Price of passage from New-York to Liverpool in first cabin, $180; in second do., $75. Exclusive use of extra size state rooms, $325. From Liverpool to New-York, 30 and 20 guineas.

An experienced surgeon attached to each ship.

No berth can be secured until paid for.

PROPOSED DATES OF SAILING.

FROM NEW-YORK.	FROM LIVERPOOL.
Saturday.....Aug. 2	Wednesday.....July 23
Saturday.....Aug. 16	Wednesday.....Aug. 6
Saturday.....Aug. 30	Wednesday.....Sept. 3
Saturday.....Sept. 13	Wednesday.....Sept. 17
Saturday.....Oct. 11	Wednesday.....Oct. 1
Saturday.....Oct. 25	Wednesday.....Oct. 15

Edw'd. K. Collins & Co., No. 56 Wall street, New-York.
Brown, Shipley & Co., Liverpool.
Stephen Kennard & Co., 27 Austin Friars, London.
B. G. Wainwright & Co., Paris.

The owners of these ships will not be accountable for gold, silver, bullion, specie, jewelry, precious stones or metals, unless bills of lading are signed therefor, and the value thereof therein expressed.

Shippers will please take notice, that the ships of this line cannot carry any goods contraband of war. ap26 6m.

C. H. MARSHALL & CO.,
Old Black Ball Line of Liverpool Packets.

CERTIFICATES

Furnished for Passage to and from Liverpool, on the 1st and 16th of every Month, by the following splendid ships:

James Foster, Jr.	Capt. J. W. Porter.
Neptune	" E. W. Peabody.
Harvest Queen	" E. Young.
Isaac Webb	" J. M. Bayer.
Great Western	" W. G. Furrier.
Manhattan	" T. Dixon.
Isaac Wright	" E. Abeel.
Columbia	" C. Hutchinson.
Fidelia	" W. A. Macgill.
Yorkshire	" C. A. Marshall.

REMITTANCES.

Drafts, for £1 and upwards, on the Royal Bank of Ireland, and on Messrs. Baring Brothers & Co., Bankers, Liverpool and London, payable on sight.

C. H. MARSHALL & CO.,
88 Burling Slip, N. Y.

Agents in Liverpool, Baring Brothers & Co.,
OLD LINE PACKETS,
Pier 23 East River, foot of Beekman street. 6m

WILLIAMS & GUION'S
Old Black Star Line of Packets. 1856.

Passage from any part of Great Britain and Ireland, secured at the lowest possible rates by this old-established line, sailing from Liverpool to New-York every five days, comprising the following magnificent Ships:

Ships.	Captains.	Tonage.
AUSTRALIA,	Smith,	2,000
BRIDGEWATER (new),	Barstow,	2,000
CULTIVATOR (new),	Austin,	2,000
CYNOSURE,	Bray,	2,000
CORNELIA LAWRENCE (new),	Knapp,	2,000
DE WITT CLINTON,	Funk,	1,800
ENTERPRISE,	Davis,	1,200
GUY MANNERING,	Dollard,	2,000
JACOB A. WESTERVELT,	Hoodless,	2,000
IRENE,	Williams,	1,400
JOHN BRIGHT (new),	Cutting,	2,000
MARMION,	Hanley,	1,200
NORTH AMERICAN,	Clark,	1,800
OSWEGO,	Stevens,	1,400
ROBERT KELLY,	Barstow,	1,500
SILAS WRIGHT (new),	Freeman,	2,000
SOUTHAMPTON,	Furlong,	1,600
THORNTON (new),	Collins,	2,000
TICONDEROGA,	Boyle,	1,400
UNIVERSE,	Cave,	2,000
VANGUARD,	Norton,	1,800

The ships of this line are the largest and swiftest in the trade, their accommodations for passengers are unequalled, and the frequency and punctuality of their departure offer advantages to the emigrant not to be had by any Line of Packets. Such passengers as decline coming out, the money paid for them will be promptly refunded without discount.

Provisions of best quality are provided for passengers; rations, consisting of Bread, Flour, Rice, Oatmeal, Tea, Sugar, Molasses, Salt, &c.

The increased patronage received by the proprietors of the Old Black Star Line has induced them to add to the Line several New Ships, which have taken their place this season; no expense has been spared to render the facilities for Emigration equal to the times, and add to the renown of these celebrated Packets.

The regular Sailing days are 1st, 8th, 11th, 18th, 21st, and 26th of each month; this will give passengers opportunity for embarking more frequent than by any other established Line, to which the attention of the public is respectfully called.

No Certificate of Passage will be issued for children under 12 years of age unless accompanied by an adult, who must be paid for on same certificate; for persons over 60 years of age, or with any impediment, without a Permit from Commissioners of Emigration.

REMITTANCES.

Persons wanting to send money to their friends can obtain drafts for any amount, which will be cashed at sight at the following Banks:

Ireland—National Bank of Ireland; Royal Bank of Ireland; Ulster Banking Co., and their Branches.

Scotland—National Bank of Scotland and Branches.

England—Messrs. GLYNN, MILLS & Co, Bankers, London; GUION & Co., Merchants, Liverpool.

For further particulars apply, if by letter post-paid, to

WILLIAMS & GUION,
40 Fulton street, New-York.
GUION & CO.,
115 Waterloo Road, Liverpool.

AGENTS—JOHN WHITNEY, Providence, R. I.
EDWARD RYAN, 2 Albany street, Boston.
THOMAS RATTIGAN, Pittsburgh, Pa.

BLACK BALL LINE
OF LIVERPOOL PACKETS,

Sailing to and from Liverpool on the 1st and 16th of each Month.

THE following ten magnificent clipper Packet Ships comprise the "Black Ball Line, viz:—

James Foster Jr.,	Manhattan,
Great Western,	Neptune,
Harvest Queen,	Columbia,
Isaac Webb,	Yorkshire,
Isaac Wright,	Fidelia.

DRAFTS AT SIGHT for any amount payable in every town throughout England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales.

Persons returning to the old country, or those sending for their friends, will find it to their interest to select the "Black Ball Line," as the accommodations in the above clippers for Cabin, Second Cabin, and Steerage Passengers, are well known by the travelling public to be far superior to any other.

☞ Apply or address by letter, post-paid; no letter will be answered unless a postage stamp is enclosed to pre-pay postage.

Jacob Wilson, 108 South street, New York,
Who is the only authorized Passenger Agent for the "Black Ball Line," which lay at Pier 23 East River, opposite this office. my8 3m

Shipping.

LIVERPOOL AND PHILADELPHIA
STEAMSHIP COMPANY,

Intend despatching their splendid Iron Screw Steamers as follows:

FROM LIVERPOOL	FROM PHILADELPHIA
City of Manchester.....18 August	Kangaroo.....21 August
City of Baltimore.....27 August	City of Manchester.....4 Sept.
Kangaroo.....10 Sept.	City of Baltimore.....18 Sept.
Kangaroo.....2 October.

Steerage passage from Philadelphia, $30; from Liverpool, $40, including cooked provisions. Persons wishing to visit Europe or to send for friends from Great Britain and Ireland, by the above line of splendid Steamships, or by first-class sailing Packets, can purchase passage tickets on application to

Sabel & Cortis, 177 Broadway, New-York.

Or to their Agents in

Albany—A. T. Holmes.....Dubuque—Jas. C. Rattray.
Baltimore—Foard & Rodgers.....Hartford, Ct.—A. Rose.
Boston—F. S. Saxton.....New-Orleans—Jenkins, Williams & Co.
Buffalo—Robt. Hager.....Pittsburg—John Thompson.
Chicago—Lull & Mayer.....Pottsville—R. Edwards.
Cincinnati—J. F. Meline & Co.....Toronto C. W.—D. K. Feehan. tf24my

Bankers.

GREEN & SEWELL,
BANKERS,
No. 29 Wall Street, New-York.

DRAFTS on the Belfast Banking Co., available in any part of Ireland, for sale.

REMITTANCES from the interior, promptly forwarded to any address in Ireland, and receipt therefor returned to the sender. General Banking business transacted. my17 6m

---

BREWER & CALDWELL,
20 OLD SLIP, CORNER OF WATER STREET, N. Y.

ISSUE BANK OF CHARLESTON BILLS
ON
BANK OF LIVERPOOL,

In sums of one pound sterling and upwards, payable at any of the Banks in ENGLAND, IRELAND, SCOTLAND, AND WALES. jun14

REMITTANCES TO IRELAND.

IRISH EMIGRANT SOCIETY,
Office, 51 Chambers street.

NOTICE.—The recent failures, by which a large amount of Bills remitted from this country to friends in Ireland, has been returned unpaid, afford to this Society the opportunity, and at the same time impose upon it the duty of informing the public, that such losses would have been prevented if the parties purchasing Bills had availed themselves of the advantages offered by the Society.

For the purpose of entire protection a fund is constantly kept on deposit in the Bank of Ireland, against which this Society issues its drafts, payable at sight (from sums of £1 sterling and upwards), on the Bank and all its branches, and has thereby for the last Ten Years afforded a mode of remittance perfectly safe and unquestionable.

New-York, December 29, 1851.

ANDREW CARRIGAN, President.
JOHN MANNING, ROBERT J. DILLON, HUGH KELLY, } Vice-Presidents.
EDWARD C. DONNELLY, Corresponding Secretary.
PETER CREAR, Recording Secretary.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

Felix Ingoldsby,	John Nicholson,	William Redmond.
William Watson,	Hugh Kelly,	James Olwell,
John Manning,	Cornel Sheehan,	Daniel Devlin,
Terence Donnelly,	Romaine Dillon,	John McMenomy.

EMIGRANT INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS BANK.

No. 51 CHAMBERS STREET.

THIS Institution has been established for the purpose of affording to Emigrants and others, a safe place of deposit for their funds, to protect them from robbery and fraud.

It is conducted with the strictest economy—neither the Officers and Trustees, receive any compensation for their services. The entire profits belong to the Depositors, and will be divided amongst them, having due regard to the safety of the funds.

The last dividend was six per cent. upon all sums of $500 and under, and and will be continued or increased as the profits may justify.

Bank open to receive Deposits, daily, from 10 A. M., to 2, and from 5 to 7 P. M.

TRUSTEES.

William Watson,	John P. Nesmith,
John Nicholson,	John Milhau,
Andrew Carrigan,	Edward W. Tiers,
James Kelly,	Charles M. Connelly,
James Kerrigan,	Cornelius H. Sheehan,
Hugh Kelly,	Edward Bayer,
Charles O'Connor,	Daniel Devlin.
James Olwell,

JOSEPH STUART, President.
FELIX INGOLDSBY, 1st Vice-President.
JOHN MCMENOMY, 2d Vice-President.
TERENCE DONNELLY, Treasurer.
LOUIS B. BINSSE, Secretary.
PETER CREAR, Accountant.
JOHN MANNING, Comptroller. tf

REMITTANCES TO
ENGLAND, IRELAND AND SCOTLAND.

STERLING BILLS for sale on Messrs. Prescott, Grote & Co., Bankers, London, from £1 upwards, payable on demand, and negotiable in any part of the United Kingdom; also Bank of England Notes and Drafts of any of the English Banks or Bankers, bought and sold.

ap19 1y Prime & Co., 54 Wall street.

Coal.

COAL.

THE subscriber respectfully informs his friends and the public generally, that he has opened a new Coal Yard, cor. 27th Street and 9th Avenue, where he is prepared to sell the best quality of Red and White Ash Coal, at the lowest market price for cash. Weight warranted, or forfeit coal.

6mos* JOHN MACDONALD.

COAL of the very best quality both Anthracite and Bituminous, for family and manufacturing purposes, for sale by the subscriber from his Yards, 682 Washington, 128 McDougal, and 146 West Thirty-second streets. Also, Coal by the cargo.

ap19 1y Thomas Maher.

Business Directory.

HAMILTON & JOHNSON,
NEWS AGENTS,
30 ANN STREET, NEW-YORK.

DAILY, weekly and Sunday papers, Magazines, and Cheap Publications. The trade supplied. Orders from the country solicited and promptly filled.
JOHN HAMILTON,
tf S. W. JOHNSON.

Business Notices.

HERRING'S
PATENT CHAMPION FIRE AND BURGLAR PROOF SAFES.

THE great interest manifested by the public to procure more perfect security from Fire for valuable papers, such as BONDS, MORTGAGES, DEEDS, NOTES, and BOOKS OF ACCOUNT than the ordinary SAFES heretofore in use had afforded, induced the subscribers to devote a large portion of time and attention during the past fourteen years in making improvements and discoveries for this object, and they now beg leave to assure their numerous friends and the public generally that their efforts have been crowned with complete success, and now offer the "IMPROVED HERRING'S PATENT WORLD'S FAIR PREMIUM FIRE-PROOF SAFE," as the

CHAMPION SAFE OF THE WORLD!

Having been awarded Medals at both the
World's Fair, London, 1851, and in New-York, 1853,
As superior to all others. It is now undoubtedly entitled to that appellation, and, secured with HALL'S PATENT POWDER-PROOF LOCKS,) which also was awarded MEDALS as above), forms the most perfect Fire and Burglar Proof Safes ever offered to the public.

The subscribers also manufacture all kinds of Boiler and Chilled Iron Bank Chests and Vaults, Vault Doors, and Money Boxes or Chests, for Brokers, Jewelers, and Private Families, for Plate, Diamonds, and other Valuables, and are also Patentees (by purchase) and Manufacturers of

JONES' PATENT PERMUTATION BANK LOCK.

SILAS C. HERRING & CO., Patentees,
GREEN BLOCK, Nos. 125, 127 and 129 Water street, New-York. my10 tf

---

Important to the Ladies.
GLENFIELD PATENT STARCH.

FOR the dressing of Laces and all descriptions of fine goods. This celebrated starch is unrivalled.

ONE TRIAL WILL CONVINCE.

For sale by all respectable druggists and grocers.
3m28ju ROBERT HOSIE, 8 Pine Street, New-York,
Sole Agent for the United States.

S. CAHILL'S
BOOT AND SHOE STORE,

NO. 377 BROADWAY,

(One door below White street), New York.

S. CAHILL respectfully informs his friends, customers, and the public generally, that, having made an extensive addition to his Store, for the better accommodation of his customers, he has now the largest and most extensive BOOT AND SHOE STORE in the world, and is prepared to exhibit the most extensive assortment of

LADIES, MISSES, AND CHILDREN'S, GENTLEMEN'S, BOYS, AND YOUTH'S
BOOTS AND SHOES
EVER BEFORE OFFERED TO THE CITIZENS OF NEW YORK.

His facilities for manufacturing on an extensive scale, together with his superb assortment of FRENCH BOOTS and SHOES, received direct from Paris by every steamer, enable him to sell a much better article at much lower prices than can be purchased at any other house in the city. BOOTS AND SHOES OF ALL DESCRIPTIONS MADE TO MEASURE AT THE SHORTEST NOTICE. je28 3mos

Monday, June 16th, and during the week—

LATEST FASHIONS.

THE New Hat Company would here lay before their readers a few of the advantages to be derived from their system of doing business, which is ONE QUALITY, ONE PRICE, AND NO ABATEMENT. In the first place, any gentleman, whether he be a judge of the article or not, can rely upon receiving our first and only quality. Secondly, our price is so low, that the man of the most limited means is enabled to procure a fine and fashionable hat, (at the same time we wish it to be distinctly understood that our hats are not to be excelled by those sold at four dollars by any other establishment,) and lastly, we strive to please. If any gentleman desiring a hat differing from the usual style, will call and leave his order, we shall endeavor to suit him in every respect. The inducements which we offer to wholesale purchasers, and the trade in general, are not to be exceeded by those of any other establishment.

Also, a large assortment of CLOTH CAPS, CHILDREN'S FANCY HATS, UMBRELLAS, &c., constantly on hand at the lowest rates. Nos. 146 and 148 Nassau st. ap26 3m

---

FASHIONABLE HATTER, 223 THIRD AVENUE.

COWHY'S Spring style of Hats, now ready, are superior to anything hitherto offered in Beauty of Shape, and Elegance of Finish. Being a practical hatter himself, Cowhy is enabled to sell A SUPERIOR HAT AT A VERY MODERATE PRICE.

His young gent's hat is one of great beauty, and his assortment of children's fancy hats and caps cannot be surpassed by any other establishment in the city.

N. B.—Hats and Caps made to order, and warranted to fit, by COWHY, 223 Third Avenue, between 19th and 20th streets. my3 1y

---

Furniture.—F. FITZSIMMONS respectfully calls the attention his of customers and the public to his stock of elegant and substantial FURNITURE, (not made for the auction room) consisting of rich Parlor Suites in rosewood; oak Dining and Chamber Sets of every description; Upholstery in all its branches executed in the best mechanical manner. Prices unexceptionable. Warerooms No. 8 Astor place, near Broadway. my24 3m

---

JAMES O'FLYN.
HOWARD HOTEL,
176 BROADWAY, NEW-YORK.

Advertising Envelope Manufacturer, Embosser, Die Sinker, and General Engraver. Notarial and Lodge Seals, Crests, and Coats of Arms. Seal Presses of every description constantly on hand. 14ju8m

---

Sewing Machine Depot.—Sewing Machines of all kinds sold, improved and repaired, on reasonable terms, in the most substantial manner. Superior Machine Oils for sale. A large assortment of Machine Silk Twist and Needles for sale at reduces prices.
my 24, 3 mos. F. S COATES & Co., 345 Broadway, New-York.

Analytical and Metallurgical Chemistry and Mining Geology.
DR. ISAIAH DECK,
No. 18 EXCHANGE PLACE, NEW-YORK.

MAY be consulted on all subjects relating to Practical Chemistry, Mining and Metallurgy. Assays of Ores, Analyses of Minerals, and Mining Products in general carefully and expeditiously conducted, and sound opinions delivered upon the most economical methods of working them, based on the atest chemical discoveries. Geological and Mining Surveys undertaken in any part of the world—Dr. DECK having had considerable experience in this branch of his profession. my31 3m

---

NICHOLAS WALSH.
SEXTON AND UNDERTAKER.
NO. 8 SIXTH AVENUE.

Employment.

EMPLOYMENT OFFICE FOR SERVANTS.
275 BOWERY, NEW-YORK.

MALE and Female Servants can be promptly suited at the above number, with any situation in the city or country, at good wages, in first-rate families, without delay.

N. B. Employers quickly supplied.
3m may 31 ALEXANDER F. RUNGE, Agent.

EMPLOYMENT OFFICE for Servants, 129 Waverley Place, two doors from Sixth avenue, New-York.—A large number of competent help can be suited with good situations, in city and country, without delay. Employers in the city and country supplied with the best of female help. [my17 3m] WM. O'BRIEN, Proprietor.

NEW-YORK EMPLOYMEMT OFFICE.
480 Broadway.

HONEST, capable, and faithful servants can at all times find good situations at this office. Protestant and Catholic have equal privilege. Established in 1844 by [3m21ju] T. P. SAUNDERS.

European News.

The arrival of the Asia on the 7th inst., brought us full files of foreign papers to the 26th ult. The importance, or at least the interest, of European affairs, is chiefly owing to the Spanish difficulties.

Great Britain.

In Parliament the question was asked by Mr. Murrough, whether the British Government was prepared to adopt any and what measures for preventing armed interference by France in the affairs of Spain?

Lord Palmerston replied that there was, at present, nothing in the internal affairs of Spain that could in any way lead to the interference of the French Government. Upon the general question of interference, he could only say that the Emperor of the French is a man of great justice, and he would feel that, in any case, foreign interference in the affairs of Spain would be unjust. He was also a man of great sagacity, and events had shown that the interference of those sovereigns who had been led to interpose in the affairs of Spain had been attended with disaster to themselves; but there was no reason for apprehending that the Emperor of the French had any such intention.

Mr. Roebuck, according to notice, moved that James Sadleir, having absconded from public justice, be expelled from his seat in Parliament. Considerable discussion ensued as to the expediency of precipitate action in the matter, and, eventually the motion was withdrawn.

A debate took place in the Commons on the second reading of the retiring Bishops Pension bills. Sir W. Heathecote moved that the second reading be postponed three months. The opponents of the bill argue that the bill is simony, or, at least simonaical, corrupt, extravagant, and unprecedented. The second reading was, however, carried by 151 to 72.

Although there are several candidates in the field for the Parliamentary seat of James Sadleir, some of the electors of Tipperary have invited Smith O'Brien to come forward as their representative. He however declines.

The London papers give a summary of the report of the Crimean inquiry at Chelsea. It amounts to an exculpation of the officers implicated.

Government has determined to erect defenses along the northeast coast of Scotland, and prospectively also on the western coast.

The London Times has the following: It is in contemplation to start a line o steamers between New York and Odessa, touching at various intermediate ports in the Mediterranean. A statement is added which perhaps has no other foundation than the hopes of the projectors, namely, that the Czar will subsidize the line. The plan would be for the steamers to touch at Marseilles and Smyrna on their passage to Odessa, and at Smyrna and Genoa, on their return.

France.

The intentions of the French Government with respect to Spain are the subject of much conversation in Paris. They say that if O'Donnell prove himself master of the situation, France can have no occasion to interfere. On the other hand, if the Liberals gain the day, and even should the present Queen be required to abdicate in favor of the Princess of the Asturias, with Espartero Regent, neither would France interfere. But France would invade Spain in either of two cases; firstly, should the Duchess of Montpensier become next heir and make pretensions to the throne; or, secondly, should a Republic be proclaimed.

The Emperor has sent from Plombieres a circular to the Prefects, ordering them in positive terms to allow to all Protestants within their respective districts the free and undisturbed exercise of their religion.

Prince Lucien Bonaparte has gone on a mission to Madrid.

Two camps were to be formed near Paris in August and September, one on the plain of Satory at Versailles, and the other on the plain of St. Maur, near the Wood of Vincennes

A medal is being struck to commemorate the baptism of the young Napoleon. It represents the Emperor holding his son aloft to the view of the spectators in Notre Dame.

Spain.

THE INSURRECTION.

Madrid Journals of July 18 have been received, and present us with the "official" account of the insurrection. The National Guard had been almost entirely disarmed. Already 19,000 muskets and a considerable quantity of pistols, sabres and lances had been collected, and domiciliary visits had been made to secure all the arms in the hands of the citizens. Numerous arrests had been made, and there is no longer fear of any further outbreak in the capital. The casualties of the royal troops are estimated at forty or fifty killed, and one hundred and fifty wounded; the losses of the insurgents are not known. The royal troops engaged, consisted of thirteen battalions, with fifty pieces of artillery —in all about 16,000 men.

The cavalry 2,000 in number, were employed outside the gates in keeping up the communication between the three corps into which the royal forces were divided. Queen Isabella's exultation is described as great, and she had rewarded the officers by a general permission to kiss her hand, "in the very clothes they wore during the struggle." Wounded officers and soldiers are to be promoted a grade, with pensions and crosses. A complete change is made in the personnel of the Governors of provinces, and all persons in authority who "behaved feebly in the presence of disorder" have been dismissed. At Barcelona the rising was not put down until after a good deal of hard fighting, extending over two days. From Saragossa there is no further news than that a portion of the troops remain faithful to the Queen, and that the insurrection is confined to that city. Government was despatching all available troops toward this last stronghold of the insurrection, and their instructions are, if opposed, not to be led into street fighting but to bombard the city from the adjoining forts. Nothing positive is yet known of Espartero, but it seems probable that he has been permitted to leave Madrid, although, nominally, under arrest. O'Donnell expects to receive, in a day or two, news of the submission of Saragossa, and with it, of the whole of Spain, to his Government.

AT MADRID.

Advices to the 19th leave no doubt that the O'Donnell government reigned supreme at Madrid. The city at that date was reported "tranquil." Espartero was still at Madrid, and, according to the London Times correspondence, O'Donnell had offered him passports to any part of Spain, or to go abroad. An official return says the loss of troops in suppressing the insurrection were 6 officers killed and 19 wounded; 32 soldiers killed and 2 missing, and 202 wounded. No return is made of the loss sustained by the insurgents, but private account say that the troops behaved with great ferocity, and butchered several companies of the National Guard after they had ceased to resist. Business was beginning to be resumed, and crowds daily visited the scenes of conflict. The artillery had damaged a number of buildings, among them the palaces of Medina-Celi and the Platerias, also the residences of the Count de Onate, the Countess Montijo, and others in the streets of Milanese and Toledo.

Lord Howden, the English Embassador, was, as usual, absent from his post when these events took place. He has received orders by telegraph to return instantly to Madrid, via Saragossa. Marshal Narvaez, on the revolt breaking out, offered his services to O'Donnell, and has received the appointment of Minister to Paris in place of Sr. Olozaga. The Duke of Alba, brother-in-law of the Empress Eugenie, is appointed Mayor of Madrid, pro tem. Patricio Escosura has sought refuge at the British Embassy; his brother, who held a command in the insurgent ranks, had escaped.

Letters from Madrid of the 18th bring the following intelligence: On the previous day numerous arrests were made, and orders were given that the insurgents who had been taken prisoners should be sent under strong escort to some fortified place around the capital. Among the persons arrested is M. Madoz. He commanded a battalion of the National Guard during the insurrection, as well as M. Escosura. The latter has as yet escaped the search made for him. Several general officers who were at Madrid during the late events, but did not present themselves to the military authorities, are to be brought before a court martial to answer for their conduct.

The universal opinion is, that the bearing of the army during the whole of the late events was admirable. The immediate cause of the sudden dispersion of the National Guard is not yet known. The movement was commenced by the battalion of M. Madoz, which occupied one of the houses near the palace of the Cortes. M. Madoz had massed his companies in a cross street, protected from the fire of the soldiers, and when they were all assembled there, he at once ordered them to return to their homes. This order had been given after the fire had been opened by the troops, and after a conference had been held by MM. Madoz, Rivero (the democrat), and others, with M. Serrano, the Captain-General of Madrid. This order for dispersing was naturally communicated to all the other posts, and they in their turn, after a little hesitation, gave way. Various surmises exist as to what took place at the conference just mentioned.

It is said that M. Madoz and his friends were alarmed at the warmth of the fire of the troops, and from understanding that it was the determination of O'Donnell to act with the greatest severity. Other accounts say, that the ammunition of the National Guard was already exhausted. It is thought that the resolution of M. Madoz was come to in concert with Marshal Espartero. The latter, his partizans say, seeing the turn given to things in the Congress by the Democrats, did not wish to sacrifice the throne, or launch into the hazards of anarchy and civil war, and in consequence did all he could to restore traquillity. It is stated that Marshal Espartero appeared for a moment at the Congress on the 15th, and that he retired very much disgusted. There has been in all his conduct more weakness than evil intention or malevolence. The large quantity of specie which had been sent from Paris by the Credit Mobilier Company arrived in safety at Madrid. M. Pedro Bayarri on the 17th took possession of the Ministry of the Marine.

The Madrid Gazette publishes a great number of promotions and dismissals; all the general and other officers who were wounded have obtained their next step, and the soldiers who distinguished themselves, or who have been wounded, receive decorations and pensions. The Queen had 30,000 cigars distributed among the troops. Several Governors of Provinces have been placed on the retired list. There is also a decree removing Gen. Prim from his functions of Governor of Grenada, but the Queen reserves to herself "to utilize his services on his return from abroad." Gen. Prim some days back left for Spain.

The Journal de Madrid says that Espartero demanded a passport for some place abroad, and that the Government gave it to him for any place which might best suit him. It is said that he left Madrid by the Alcala gate in a post chaise escorted by cavalry. The same journal says that some idea of the great resources of the Government to put down the insurrection might be formed by the fact that it had 69 pieces of artillery ready for action, but only made use of 12 of them.

AT BARCELONA.

The Paris Moniteur of the 24th says: "The last news from Barcelona announces that the conflict there was very keen, but that the success of the Queen's troops may be considered as secured. On the 18th, the firing lasted from 5 in the evening until midnight. On the 19th, it was resumed from early morning till 8 P. M. On the 20th, it lasted the whole day, and on the 21st, from morning till 5 o'clock evening. On this last day the insurgents being driven from Union street, Rue Nueve of the Rambla, and from the Hospital of La Junquera, the principal positions, betook themselves to the country, where the cavalry soon rode them down and sabred them. Gerona and La Junquera are still in a state of insurrection. Tranquillity prevails at Figueras, and the garrison is prepared to suppress any outbreak. It is thought the victory at Barcelona will arrest the other movements in Catalonia."

PARIS, Thursday evening, July 24, 1856.

On the 23d, at 8 A. M., the Royal troops were master of every point of Barcelona, but still remained under arms. The struggle was very sanguinary. Preparations were being made to execute the persons who were taken with arms in their hands. Gen. Ruiz commands the garrison at Gerona, which place has risen.

The London Star learns that twelve hundred persons were killed in the streets of Barcelona. The people fought behind their barricade, with determined courage, for three days, and would have persevered, but when they began to lose ground, their leaders deserted them.

THE LAST SESSION OF THE CORTES.

The sitting of the Cortes held on the 14th was attended by ninety of the members who were present in the capital, and who immediately answered to the summons of General Infante. The sitting was opened at 4 o'clock, under the Presidency of General Infante. The following proposition was then read:

"We demand of the Cortes that they will be so good as to declare that the newly constituted Cabinet does not deserve their confidence. Signed: Pascal Madoz, Pedro Calvo Asensio, Manuel Lasala, Manuel Mathen, Praxedes Sagasta, Francisco Salmeron y Alonso, Ramon Perez."

This proposition, supported by M. Madoz, was opposed by the Marquis of Tabuerniga alone. He has since received his reward from O'Donnell, by being appointed Under Secretary of Foreign Affairs.

The members then proceeded to give their votes, and the proposition was adopted by eighty-one of the deputies. A few of them had withdrawn, or abstained from voting; one solitary member voted against the resolution. They then drew by lots for the committee, and the following proposition was read:

We demand of the Cortes to appoint a committee that shall proceed to Her Majesey the Queen, and acquaint her with the decision adopted at the sitting of this day. Salmeron, Larrus, Perez (D. Ramon,) Sagasta, Alonzo Cordero, Fernando de los Rios, Bulues y Solera.

This proposition, supported by Salmeron, was taken into consideration. It was resolved that it should be referred to the different bureaux or committees, and that the sitting should for that purpose be suspended. After an interval of three-quarters of an hour the sitting was resumed. A report was brought up of the nomination of the Special Committee, and at the same time the address which they had prepared, was read as follows:

MADAME: The Constituent Cortes have resolved, at their sitting of this day, after having seen in The Gazette Extraordinary the first acts of the new Cabinet presided over by the Count of Lucena, that this Ministry have not the confidence of the Chamber; a resolution which they transmit to you through the medium of this message, persuaded that you, who have always shown yourself so zealous for the peace and prosperity of this nation, will know how to employ your royal prerogative, so as to prevent the great misfortunes which the Constituent Cortes apprehend for liberty and for the throne so nobly occupied by your Majesty.

The debate was opened on this address, but no one rose to speak against it; it was unanimously adopted. They then proceeded to draw lots for the Committee who were to present the address to Her Majesty. The President said: The Commandant of the Palace will be informed of this, and will request Her Majesty to be so good as to fix the hour when she will receive the deputation of the Cortes. M. Moncasi—May I beg the President to continue the sitting until the return of the deputation? Mr. President—We do not know the hour when the Committee will be received. Several Deputies—Never mind the hour; we will wait here till it returns.

The Chamber having been consulted about this, the majority decided on remaing in permanency until the deputation should have brought back an account of its mission. The President then declared the sitting was suspended. It was 7 o'clock, and in the course of that evening the Minister O'Donnell answered the resolution of the Cortes by a curt note, saying as it was illegal he would not present it to the Queen, and ordering the meeting to disperse.

POLICY OF THE NEW GOVERNMENT.

The new Government has issued a semi-official programme of their policy, which is theoretically quite liberal. Its features are as follows:

1. No bloodshed for mere political punishment. Capital punishment to be reserved for common crimes committed under the cloak of political opinions. 2. Conciliation and toleration. 3. Moderate progressists not to be excluded from public functions. 4. The Constitution to be published. 5. The constituent Cortes to be dissolved and ordinary Cortes convoked. 6. The National Guard to be re-organized on a reduced scale. 7. Political prosecutions brought before the previous governments and certain persons connected with them, to be put a stop to. 8. Endeavors to obtain the modification of some article of the Constitution, and certain administrative principles. Lastly, the same administrative system as before to be followed.

Article 7 is especially intended to quash the investigations against Queen Maria Christina.

Turkey.

Letters from Constantinople say that the Turkish Government is directing attention to a reform of the monetary system and the establishment of a bank. The only two projects that promise, are those of Messrs. Layard, Yvan & Co., and of the Rothschilds. It is said that orders have been received from Paris to expedite the evacuation of Turkey by the French troops, so that by the 15th of August not a Frenchman shall remain in the East. Marshal Pelissier had had friendly audiences and had breakfasted with the Sultan. All the high Turkish functionaries had visited the Marshal, excepting Omer Pasha, who merely sent his compliments by an aide-de-camp. The decision of the new line of demarkation between Russia and Turkey seems attended with difficulties. The treaty says that the frontier shall pass to the south of Belgrade. But does this mean old Belgrade, situate five or six leagues to the north of Yalpouk, or new Belgrade, on the banks of the same lake? Russia insists on the latter version, while the Turks and their allies say the other was meant. It is affirmed that in the map produced by the Russian plenipotentiaries at the Congress of Paris had only old Belgrade marked thereon.

Italy.

The Neapolitan Government announces that English ships shall enjoy the same privileges as Neapolitan and those of all other nations who have reciprocal treaties; also, that the ten per cent. extra duty on wheat in English ships, to France, shall be returned.

Gen. Garibaldi, on leaving the little island of Capreza (which he has purchased), went to the baths of Voltagio, where the young men of the place gave him a serenade. On the following day, Garibaldi thanked them in a letter, of which the following is the concluding passage:—

"Young people of the rising generation! you are called to accomplish God's great design, as manifested to the great men of Italy in every age—the unity of the great people that produced the Archimedes, the Scipios, and the Immanuel Philiberts. The Italians, in every province of the peninsula, are ready to rally to the glorious flag you carry; and for my part, glad that I can fulfill my vow for Italy, I shall give to it, thanks be to God, the remainder of my life.

GUISEPPE GARIBALDI."

The criminal court of Breslau has condemned a lady of rank, the Baroness Von Z. (daughter of a Major-General), to six years solitary confinement, besides a fine of one thousand dollars and prohibition of connubial rights during that period. The charges brought against her were swindling and forgery of documents.

An Austrian officer, fishing lately in the Rhine, pulled up from the bottom a sword, which the antiquarians pronounce to have belonged to the Emperor Adolphus. The Duke of Nassau has purchased it from the lucky fisherman for the sum of one hundred and sixty florins.

The name of another Irish General turns up in the Spanish insurrection; we find the following in the Times: General Mac-

Crohon, who commanded on the 16th one of the columns of troops operating in the suburbs of Madrid, was to be promoted to the rank of Lieutenant-General. Favors were likewise to be conferred on the Marquis del Duero and Generals Ros de Olano, Dulce, Serrano, Messina, the Marquis de la Solana and others." MacCrohan, it will be admitted, is a name savoring more of the Shamrock of Erin than the Olive of Spain, and as for Solano, we leave it to be decided if the Marquis is not a real Sullivan, having near relatives in Berehaven or the kingdom of Kerry.

European Miscellany.

Queen Victoria is personally to present the Baltic medals to the fleet at Portsmouth ere long.

Mr. John Shakespeare, of Langley Priory, Ashby de la Zouch, has given £500 to purchase certain property on either side of Shakespeare's house at Stratford-on-Avon, and to restore that part of the premises known as the Swan and Maidenhead to its original state.

A prospectus has been issued of the United Kingdom Provision Company—capital £500,000; its object being to carry on an extensive business in breadstuffs and provision, chiefly from America.

The fetes at Brussels in celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of King Leopold's Accession to the Throne commecced on Monday, the 21st, and were conducted with magnificence. Brussels correspondence contains ample accounts.

There is a mania for establishing Credits Mobilliers just at present in Germany. To those in Vienna, Frankfort, Darmstadt, Leipsic, Dessau and others, of which the shares are at premiums ranging from 10 to 90 per cent., there are two additions, which have just been introduced at Berlin.

A shade of anxiety is expressed, lest the Russians should purchase the post of Milo from the Greeks, and convert it into another Sebastopol.

The recent troubles among the Mormons in Copenhagen were on the subject of Polygamy. One party objected to the practice, but a large majority upheld it. The Police were called to decide.

Letters from St. Petersburg say that there was much talk in that city respecting the approaching marriage of the Grand Duke Michael, brother of the Emperor, with the Princess Cecilia Agusta of Baden. Another subject of conversation is the great magnificence expected to be displayed by the foreign Embassadors at the Emperor's coronation.

Among the visitors now at the baths of Homburg, are Counts Walewski, Morny, Nesselrode, Seebach, and Prince Gorchakoff.

A Court-martial has been held on the mutineers of the North Tipperary militia. Four are sentenced to death, and two more are handed over for trial by the civil power.

A number of arrests were made in Paris on the 19th, 20th and 21st, of workmen who formed in groups in the Faubourg St. Antoine to talk about the affairs of Spain.

GENERAL WALKER.

Under the head of "The Man of Destiny," the New-Orleans Delta is publishing a very brilliant series of papers on the career of the distinguished person at present President of the Nicaraguan Republic. As there are glimpses of a couple of Irish exiles given in the first chapter, we extract therefrom. The facts of Walker's career present nothing new, and the papers owe their readable value purely to the heartiness of style in which they are written, and which we may, without fear of contradiction, credit to the forcible pen of our friend Joseph Brennan.

TWO DESTINIES CROSS EACH OTHER.

About the middle of October, '53, a steamer having cleared the bay of San Francisco, was some distance out at sea; within sight of the steamer was a lively-looking bark steering southwest.

A hail from the steamer, says the Delta, brought a sturdy response from the quarter-deck of the bark—"the Caroline from San Francisco, bound to" ——; but singularly enough the destination was inaudible. The two vessels gradually increased the distance between them and sped merrily along on their respective courses.

On the paddle-box of the steamer a man was standing who seemed to take a deep interest in the mysterious bark, and watched her progress uninterruptedly until her hull became a mere dot upon the horizon. He was apparently between thirty-five and forty years of age—lightly and gracefully built—somewhat above the average height and possessing a countenance instinct with intellectual power. His forehead was broad and bold, surrounded by a wreath of clustering curls; his mouth was full and energetic, his eye calm and cheerful, but wonderfully piercing and rapid at times; the chief expression of the whole face being the play of gentle irony, of semi-satirical kindness, of the working of an intellect which has seen much, has learned much, has suffered much, without losing its original capacity for genial mirth and healthy laughter. That man was John Mitchel, the defeated Republican of Europe, who had taken refuge from his enemies under the protection of the American flag. After a prison-trance of five years in Australia he awoke in the "Tyre of the Pacific," and was hastening to New-York to clasp the hands of his companions, from whom he had been separated so long.

On the quarter deck of the Caroline a very different personage is stationed, who was commencing the revolution of a startling and splendid destiny. He is a very ordinary-looking person, and cannot boast of any fine physical gifts which would distinguish him from the profanum vulgus of our American towns and cities. He is considerably under the "middle height," standing barely five feet four in his boots, and nothing strikingly intellectual in his countenance can be said to counterbalance this serious deficiency in inches; but his frame, though small, is sinewy, active, capable of immense fatigue. It conceals, like his features, many resources, and capacities as unexpected as they are vast. His mouth is somewhat coarse; his nose belongs to the school which Nicholas Nickleby denominates the "composite;" his hair is thin, light-colored, and closely cut; and his forehead is broad and rounded, without being unusually characteristic or remarkable. The principal feature of his countenance is the eye. Of a blue gray color, large, intelligent, occasionally dreamy, it has a thousand different expressions—a thousand thousand thoughts within its depths which no casual observer can fathom or appreciate. Like the relentless eye of Chatham, which held his rivals in constant check, it never loses sight of an enemy for a moment; and its possessor holds you, as the Ancient Mariner held the wedding guest, by its mysterious and glittering power. That small sized and rather unattractive man, so leisurely pacing the quarter-deck of the Caroline, is the heroic Viking of our times—the great nation-builder—the representative of Republican progress—Col. William Walker, bound from San Francisco for Lower California, where he and his companious intend to create an independent republic, as a preliminary to more extensive operations against the moribund despotism of Mexico.

Thus, on the waves of the Pacific, as we have said, two remarkable destinies crossed each other for a moment, and then separated to pursue very different futures in this vigorous world of ours. The vessel which bore the European Republican to find protection under the strong spirit of Americanism was passed by the ship which carried the American Viking to the destruction of the last remnant of European despotism on our soil. The star which culminated in misfortune was met by the star which could only culminate in victory; and so the Thinker and the Worker, whose destinies they ruled, departed on their different ways, each consciously or unconsciously fulfilling the laws which presided over his career. The Dreamer sailed safely to New-York; the Viking, in due time reached a convenient port in Lower California; the one issued the prospectus of a newspaper; the other published the Constitution of a new republic. But it is with the Viking alone that we have any business at present.

William Walker, the hero of the most extraordinary revolution, as regards both its materials and results, was born in Nashville, Tenn., in the year 1824—just four years after his father had settled in the United States. He is, therefore, about thirty-two years of age—a rather young man to have already discovered and worked out his destiny. He came of a hardy race, nurtured in a clime which has given many bold and beautiful intellects to the world. His father was a native of the land of Bruce and Burns—the land where war has always displayed a poetic spirit—where the lyre and the sword have been associated, as in the death-chant of the German Korner. For many years he was engaged in the banking business, in one of the large towns of Scotland, where he amassed a considerable fortune, with which he came to settle in this country, some time in the year 1820. The quick talent for practical affairs which distinguishes his celebrated son, was hereditary, therefore, like his roving and adventurous disposition. There is a strong substratum of Scotch common sense in his character, combined with a fiery enthusiasm which nothing can daunt or restrain—a rare union of qualities from which ultimate greatness is sure to spring.

It is not unlikely that the Scotch family was a branch of the original stock of those Irish Walkers who obtained such proud distinction through the celebrated defenders of Londonderry—the fighting minister, who, Bible in one hand and sword in the other, fell in a reckless charge at the battle of the Boyne. A hundred and sixty years ago there were intimate relations existing between Scotland and the North of Ireland, and from the combination of the two peoples—the Celtic and semi-Teutonic blood—a vigorous race sprung into existence which has won a haughty name on many a battle-field since then. From this Scotco-Irish race came Andrew Jackson, and in many respects the attributes of Jackson and Walker are the same. Every one knows the manner in which Jackson treated the temporary hostility of South Carolina and John C. Calhoun—his significant allusion to that dernier resort which would soon bring him and Nullification face to face. Something very similar to this was the reply of Walker to Colonel Kinney's proffer of friendship and support, on condition that he (Kinney) should be recognized as Governor of the Mosquito Country. "Tell Mr. Kinney," he said, "or Col. Kinney, or Governor Kinney, or whatever else he calls himself, that if I catch him now or at any future time interfering with the affairs of the State of Nicaragua, I will most assuredly hang him!" Has not his reply a strong flavor of Jacksonism about it? Assuredly it is characteristic of the descendants of the Scoto-Irish blood to which we have alluded, which speaks through its sons almost as emphatically as it acts.

DEVIN REILLY AND GENERAL WALKER.

After a vivid series of pictures of the youth and manhood of Walker, his school days, European travel, editorships and revolutionary speculations, the writer in the Delta traces a remarkable likeness, physical and intellectual, between Devin Reilly and the Nicaraguan hero. After alluding to the Democratic Review, he says:

During Reilly's short career he proved himself one of the most scathing and merciless writers of the New-York press. In person Devin Reilly was about Walker's height, perhaps half an inch over it, and the resemblance between their features as well as their ideas absolutely wonderful. The mouth of the editor was coarse and large like that of the Viking; his forehead was of the same mould; his eye was the same blue-gray, introverted occasionally, but bold and flashing in moments of excitement, and his manner was equally reserved and subdued in social intercourse, almost repelling to strangers, but eminently genial in the society of the few he loved and trusted.

One of the first subjects which attracted his pen in the United States was the Clayton-Bulwer treaty and the possible future of the Hispano-American colonies, and we venture to say that Mother Clayton has not yet forgotten the excoriation received by him from the Review for his ridiculous management of an affair on which a portion of our national dignity hinged. The ideas of Squier on British supremacy in that country were enlarged upon and improved in his articles, and a presentiment appeared to haunt him always that the time was come to rebuild the States of Central America, and connect them with the great family of the North American sovereignties. So far the coincidence in the appearance, intellectual characteristics and political ideas of the two men is curious enough; but it went farther still, for Reilly was precisely the age of Walker, and might have been as distinguished if his life were prolonged, inasmuch as his knowledge of military tactics was singularly perfect for a civilian, and his indomitable love of adventure would have compelled him to attempt some signal and illustrious deed. He died three years ago in Washington, in his 29th year, and would be 32 if he were alive to-day.

Further still the coincidence extends. The occupation of Nicaragua by an armed colony of American propagandists was a favorite project of his, and nothing but want of means, the curse and crime of exiles, prevented him from attempting it with a hundred men or less. He even proposed on one occasion to the writer of this article to become one of the projected company. Thus, while Walker was pondering over his designs in San Francisco and Marysville, his alter ego was meditating similar, if not idetical projects in New-York. Poor Reilly is dead, his "turbulent brain," in the words of his friend, John Savage, "is at rest at last;" he is buried near the city of Washington, as he requested himself, "on a green hillside, where his feet can feel the dew and his eyes can see the stars."

Correspondence.

Americans in Dublin—Statues—a King among the Patriots—Chantrey's Grattan—Lucas—Hogan's O'Connell—Memories of St. Werburgh's—The Tomb of "Silken Thomas"—The "Kildare Vault"—Lord Edward Fitzgerald's Coffin—Major Sirr—Memorable Streets—Emmet's Gallows in Thomas-street—Death Scene.

DUBLIN, JULY 25, 1856.

I am glad to perceive from our Hotel lists that quite a number of Americans are this summer coming amongst us. The very presence of these haughty republicans cannot but produce a beneficial effect. Here is a party of them standing in Dame street. I know them by their good clothes and their independent air. Why should I not accost them and offer them my services?

We shall first proceed to the Royal Exchange (now the City Hall), fronting Parliament street. On entering a noble hall of about 100 feet in circumference, lit from a dome 40 feet over head, we observe four statues in marble, Drummond, Grattan, Lucas and O'Connell. The bronze figure at the foot of the stair is George II. Opposite the entrance, on the left hand, is Grattan, scarcely needing the name of Chantrey as the the artist to impress you with its merit as a work of art. He stand as if "addressing the House," more in persuasive argument than oratorical display. In his left hand he holds a pamphlet, upon the open page of which his right hand is laid, as if from it he were deducing the ground-work of his argument. All the power and nobility of the great patriot, orator and statesman are visible in the face before us. The massive forehead, the deep eye-brow, the finely-formed Roman nose, the compressed lip—the most expressive part of the countenance—we almost expect to hear the words of fire issue from them, but—

"Start, for life is wanting there!"

On the pedestal is the following simple but expressive inscription:—

"Filio
Optimo Carissimo,
HENRICO GRATTAN,
Patria non ingrata.
1829."

Next, on the right, is the statue of Lucas, whose name should not be forgotten, notwithstanding his religious intolerance. In darkest hour of our cheerless night of bondage, he was the first to raise his voice in the all but forgotten cause of Nationality. He is represented in the posture of earnest appeal—the body thrown forward on the right leg; the left hand, holding the end of his robe, which falls gracefully behind him, is raised to his breast' The right, which holds a manuscript, is extended forward. On the pedestal is merely the name,—"C. Lucas, M. D."

Farther on to the right is the colossal statue of O'Connell, from the chisel of Hogan. The attitude at first seems stiff by contrast with the impassioned pleader on the left. But it is a noble work. Hogan has evidently carried out Davis's directions:—

"Chisel the likeness of our Chief
Not in gaiety nor grief—
Fierce defiance let him be
Hurling at our enemy."

Calm, erect and immovable stands the uncrowned monarch o Ireland. "Fierce defiance" on his curling lip,

"And the strength of all the land,
Like a falchion in his hand."

Leaving the Hall through the door by which we entered, and turning up Cork Hill, we enter the street on our right, which is Castle street. Between Nos. 8 and 9 is a narrow passage. Enter. It leads to the Sexton's house, in the rear of St. Werburgh's Church. Admission to the churchyard is not denied. Slabs and tombs are thick around, and the grass and weeds, rank and matted, thrive luxuriantly in the human soil. Many are the lines here that tell of worth departed, of blighted hopes, and affections severed; many a stone to mark where the mourner's tear may fall. And where is our's, Irishmen? Whose grave seek you among the tombs? Is it a father or brother dear that sleeps, with rest unbroken by the ceaseless din of busy life in the street outside? Why darkens your brow before that curious old slab, built into the southern wall of the church, with its strangely chiselled effigies of a mail-clad knight and his good ladye? Why grow you sadder as the Sexton opens the grating that leads to the vaults beneath? That slab is part of the tomb of "Silken Thomas," and down in the dark charnel vaults below sleeps the brave Lord Edward. Descending by some ten or a dozen steps, by lantern light, you wend your way to the chamber of the dead, and are led to the "Kildare Vault," as it is called.

You enter it. On the left hand are two coffins, so old that even the lead has corroded away in part, and revealed the ashes of the brave Geraldine Knights. But our eye dwells not on these—it seeks another object. Many a valiant Knight is here, but he, "the Chieftain of them all,"—where is he laid? A lone coffin lies upon the floor, apart from all the others—plain and unornamented, damp and mildew cover it all over. View it—bend over it—weep over it—it holds all that now remains of Lord Edward Fitzgerald. There, mouldering into dust, lies the pride of a noble house, the leader of a noble cause—struck down in the flower of his youth, hunted like a beast of prey, tracked to his lair, surprised, set upon and slain. Drop by drop trickles down the water upon that coffin from the roof above—dark and silent is the chamber where his narrow bed is made. As silently flowed a nation's tears above his bier, and darker was the night that settled on its hopes the hour that saw him laid within this gloomy cell. No funeral array, no ordered lines of mourners followed to the grave this scion of the Geraldines. In silence, if not in stealth, he was laid in the vault of his ancestors. In that dark hour, to speak of him was dangerous, to weep for him a crime.

On the coffin is a brass plate, with the following inscription:

LORD EDWARD FITZGERALD,
Fifth son of the First Duke of Leinster.
Born, October 15th, 1763.
Died, June 4th, 1798.

Buried, June 7, 1798.
To preserve the leaden coffin containing his remains,
it was enclosed in this additional protection
by his children, Feb. 8th, 1844.

It was his daughter, Lady (Sir Colin) Campbell, who had the remains thus cared for.*

Regaining the ground outside, we turn towards the north-eastern corner of the yard, and stop at a slab level with the ground and broken across the middle. Beneath that stone rots one of Lord Edward's assassins, the notorious Major Sirr.

We now leave the yard, and regain Castle-street and Corn market. Christ Church would repay a visit, did leisure permit. It is a massive pile of building, the work of Catholic Times, now in the hands of the law church. Thomas street is now entered, and we find ourselves within that street so long familiar to our ears in connection with the hapless struggles of 1798 and 1803. Proceeding westward, we arrive opposite St. Catherine's church on the left. Bridgefoot street branches off towards the river on our right. Across this street, midway between the church and the opening of Bridgefoot street, were placed on the 20th of September 1803, some dozen empty barrels, with boards laid upon them to form a scaffold. On this were raised two upright posts, with cross-bar, rope and noose, a gallows-tree complete and ready for the victim. And he came—a young man and brave, with the mien of a martyr, not a criminal. With firm step and placid brow, he stepped upon the board beneath the noose, and looked around with a heaving breast. "My friends," said he, "I die in peace with all men"—took one more look at the scene of his murder, and drew down the cap. He held a white kerchief in his hand—the executioner waited for its fall.

"Are you ready?" said the representative of law and order. "Not yet," replied the young victim. A pause, and still the kerchief did not fall. Again the same enquiry—again he said, "Not yet—not yet." Oh, what can keep O'Dwyer and his trusty band. Like a sheep bound to the slaughter, his brave young leader stands without help and without hope. He expects O'Dwyer—moments are as years—but O'Dwyer comes not. Once more the question, "Are you ready?" again the same answer, "Not yet—not yet." But while the words are issuing from the lips, one end of the boards is tilted up—the body falls—a short, convulsive struggle, and all is over; and the pure spirit of Robert Emmet was fled.

We said all was over. No. Government could not be satisfied without blood—his hot, reeking blood. The body is taken. Sharp is the axe, and strong the arm that wields it—one blow, and the head rolls on the scaffold; jets of blood from the arteries stream through the openings, and coagulate upon the ground just where we stand. The executioner holds the head aloft, and exclaims—"Behold the head of a traitor, Robert Emmet!"

Ours is a sad and sickening feeling, as we turn away from this dreadful spot to visit the scene of a more violent, though not more lawless murder.

To be continued by KILMAINHAM.

* In the vault we observed an intrusion which should be prevented if possible. The rectors of the parish, claiming the vault in right of some ukase of the Eighth Henry's, and finding no one likely to notice or dispute the intrusion, are converting it to their own purposes, and have already placed a few coffins in it, so that in the course of time the Geraldine coffins may be no longer seen.

PARAGRAPHS

FROM THE MUNSTER PAPERS—PEN AND SCISSORS WORK.

The Kilkenny summer assizes were going on when the Asia left. William Hayden, Esq., Sub-Sheriff, in the absence of the High-Sheriff, Arthur Kavanagh, Esq., swore in the Grand Jury. The old stereotyped names appear in the panel. The Wandesfordes, Tighes, Montmorencies, St. Georges, Cuffes, Langrishes, Finns and Warrens. The County Surveyor, Samson Carter, Esq., reported in favor of works to the amount of £13,262, some odd shillings, and ten pence. Baron Pennefather opened the Assize with the usual formalities. In his address to the Grand Jury, he congratulated the County Kilkenny on the fact of their being only two cases for trial which called for any particular notice. Both were cases of manslaughter. One by innoculation for small-pox, the other by putting a sick child to sit on the top of a dung-hill, with the hope of reviving it. In the former case, the jury acquitted the prisoner. The latter case had not been decided before the steamer sailed.

A curious investigation, it appears, has very lately taken place in the Kilkenny Tholsel, before a bench of magistrates. A very ugly old man, one Thomas Byrne, an Irish instructor under the Church Missions Society, complained he had been violently assaulted by some unknown parties:

He had been working, he said, as a laborer, in a new house in course of erection, belonging to Mr. Campion; a man named Brennan was also working there as a plasterer. Between ten and eleven o'clock in the forenoon, Brennan having gone out for a short time, six strange men entered, and putting a strap about his neck, hung him up till his tongue protruded; they threatened to kill him if he did not leave the Soupers. He never saw the men before, but he professed to give an elaborate description of four of them, including the color and quality of all their wearing apparel, their hair, eyes, complexion, &c.

On a full hearing of the case, the magistrates dismissed the complaint as utterly without foundation.

Nothing remarkable occurred at the last meeting of the Guardians of the Urlingford Union. The weekly report informs us there are at present 232 paupers in the house. A balance of £146 in favor of the Guardians, also appears. As yet the City Council have done nothing to facilitate Mr. Ferguson in carrying out, as he has so generously offered to do, a splendid system of water-works for the city. It's a wonder Kilkenny is slow in this respect.

An advertisement in the Journal communicates the agreeable information, that on the evening of the 24th of July, there was a gorgeous display of Fireworks and a Balloon ascent from the Atlantic Terrace, in the beautiful little village of Tramore. The Bands of the County Dublin Light infantry and Kilkenny Fusileers were in attendance. Ten years ago, who would have thought of such a pyrotechnic and military musical fete? The only amusements we recollect there were the races on the strand, an occasional steeple-chase, an odd ball at the Great Hotel, and a vagrant theatre on wheels. Three or four Sundays during the Summer, the Waterford Temperance band (the two or three years it was in existence) used to come out on cars, and play on the storm-wall overlooking the ladies' bathing place, or on the Terrace opposite Massey's. More power to Tramore! The Journal gives us a long extract from a report recently drawn up by Dr. Lawlor, the Resident Physician of the Kilkenny Lunatic Asylum. There is hardly anything of a local interest in the report. For the greater part, it is an elaborate dissertation on the working of all such institutions, and abounds in most useful suggestions a propos to the treatment of idiots and lunatics. The following dialogue between John Adye Curran and a witness, named Murphy, in the Recorder's court, Dublin, is worth extracting in full from the Journal. Murphy swore that one George Walshe had assaulted him in Luke street, threatening to break his neck and spit in his eye. Murphy, it appears, was employed as a distributor of Bibles amongst the benighted ragamuffins of Dublin:

Cross examined by Mr. Curran—On your oath, Murphy, did you touch Mr. Walshe?

Witness (with dignified stolidity)—No.

Mr. Curran—Did any of your party?

Witness (still more stolidly)—No (laughter).

Mr. Curran—Did any of you ask him what was Popery?

Witness—No.

Mr. Curran—Did you seize him by the button-hole and insist on his answering the question?

Witness—No.

Mr. Curran—How long have you been a Scripture-reader?

Witness—About five years; I came from Ballingarry, county Limerick.

Mr. Curran—What was your father?

Witness—He was an idolator, while he was in the Roman Catholic church (sensation in court).

The Recorder—You have not come here to show your learning; you are asked what his occupation or calling was?

Witness—He was a teacher.

Mr. Curran—Is he an idolator still?

Witness—No, thank God (laughter).

Mr. Curran—Were you an idolator?

Witness—I was (laughter).

Mr. Curran—Until your eyes were opened (laughter). Well then, my son of an idolator, how much a week do you get for insulting the people?

Witness—I won't tell you. How much do you get for acting in the case.

Mr. Curran—Well, "Popery" has a great loss in you (laughter.)

Michael James O'Neill (a severe-looking personage in black) examined—Deposed that he was a fellow-laborer of the former witness, whom he heard ask the traverser if the Luke-street School were not a "nice institution;" he heard the traverser say it was "the devil's institution," that they were "entrapping the children, and destroying their morals;" he heard Murphy request the traverser to inform him what constituted a Christian, and he saw the latter strike the former twice.

Cross examined by Mr. Curran—The traverser was asked twice what constituted a Christian.

Mr. Curran—Are you the son of an idolator (laughter)?

Witness—I am the son of a Roman Catholic, and I believe all Catholics to be idolators (murmurs in court).

Mr. Curran—How long have you been a Scripture reader?

Witness—About five years.

Mr. Curran—How much do you get a week?

Witness—That is not relevant to the question.

Mr. Curran—What trade are you?

Witness—I was a professor of vocal and instrumental music (laughter).

Mr. Curran—Commonly called a ballad singer (laughter).

James Crawford, another "expounder," corroborated the evidence of the two former witnesses.

Cross-examined by Mr. Curran—Have you ever been charged whit stealing a shilling?

Witness—Eh? (laughter).

Mr. Curran—What were the circumstances under which you were charged with stealing a shilling?

Witness—A woman swore that she gave me a bottle, which she did not, and a shilling to purchase whiskey, and then I ran away with the shilling (laughter).

Mr. Curran—And you gave her a shilling in court to make it up?

Witness—I did.

Mr. Curran—Are you still a Scripture-reader?

Witness—I am.

Mr. Curran—God bless the mark (laughter).

The Kilkenny city Assizes haven't opened as yet. The Grand Jury, however, have been empanelled. Edmund Smithwick is foreman. At the last meeting of the Callan Union, the following interesting incidents transpired:

Four young girls, whose passages have been paid to Australia by their friends there, applied for clothing. It was proposed by Mr. Izod, and seconded by Dr. Ryan, that the Commissioner's sanction be requested, for the expenditure of a sum of £10, to be charged to Ballyphilip Electoral Division, to procure an outfit for them.

On the motion of Dr. Ryan, it was resolved, that the Commissioners be requested to sanction the expenditure of a sum of £2, 10s., to be charged to Kilmoganny Electoral Division, to aid Margaret Breen, an inmate of the Workhouse, to join her brother in America, who paid her passage. Also, for a sum of £4 10s., to assist Margaret Coughlan, aged 63 years, and Frances Cahill, her granddaughter, aged 4 years, to emigrate to Boston, having received £4 from her daughter, who is living there, to be charged to Callan Electoral Division.

The Callan Guardians are not in so pleasant a financial condition as the brethren of Carlingford. On the Treasurer's book, a balance of £402 appears against them. A fine public hall has just been opened in Kilkenny. It is called the Athenæum, and will be devoted to concerts, public meetings, lectures, and every other kind of instruction and polite exhibition. The Athenæum was inaugurated on the 21st of July. The Band of the Kilkenny Fusileers attended on the occasion.

Running down to Waterford, we find there has been an extensive fire in the Neptune Iron Works; that the Malakoff, a grand new steamer, has commenced plying twice a week between Waterford and Milford Haven; and that Hugh Jenkins, Esq., of Baltimore, Maryland, has contributed the Book of the Eighth Annual Exhibition of the Maryland Institute to the library of the Mechanic's Scientific Institute. Sir Richard Musgrave has contributed three pounds to the funds of the Institute.

O'BRIEN AND TIPPERARY.

At a General Meeting of the Tipperary Independent County Club, convened pursuant to notice, in Thurles, on Wednesday, the 16th instant, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:—

Moved by the Rev. Mr. Canty, C. C., seconded by the Rev. Mr. O'Brien, C.C.

"That the Rev. Mr. Lannigan, P.P., do take the chair."

Moved by N. V. Maher, Esq, Turtulla, seconded by the Rev. W. F. Mullally, P.P.

"That it is the unanimous opinion of this Club, that William Smith O'Brien, Esq., should be requested to permit himself to be put in nomination for the representation of this county, in the event of a vacancy occurring therein; and that the Rev. P. Hickey, P. P., Doon, the Rev. D. K. O'Canigan, P. P., Kilcummin, and T. C. O'Flanagan, Esq., Kilbrenal, are hereby appointed a deputation to wait on Mr. O'Brien to ascertain will he accept of the representation."

D. K. O'LANNIGAN, P.P., Chairman.
J. O'DWYER, T. P. O'FLANIGAN, } Secretaries.

July 16th 1856.

The adjourned meeting of the club was held on Wednesday, the 23d instant, in Thurles, at which the adjourned proceedings were adopted.

The Rev. P. Hickey, P.P., in the chair. The reply of Mr. O'Brien to the invitation to accept the representation, in the event of a vacancy, being read and submitted to the consideration of the meeting, it was moved by the Rev. Mr. Burke, P. P., seconded by the Rev. Mr. Quirke, C.C.,

That Mr. O'Brien's letter be inserted on the minutes with the resolutions now unanimously adopted.

"Dromeland, Newmarket-on-Fergus,
July 18th, 1856.

"REV. DEAR SIR—As the deputation of the Liberal Club of the County of Tipperary, which waited on me at Dromoland, with a view to ascertain whether I would allow myself to be put in nomination for that county, have kindly permitted me to give a written answer to their inquiry, I hasten to transmit to you this communication. Allow me, in the first place, to express the very great gratification which I have derived from learning that the Freeholders of the County of Tipperary are desirous to confer upon me the highest honor which it is in their power to bestow. To be solicited within a week after my return from exile to accept the representation of one of the largest counties in Ireland, is a circumstance so flattering to me, that I might be excused if I were to indulge at this moment in some exultation of a personal kind, but this invitation affords me pleasure chiefly because it will evince to the world that the Irish are not ungrateful towards those who encounter suffering in an attempt to serve them.

"Such being my sentiments, I cannot without sincere regret decline the honor which they have designed for me. I could not fully develope all the considerations which have induced me to form this determination, without hurting the feelings of many who, though they differ from me in political opinions, sincerely rejoice in my return; and at the risk of being charged with weakness, I avow that I am unwilling at such a moment as the present unnecessarily to offend any of those who have sympathised with me in the days of misfortune.

"It is enough that I should say that I could not attend Parliament without separating myself from my family during several months of each year, and that I am not prepared, under present circumstances, to make this sacrifice of the duties and pleasures of domestic life.

"Perhaps I should feel some compunction in thus refusing to re-enter the House of Commons, if I could persuade myself that in that sphere I could be useful to my country; but in 1843, after having attended Parliament with continuous assiduity during twelve years, I arrived at the conclusion that my time would have been much more usefully occupied if I had remained in Ireland, and everything that has occurred since that period has confirmed rather than weakened this conviction.

"Under these circumstances I have no desire to recommence a career which would be fraught with unhappiness to myself and to many whom I love. At the same time I propose to keep a vigilant watch over the legislation which may be brought forward for Ireland; and if at any time hereafter I may have reason to believe that my experience in public affairs can be rendered useful to my country, I shall not hesitate to offer such suggestions as the occasion may require. My opinion, if it be of any value, will be at least as potential when expressed in my native land, as it would be if delivered in the House of Commons.

"Believe me, very sincerely yours,
"WILLIAM S. O'BRIEN.

"The Rev. P. Hickey."

Resolved—"That having formed a club to establish the freedom and purity of our county representation, the long-expected opportunity is now likely to be presented to this body, to vindicate the independence and integrity of the county of Tipperary.

"That as we have no security even for partial redress unless in a faithful representation, and as representation in Ireland, by the flagitious conduct of the British minister, has been made, in most cases, a mockery, a delusion, and a snare, hence arises the necessity for Irish constituencies of selecting for their representatives, such men of honor and worth as cannot be tempted by the bribes of the government, or bought by the gold of the Treasury.

"That as this country dealt, involuntarily, the heaviest blow against popular Parliamentary character, we felt the obligation to make a corresponding effort to select and return, now, to the British Senate, a representative whose presence would command the attention of every thinking man.

"That at this crisis of our representative's degradations, we did not require the unparalleled testimony borne by some hundred and fifty members of the House of Commons, comprising the best and ablest men of all parties in the State, to the self-denying and generous nature of William Smith O'Brien, to select him as the man, in whom all that admires honor and principle could abidingly confide, for being long acquainted with his sterling work, irrespective of other testimony. We offered him our ardent support, as we knew the heart. Tipperary trusted to him with pride and trust.

"That Mr. O'Brien having declined our earnest invitation, this Club, strong in truth and unity of purpose, will not interfere in any contest between Whig and Tory, because, the former has at last made of the Irish representation nothing more than an organised political swindle, and as such, a vital national calamity, the latter if Whiggery be crushed in Ireland, a result easily achieved, as has been abundantly proved at our late few Irish elections, must at least, entertain a respect, if it be not compelled to legislate, for the protection of the Irish tenantry.

P. HICKEY, P.P., Chairman.
J. O'DWYER, T. P. O'FLANIGAN, } Secretaries.

Thurles, July 23rd 1856.

Irish News.

The first meeting for the season of the Wexford Archers has taken place, at Bellevue, the seat of Anthony Cliffe, Esq. Shooting commenced at eight targets at half-past 2 o'clock, and terminated at half-past 5, when the various scores were announced. The first prize was adjudged to Miss Sarah Percival, who made the large score of 220 in her usual accomplished style of shooting. The second prize for hits was awarded to Miss Nannie Percival, who made a successful debut on this occasion, scoring 40 hits. The third prize was won by Miss Percival, after a close contest with Miss Talbot; and a handsome prize, presented to the club by Sir James Power, was gained by Miss Bell for a fine hit in the central gold. The gentlemen's prize was won by Mr. Maconchy, making 273 in his usual finished style—a score which, we believe, has never been equalled. The shooting over, the company, about 230 in number, dined together in their spacious marquee. The scores of the day were announced by the Secretary, and the prizes delivered to the victors, their healths drunk with enthusiasm, and duly responded to. In the evening, the saloons of Bellevue were thrown open. Quadrilles and waltzes, lancers and gallopes, followed in happy variety until an early hour in the morning, when the company broke up, only hoping soon to meet again.

Amongst the company we observed: Sir Thomas and Lady Esmonde, Sir James and Lady Power, Hon. Lieut.-Col. Carew, John George, M. P., Mrs. and Miss George, Mr. and Mrs. Walker, Master and the Misses Walker, Mr. and Mrs. Maher, Mr. and Mrs. Beatty and Mrs. D. Beatty, Mr. and Mrs. Bell and the Misses Bell, Major Doran and the Misses Doran, Mr. J. E. Redmond, and Miss Archer, Mr. W. Richards, Miss Richards, and Miss Dayrolles, Mr. and Mrs. Harman, Mr. John Howlin and Miss Howlin, Mr. J. H. Talbot and Mrs. Talbot, Mrs. Percival and the Misses Percival, Mr. and Mrs. Percy Harvey, Miss Johns and Miss M. A. Johns, Mr. W. C. Harvey and Miss Harvey, Captain Pigott and Mrs. Pigott, Mr. and Mrs. Stannard, Mr. and Mrs. James Howlin, Lieut.-Col. Toole and Mrs. Toole, Mr. and Mrs. Talbot and Miss Talbot, Mr. Maconchy, Captain Kennedy, Mr. Cornock and Mr. Zack. Cornock, Captain Meagher, Lieut.-Col. Bayly, Captains Blachford, Truell, Grogan, and Mr. Dennis, Wicklow Rifles; Mr. John Talbot, Mr. Keller, &c., &c.

The Imperial Gold Cross of the Legion of Honor has been presented to Corporal William Cooke, of the 9th regiment. He is the only military man in Limerick who has received such a decoration. On the occasion of the abortive assault on the Redan, on the 18th of June, 1855, Corporal William Cooke found himself with twelve or fourteen comrades of his own regiment near the twelve-gun battery, called the Cemetery, when an immense shell fell amongst them. Cooke hastily handed his rifle to one of his comrades, and coolly taking up the shell, while the fuse was still burning, flung it back into the embrasure, where it instantaneously exploded, killing and wounding a large number of the enemy, and saving the lives of himself and his comrades. This action was witnessed by one of the French generals, who mentioned it in his despatch to General Canrobert, and the circumstance having been communicated to the Emperor, he ordered the Grand Cross to be awarded to the chivalrous soldier.

A return, moved for by Mr. Davison, M. P., shows that the moneys received by the Society of the King's Inns, in Dublin, this year, has amounted to about £983, the ordinary expenditure to £3,522, and the extraordinary expenditure to £468. In 1855 the ordinary expenditure was £4,427, and in 1854, £4,830. Of the receipts this year £86 was derived from students, £230 from barristers, £102 from apprentices, £271 from attorneys, and £294 from the stamp duty on attorney's indentures.

It appears that the maximum number of inmates in the Union Workhouses of Ireland on the 31st of March, 1855, amounted to 90,107, and the minimum number on the 22d of September, 1855, to 56,518. The return which gives these particulars contains also some correspondence between the Poor Law Commissioners for Ireland and Mr. Stanley (their late secretary) relative to the suggestion by the latter for a reconstruction of the staff in the Poor Law Office, with a view to its being more economically worked.

The Gort Convent Committee proceeded three Sundays since to Touclay parish, in the diocese of Kilfenora, where their labors were rewarded by generous contributions, amounting to £50. They were most efficiently assisted on the occasion by the Rev. T. Kelly, P. P., who headed the list with a liberal subscription, and by his curate, the Rev. J. Barry, C. C.

The Gorey Correspondent of the Wexford Independent, states that new Potatoes have been sold in that town at 10d per stone, which, considering the present enormous prices of provisions, may be reckoned moderate. The present weather is highly favorable to the maturing of the crop, and information from different sources, promises an abundant yield this season.

The Cork Examiner announces the death of the Right Rev. Dr. Egan, Bishop of Kerry. Dr. Egan had been for nearly thirty-five years bishop of the diocese of Kerry, but for the last few years, owing to his age and infirmities, he has had the assistance of a coadjutor, the Right Rev. Dr. Moriarty.

One hundred and eighty-four of the Carlow Militia have taken their discharge. Each man received fourteeen days' pay, and ten shillings, the balance of the present year's bounty, and all returned to their respective districts in high spirits. The officers gave a farewell dinner to a large number of the gentry of the county.

The Hon. George F. Prittie, Clerk of the Peace for the county Tipperary, has received from the Crown and Hanaper Office Her Majesty's writ of Supersedeas, requiring Mr. James Sadleir to "resign and deliver up" the commission which he holds as a Justice of Peace.

Mr. James Poigndestre, one of the messengers of the House of Commons, arrived in Clonmel, and proceeded to the late residence of Mr. Sadleir to serve a notice requiring his attendance in the House.

In the Limerick markets, it appears, the supplies have greatly fallen off, and quotations for grain of every description may be considered almost nominal. The Butter market, however, is good.

The Rev. John Barry, P. P. of Crossabeg, acknowledges the receipt at the Chapels of Crossabeg and Ballymurrin, county Wexford, of £16 10s. including £5 the contribution of John Maher, Esq., of Ballinkeele, in aid of the sufferers by the late inundations in France.

The following Irish officers and soldiers who served in the Crimea have received the order of the Legion of Honor, conferred on them by the French Emperor:

Lieutenant-Gen. Sir De Lacy Evans, Major-General Lord Lucan, Colonel, the Honorable Wm. L. Packenham, Colonel Wm. Sullivan, Lieutenant-Colonel George Vaughan Maxwell, 88th Connaught Rangers; Assistant-Surgeon Thomas Clarke Brady, Assistant-Surgeon Charles O'Callaghan, Major James Connolly, Capt. Theobald McKenn, 1st regt., 2d battalion; Major John Dwyer, 14th regt.; Major Mathew Jones Hasman, 18th regt.; Sergeant John Grant, 18th regt.; John Lyons, 19th regt.; Major Butler, 20th regt,; Capt. Roger Killeen, 21st regt.; Capt. Wm. Henry Carleton, 21st; Corp. Robert Shields, 23d; Major Percy Arthur Butler, 28th; Sergeant Major Richard Nagle, 30th; John M'Cormick, 39th; Major Robert John Egan, 21st; Major E. W. Donovan, 33d; Sergeant Jas. O'Neill, Colonel Wm. McMahon, 44th; Lieutenant-Col. Maxwell, 46th; Corp. Thos. Kelly, 48th; Corp. James Butler, 49th; Corp. Joseph Doyle, Capt. Henry Butler, 57th; Lieutenant-Col. Ready, 71st; Thomas Cronin, 77th; Capt. Geo. Robert Beresford, 88th; Sergeant Thomas Goggin, 88th; Sergeant Joseph Brennan, ditto; Sergeant Timothy Murphy, 99th; Major William Reilly, Royal Artillery; Lieutenant Lyons, Sergeant John Devine, ditto.

Within this week, writes the editor of the Nation, we have inspected a triumph of tasteful design and inventive ingenuity. A very handsome black-oak walking-cane, in no way remarkable, unless for neatness and finish and lightness of proportions, we found to contain a mariner's compass, a sun-dial, a spirit-level, a circumferenter, an off-setter, a monthly almanac, and a cane sword! The designer, and in a great measure the executor, holds a situation in this city, under the Board of Education. He is an Irishman. If his name has not an Irish sound, we know of none that has. Mr. Daniel O'Connell, Mathematical Teacher, Ranelagh, Rathmines, is the ingenious inventor of the "Polymetric Walking Cane." He comes from a county that claims a Hogan, Maclise, Barry, and Barter. It is no little credit to the Board in Marlborough street, to reckon such a man on their staff; they have a good opportunity of rebutting the charge that the teachers under the system are of inferior intellectual or literary acquirements.

At a very recent meeting of the Clonakilty Board of Guardians, a member gave notice that on that day fortnight he would move the following resolution: "Having seen published in the Cork Examiner a letter written by the Rev. Mr. Maguire, chaplain to the hospital at Scutari, contradicting the statement made by Mr. Hungerford, chairman of this board, when advocating the exclusion of the Sisters of Mercy from the Clonakilty Workhouse, to the effect that they were turned out of the hospitals in the East, we feel bound to express our regret that there should have emanated from this boardroom a calumny against ladies who so eminently served the British soldier during the late war; as also against Miss Nightingale and the other government authorities, in the same breath, who have been exposed to obloquy by the disrespect which they were implied to have put on the Sisters of Mercy; and we call upon Mr. Hungerford, the chairman, to apologise to the public for the statement which he stands accused of having uttered."

The Carlow Sentinel says it is no longer a secret that James Sadlier has effected his escape, and is, no doubt, on his way to the Southern States of America, where, it is believed, his brother survives the catastrophe supposed to be enacted at Hampstead Heath. Whether John is dead or alive, the Sentinel adds, James is now in the the land of liberty, and can bid defiance to the unfortunate shareholders and creditors of his gigantic swindle. He cannot, however, have been long an absentee, as it was only three weeks ago that a large amount of his costly furniture was conveyed through Carlow, in floats, to Dublin.

Constable Mockler, Cork city, lately preferred a complaint against a cooper named John Meany. The constable, it appears, was sent for to remove the prisoner from the establishment of Mr. John Murphy, Watercourse, where he was creating a disturbance. The constable no sooner entered the establishment than the prisoner ran towards him, holding in one hand a cooper's knife, and in the other a hatchet. A struggle ensued between them, in which the prisoner made a cut of the hatchet at the constable, but the latter moving backwards escaped without any injury except the cutting of his trousers across the leg.

Mr. Kennedy, the member for Louth, has given notice he will move for a select committee to inquire into the means by which the time of the Imperial Parliament could be best economised, and the interests of the integral parts of these kingdoms may be best secured; and whether these objects may not be advantageously obtained by the appointment of separate standing committees, consisting of the representatives of Ireland and Scotland respectively, by whom measures referring to Ireland and Scotland exclusively should be discussed and reported upon, before legislation had thereon in this house.

An order has been issued by the Commander of the Forces abolishing Limerick as a separate military district, and attaching it to that of Cork. General Sir James Chatterton is to take charge of a cavalry brigade at the Curragh, and the officers comprising his staff are to join their respective regiments forthwith. The Limerick Observer, which contains this intelligence, announces the intention of the citizens of Limerick to hold a meeting to denounce the conduct of the authorities in this respect.

The Belfast Mercury learns that the Rev. Mr. M'Kay, P. P., of Maralin, county Down, while returning on Monday from a confirmation by the Right Rev. Dr. Blake, was beaten severely by a body of men, said to be Orangemen, within a short distance of his house, near Lurgan. The injuries sustained by the reverend gentleman are said to be dangerous.

At a late meeting of the Dublin city bankers, the question of a decimal coinage was discussed, their opinion having been requested by the commissioners appointed to report to the government on the subject. The conclusion arrived at, with only one dissent, was, that any legislative alteration would be undesirable.

Major-General Sir James C. Chatterton, has been appointed a magistrate for the county Galway, and Mr. Richard Butler, of Castlecomer, has received the commission of the peace for the county of Kilkenny.

The Sisters of Mercy, Limerick, most gratefully acknowledge the receipt of one guinea from Edward J. Sheehy, Esq., Cherrygrove, as foreman of a record jury, per M. R. Ryan, Esq.

The Right Rev. Dr. Moriarty, Catholic Bishop of Kerry, has sent £1 subscription with a letter to the chairman of the Protestant Orphan Society of Cork.

We copy from the Munster News the following letter from Wm. Smith O'Brien, Esq., to the Rev. J. Vaughan, P.P., Ruan and Dysart, Clare:

"Dromoland, July 15th, 1856.

"My dear and Reverend Sir—Many thanks for your kind congratulation. It has given me much pleasure to find that my return to Ireland has afforded satisfaction to a large proportion of my fellow-countrymen, and it is peculiarly gratifying to me to perceive that this sentiment prevails to a great extent in the county of Clare, with which my family has been identified during three thousand years.

"For a variety of reasons, which it is not necessary now to recapitulate, I am desirous at present to avoid public meetings. I must, therefore, entreat you to abandon your intention of bringing to Dromoland, on Sunday next, your warm-hearted flock, and hope that they will be satisfied to accept, in lieu of a personal interview, this expression of my thanks for the proposed demonstration of their attachment.—I remain yours very faithfully, "William S. O'Brien.

"To the Rev. Mr. Vaughan, &c. &c."

Amongst the list of English officers named for the decoration of the Knights' Cross of the Legion of Honor, by the French Minister of War, for heroic conduct in the Crimea, is Mr. Charles O'Callaghan, late assistant-surgeon of the 64th regiment, and now assistant-surgeon of the Ophthalmic Hospital, Maidstone. Mr. O'Callaghan's career in the army has been short and brilliant. The inhabitants of Killarney have lately presented him with a silver gilt vase and salver, at a cost of 80 guineas, as a memorial of their approbation of his gallant behavior.

The Pollock Prize, a very large and magnificent gold medal, was won by John Eckford, Esq., brother-in-law of the Right Worshipful James Spaight, Esq., Mayor of Limerick, at the late examinations at the Military Seminary, Addiscombe. He has been pronounced the most distinguished Cadet of the season. Mr. Eckford likewise obtained the sword of honor, and was placed in the position of first engineer.

The Moniteur has published an Imperial decree, dated June 16th, by which, on the proposition of the Minister of Foreign Affairs, the Order of the Legion of Honor is conferred by the Emperor Napoleon III. on 450 British officers and soldiers, and 136 officers and seamen also. Among the number we see, from County Westford, the names of Col. Richard Waddy, C. B., of the 50th, and Major Edward Westby Donovan, of the 33d Regiment.—Sentinel.

One of the men found guilty at the Coronor's inquest of aiding and assisting in the murder of Thomas Cosgrave, at Carrick, on the evening of the last May fair, has been arrested by Constable Michael Sullivan of Lisduff station. His name is Rody Cleary. This Rody Cleary was the person who gave the last blow to Cosgrave, according to the evidence produced at the Coronor's inquest. Cleary will be sent forward to the county gaol to be tried at the next assizes.

The Kilkenny Journal says that the wheat crop is not so heavy as last year, but the breadth sown this season is greater than that of last. Barley is not a good crop, nor is there as large a breadth sown as last year. The oat crop is a fair one, except in some few instances, and these are in exhausted and worn out land. Potatoes are doing well. The extent of land under this crop is larger than any year since the first failure. Early meadowing is also a good crop.

The result of the general court-martial at Nenagh on the soldiers of the North Tipperary Artillery is, that four of them are to be hanged, and two are ordered to be tried by the civil authorities. The finding of the court has been transmitted to the Commander-in-Chief, to be submitted under his advice to the Queen for her final decision.

The investigation of the attack on Father McKay has been postponed until the next Petty Sessions at Moira, in consequence of the inability of the Rev. P. McKay to attend, from continued weakness. Mr. Charles A. Russell was retained for the prosecution, and Mr. John Rea for the defence.

Three Companies of the 18th Royal Irish, under the command of Brevet-Major M. J. Hayman, have arrived in Waterford. They were met at the Railway Terminus by Major-Gen. Eden, C.B., Lieut. Eden, A.D.C., and Major Nasmyth, A.A.G.

It is expected that as soon as the service companies of the 96th Regiment, now in Dublin, shall embark for Gibraltar, the Depot of that Regiment will be ordered to Kilkenny.

The Right Rev. Dr. O'Brien, Bishop of Waterford, accompanied by the Rev. Edmund O'Donnell, P.P., Tallow, has left Waterford for Cheltenham. It is the intention of his Lordship to visit the Continent.

The Crimean sketches of Messrs. Simpson and Brierly, which Lord Elcho moved the House of Commons to purchase as national monuments, are now in Dublin.

The County Waterford Militia has melted away. All the men at Duncannon have taken their discharges and left. Some of the officers have been left without a servant.

Major Brownrigg, deputy inspector, has held his half-yearly inspection of the Queen's County constabulary, under Major Clancie. He expressed himself highly pleased with the appearance and discipline of the men.

The County Limerick Royal Regiment have received a notification that they will be disembodied on the 11th of August. Upwards of 600 have been already discharged at their own request.

Several hundred men are employed in constructing the line from Rathkeale to Foynes. Is is expected the rails will be laid to Foynes early next summer.

Mrs. Captain Gavin has received 1*l.* from Robert Unthank Esq., Foreman of a Record Jury, for the Lying-in Hospital, Limerick.

The Sisters of the Good Shepherd Convent thankfully acknowledge the receipt of £1 from Mr. Eugene Coomey, foreman of a record jury.

The Limerick Observer is informed by a correspondent that the silver cream jug out of which John Sadleir drank the poison has been sold for £30 7s.

John White, Esq., High Sheriff, has subscribed £5 to the O'Connell Monument; and Thomas Costelloe, Esq., J. T. Quinlivan, Esq., and Pierce Creagh, Esq., £1 each.

The Kilkenny Militia were to have been disembodied on the 11th of August.

The Redemptorists of Limerick will open a mission for the benefit of the poor at their chapel in Henry street.

Mr. David Wallace, of the customs, in Limerick, has been promoted to the office of first-class tide-waiter.

The following gentlemen have been elected officers of the Innistiogue Farming Society. Colonel Right Hon. W. F. Tighe, president: Sir John Power, Bart., vice-president; and Mr. John F. MacCartan, honorary secretary. A portion of the Thomastown union, not included in the Gowran of Piltown Farming societis has been annexed, and the society will be henceforth known as the Innistiogue and Thomastown union Farming society. The annual show will be held in each year in Thomastown, on the third Tuesday in September.

Mr. John Stephen Dwyer, J. P., has received letters from Colonel Crutchley commanding the Depot Battalion Birr, from Colonel Muller, Assistant Adjutant-General, Limerick, from General Chatterton, commanding Limerick District, all bearing testimony to his gallant behavior on the occasion of the mutiny of the North Tipperary Light Infantry, and sympathising with him on account of the wounds he sustained on the occasion.

A few years since, Mr. John Sadleir purchased the estate of Coolnamuck, in the County Waterford, and in August last assigned it to the trustees for the London and County Bank. The defendant purchased all the "pitwood," or small timber on the estte. He had lately proceeded to cut large trees, and a Chancer Injunction stopped his further proceeding.

The death of the venerable Bishop of Kerry, Doctor Egan, derives the Irish church, we believe, of its oldest Prelate. He ha left a magnificent monument behind him in the Cathedral of Killarney, where his body at present rests, and in which it is said he expended thousands of pounds out of his private resources. The see devolves upon his coadjutor, the Right Rev. D. Moriarty.

From Nenagh we learn that the wounded men in the late conflict in that town are doing well under the care of Dr. Bagnall of the Tipperary Regiment. The wounds are very severe, and two of the men are not yet out of danger. There are now only three men absent, and they are supposed to be killed.

The Earl of Dunraven has contributed £3 to the Young Men's Society of Limerick, Revington & Co., £3, Rev. John Bunton £1, Wm Roche, Esq., clerk of the peace, £1, James Spaight, Esq., Mayor will attend the approaching Soiree of the Society.

The new Catholic Church of Donaghadee, has been solemnly dedicated. The ceremony of consecration was performed by the Right Rev. Dr. Denvir, Bishop of Down and Connor. The dedication sermon was preached by the Very Rev. George Maguire, P.P., Kilmore.

Mr. Brien Dillon, Solicitor of Nenagh, complains of the conduct observed towards him by the military authorities, and states that he led a party of the 21st Regt. round Peter-street barracks in midst of a sharp fire.

The Right Rev. Dr. O'Brien, has lately held an ordination in St. John's Catholic Church, Waterford. The Rev. Mr. Phelan, Ballinglan, was admitted to the Holy Order of Priesthood on the occasion. Abbeyside has been appointed as the scene of the missionary labors of this talented clergyman.

The preparations for the great Cattle Show of Athlone are proceeding satisfactorily. The sheds for the accommodation of the cattle are being fast erected, and the local committee are making every arrangement calculated to render the exhibition a most successful one. The Lord-Lieutenant intends to honor Athlone with a visit during the show.

Mr. Crampton, ex-Minister at Washington, is at present rusticating at his father's country house, beside Lough Bray. One needs all the consolation of good scenery and quiet, observes the Nation, to survive the consciousness of having been the cat's-paw of Clarendon, and the victim of Marcy.

The Limerick Observer says, the Rev. Dr. O'Connor has been appointed by the Right Rev. Dr. Ryan to the temporary charge of the parishes of Pallaskenry and Stonehall, in the absence of Rev. Mr. O'Shea, P. P., on a mission to Scotland, collecting subscriptions for St. John's Roman Catholic Church.

The criminal business of the South Riding of the county of Tipperary was transacted by Mr. Justice Moore to-day in less than two hours. The heaviest sentence imposed by his lordship was twelve months imprisonment.

At the Richmond Hospital and Carmichael School of Medicine, Dublin, Mr. Nicholas Williams, son of Mr. John Williams, of Macroom, obtained the first prize in his class in anatomy, and the prize in medical jurisprudence.

The annual soiree of the Limerick Young Men's Society was held at their hall on Charlotte's quay, on Monday, July 28. The Rev. Dr. O'Brien, of All-Hallows, addressed the young men on Sunday; the President has received several letters of encouragement.

The several proprietors of hackney vehicles in Ireland have been served with notices, informing them that the drivers must in future wear badges. In case of non-compliance with this notice, the proprietors and drivers will incur a penalty of 40s.

The Sisters of Mercy, Charleville, acknowledge with best thanks the receipt of £3, from Rev. Thos. Croke, D.D., C.C., Middleton, for the purchase of books for the Library, now being formed at their Industrial School, Mount St. Joseph.

At the County Waterford Assizes, the High Sheriff presented Baron Pennefather with white gloves, in consequence of there being no prisoner for trial. At the City Assizes, only one criminal case was for trial, an assault case, in which the prisoner was acquitted.

Sir Thomas Esmonde has presented a beautiful Remonstrance to the Right Rev. Dr. Murphy, for the Cathedral of Ferns. As a work of art, this sacred vessel reflects much credit on the manufacturer, Mr. Donegan, of Dublin.

Mr. John P. McCloy, a painter in Little George's street, Waterford, has committed suicide by cutting his throat with a razor.

The representatives of the late Mr. Thomas Booden, have received from the Rev. W. Hayden, Kilkenny, the sum of Five pounds, Restitution Money.

The same engine that brought Mr. W. S. O'Brien from Thurles to Dublin, on the night of his arrest at that station, took him to Limerick junction, on his way home.

The Rev. James Synan acknowledges the sum of £1 1s. from Michael Burke Esq., Foreman of a Record Jury, for the Orphanage of the Sisters of Mercy, at Mt. St. Vincent.

The North Mayo Militia retain their band. Their headquarters are at Ballina.

The Grand Jury of the town of Galway have adopted a congratulatory address to Mr. Justice Keogh.

James Barry, Esq., Solicitor of Youghal, has been appointed by the Prerogative Court, Public Notary for that town.

The Roscommon Messenger mentions that in 1848 a poor tailor, residing in the village of Ardkillan, lost a heifer. It was stolen by somebody who thought it was less sin to steal than to starve Two men were arrested and tried—one was acquitted, the other found guilty, and sentenced to seven years' transportation. To the authorities in Australia this man appeared "a good citizen in slavery." His good conduct was remarkable—it procured him employment. He was entrusted with a gang, and ultimately with the duties of book-keeper. At the end of three years the authorities gave him his liberty as the reward of his merit. He was fortunate in the bush as a shepherd; more fortunate in the diggings as a gold-seeker. He was last week in England disposing of a cargo of his own wool, and this week the inhabitants of Tulsk were astonished by the anxious enquiries of a well-dressed gentleman, who wished to see one Betty Conolly, a woman remarkable for poverty, patience, and good conduct. He found herself and her children in a bog cabin. He saluted her with "God save all here—do you know me, Betty?" She eyed him caimly a moment—"My own Johnny," she, cried and fainted in th arms of her husband. The returned convtct is the owner of £50,000, and as many thousand acres.

It appears, from a Parliamentary return just published, that there are in Ireland 52 high constables, first rate, receiving 60*l* per annum each; 259 ditto, second rate, receiving 50*l*.; 1 634 dismounted constables, at 36*l*.; 46 mounted constables, at 38*l*.; 324 acting mounted or dismounted, at 30*l*.; 7,774 sub-constables, first rate, at 27*l*. 14*s*.; 242 ditto, mounted, at 29*l*. 4*s*.; 985 ditto, second rate, at 24*l*.—making a total of 11,606 men, besides a reserve force of 192. The total annual cost of this constabulary force is 559,355*l*.

Doctor M'Ardle, one of the Coroners of county Louth, has held an inquest at the police barracks, Stabannon, on the body of a man named John Cranny. The deceased was in the employment of Mr. Woolsey, the eminent brewer of Castlebellingham, and was on his way from Ardee to that town, on the night of the accident. The horse he was driving was blind, and it is conjectured the deceased fell asleep on the way. About three miles from Ardee, there is a dangerous gap on the side of the road at a place called Drumcashel, and into this the horse walked, the dray upset, killing the unfortunate man instantaneously. The horse was unhurt.

A public meeting has been held in the Theatre Royal, George's street, to hear a lecture from Mr. David Urquhart, on the expediency of establishing Turkish Baths in the city of Cork, and the Cork Examiner has a column on the subject.

On the recommendation of the Rt. Hon. John W. Fitzpatrick, Lord Lieutenant of the Queen's County, B. B. Edge, Esq., of Clonbrock, has been appointed to the Commission of the Peace.

John A. Kirwan, Esq., barrister-at-law, Deputy-Lieutenant and R. M., family and suite, have arrived at Bellard Marine House, Tramore, Co. Waterford, for bathing, boating, fishing, and the races.

The annual diocesan synod of the diocese of Kerry has been held in Killarney. The bishop of the diocese was present, and the great body of the clergy of the county.

The collection on Sunday, in aid of the Orphanage of Mercy, Mount St. Vincent, Limerick, amounted to the munificent sum of £132.

John Russell, Esq., J. P., Edwardstown, acknowledged the receipt of Thirty Shillings, being restitution money, through the Rev. James Bradshaw of the Redemptorist's Order.

The July fair of Rathdowney was very thinly supplied with stock. Good cattle of every description in great demand, and nearly all for sale were disposed of at an advance on the recent fairs in the neighborhood.

IRISH ASSIZE INTELLIGENCE.

The Grand Jury of the South Riding of Tipperary have found a true bill against James Sadleir on all counts of the indictment.

The first count charges that John Sadleir, the deceased, and James Sadleir, on the 11th April, 1856, at Clonmel, conspired by false pretences and subtle means and devices to cheat such of her Majesty's subjects resident in England, as they might be able to induce to become shareholders in the Tipperary Bank, of large sums of money.

The second count is that of conspiring to cheat the English parties by false pretences, that the paid-up capital of the bank was £100,000; that all the shares had been issued, and were vested in bona fide shareholders, and that John Sadleir and Robert Keating were then directors, they and the said John and James Sadleir well knowing the contrary to be the fact.

The third count charges that John and James Sadleir by false pretences conspired to cheat the depositors.

The fourth count alleged a conspiracy to cheat the depositors by the publication of a false balance-sheet, falsely representing the paid-up capital of the bank to be £100,000.

The fifth count charges a conspiracy to cheat by false pretences that the bank was then solvent and able to meet its engagements.

The sixth count is for a conspiracy, by false pretences and subtle devices, to cheat the English shareholders of large sums of money.

The seventh and eighth counts are also to the effect that the conspiracy was entered into to cheat the English shareholders, and the facts connected with the false balance-sheet were specially set out.

The criminal business only occupied Judge Moore two hours, and this sufficed for the assizes of the South Riding of Tipperary.

COUNTY OF KERRY.

TRALEE, JULY 21.—The assizes were opened this morning.

Judge Jackson very briefly addressed the grand jury, observing that there was no case callng for any particular observation from him, as the calendar was particularly light.

COUNTY OF LEITRIM.

The business, criminal and civil, of the county of Leitrim, at the present assizes, concluded in little less than one day.

QUEEN'S COUNTY.

MARYBOROUGH, JULY 19.—The Lord Chief Baron opened the commission in the courthouse at ten o'clock this morning.

The Chief Baron, addressing the grand jury, said—I am happy to congratulate you on the fact that the calendar of your county is extremely light, both as to the number and the character of the offences; and I am glad to say that the calendar truly represents the state of your county, which is not always the case; but I find your county is in a state of profound tranquillity, which is a very happy circumstance.

COUNTY OF TYRONE.

OMAGH, July 18.—Mr. Justice Crampton opened the commission.

His Lordship said—I am happy to find that the number of cases on your calendar is not considerable. Some of these, however, are of a serious character.

William Anderson, Joseph Agnew, William Hurst, John and Mark Reilly, John and William Fleming, and Richard Simmons, were indicted for riot and affray at Strangmore, near Dungannon, on the 1st of May last.

The prosecution was conducted by Messrs. Smyly, Major and Leathem; and Messrs. Johnston and Dowse defended the prisoners.

From the evidence it appeared that on the night of the 1st of May last a number of persons, among whom the prisoners were, had assembled at the gate of the Earl of Ranfurley's demesne, near Dungannon. These persons belonged to the Protestant or Orange party. While on the road several Roman Catholics passed by, and those at the gate attacked them with stones, and shouted offensive cries. A row ensued, and the Roman Catholic party refusing to join in the cry of "To Hell with the Pope," as proposed by the others, blows were given, and no less than thirty-five persons were beaten by the Orangemen. All the prisoners were of the latter party, and there was no cross case.

The counsel for the prisoners admitted the riot and affray, and reprobated the conduct of the parties at the gate, but denied that those on trial had been among them.

Evidence to prove an alibi was given in favor of the whole party, with the exception of Agnew and Anderson.

The jury retired at half-past four o'clock, and shortly afterwards returned a verdict of guilty of common assault in the case of Agnew and Anderson, and acquitted the others.

The two convicted were sentenced to six months imprisonment.

The court rose at five o'clock, the entire business having been disposed of.

The Assize for the City of Kilkenny was opened on Tuesday, by the Right Hon. Judge Moore and his Worship the Mayor.

The Calendar was very meagre and the crimes of a very mitigated character.

A man named Scully, indicted for maliciously stabbing during a drunken riot, in James's Green, was acquitted.

A man named Bannon was indicted for having written a threatening letter to Mr. Cotton, Manager of the Waterford and Kilkenny Railway.

WATERFORD ASSIZES.

The Waterford News says that in the county court there was not a single criminal case; and in the city but one—a tailor who was acquitted. So that the big as well as the little wigs had but a scant amount of business at these assizes. The county and city of Waterford are therefore in a most peaceful condition. In the county court Baron Pennefather was presented with a pair of white gloves, the first that he has ever received in token of a maiden assizes, though he has been 35 years on the bench. The records were but few and not of import.

The same paper says, a respected member of the bar informs us there was little or nothing to do at the Wexford assizes.

NENAGH ASSIZES.

The commission is likely to be more prolonged than for many years past, owing to the number of prisoners handed over by the military authorities for trial before a civil tribunal, for the occurences in Nenagh, on the occasion of the recent Militia riot. The Attorney-General will prosecute in person. The following is the calendar of prisoners for trial:—Michael Flannery, embezzlement; Daniel Tracey, conspiracy to shoot James Egan, of Roscrea; John Fahy, riot at Templemore races; Matthew Butler, James Butler and Patrick Butler, Whiteboyism; Thomas Burns, receiving stolen goods, the property of the Nenagh Union; Stephen Burns, private North Tipperary Militia, murder of Patrick Curley, 41st Regiment, at Nenagh, on the 8th inst.; Edward Laffan, John Barron, Wm. Cummins, and Edward Naughton, North Tipperary Militia, and Samuel Lawrence, and Michael Conway, aiding and abetting the murder of said Patrick Curley; John Ryan, Thomas Car, Thomas Devereux, Wm. Nolan, John Heffernan, Henry Bennett, Patrick Collins, Jeremiah Norman, Thomas Cawley, Cornelius Ryan, and Thomas Fleming, soldiers of the Tipperary regiment, firing on her Majesty's troops on the occasion of the Militia outbreak in Nenagh; Rody Cleary, murder of Thomas Cosgrove.

CLARE ASSIZES—RULE OF COURT.

John Slattery, Thomas Gorman, Pat Curtin, John Rochford, Bridget Kean, Honora Morony, and Anne Donnellan—Riot at Kilrush—each to be imprisoned for three months.

Honora Curtin—same place—to be imprisoned one month, and pay a fine of £5.

John Halloran—unlawfully wounding—to be imprisoned 5 calendar months.

Denis M'Auliff, and Corney Maloney, convicted of obstructing navigation of River Shannon—discharged on entering into recognizance in the sum of £50, to appear at next assizes to receive judgment from getting 7 days notice—in the meantime to remove the obstruction.

KINGS COUNTY ASSIZES.

The commission was opened at Tullamore, on Thursday, by the Lord Chief Justice.

The Grand Jury having been re-sworn, and addressed by his Lordship, the court proceeded with the trial of pri§ners.

Patrick Brennan was indicted for having maliciously assaulted John Hogan.

A dispute occured between the parties, in reference to the possession of a bog, and a quarrel ensued, in which the prosecutor was struck with a spade.

The prisoner was found guilty of a common assault.

Mary Magee and Martin Reynolds were charged with having assaulted Dominick Bligh, and robbed him of £275.

The jury found the prisoners guilty.

THE ATTEMPT TO ASSASSINATE MR. BEAUCHAMP.

Thomas Byrne was indicted for having, on the 2d of November, 1855, made an attempt on the life of Edward Beauchamp.

Sergeant Berwick stated the case for the prosecution. The prisoner was a stranger, a native of Moynalty, county Meath, and the circumstances under which he was charged were these: At the last quarter sessions of Tullamore, Mr. Reamsbottom obtained a civil bill decree against a person named P. Murray, and on the 2d of November, proceeded with the sub-sheriff, and his assistant or clerk, Mr. Beauchamp, to the townland of Cloutany and obtained possession, after which, when the prosecutor and Mr. Reamsbottom had reached a place near Wilton gate, the transaction occurred which forms the subject matter of the prosecution. The defence was an alibi.

Answers to Correspondents.

Though marred by inaccuracies the following lines disclose a gentle and truthful inspiration:

A VISION.

I saw a child, a beauteous child,
At play among the heather wild:
A brilliant light was in His eyes,
He looked as if from Paradise;
His little hands in childish glee,
Were turning flowerets skilfully,
In garlands for His golden hair,
Which waved about in morning air,
And hung in ringlets on His neck,
So pure and white, without a speck.
That child was not of earthly clay,
But bright as the refulgent day!
Heaven's light was there!

Where is thy home, my little One?
His upturned eyes now on me shone.
My Home, he said, in accents sweeet,
Is far away where Angels meet
Around my Father's heavenly throne—
There is my own celestial home.
Would'st find a home, along with me,
Where angels wander pure and free?
Walk, then, mortal, in the right—
Turn and follow Heaven's light:
My home is there.

I looked above, the clouds were rent,
And Heaven's lightning there was sent.
It twined around the gentle child,
Unhurt, unharmed, and undefiled.
It bore him up toward the throne
Of Heaven and the Almighty One;
And angels pure and good and bright,
Followed in the Heavenly light.
I moved myself—the spell now broke—
I raised myself—I had awoke
From this my dream; but 'twas a vision
To lead my soul to thoughts Elysian.
That child was JESUS.

New York, August 8th, 1856. HAS TAS.

Omega.—Much obliged by your favor which has lain some time unnoticed in our drawer. What you sent would be improved by "more of the same sort." At present, the shortness of the communication would scarcely direct attention to its own merits.

We shall regularly send a copy of the NEWS to any part of Ireland, on receipt of subscription at the rate of 16s. sterling per annum.

THE IRISH NEWS.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, AUGUST 16, 1856.

IRISH VOTES IN THE BRITISH PARLIAMENT ON THE AMERICAN QUESTION.

Agreeable to the promise which closed our leading column last week, we return for a moment to the subject intimated in the few words we have just set up in capitals. The perfume and finery of the Irish representation which Lord Palmerston had the luxury of enjoying, on the occasion of Mr. Moore's motion, we have delicately touched. The raw material behind which the vivacious Viscount triumphantly intrenched himself at the close of the American debate, has not as yet been overhauled. It is an instructive curiosity which sometimes rips asunder a bale of wool or cotton, and determines the stuff which gives it bulk.

In the majority which approvingly sustained Lord Clarendon on the enlistment question, there are names to which popular credulity and favoritism, here as well as in Ireland, have assigned no trivial importance. There are the Keatings, Esmondes, Magans, O'Connells and O'Briens. The patronage of the old Repeal Association lingers, as it were, in a colored mist, over some of these gentlemen, enlarging their proportions and consequence in the eye of the public. The very names of most of them imply an identification with Ireland, the spirit of her people, and the grandeur of her genius. The mantle of the ascending Prophet fell but on one man.

And so with the surviving glory of the great dead. It may become the boast, it does not become the pervading vitality of the crowd who follow in the track of an immortal name. The O'Connells we speak of here, crouching like hunchbacks in the Assembly where their great father towered, give to all men piteous evidence of this humiliating truth. The luminous mantle of the sire has not fallen on the sons. They have not stood with him upon the height where, in the effluence of his genius, a crucified country for a moment grew to be a radiant power.

John O'Connell, the third son, succeeded in some measure to the popularity of his father, and might have been notable in history had he the poetry of his race, the nobility of a scholar, the promptness and generosity of patriotism. Cold, crabbed, and crafty—with a stinted stock of political ideas, raw literary tastes, and a withered edition of words—he has had neither the mental wealth nor the opulence of heart, which captivates a people, commands the respect of rulers, and compels the haughtiest historian to your grave. Presumptuous enough to ascend the fiery chariot, the movements of which his father, despite of his vast skill, had with so much anxiety and agony controlled, he very soon tumbled to the sod from which he never should have stepped. Rescuing him from the obscure inactivity to which his conceit had hurried him, and in the depths of which his poverty of soul and brain would have for life detained him, the Crimean war opened to him a new though lower field for picturesque publicity. The Repeal button was supplanted by the Saxon shilling. The dogmatic manager of Burgh quay tawdry theatricals, thrust his arms through a red coat, and on the Curragh of Kildare flourished his sword as the corpulent Captain of a miscellaneous Militia. The Conspirator of 1843 dyed his '82 uniform in the Liffey under the arches of Bloody Bridge, a little below the parade ground of the Royal barracks, and so admirably disguised himself that his dearest friends have lost his identity. In this plight and beggary he votes for Lord Clarendon; for Crampton, the dismissed Irish servant; and Palmerston, the gay and audacious, though antique, master of both.

His brother comes next. Another Daniel come to judgment!

Of him little can be said. His life thus far has been so negative and sterile, that a sentence or two exhausts the theme his patronymic suggests. Led forward by his father in the tumultuous Repeal year, and introduced to the people, wherever the colossal Tribune moved, as the youngest of his offspring, Mr. Daniel O'Connell, Junr., was hailed by the multitude with rapturous hosannahs. Handsome, graceful and accomplished—destitute of learning, eloquence, greatness of heart, or the strong love of country—such a love as kindled the intellect and soul of Davis, and made his hurried life fruitful, glowing, and sublime—young O'Connell found himself privileged to Parliament on the strength of a name to the celebrity of which Providence denies him the impulses or brains to contribute. He, too, dressed his dainty limbs in the second-class livery of the Horse Guards, and lisping his disdain of democracy, cast his vote for Lord Clarendon, Crampton, Matthews, and Rowecroft. His grateful acceptance from the British government, four years ago, of the pestiferous consulate of Para, at the mouth of the Amazon, establishes his independence and the value of of his vote.

The Keatings, Esmondes, and Magans follow suit. None of them being Court cards, however, we are disposed to shuffle them up with the plebeianism of the soiled pack. Yet trifles and nonentities sometimes amuse people, and in this heavy hot weather the flimsiest fans are of use. In this genial humor, and with this practical purpose, innocent and small as it is, we play through the category of patriot names, which the result of Mr. Moore's motion has set forth in Hansard—the flat Froissart of Parliament.

Mr. Robert Keating represents, in conjunction with Nicholas Mahon Power, of Faithlegg house, the county Waterford, in the Commons of Great Britain and Ireland. His election, in the first instance, was the strangest of accidents. A rattlesnake in the parched grass of Tompkin's square couldn't excite such surprise as that election everywhere, in and out of Waterford, did. It was a lusus naturæ.

It was a bewildering mishap. The world stared at it for a day, a month, a year. Waterford, accustomed to the Keanes, the Musgraves, the Powers, the Carews—men of gentility and culture, gracious bearing, high station in the county, and with the strongest social claims upon their neighbors—was shocked to see so glaring a vulgarity returned by the High Sheriff, as the parliamentary expression of its interests, respectability, intelligence. Mr. Keating took an oath and a seat in St. Stephen's, and has remained in that seat ever since, all from the timidity of such men as Stuart and Carew, the indolent credulity of the people, and the knavery in politics which, in Ireland, has become a fixed science.

To be strictly correct, however, Mr. Keating now sits as Junior member for the city. Captain Esmonde represents him in the county. Saying this, we indicate fully the capacity and usefulness, the independence and brilliancy, of the young master of Pembrokestown rocks. Proprietor of rocks and thistles, his adherence to the English government is easily explained. For those sterilities and stings, even the consulate of Para would be a lucrative exchange.

Captain Magan next mounts the scaffold. What of him? What of any scamp who burns an idiot in a drunken freak, gets into Parliament for five pounds, and for his political success begs the blessing of a good Bishop whose religion he traduces in Hells and Cock-pits? The Police Gazette may one day immortalize him. If not, his conceits and crimes sink with his coarse flesh into an obscene oblivion.

The O'Briens are the last upon the list of the condemned. There is Sir Timothy, and Pat, his eldest son, one of the members for the King's county. Sir Timothy is one of the most sparkling evidences of the spread of civilization, and the beneficial effects of the Catholic Emancipation act, in Ireland. Once a retailer of whiskey in one of the oldest and gloomiest streets in old Dublin, he has risen, on the surges provoked by the trident of the tempestuous Neptune of Derrynane, to be Lord Mayor of Dublin, Member in Parliament for Cashel, and a Baronet of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland. In many respects a good man—kind, affable, and liberal—he is swayed by the follies which in every country actuate men, who, born in a cellar, and having obscurely amassed coins, aim at a new existence and chronology for themselves and their families through the filtering process of Vice-regal compliments and the fictions of Heraldry. His son, Patrick, wisely walking in the track of his father, from some place off Thomas street to the back-door of the Castle, exhibits the same docility to the foreign fashions forced upon Ireland, the same high ambition, the like insatiable desire for a spare plate, knife and fork, at the side-table of the Aristocracy from which the accident of birth shut him out.

These are the Irishmen who in Parliament have voted to sustain the subordinates of Palmerston and Clarendon in their roguish attempts to evade the laws, compromise the neutraity, and sully the dignity of the American Republic.

SMITH O'BRIEN—THE EXILE'S RETURN

The Tipperary men have done well. They have invted O'Brien to represent them in Parliament. Offering him the highest civic position in their power to confer, they have publicly proved, as he himself gracefully intimates, that they do not forget those who have incurred affliction and peril in their cause. The act we speak of redounds to the credit splendidly of he men, whose noble nature Davis in one of his sweeping and flashing lyrics so impetuously praised. It effaces the scandal of that foul sentence passed upon him in Clonmel, and the malignant cruelty and insolence with which he was visited in exile.

Smith O'Brien declines entering Parliament for the present. His long absence from home, the tear and wear of mind that absence caused, the strong distaste for public life which his bitter experiences of it have engendered, render retirement and quietude to him just now, not only an exquisite happiness but a necessity almost. Besides, he still holds to the opinion with which he left Ireland, that an Irish gentleman, concerned in the welfare of his country, and determined to do his duty by her, has no business in the British Parliament. For twelve years he assiduously labored there. The result of his labors was the conviction that his time had been woefully misspent. The English Government will perceive from his reply to the address of the Tipperary Club, that neither their vindictiveness, calumnies, nor pardon have affected in the least the stern truthfulness and principles of O'Brien.

With a gentle dignity refusing to participate in public affairs for the present, he reserves to himself the privilege of giving his opinion on questions affecting the interests of Ireland, should those interests, any time in the future, require him to speak. Modestly he expresses the hope, that in such an emergency his voice would be as potential, though raised only in Ireland, as it would be if speaking in Westminster. Of that he may rest perfectly assured. Whenever and wherever he speaks, his voice will have the efficacy of an oracle. His laborious political life, his truthfulness, purity, the memory of his sufferings and the memory of his royal old race, determine his position as the chief counsellor of his people.

CASUALTIES AND HOMICIDES.

We seldom meet with the relation of an incident now-a-days, that does not record a loss of life—a catastrophe sad and serious. Why is it, that a fight or pugilistic encounter cannot take place, a dispute about a dog or a parrot, or some trifling matter, but one or two individuals are killed, when it was only supposed a harmless skirmish was intended? Awful accidents, suicides and murders are no longer regarded with the horror they once created, because our minds are becoming familiar with those dreadful subjects.

A Railroad accident now-a-days is a serious matter. It sends hundreds into another world in an instant of time, and leaves as many more maimed and disfigured for life. A pleasant summer excursion turns out to be a death drama, leaving broken-hearted survivors to deplore the burning of the steamboat or explosion of the boiler, that has destroyed their happiness for ever.

But, intermingled with all those accidents and homicides of a positive character, is a class of cases out of the ordinary line—peculiar to themselves—and for which we do not know how to account. We will instance one of them:

A girl, named Mary McCormick, while passing down Roosevelt street, on her way to the ferry, met a number of men of dark complexion, dressed like sailors. They stopped her, and one of them, who had a vial in his hand, said, "No one can pass here, unless they drink what is in this bottle." After detaining her for some time, the vial was placed to her mouth, and she was forced to swallow the contents, when she was permitted to go on. On the ferry-boat she became ill; and on reaching Brooklyn, being supposed to be drunk, she was placed in charge of Officer Craft, of the Second District Police, who conveyed her to her former residence in Hudson Avenue. There she related the strange circumstance, and, although efforts were made to neutralize the effects of the poison, she died during the night of Wednesday, the 6th instant. The girl was about sixteen years of age, but one would be led to believe, from her size and general appearance, that she was much older. The Coroner's jury, after investigating the circumstances as well as the evidence would permit—there being no evidence to implicate the men charged with the offence of administering the contents of the vial—rendered a verdict "that the deceased came to her death from the effects of a narcotic poison, administered by herself or by some person or persons to the jury unknown."

This story appears as a very strange one, for which it is very difficult to account. That men would be found reckless and depraved enough to commit so horrible a deed, for the mere purpose, it would seem, of taking the life of an innocent girl whom they stop in the street, is a circumstance not readily to be believed. Still, we have the dying declaration of the girl, not in any way disproved, and which leaves her death a mystery.

Another case, similar to the above, but which in its outlines, reveals the motives of the perpetrators, is as follows: A young Irish woman named Margaret Montgomery, working in the family of Mr. Cram, in Flatbush, on Friday, 8th, visited New-York, for the purpose of making some purchases of clothing, and sending $50 to her poor parents in Ireland, which sum was to complete the amount of $450, sent there by her during her stay of a few years in this country, for some special purpose. She had purchased the cloth for two dresses for herself, and was on the way to a place to remit the $50. At about 3 o'clock P. M., while passing through Washington-street, New-York, she was accosted by an elderly woman, standing in the door of a saloon, who said, "Why, Mary, how do you do?" She replied, "My name is Margaret," to which the elderly woman said, "Oh, yes, I ought to have known it; I knew you when a child, and I know your father and mother." After these introductory remarks the conversation was continued, the elderly woman, by degrees, cunningly eliciting from her unsuspecting victim, her full name, the names of her parents, where they lived, &c., and, under the guise of friendship, asked her to walk in and take a seat. As it was quite warm, she did so, and was soon asked to take a glass of beer, which she consented to do if it was fresh. The woman drew a glass of beer, and sprinkled something into it, which Margaret, in her own mind, at the time, thought was pepper.

A few minutes after drinking the beer she became drowsy, she was carried up stairs, her clothes were taken off, and she was put to bed. On awaking, not finding her clothes, she went down stairs and demanded them. She was seized hold of, beaten severely, and finally kicked into the street with nothing on but a chemise. From this she wandered she hardly knows where, but was taken in by some person in the same street, where she was treated kindly during Friday night and the day of Saturday. Just after dark, Saturday night, she was provided with a skirt and sack, and in this plight started for Brooklyn, barefooted and bareheaded. Crossing the Fulton Ferry about ten o'clock at night, her singular conduct led to her arrest. The officer in charge was soon satisfied that she was laboring under the effects of poison, and sent for Dr. Palmedo. Everything medical skill could suggest has been done for her relief, but thus far without any prospect of her recovery. She has been in agony from cramps and sickness at the stomach, and the physicians in attendance suppose that both strychnine and laudanum were administered to her in the beer, and that the latter somewhat counteracted the effects of the former poison.

It is to be regretted there is not more protection in our city for females, that they should be permitted with impunity to fall victims to the depravity and cupidity of the evil-minded, is much to be deplored.

An instance of a revelation of wrong-doing comes under our eye, which is worthy of remark as confirming the ever-torturing pangs of a guilty conscience. The Chief of Police received on Saturday last a letter, stating that a police-officer, by calling upon John O'Lalor, a United States recruit on Governor's Island, would be placed in possession of information which would lead to the apprehension and conviction of a murderer. Thinking that reference was had to the recent murder in Broadway, officer Masterson was at once sent to Governor's Island to investigate the affair.

He found Mr. O'Lalor among the new recruits, and conversed with him. O'Lalor accompanied officer Masterson to the Chief's office in this city, where he subscribed to a statement, the substance of which is, that during the year 1852, while employed as school-teacher in the Wicklow Workhouse, he enticed a girl named Mary Dunn into the fields near the town of Wicklow, and, after outraging her person, threw her over an embankment into the river, where she perished. The girl, he says, was of poor parentage. He had been paying attentions to her for some time. Her body was not recovered till some weeks after the murder. The affair caused considerable excitement in the neighborhood, but no clue to the assassin could be ascertained. He remained in Ireland for two years after the commitment of the deed, but being constantly afraid of detection, he emigrated to this country. He tried every means to drown the dreadful recollection, but the stings of a guilty conscience gave him no peace. Happiness fled from him. Failing to procure other employment, he finally enlisted as a soldier in the service of the United States, and had been in the service, on Governor's Island, only a few days, when he determined to denounce himself as a murderer—confess his crime, and offer himself up as a victim to that justice which he has, in the heat of passion, so cruelly outraged. When he had made his confession, he was locked up in the city prison, to await communications from Ireland.

This, if true, is a dreadful story, showing how prone to evil is the human heart, and how little man can depend on himself, when he gives himself up to the instigations of his passions. Many persons may believe that because a man denounces himself, and reveals that at a particular time he committed a murder, that no other proof is wanting. Many persons have been known to speak of murders, sometimes as the fancies of a disordered mind, and at others to confess to crimes they did not commit, through motives of fear or interest to screen the real perpetrators.

The law in all cases requires proof that the person alleged to be murdered, was at one time really living, that afterwards he was known to be dead, and that his or her body was produced, with such marks of violence, or otherwise, as will establish or confirm the alleged cause of death. The body of the offence, or the corpus delicti, must be established by evidence other than that of self-accusation. The old English Judges have often been known to direct juries to acquit, when the proof of a murder was very strong, but where, as at sea, the bodies of the persons alleged to be murdered, were lost, and could not be recovered. Non constat, the Judges said, when thrown over-board, those persons may have been picked up, and found safety on board some other vessels, and detained in foreign ports, either from limited means to get home or from choice. The criminal courts are often engaged in eliminating the details of circumstances connected with homicides, but it is left to the pages of the novelist to depict the horrors of the mind of the murderer.

Truthful are the pictures of Gerald Griffin and of Dickens. Their Dannie Mann and Bill Sykes are types of their class, from whom we shrink in horror. De Quincy, in his three remarkable murders, has depicted the commission of crimes where the criminals seemed only to be actuated by an insane love of personal display.

We cannot but believe the world indicates a change, much indeed for the better, and that deeds of homicide at the present time are relieved of many of the darker tints which once accompanied them. It is true, now and then a Palmer or a Dove startle us by their deeds, but a better humanity and individual conscience would seem to prevail, successfully attesting the beneficial progress of education and religion.

THE YOUNG MEN'S PIC-NIC.

It affords us very sincere pleasure to call attention to the projected festivities of the "Young Men's Association," to "Celestial Grove."

We cordially recommend all our readers, who can make it convenient, to join in them—for the Balls and Pic-Nics of the "Young Men" have hitherto been happily conducted, and we are credibly informed that on this occasion arrangements have been made to insure new and increased pleasures. However that may be, every one who joins the excursion to come off on the 21st inst., may confidently depend on receiving the utmost degree of courtesy and true gentlemanly consideration from the worthy President of the Association, Mr. Quinlan, and his assistant officers.

"MADRID IS TRANQUIL!!"

Spanish affairs continue to be the chief topic of European interest, although the English papers "have their say" on the prospects of the Presidential Election in America; and the people both of France and Italy appear to be shaking themselves for some sort of action, and rubbing their eyes into full wakefulness after the sleep of the past seven years.

The world is fond of excitement, and action always commands a readier attention than prognostication. Practice leads theory; and therefore, the "Insurrection" in Spain, albeit insurrections in Spain are indices of periodical murders, and a consequently happy family "tranquillity in Madrid." Still it is more readable intelligence than "what is going to take place" in Italy or Madrid.

When a child, the news that "Madrid was tranquil," came between us and the rosy dreams of infancy. The tranquillity of the Spanish capital sprang like a lasso over our cradle and caught us napping. It broke upon our boyhood like the close of the school vacation; and reminded us of an old routine to be commenced again. It went on through our youth in a series of Ravellian bulletins, which indicated the fact that whether on its head or its heels, Madrid enjoyed the acrobat characteristic of knowing what it was about, and thereby soliciting, if not commanding the unmeasured plaudits of ministerial and monarchic presses. In manhood we didn't want to be reminded of the ghostly, haunting fact that "Madrid was tranquil," when from the German Ocean to the Adriatic, and even to the Ægean, every other city was topsy turvey, flung up like balls in the hands of the Wizard Revolution, who, standing upon a barricade, swallowed swords and bayonets, lit his pipe with torn-up Constitutions, and continued his marvellous experiments during the night-time, by the light of burning thrones and the reflection of the flames on jewelled crowns that glittered in the gutter.

We did not need to be reminded that "Madrid was tranquil" then, for we had never known, nor indeed could we imagine anything to the contrary. It was only on being so constantly reminded that we began to "doubt the equivocation of the fiend that lies like truth," and were tempted to look for ourselves.

Alas! we found that as smoke follows fire, so tranquillity was the coerced child of disturbance. It was the ignition produced by the concussion of the popular flint and the ministerial steel of Spanish politics.

If not necessary to both, it was indispensable at least to one of the parties; and the flash in the pan was considered the most effective way to exhibit the gloom which followed the fitful firefly ebullition.

A couple of years since we had convocations of corporations, National Guard leaders, and provincial deputies, to get up a reason why Madrid should be announced as "tranquil." O'Donnell and Espartero were in a harmoniously deceptive state of antagonism, and lovingly agreed that the country was safe when they shook head and hand over the affair. Espartero exclaimed, as he grasped his rival's hand, "We will die together or give liberty to this unfortunate country!"—knowing in his heart that they should do the former to insure the latter. Queen Christina was dismissed. The irate club-leader, Orense Monquis, and Pucheta, the Matador, got up a dramatic entertainment on the part of their exiled Queen, the former waiting for revolution, like a knight of the olden time, in the tattered convent of the the Basilios, which, in the transmutations of life and clay, had been made a café and theatre; and the latter, famous among bull-fighters, heading the "lower orders," and adding to his importance, both in the eyes of the people and the government, by the temporary role of revolutionist.

By morning, the barricades had faded into the streets, like bubbles into a stream. Of course arrests were plenty, and Orense, leaving for the country, preserved himself for the future, while Pucheta survived to gather the most desperate insurgents around him on the 16th of last month, and to die gallantly heading them at the Plaza Sevaldo.

His wiry, energetic frame is but a link of bones. His restless eye and unlettered impetuosity are quiet, aye, as those of the subtlest scholar in the grave. The lion of the Bull-ring is done roaring, and—"Madrid is tranquil!"

But not quite yet. Espartero, O'Donnell, Narvaez, are all professors of tranquillity. Each, however, regards the tranquillity of the state as only compatible with his own individual ministerial prominence. O'Donnell's "medicine" being, as the Indians say, powerful just now, he is giving the Spanish a touch of "tranquillity" at present, and the probabillity is that he will for a time sustain himself, and should he make the progressista party believe in the truth of his advances, he may ride fearlessly on the storm he has invoked, and master the elements he is strenuously and warily laboring to breast.

It is said that Louis Napoleon is so charmed with O'Donnell's success in the coup d'etat line, that an article in the Moniteur, exculpating the Spanish premier of the charges made against him, is from the Imperial pen.

The general news from Spain by the last advices (Arago, Southampton, 30th ult,) are meagre and unsatisfactory. The public roads and telegraphs are held by the Government, and from their mouth we learn that on the commencement of the bombardment of Saragossa by the royal troops on the 24th, the insurgents demanded five day's cessation of hostilities, which was granted.

Information conveyed to the London press states that although the city of Madrid is quiet, the whole of the important province of Arragon continues in successful revolt.

The Queen's Speech.—The British Parliament was prorogued on the 29th ult., until the 7th of October next. The only matter of interest of the day was Lord Palmerston's statement, in effect, that the Government hadn't bothered itself about sending any Consuls in lieu of those expelled by our Executive. A speech from the Queen was delivered, as usual on such occasions, but, of course, it cannot be put down, or set up as "matter of interest." "Her Majesty" was about as complimentary and trite as Majesties are at such times. Many important things were touched, but none handled. She thanked the Commons for granting supplies so readily; and congratulated the Lords on the "favorable state of the revenue;" thought that "industry" was "thriving," and made some other very feeling remarks. Probably if Sir Charles Coldstream reads the speech he will see "nothing in it." Few can. Indeed it would seem that "Her Majesty" treated her Lords and Commons as though they were the relatives of Mrs. Partington, one of whom "didn't know nothing," and the other did know it.

There has been much unnecessary excitement at Staten Island regarding yellow fever; but there has not been the slightest cause for it. The officials of the Quarantine state that not one case of yellow fever has occurred. But one case of Fever has yet been reported in the city.

Literature.

PERSONAL RECOLLECTIONS.

THE GALWAY ELECTION — THE LAST OF IT.

I was standing on the steps of the Court House, looking down the street, when a tremendous cheer announced the approach of a dense crowd. From the first day of the contest, the street had been thronged. Thousands passed through it from sunrise to sundown. Groups of peasantry and towns-people were there at all hours. The Moycullen lads—tenants of O'Flaherty—and the Claddagh boys—the fishermen of Galway—many a time swept along the narrow and muddy thoroughfare, flourishing their sticks and hats, shouting violently for their respective favorites, dragging off voters, menacing others, and constantly coming into collision with the Police and Hussars.

The Moycullen lads were stout-limbed, tall, wild, free-and-easy fellows. They had their brown frieze coats, corduroy knee-breeches (open at the knee), Connemara stockings, and black felt hats, in the bands of which they wore sprigs of laurel. The ringing whoop and springing jump they gave, whenever it was necessary to emphasize their enthusiasm or defiance, were enough to scare the boldest heart in broadcloth. Tenants of Anthony O'Flaherty, and prosperous tenants too—they were, in this conflict with the Government, his staunch and fierce henchmen likewise. Many a voter pledged to Monahan; many a voter of high and low degree; many a lord and many a rude tiller of the soil—flew or skulked before their impetuous charge and thrilling cheer. Fine linen and foul rags were all the same to them. Did either bear the Castle stamp they were sure to meet their grip. Landlord, attorney, parson, the highest and the haughtiest felt their rough force, quailed before their stormy threats, or with disordered garments cried to them for quarter. Retiring before police or soldiers, they did so in compact order, showering down stones and every other missive on bayonets, steeds, and sabres. So fierce, daring, desperate were they on the day of nomination, that, requested by the High Sheriff, the Repeal candidate ordered them to leave the town. They did so with a tempest of hurrahs, circling and flashing their tough blackthorns above their heads and shoulders, bounding like maddened deer all through the town, driving the Claddagh men into their scaly settlement before them.

The Claddagh men, as may have been inferred, were on the other side. They were sworn to stand by Monahan and the Government. Up to eve of the nomination considered doubtful, on the morning of that day they were decided. The night before they had been bribed. Poor, ragged, hungry, their votes and voices were on sale. Most considerate and charitable in all their practices, the agents of the Government, after night-fall, sent them in several cart-loads of bread and meat. Clothes, also, were distributed. Old women, moaning and swaying over their dull turf fires, were handed brown-paper packages of tea and sugar. A warm shawl, a few yards of gaudy ribbon, back-combs and beads, secured the sympathies of those who were more elevated in their tastes; were more fastidious than indigent, more vain than hungry, more piously disposed than patriotically inspired. There were new brogues, and flannel shirts, and fishing gear, for the manlier, more active, and adventurous of the colony. All were given in the name of Mr. Monahan, her Majesty's Solicitor-general for Ireland.

The excessive poverty of these poor struggling creatures were the very making of the English Government in Ireland the time I speak of. The Government had the purse, and there were the needy and the naked. With them speedy relief—comfort even for an hour—was an incentive far away and infinitely more tempting than the brightest future which popular orators could prophecy, or their own restless imaginations, ever urged by hope, could picture.

So stood the Moycullen and the Claddagh men. The one devoted to their landlord; their hot wild action urged by gratitude and inspired by pride; the pride which every Irish tenant feels in the triumph of his landlord, if he loves that landlord, and wishes him success. The others, depending for their daily bread on the waves and winds, owning no master, having none to heed them, but pledged in life or death to those who, from time to time, ministered to their wants, softened even for an hour the sharp roughness of their stormy watchings, anxieties, and labors, and gave them a day of rest. In plain words, the Moycullen men stood by O'Flaherty for love. The Claddagh men stood by Monahan by contract. Heart in the one case, there was hunger in the other.

Out of town the whole of the contest; kept out of it by the express desire of the man they'd have died for; the Moycullen lads never showed their knee-breeches, never twirled a twig in the air, never made the stones dance under their heels within the municipal limits of Galway, until the last day of the contest. This day, however, they couldn't keep out. What—out of the town, and the fight towards its close? Out of town, and O'Flaherty to be beaten or chaired? They'd see themselves at the bottom of Lough Corrib; they'd see themselves skinned alive in the Claddagh; before they'd keep out of it longer. In they came, then, about three o'clock in the afternoon, wild, bounding, and blithe—a tramping herd of red deer—fiercer and stronger than when they went out. With fresh laurels in their hats, the wrists of their coat-sleeves turned up, and everything (from the tip of the toe to the collar-bone) denoting the finest condition, up they swept to the Court House.

Policemen levelled their bayonets, to keep them back. The Claddagh men, driven up and flattened in their blue flannel shirts and oilskin hats, against the horses on either side, shouted and shook their fists against them. Captain Gervaise Bushe, at the head of his 10th Hussars, vainly beckoned to them with his doe-skin gauntlet, to retire. Neither for policemen and their stinging bayonets, nor for Claddagh men with their sinews strung by Government, nor for Captain Bushe with his doe-skin gauntlet, do Moycullen men, at this last hour, care a cabbage-stalk. What ever comes of it, they'll dash through. Up fly the black felt hats with the laurel-leaves, round and about flounce the blackthorns, away far off break the shouts of the Moycullen men. On they sweep through mud and rain; bristling police and raving Claddagh boys; whiskered and furred Hussars; through everything, foul or fair, that stops their way; on they sweep, headlong, sure though boisterous, resistless as the gallow-glasses and musketeers of Hugh O'Neill across the Yellow Ford.

It was the grandest episode of the campaign.

Up to, and away past the steps of the Court-house, swept the wild, head-strong, defiant crowd. Then there was a sudden halt, an opening in the crowd right opposite to where I stood, and, as two gentlemen elbowed and crushed their way from the thickest of the throng to these same steps, there was a cheer which shook the limestone pillars of the portico which shadowed me. Panting and fuming—their coats almost torn from their backs, and one of them without a patch of handkerchief or hat upon his head—they stumbled up the steps. It was Cassidy and O'Hea.

Clinging to the pawnbroker, long after I had left him in despair; determined on his conquest, no matter what length of time or ingenuity, or laborious patience that conquest might exact: Mr. O'Hea, the seductive and assiduous attorney, had, at the eleventh hour, persuaded his capricious friend to dress and shave himself, and in his best attire accompany him to the polling-booth. It was a startling victory. No one had dreamt of it. Most people had declared it utterly impossible. For myself, I'd as soon have thought of Lynch Fitzstephen rising from his grave, and hanging the Solicitor-General, as he had hanged his own son, as that Cassidy could have been coaxed from his blankets and his flute.

Amid the loudest cheers and congratulations, the Pawnbroker and Attorney entered the Court-house; and, passing through the slippery and crowded hall, mounted the stairs to the room in which all the voters, whose surname commenced with C, had to register their votes. The room was densely packed. Not an inch of vacant space upon the floor. The benches running round the walls, creaked with the weight of fidgetty boys, and old gentlemen in spectacles, and many a patriarch, snob and urchin, whom the lessening minutes and deepening interest of the struggle had fixed unconsciously to the white-wash, in the most severe position above the scene. The very walls seemed to give out, from their moist depth of brick and plaster, faces and arms full of eagerness and passion. Through this hot, sweltering, compressed crowd, Mr. O'Hea pushed, cursed, and ploughed a channel for his friend, Myles Cassidy.

"Make room there," O'Hea half screamed, and half shouted.

Cassidy didn't say a word, but gleamed like a wild idiot through his spectacles. They were the same cracked spectacles he had on in bed.

"A voter from the country," shouted O'Hea.

"Hurrah!" shouted the O'Flaherties.

"Silence," cried the Deputy Sheriff, rising up in a drab coat out of his arm-chair at the head of the voting-table, waving a quill with a prodigious lot of white feathers, and subsiding quietly again.

"It's Mr. Cassidy, the retired merchant," exclaimed Mr. O'Hea, waving his hat, and thumping a bailiff of Menlo Castle in the small of the back.

"Hurrah for Cassidy!" shouted the crowd.

"Silence," again cried the Deputy, the drab coat and white feather once more emerging from the arm-chair.

"Hear the Sheriff," was the cry.

"No more noise there."

"Hould yer tongue, ye divil."

"Hurrah for Cassidy."

"Yer sowls to glory."

"Down with Monahan."

"Up with O'Flaherty."

"Three cheers for O'Connell."

"Three cheers for Father Roche."

"And three cheers for Father Daly."

"Silence," cried the presiding officer.

"Where's Frank Commyn?" asked some one against the wall.

"Where's his brother, Sarsfield?" asked another.

"Blood 'an 'ouns, don't forget Lord French," was the thundering exclamation of a third.

"Silence," stamped and shouted the small, round, red fat man in the drab coat into mother-of-pearl buttons, his ears burning, his throat swelling, and his corpulent little fingers twisting the goose-quill into ever so many triangles and circles, jerking out the feathers, and splitting up the nib.

By the time he'd done, and they'd all done, Messrs. Cassidy and O'Hea had made their way to the table. They stood close to the Deputy Sheriff.

"For whom do you vote?" asked the polling clerk.

Mr. Cassidy looked strange. He looked about him—up all over the walls—down into the throat of the polling clerk—up again to the sky-light—everywhere.

"He's drunk," says one.

"A fool," said another.

"Neither," said a third.

"Silence," cried the Deputy.

"Silence, ye divils," shouted a voice away back in the crowd, near the top of the stairs.

"For whom do you vote, Sir?" inquired the polling clerk again addressing himself to Mr. Cassidy peremptorily, "for whom, Sir?"

"For—" gasped the bewildered pawnbroker.

"Out with it," roared the crowd.

"Silence," cried the Sheriff.

"Hear him"—this came from Mr. O'Hea.

"For whom do you vote, Sir?"

"For—"

"Hurrah—three cheers for Cassidy!"

"Silence!"

"He votes for O'Connell—hurrah!"

"Silence!"

"Silence yerself."

"For whom do you vote, Mr. Cassidy?"

Mr Cassidy straightened himself up, fixed his spectacles tight, folded his arms, buttoned up his lips and coughed.

"For whom do you vote, Sir?"

"I vote," said Cassidy, in a loud and distinct voice, beating time to the words with his forefinger, "I vote for Anthony O'Flaherty Esqr., Knockbane, County Galway."

Galway was hardly out of his mouth before a terrific cheer shook the Court-house from top to bottom. Cassidy was frantically congratulated. He was slapped on the back by every one near him. The breath was fairly slapped out of him. He was within a second of being slapped to death. His eyes swam in his head. Ten thousand fire-flies flashed and buzzed through his brain. He wriggled and writhed—gasped—struck right and left with his swollen fists—deliriously leaped up and down—kicked—scratched—screamed—tore his cravat open—shouted for mercy. The congratulations continued. The cheers were louder than ever. The slaps on the back multiplied with a vehement rapidity. They were murdering the man in the Court-house itself, within a few yards of the dock. It cost the Deputy Sheriff all the sinew and voice he could muster, to save the life of the pawnbroker, and in some slight degree reinstate order. When the lull had set in, and Mr. Cassidy partly recovered his breath, Mr. Monahan's agent, with the sternest face, presented him with a small book, bound in black morocco. It was the Book of the Evangelists.

"Take that book, sir," said the agent, "and swear you haven't had a bribe."

With complacent features, a deep sigh, and a sly wink to O'Hea, who stood close beside him, Mr. Cassidy swore he hadn't had a bribe; and having kissed the book, rubbed his hands, smiled through his spectacles, smacked his lips, and putting on his hat, (it was woefully crushed) turned to go away. He did so amid renewed cheers, slaps on the back, and other warm congratulations. Mr. O'Hea took his right arm, and in the handsomest manner, thanking and applauding him for the manly outspoken style in which he had voted, led him out of the polling-room to the lobby at the head of the great stone stairs. Arrived there, Mr. Cassidy suddenly stood still, and stealthily looking about him, to satisfy himself the coast was comparatively clear, gently nudged Mr. O'Hea in the region of the heart, and in the softest tones whispered him—"That money you promised me—where is it?"

"Don't you feel well, Mr. Cassidy—is that what you say?" the tranquil attorney most soothingly asked.

"The money, you know," urged the pawnbroker, with a nudge and a wink.

"The fresh air will revive you."

"But it's the money I want."

"Better go to bed when you get home," was the advice of his friend.

Mr. Cassidy grew impatient. Nudges and winks, he came to the conclusion, were faint intimations. He rubbed himself close up to the tranquil attorney, and pinched him sharply in the soft part of the arm.

"The devil!" shouted O'Hea.

"The money!" bawled Cassidy.

"What money?" indignantly asked the attorney.

"The money you showed me—the money you promised me," the pawnbroker poured out, with a mouthful of foam, pinching O'Hea in the thighs and sides, as well as the soft of the arm.

A crowd had been attracted by the scuffle (for it had come to that) from the hall below, and the polling-room, out of which the learned counsel and his confiding client had just emerged. Cassidy was biting his lips, stamping the floor, shaking his fist into the very eyes of Counsellor O'Hea. He called him a swindler; he denounced him as a thief and a scoundrel; invoked on him every description of mischief; made the most fiendish faces up to his teeth; wished to all that was lovely he had him at home, in that big Spanish house, out of which he had coaxed him, and may be he wouldn't try with his best razor whether he or the green corned beef was the toughest.

"Look," said O'Hea, in the tone of a shockingly abused man, breaking loose from the pawnbroker, retreating a few paces from him, and pointing him out with his delicate canary-colored cane, to the scorn and vengeance of the crowd on the lobby—"look," said he, "that despicable old ruffian has the audacity to insinuate I promised him a fist-full of bank-notes for his vote."

"You did," shouted Cassidy.

"Gentlemen, I appeal to you," were the last agonizing words of O'Hea.

"Down with the robber!" vociferated the crowd.

And down he went, sure enough, flying from the top to the bottom of the slippery stone steps, (a distance of forty feet certainly,) having received at the start a battery of kicks to accelerate his descent. Mr. O'Hea, triumphantly vindicated, walked back to his lodgings on the south side of Eyre Square. Mr. Cassidy, all ruffled, discomfitted, utterly downcast, and sorely impressed with the fact of his being shamefully sold—of his having been bought in the dearest market and sold in the cheapest—returned gloomily to his cobwebs and beef. Having laid in, under the pillow nearest to the wall, several numbers of the World newspaper, and a couple of pounds of raisins in a damp blue and white pocket-handkerchief, the melancholy patriot, slipping off his Sunday clothes, in which he had voted for O'Flaherty and Repeal, buried himself deep in his musty blankets and sheets.

In less than an hour after, the High Sheriff, standing under the red canopy in the Court-house, declared Her Majesty's Solicitor-General, James Monahan, Esq., duly elected to serve in Parliament as Member for the borough of Galway. A majority of four votes above OFlaherty's tally decided the contest in favor of Government. And so, all for nothing went the eloquence of Young Ireland; the influence of such good Priests as the Rev. Messrs Roche and Daly; the impetuous rude chivalry and devotion of the tenantry of Moycullen; the pugilistic exploits of Mullin, the self-educated dentist; the exquisite diplomacy of Mr. O'Hea; and the noble self-sacrifice of Cassidy, the anchorite pawnbroker.

Good-bye to Galway!

A BREEZE THROUGH THE FOREST.

The sounding forest tow'rs
Through the tinted blossom show'rs—
Green Heavens raining flow'rs,
Like my heart in the days that are gone.

The simplest weed that grows
Vies in radiance with the rose,
And the turtle doves repose,
Hid in vines, like the loves that are gone.

Oh! thousand-pillar'd shrine
Of an Architect divine!
What chancel meet as thine
For a pray'r to the days that are gone?

Young fronds embrace the air,
And all gorgeous hues and rare
Tinge the luscious fruits they bear,
Like my dreams in the days that are gone.

But oh! what forest hath Such unforgotten path
As the haunted fairy rath
Where we met in the days that are gone!

For an Irish Venus there,
Twining shamrocks in her hair,
Smiled a glory through the air,
Pure as dawn in the days that are gone.

Oh! the soul within her eyes,
And our mingled tears and sighs—
Hush! in Irish clay she lies—
Hang a pall o'er the days that are gone!

Now, a wailing phantom there
Wrings the death-dew from her hair,
Gazing westwards in despair,
Through the mist, where the black ships are gone.

Thou shalt not long alone
On our joy-abandoned throne,
To the midnight breezes moan
O'er the hopes of the days that are gone.

My life is ebbing fast
On the fiery southern blast:
I spring to thee at last,
First love of the days that are gone.

Prophetic shadows loom,
O'er my spirit from thy tomb,
In glory or in gloom,
Thou art mine by the vows that are gone.

* * * *

There, too, the white thorn blows
O'er a mother's dust, whose woes
One heart—one only—knows:
Child of tears, it is well thou art gone.

As I bore thee home to die,
The lark filled all the sky—
'Twas thine Angel's call on high:
Let us pray for the souls that are gone!

I miss the cloister bells
Through the ruin-hallowed dells,
The round towers and holy wells,
That were part of the days that are gone.

And the friends, alas! how few—
In the hours of anguish true,
Whose inmost heart I knew
In the fire of the days that are gone.

And the dreams that once I dream'd
Of a nation's soul redeem'd
From the hell in which she seem'd
Still a saint, in the days that are gone.

Oh, the joy of falling then
In the front of armed men,
Laurel'd victors, ne'er again
To crouch as in days—not yet gone.

How gladly would I pour
My heart's enchaliced gore
In libation on thy shore!
But, I raved in the days that are gone.

And in my lonely hours
I clomb the Baal fire tow'rs,
In their drapery of flowers,
There to muse on the days that are gone.

And the stars were not too high
For my wingéd soul to fly:
And I saw with raptured eye
God through all, in the days that are gone.

Still the tomb, the rath, the shrine,
And Love's memories divine,
Oh, rich in tears! are thine,
Widow'd Queen of the days that are gone!

Sad isle of chains and graves,
Though thy sons are slaves of slaves,
I bless thee o'er the waves,
For the sake of the days that are gone.

Thus, mem'ry, like a breeze
Through the strong and silent trees,
Bow'd my manhood strewing these
Withered leaves of the days that are gone!

SHAMROCK.

AN EPIDEMIC IN THE ROCKY MOUNTAINS—THE MEDICINE-CALF OF THE CROWS.

THE LIFE AND ADVENTURES OF JAMES P. BECKWOURTH, Mountaineer, Scout and Pioneer, and Chief of the Crow Nation of Indians. Written from his own dictation, by T. D. BONNER. Harper & Brothers.

The title of this article must not put any of our readers into a fever—intermittent, bilious, typhoid, or yellow. The word "Epidemic" must not create a revolution in the household, and incite or excite our worthy and dearly beloved subscribers to ransack, tumble over, gather in a hurry and pack up their sundry and individual traps, and take passage by rail or steamboat for parts unknown, before they have plunged into the tale of which the taking word "Epidemic" is the head.

We chose the title not to bring terror "to the soul of Richard," but through a strong conviction that no other word would so completely explain or illustrate the nature of, and experiences detailed in the work under review. The famous Jim Dogget, of Arkansas, had a gun, which, from the manner in which it was handled by the aforesaid Jim, is famous in Thorpe's capital reminiscences of South-Western life* as "an epidemic among the bears." "Among the bears!" Eureka! Thorpe is distanced. He is now in that position which Byron avowed he was when commencing Don Juan. He is in want of that "not uncommon want," a hero; for before Jim Beckwourth Jim Doggett dwindles into absolute contempt. His gun is a mere pop-gun, his eyes only a weak pair of spectacles, and his arm but a very second-hand piece of human furniture.

It comes to this; Doggett was "an epidemic among the bears;" Beckwourth was an epidemic among everything—teal duck, wild geese, antelope, deer, elk, wolves, bears, beaver, buffaloes—to say nothing of Apaches, Camanches, Grovans, Punnaks, Arap-ahoes, Sioux, Snake, Cheyenne, Pawnee, and above all, Black-feet Indians. To all these, and everything else, vegetating, nibbling, browzing, grazing in, on, or about, wood, water, earth or air, was James P. Beckwourth certain, sudden and untimely end. He was more prompt than the small-pox. He was a a death's head and bloody bones on two legs on the Rocky Mountains. Anywhere and everywhere between the head of the Missouri and the frontiers of Mexico, while he was present, Coleridge's "bloody sun at noon," and at all other times of the day, may be said to have been in the ascendant. At stealing horses, trapping beavers, entrapping a beautiful squaw, scalping a red-man, especially letting daylight into a Black-foot, there never has been, and we question if there ever will be, a white man comparable to Jim Beckwourth. If there was, or if there is to be, should we live long enough to hear of him, we desire to have his "distinguished consideration." Of his "assurance" we cannot have the slightest intimation of doubt.

To give even an outline of the many battles in which Beckwourth was engaged we cannot; but we will attempt to give a short sketch of his life.

The son of a revolutionary sire, who had served under General Wayne, and was one of the famous party who stormed Stoney Point under Mad Anthony, our hero was born at Fredericksburg, Virginia, on the 26th April, 1798. His father removed, taking with him all his family and twenty-two negroes, to St. Louis—then a French and Spanish settlement; a mere speck in a howling wilderness—when "Jim" was between seven and eight years old. Here the boy beheld the Red-man trading with the settlers, and first received the elements of that knowledge of the Indian character which has made him the most successful white man who has flung his fortunes among them. The effects of Indian warfare and treachery at the period wrought a deep scar in his memory, and the alarm of the settlers on certain occasions shook the child up to a wakefulness that never forsook him. When ten years old he was sent to school, remained at it four years, and then was apprenticed to a blacksmith. When nineteen, having a difficulty with his master in consequence of the late hours the gay wing of love wafted him into, he trounced his employer, quit the anvil and the hammer, put on leggings, mounted a horse and a rifle, engaged in an expedition under Col. R. M. Johnson up the Fever River to the Sacs, and commenced that astonishing career, as hunter and Indian, to which this exciting volume is devoted. Ingratiating himself into the good favor of the Sacs and Foxes, he remained in the locality (the present Galena) for eighteen months. Paying a visit home, and putting over him a ten-day "spell" of the yellow fever in New-Orleans, he engaged in General Ashley's Rocky Mountain Fur Company. In this service he experienced his first hardships, having been sent with an old mountaineer, one Harris, on a mission to the Republican Pawnees, three hundred miles distant from Kansas Village. His next service was under the same leader, to the Platte Country, where he was on half a pint of flour per day, which he made into gruel. The dullness of the camp was very disheartening. "We mustered," he says, "thirty-five men, all told, and a duller encampment, I suppose, never was witnessed. No jokes, no fire-side stories, no fun; each man rose in the morning with the gloom of the preceding night filling his mind; we built our fires and partook of our scanty repast without saying a word." From this wretched state Beckwourth relieved them by shooting a buck, a white wolf, and three "good-sized elk." Other sufferings awaited them; and the snow being deep, the horses had to sustain bare life on boughs and the bark of the cotton-wood, the men being reduced to one pint of beans per day to every four.

* The Hive and the Bee-Hunter. By T. B. Thorpe.

To make the matter worse, Beckwourth fell out with General Ashley, notwithstanding which, however, he rescued the general from death three several times. It is well to add here, that he became good friends with his commander, enjoyed his confidence more than any other man, and on several occasions received Ashley's open and fervid gratulations for his bravery, capacity and honesty. After undergoing a protracted series of adventures, he was but a week returned when General Ashley again demanded his service, offering him a thousand dollars to carry dispatches to Mr. W. L. Sublet, captain of the trappers Although Beckwourth was engaged to be married to the object of his young affections, the offer of a thousand dollars, and the prospect of the use it might be put to, induced him to undertake the venture. Some very exciting adventures and scenes were then encountered by our hero, one of which he sets down as a "great battle" with the Blackfeet, who made the earth tremble with the tramp of their war-horses. The tocsin sounds through the camp—"The Blackfeet, the Blackfeet!" and an old prophet of the Snake tribe, entering, addresses Mr. Sublet:

"Cut Face, three of my warriors, and two women, have just been killed by the Blackfeet. You say your warriors can fight—that they are great braves. Now let me see them fight, that I may know your words are true."

As it is the chief point of the trappers to create confidence in the red men, and as the latter demand a literal fulfilment of every statement, Mr. Sublet told the prophet he should see how his braves "were ready to die for their Snake friends."

The upshot was a desperate six-hour fight, during which numerous Blackfeet were "rubbed out." Victory was with the allied whites and Snakes, who carried off one hundred and seventy-three scalps, with quantities of quivers, arrows, war-clubs, battle-axes and lances. The trappers had seven wounded, none killed, while the Snakes lost eleven. The victory was celebrated, and the usual festivities lasted several days.

After this, Ashley having made sufficient money, retired from the Rocky Mountains and their trade. The camp broke up, and marched to the Flat-head country on Snake river. Here the summer months were spent pleasantly, hunting, trading with Indians, and preparing for the fall harvest of beaver. Here too the acquaintance of some Blackfeet was made, who invited the whites to establish a trading-post in their country. Beckwourth undertook the affair, rose in favor, and received from the Chief As-as-to (heavy shield) his daughter to wife. "Jim" took her in the way of trade, knowing that the alliance would facilitate his doing a good business with the tribe. He was however but a few days domiciled with his "wife's people," when a party of Indians arrived with three white scalps. Jim boiled with rage. As is usual on such a triumph, the Blackfeet held a scalp-dance, which on this occasion was made more distasteful to Jim by additional rejoicing. His wife desired to join the festivity.

"No!" cried Beckwourth, "these scalps belonged to my people; my heart is crying for their death; you must not rejoice when my heart cries; you must not dance when I mourn."

She went away. His white friends, curious to witness the ceremony, likewise met a strong reproof from the son-in-law of As-as-to.

One of them replied, "Well, your wife is the best dancer of the whole party; she out-dances them all."

Pierced to his heart by the remark, Beckwourth hurried out, forced his way through the group, and struck his wife a heavy blow on the head with the side of his battle-axe, "which dropped her as if a ball had pierced her heart." Immediately the Indian camp was on fire for revenge—"Kill him—burn him," arose on every side. "Hold," cried As-as-to—"listen to your chief," and coming amongst them, he justified the deed, as "she was the wife of the trader," and disobeyed him. "When your wives disobey your commands," he said, "you kill them. That is your right. That thing disobeyed her husband; he told her not to dance; she had no ears; he killed her, and he did right."

This was perfectly intelligible to the married Blackfeet, and they were calm. The chief, as a further token of approval, gave him a younger daughter "more beautiful" than the first, and one who had "good sense and good ears." He accepted her straightway. On the night of the marriage, however, his first wife crawled into his couch, sobbing and crying, for she was not dead, and sought out those who sleepeth. He bid her "go away," but became reconciled to two wives for the remainder of his stay with the tribe.

The entrance of our hero into the Crow Nation exhibits in how remarkable a manner a word even spoken in badinage may affect the entire life of a man. One of his comrades, (Greenwood,) being tired of answering questions to the Crows, invented a story to get rid of them. He told them that Beckwourth was a Crow; that "many winters ago when the Cheyennes defeated the Crows" and captured several women and children, he was a little boy; that the whites purchased him of the Cheyennes, and he subsequently became a great warrior, and was feared by all the enemies of the Crows. Some recent displays confirmed the latter part of the statement, and made the Indians but the more pleased to recognise in the warrior one of their own race. Soon after, he was received into the Nation, hailed with great delight as the long-lost son of a noted chief—Big Bowl—was identified by his new old mother, kissed by a retinue of sisters, hugged by all the Crow squaws, and honored by the braves.

Here, in reality, commenced one of the strangest, wildest, most practical, and at the same time, most romantic (for the Indian's is a practical romantic) existence which it has fallen to the lot of a latter day white man to sustain. Beckwourth became a famous Crow and of great service to the whites, defending and rescuing them, and facilitating the means for trading with the Indians. He was the most successful leader in war, and consequently had more wives than he could well pay attention to: for the Indian woman loves to wed the hero whose victories can bring her honor, give her fine dresses, and a continuance of whose triumphs will keep her face constantly painted, such being the joyful illustration of Indian success. As he rose in favor with the tribe, so did his names increase until human, at least Crow nomenclature could go no farther. From being "White handled Knife," he became consecutively, "The Morning Star," "The Antelope," "Big Bowl," "Bull's Robe," "Enemy of Horses," "Bobtail Horse," "Bloody Arm," and finally, "Medicine Calf," as Chief Counsellor of the Nation. This period of Beckwourth's narrative is as interesting as the best novel we have ever read. Teeming with adventure, and illustrating so graphically the traits, habits and customs of the Indian races, nothing save a thorough reading of the book itself can give an idea of it. It is certainly one of the most useful contributions to Indian history yet published. After a fifteen years' residence with the Crows, he was engaged in the service of the government in the Florida and Mexican Wars, proving of immense use in both; from his Indian characteristics, being enabled to make his way through the country and carry despatches when certain death at once overtook every other man who attempted the task. At present he keeps a hotel in Beckwourth Valley, on the Feather River, California. Such is an outline of the strange history of this gifted man.

It would involve a labor, from which we shrink at this season of the year, to count up the scalps he has taken in his day. They would darken the liberty-pole at the corner of Grand street. The Fulton markets full of meat he has killed and dressed is another question we commit for a more arithmetical reviewer than the present.

In this country and day of remarkable men, we have never read the life of a more remarkable ; consequently, we have perused his, we may say devoured it, with an appetite which forms an epoch on the tablets of our mental hunger. Even coming after the voluminous and brilliant accounts of eastern war, there is a bloodthirstiness in Beckwourth's memoirs thoroughly refreshing.

Mr. Bonner has written the work well, indeed very well, and we trust he will not think it disparaging him, if we print a sorrow that Mr. Russell of the London Times had not fallen on, or rather lived upon such a field as the one embraced in this book. If he were able to make so much out of the Crimean war, what would he not have done on the memoirs of Beckwourth ? what ?

Politically speaking, however, we may have reason to exult that Russell has not written it ; for had he lent the fighting propensities of his celtic nature to the work—had he inflated it with the stormy potency of his warrior pen—surrounded it with the graphic impetuosity of his keen eye—and expanded it with his imagination, refreshed by a bath in an ink-bottle, then indeed, Beckwourth, not Fremont, would be the candidate for the presidency. Then indeed might Democracy tremble and flee its old wigwam, then indeed might the sachems of the ancient order smoke their last pipe in old Tammany, and seek fresh hunting-grounds and "pastures new."

Beckwourth certainly is the most formidable Rocky Mountain candidate that could be brought forward. In truth, he is as formidable as the mountain itself; and, as to his being a blacksmith in his youth, it would be only a greater recommendation to the Black Republicans. The very fact that he abjured the white race for sixteen years, and painted himself as black as a chief of the Crows should, would in itself be a tower of strength to him. He has, moreover, exhibited an amount of executive talent, if this book is to be credited, rare in those days anywhere, and wondrously scarce about the Rocky Mountains. He is an arrant and full-fledged diplomat; a discoverer of a mountain pass; beats George Law at road-making; had as many wives as a Mormon; has a son at present chief of an Indian nation, thereby facilitating the "palavering" of the redmen; is a Mexican hero; a Californian pioneer; and can fashion such a whoop as should necessarily create a bustle among the fair sex of the day. He is neither an old fogy, nor an untried man; neither a Northern, Southern, Eastern, or Western man, for he has owned to none of their shibboleths; neither a Know-Nothing nor a fast-asleep, a hard-shell or a soft-shell, a silver gray or in the ebony line; neither a woolly head nor a woolly horse; and, as for religion, he is neither Catholic, Protestant, Presbyterian, Unitarian, Arian, Baptist, Anabaptist, New-Jerusalem, or Old Hundredth, but believes in the Great Spirit, without water, and dealt the same out generously, at the rate of one buffalo hide per pint, to the worshipping red-skins. To crown all, his escapes from starvation and death have been uncountable and marvellous; and he has dined off more hitherto unknown dishes, than would have made the fortune of a hundred of Soyers to have invented.

If the Union is waiting for its President, here he is! If the "Medicine Calf" has a leg to stand on, he will be in Washington—that is, if anything so ivory black as a Chief Crow could conscientiously roost in the White House.

PLAGIARY OR NO PLAGIARY—THE POET OF PUTNAM.

We have received the following letter from the author of the poem in this month's Putnam, entitled the Genius of America, to which we directed attention in our last issue. Very naturally he takes exception to our very natural allusion to the coincidences of style existing between that exceedingly meritorious production and Thomas Davis's noble lines to Hogan the Sculptor, on the statue of O'Connell. The exception, however, rather sustains us than otherwise ; as the author, in the first place admits the identity of metre, and in the second brings the evidence of an "intelligent acquaintance" who read the poem before it was published, to the complete justification of our remarks. The likeness between the poems is undeniable and distinct, and we brought them face to face, not that those who cherish the one should scoff at the other, but on the contrary that the Poet of Putnam might have all the benefit of a favorable comparison with Davis. Our words were intended to be well-meant and well-natured ; acknowledging as we do the fine spirit and picturesque power exhibited in the "Genius of America." The theme is admirably illustrated, and is not lessened at all by being a paraphrase, which fact receives its chief importance in the literary world from its intrinsic excellence:

Sir : Your critic hastened last week to call the "Genius of America," in Putnam, a plagiarism from Davis. He was not aware that the formula used is Anacreon's—that of one of his odes, beginning, "Sculptor, wouldst thou glad my soul," (see Tom Moore.) The formula is a common one—like that of any of the Percy ballads—and there are about a dozen imitative lyrics, in the same Greek metre, (either addressed to a sculptor or a painter), to be found up and down the field of English literature. Mr. Davis took the well-known trochaic formula for his noble poem. I did the same for my purpose ; and there, I think, all likeness ends. It was short-sighted to strike an imitator with an imitator. I would as gladly imitate Davis as Anacreon. But there is one superfluous fact with which I meet the charge of imitating the first. I never read more than three or four songs of Mr. Davis's, as they fell in my way, (for it was always my hard, prosaic belief that the poetry of Ireland could never do any thing to signify against the policy of England ;) and never read his collected poems till within the last few months—after an intelligent acquaintance had slily (and very naturally, I confess) suggested the similarity on seeing my verses. In conclusion, I will say one thing more, and it is this. If I had first read those splendid lines on the hollow and abortive O'Connell, I could and would never have chosen the Greek formula. The O'Connellism of the thing would have put my poetic pipe out ; and then, I should have already a double suffering—first, from the inevitable comparison of myself with a great poet, and next, from the association of my theme (which every true republican knows is the noblest in the world) with a theme which has turned out to be one of the most ignoble. Yours, &c. ☞

Our correspondent's allusions to O'Connell are sufficiently well answered by the fact that Davis wrote "those splendid lines" on him.

James B. Kirker's elegant edition of Gentilucci's Life of the Blessed Virgin Mary will be, when completed, a beautiful and useful addition to every Catholic library. The fifth part is on our desk, and it does great credit to the publisher. A full-page steel engraving accompanies it, which is a very commendable work of art.

From A. Ranney, Broadway, we have received the "National Political Map of the United States," which will prove a useful multum in parvo for the office of every body, at the present time, as it is by no means sectional, but devoted to all parties. Surrounding the map proper, we have portraits of all the candidates before the public, with the platforms on which they stand, and their letters of acceptance. Useful statistics, referring to every state in the Union, crowd it, like bees round a hive : and we also have a scientific Political Diagram, showing the changes in relative rank, as to population of the several states, for sixty years.

The Democratic Review for August is radiant with the inspiration of the Presidential campaign. We have several spirited political articles discussing home affairs ; and a still further and acceptable continuation of the Review's anti-English convictions. The issue is illustrated with two steel engravings of the Democratic nominees, which are good likenesses, and fully worth the price of the number. Apropos of price, we perceive that subscribers who pay in advance can be furnished with this useful political and literary miscellany for three dollars a year, while those who postpone compliance with this rule have to pay five dollars at the end of the year. If it is needful at five, it is not to be done without at three. The chief articles in this number are devoted to essays on and expositions of "The present condition of Parties in the United States," "The influence of American Liberty," "The Life of Buchanan," the "Europe of To-day," with literary papers on "The Rise of the Dutch Republic," "The Benedictine Monastery on Monte Cassino," a continuation of Mr. Quiggs' "Chronicles of Persepolis," and the conclusion of a clever dramatic trifle entitled "The Devil to Pay." The chronicle of the month, touching passing events, is also noticeable.

Rene de F——, the Paris correspondent of the N. O. Delta, writing of Verdi and his successes, says:

"Within the space of ten years, Verdi has realized one of those enormous fortunes which successful capitalists seldom possess. The value of his partitions have so much increased, that his last ones were purchased at sixty thousand francs a piece, by Riccordi of Milan. Besides this, he enjoys an author's rights, which are by no means inconsiderable. In Italy, the following is the modus operandi : When a composer finishes an opera, he sells the partition to an empresario, who hires it out to the different theatre directors, at a stated sum for the season. Verdi reserves to himself one half of the proceeds. The Trovatore alone yields to him five thousand francs every season, and there are in Italy four musical seasons and eighty theatres ! Of course, all the theatres are not able to pay such high prices for original operas; if such were the case, the musical profession would be the most lucrative in the world. The Trovatore has been known to give Verdi, in one year, more than one hundred and eighty thousand francs !

"It cannot be wondered at, then, that Verdi, who so easily obtains such large amounts from the theatres of Italy, should object to producing any of his works at the opera of Paris, where the rights of a musical composer are placed on a footing of equality with those of a libretto-maker, and where favors are exclusively showered upon singers and prima donnas. What would you suppose are the pecuniary profits which Meyerbeer has divided, during twenty-five years and four hundred representations, from his opera of Robert le Diable—the opera which, unquestionably, has had the longest run in Paris? Forty-six thousand francs ! Compare the proceeds of Robert le Diable, during twenty-five years, with one single year of the Trovatore. Whilst the composer is so shabbily rewarded, the opera succeeds in realizing three millions of francs out of Meyerbeer's masterpiece, and tenors and prima donnas acquire princely fortunes.

"I do not wish to be understood as saying that all Italian authors are remunerated proportionately to their talents or efforts. Such is not the case; for many of them are in a state of shameful destitution."

Literary and Artistic News.

The English Press.—Of the multitude of cheap journals which sprang into existence all over England on the extinction of the stamp, nearly all were nipped in their very first bloom, and very few in any part of England now linger on the scene. There can be no question that up to this time cheap journalism has been a failure. The Morning Star, the principal metropolitan paper, has been a melancholy mistake. The proprietors have already sunk thousands of pounds, and the only impression they have made has been upon the waste-paper market. Then there is the Daily Telegraph, edited by a Mr. Birch, who enjoys a reputation as a celebrated defamer of private character and levier of Black Mail, which quite rivals the fame of our most celebrated editor in that line over here. He is the hero of the celebrated correspondence with and subsequent action against Lord Clarendon, for services rendered in the attempted Irish rising of 1848. He contrived to give considerable annoyance to that nobleman, who possesses the misfortune, fatal to a statesman, of a ready and restless pen; but the exposure he made of his own exploits in the case, were not such as to recommend a journal under his influence to the favors of any community in which truth and virtue are held in regard. The Morning News is the last of the penny trio that have survived the untimely end of so large a family. It possesses the weakness of being too strong. * * * Nearly all the English journals, with the exception of the London Times—which is a huge political windmill, directing its giant sail by the gales of public opinion—have been started and maintained more as particular party organs, than as vehicles of news and opinions looking to the people for support. Nearly all have been subsidized at particular periods, and many maintained for party purposes at an immense loss. The Morning Chronicle, for instance, purchased from Sir John Easthope, a Whig, for a Peelite organ, never cost its purchasers and proprietors, Mr. Sidney Herbert and Beresford Hope, a less annual loss than five thousand a year; and after being disposed of for a mere trifle to Mr. Sergeant Glover, as a Roman Catholic organ, has fallen, under his management, to the very lowest ebb of circulation and respectability. Then the Morning Herald, the only Tory daily paper in England, has, during the last few months, changed hands, its proprietor, Mr. Baldwin, having lost in its maintenance a large sum. Neither is the Morning Post, though it boasts of early circulation, and has the reputation of writing under the special inspiration of Lord Palmerston, by any means successful as a commercial firm. With the exception of the imperial leviathan—the Times—the Daily News is the only daily journal now yielding a profit, and this it owes to its large evening edition, which is made up at little or no expense, under the title of the Express.—N. Y. Daily Times.

A laugh is sometimes raised, at the expense of American papers, for the extravagance and absurdity of their literary notices, but the London Standard can rather surpass anything done in this line in the United States. A late number of that journal, speaking of a new novel, says: "This is a story of wild passion, which tears its way through luxuriant scenes to terrible catastrophes, trampling on human hearts in its course, but still, by virtue of its essential truth and earnestness, attaining a haven of happy calm at last. The scene in which the lovely heiress confesses her passion, in the conservatory at sunset, to the almost inspired young artist, and the powerful conception of the hot-blooded and cruelly disappointed cousin, would alone suffice to make this book a work of mark." After this let us hear no more of ridiculous American criticism.

We find the following in the Tribune: "Father Binet, a French Jesuit, has written a book in which he argues that God made attempts, like a human artificer, before he succeeded in producing the Virgin Mary. 'God performed many miracles,' says M. Binet, 'before arriving at that wonder of wonders. God made the sun and stars, to learn how to form Mary's eyes. He made roses, lilies, pearls, diamonds, alabaster, to exercise himself to fashion the virgin modesty, innocence, angelic face, and queenly brow of Mary. He made flaming cherubims, and gave intelligence to seraphims. They were but studies. God thus qualified himself to form the Mistress of Cherubims, the Queen of Seraphims!'"

The N. Y. Examiner complains that it is continually called Baptist Examiner. In like manner, the Boston Watchman is called the Boston Baptist Watchman. The Examiner says: "Nobody, unless it be some prelatical fop, who wishes to signalize his superiority to 'sectarians,' speaks of the Presbyterian Observer, or the Congregational Independent, or the Methodist Advocate. Why should the journal of a Baptist editor be always distinguished by the denominational prefix any more than the soap and candles of that sterling Baptist, Deacon Colgage?" We might ask if the gentleman was ashamed of his order, or his journal, or that the latter was the exponent of the former? What then?

Bohn of London, has published, in one volume, as a part of their Illustrated Library, the well known lives of Michael Angelo and Raphael, by R. Doppa and Quatremere De Quincy, illustrated with fifteen highly finished engravings. The biographies are old favorites, and the illustrations, which are in the very highest style of art, are portraits of Angelo and Raphael, and copies of their most famous works. Bangs & Co. in this city are the exclusive agents of Bohn's publications.

It is stated on good authority that the Emperor Nicholas, in the last ten years of his life, prepared a work on the administrative policy, and military operations of his reign. This work which the imperial family and some eminent personages alone have seen, is remarkable, it is said, for the great intelligence which it displays. It is not to be published until five years after his death.

A monument to the Emperor Nicholas has been commenced at St. Petersburg. It is to be erected on the square of the Blue Bridge, between St. Isaac's Church and the Palace of the Grand Duchess Maria, and will be an equestrian statue, on a lofty pedestal, the four sides of which will represent, in basso-relievo, the four most remarkable events of that sovereign's reign.

It is now said that Jenny Lind has netted £80,000 during her farewell London and Provincial season; and that the public, in consequence of the system of buying up tickets by the music-sellers, must have paid at least £200,000 for the privilege of hearing the Swedish Nightingale.

Putnam is issuing a cheap edition of Irving's life of Washington. It is printed in smaller type than the previous edition, though perfectly legible, and scarcely less desirable in any point of view.

Among John Murray's new announcements are, De Tocqueville's State of France before the Revolution of 1789; Baikie's Central Africa Laid Open; Hamilton's Wanderings in Northern Africa; and Lady Sheil's Glimpses of Life and Manners in Persia

The King of Saxony has conferred the order of the Eichenkrone upon Bernhard Tauchnitz, the Leipsic publisher, whose editions of the British Classics are so well known.

The number of journals published this year in Switzerland, which has a population of 800,000 souls, is 263, being 12 more than in 1855.

American News.

We learn that on Sunday afternoon about five o'clock, an outrage, which produced considerable excitement, occurred at the Mount Vernon Hotel, Cape May. It appears that several young men were seated in a room, and one of them drinking wine. A waiter, Joshua Gibbs, who is said to be a very civil and inoffensive man, was passing, when for mischief or with some more desperate object, a glass tumbler was thrown at him. He turned and remarked, that the act was not that of a gentleman, and then made his way back to the hotel with the object of making a complaint. At this one of the young men, the son of a highly respectable citizen of Washington, became excited, and hastened down stairs, armed with a pistol and a dirk. A collision soon after took place, and the waiter was stabbed in the back. The wound is said to be about an inch deep and not dangerous. A physician was immediately called in and every attention paid to the sufferer. The father of the young man expressed himself as deeply pained by the occurrence and proffered all the assistance and reparation in his power. The affair, however, was the theme of much conversation throughout the evening; and the colored waiters were generally much incensed.—Philadelphia Inquirer, Aug. 5.

Here is a new way to get a husband: A young girl was recently taken before a Justice in Detroit, charged with the larcency of $94 from a laboring man in that city. The girl acknowledged that she had taken the money, and stated the circumstances that had influenced her to commit the crime. Complainant, some time since, had agreed to marry her; and for some weeks she "lived with him the same as his wife," he then left her. She followed him, however, and upon his appearing reluctant to perform his promise, stole the money and deposited it in the savings bank, thinking he would marry her "to get it back." She proved right in her theory, for he manifested his willingness to comply with her terms, the money remaining in the hands of the Justice till the ceremony is performed. That girl should have her method of husband-making patented immediately.

A young man residing in Bordentown, says the Trenton (N. J.) Gazette, who was under an engagement of marriage with a young lady, died on Friday last. Both the gentleman and lady, as well as their families, were firm believers in the doctrines of the Spiritualists, and notwithstanding the death of the former, it was determined that the marriage should take place between the disembodied spirit of the young man and the living, breathing body of his affianced bride. Accordingly, on Sunday the marriage ceremony was performed between the clay-cold corse and the warm, blooming bride. It is understood that this was in compliance with the directions of the spirit of the bridegroom. The devotion of the lady to the spirit or the memory of her lover carried her through this trying ceremony without faltering; but it must lead to unhappiness, for she no doubt considers herself as the wife of one whom she shall meet in the body never more. Her heart lies buried in the grave with him who should have been her guide and protector.

The President of the United States has recognized the following appointments:—J. Hosford Smith, Consul of the Sublime Porte, at New-York; Wesner Dresel, Consul of Saxony, for Maryland; M. Le Compte de Mejan, Consul of France, for New-Orleans; M. de Belligny St. Croix, Consul of France, for Charleston; Anibal de Mosquera, Consul of Granada, for New-York.

A Western friend sends us the following as an extract from the census return of the town of H——, in Iowa:—"What is the population of your town?" The answer was, "Irish, 175; Amsterdam Dutch, 109; other dam Dutch, 200; whites, 000; total population, 491."

General Whitfield publishes an address to the people of Kansas, appealing to them against the decision of the House, which deprives him of his seat as a delegate. He contends that the action of the House was illegal, and declares that he shall immediately return home to present himself as a candidate for re-election.

A large and enthusiastic Democratic mass meeting, assembled at Portland, Maine, on the 7th, to ratify the nominations of Buchanan and Breckinridge. People from all parts of the State were present. Hon. Nathan Clifford presided.

In Wisconsin, railroad contractors are paying $1 25 per day for hands, and they find it impossible to procure over half a supply of help. Farmers pay $2 a day for harvest hands, and they are hard to get at any price.

The Louisville (Ky) Courier, says the wife of a well-known drayman in Covington, died one day last week. The next day the bereaved man married a new wife, and took her with him to the dead wife's funeral.

It is believed in official quarters that all questions at issue relative to Central America will soon be in a train of settlement. Mr. Dallas now has full power to treat with Great Britain.

Messrs. Pryor and Ridgeway, editors, from Richmond, fought a duel at Bladensburg, on the 6th inst., with pistols at ten paces. The affair was amicably adjusted without bloodshed.

The Redwood Iron Works in Jefferson County, N. Y., were destroyed by fire on the 1st inst. Loss, twelve thousand dollars; no insurance.

There was an immense Buchanan meeting at New-Britain, on the evening of the 7th. A delegation of 900 went down from this city in ten cars.

The Macedonian brought home the remain of Commander Abbot, who died at Hong Kong some months ago. Her officers and crew are all well.

New wheat is selling at Nashville and other portions of the middle part of the State, at seventy to seventy-five cents per bushel.

The Democracy of New-Jersey have nominated William C. Alexander, of Mercer, as a candidate for the office of Governor.

Mr. Forsyth the newly-appointed Minister to Mexico, leaves for that country on the 1st of September.

The Constitutionalist, says there were four fires in Agusta, Ga., on one night, lately—the work of incendiaries.

The rice crop is said to be promising in Georgia, and will be a fair average one.

Mr. Allen Givens, an old Revolutionary soldier, died in Butler county, Ky., last week, aged ninety-six years.

A prayer for rain was offered in the Episcopal church, Lynchburg, Va., Sunday last.

The Cincinnati Gazette, in a review of the Crops in Ohio, sets down the wheat harvest at a full average, and thinks that this in connection with an excess of old, places the United States in a condition to meet an increased demand at moderately low prices. The crops of barley and grass, it thinks, have, as a general thing, been cut short by drought; and the oats are so short in straw and head, that in many places they will not be gathered. The June corn, however, which was sown, and the extensive preparations which are made for a large crop of turnips, it suggests, may in some measure, remedy the deficiency of cattle feed. The corn crop, although recently very backward, is now coming forward encouragingly, and with favorable weather may be expected to yield heavy, which, with the crop left over, will afford an ample supply. The early potatoes are doing well. Flax, in Ohio, it is thought, will not yield over one-fourth of an average. The prospect may then be said to be through the country—1st, a full average crop of wheat, 2d, a heavy corn crop, 3d, an average crop of late potatoes.

A butcher, named Frederick King, says the Union, proprietor of the Ohio market, Sacramento, California, having had a difficulty with a former partner, named Kempf, sent him a challenge, couched in the following formidable terms: Mr. John Kempf—Dear Sir: You have insulted me and abused my family. I therefore challenge you to give me personal satisfaction, from a needle's point to a cannon. F. King. P. S.—Within twenty-four hours. F. K.

John S. Cummins, a lieutenant colonel in her Majesty's service, located in Canada, recently made a statement that during the Mexican war, the United States were constantly enlisting troops at Niagara, in Canada, and other points. The statement has since been flatly contradicted by Thomas G. Catlin, who, during the Mexican war, was army surgeon at Fort Niagara, New York.

The following remarkable coincidences took place in St. Francis county, Ark., a short time ago: "A one-eyed man stole a one-eyed mule, was arrested by a one-eyed sheriff, tried by a one-eyed magistrate, and escorted to the penitentiary by a one-eyed officer!" Was ever such a concatenation of one-eyed people brought together before?

The want of rain continues to be much felt in Indiana and Kentucky, and threatens the crops, which are backward in those States. In the West generally a large portion of last year's harvest, especially of corn, is said to be still held by farmers.

We are informed, says the Dubuque Express, that there is a cavern near Decorah, so situated that the water which falls from its roof in winter is frozen, and such an amount of ice formed as to serve the citizens of that place, in summer, with the luxury of ice from a natural ice house.

A sale of North Carolina tobacco was recently made in Lynchburg, Va., at $60 per cwt—the highest price ever received for North Carolina tobacco.

Congressional.

Thirty-Fourth Congress—First Session—Senate.

August 4. (Monday,) A resolution was offered by Mr. Wilson instructing the committee on the Judiciary to report a resolution immediately authorizing the President to direct the Kansas District Attorney to enter a nolle prosequi in the Kansas treason cases. The River and Harbor bill was debated, and several bills for River and Harbor improvements passed.

Aug. 5. Governor Seward appealed on behalf of the Free State men now under indictment for treason and rebellion in Kansas, asking a change of venue, so as to secure them a fair trial. Many Harbor bills were acted on.

Aug. 6. Mr. Seward introduced a bill, which was referred to the Judiciary committee, providing for a change of venue in the Kansas treason cases. After some debate as to whether the Army Appropriation bill or the Internal Improvement bills should take the precedence, the latter was considered and several of them passed. The bill for a wagon Road to the Pacific was also passed.

Aug. 7. A resolution was adopted calling for information relative to the refusal of Honduras to receive a Commercial Agent from this Government, and another calling for information as to the expediency of establishing a consulate at the Loo Choo islands. The Army Approriation bill was then taken up, having been reported by the Finance committee with Mr. Sherman's proviso, adopted by the House, stricken out. An interesting discussion ensued, participated in by Senators Hunter, Wilson, Wade, Butler, Douglas, and others, when the Senate voted against the proviso by 29 to 6, and the bill was passed after some further debate by Yeas 27, Nays 8. Mr. Weller gave notice that he should call up the Pacific Railroad bill to-day.

Aug. 8. The House bill, granting a million and a half acres of land to Mississippi for Railroad purposes, passed. Several private bills were passed, and the report of the committee on Indian affairs, relative to the Menominee Indians, after a five hours' discussion, adopted.

House.

August 4.—The bill providing for the appointment of a Commission to run a boundary line between Washington Territory and the British possessions passed. The Senate's bill for improving the Patapsco River passed. Mr. Purviance moved a suspension of the rules, to enable him to introduce a resolution instructing the Committee on the Judiciary to inquire and report in reference to the arrests for treason in Kansas, but the House refused to suspend. The House also refused to suspend the rules to receive the Pacific Railroad bill from the Select Committee. An ineffectual effort was made to consider the Homestead bill. The Senate bill authorizing any two Judges of the Court of Claims to act as a quorum passed. The Military Committee were instructed to inquire into the propriety of purchasing the Hermitage, the former residence of Gen. Jackson, for a branch military academy. The bill making appropriations for the Judicial, Executive, and Legislative expenses, was discussed in Committee of the Whole, and many of its items were acted upon.

August 5.—Mr. Dunn offered a proviso that no part of the money be drawn from the treasury until a law is passed and approved by the President for the pacification of the troubles in Kansas, which shall contain a slavery restriction regarding Kansas and Nebraska. Mr. Grow proposed that no money be paid until the pending prosecutions for treason and other alleged offences against the Territorial laws of Kansas be dismissed. Both these propositions were adopted. The appropriations for the legislative expenses of Kansas Territory, and for contingent expenses, were striken out.

August 6.—A bill granting to Mississippi 1,500,000 acres of land for railrood purposes passed. A bill was introduced granting lands for similar objects in Nebraska, Minnesota and Kansas. The General Appropriation bill was reported by the Committee of the Whole, with the amendments adopted by the "nigger-worshippers." The chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means proposed a substitute. It was ruled out of order. Mr. Dunn's amendment, requiring the enactment of a Kansas pacification bill, and the prohibition of slavery in Kansas and Nebrasky, was rejected—45 yeas to 110 nays. Mr. Grow's amendment, requiring the abandonment of the prosecutions for treason and other alleged offences against the laws of the Legislature of Kansas was adopted—84 yeas to 69 nays. The appropriation for the expenses of the Legislative Assembly of Kansas, was stricken out—90 to 58. The amendment that no part of the money be expended for prosecuting or detaining persons charged with treason, was agreed to—82 to 66. The bill with these restrictions was then passed by a vote of 84 to 55, the democrats and conservative Know Nothings, together with Messrs. Dunn and Bennett, republicans, voted against it.

August 8.—A resolution was adopted to pay Gov. Reeder mileage and per diem to the time his claim was decided. The Civil Appropriation bill was considered, and a $300,000 appropriation for the Washington Aqueduct was lost.

OBITUARY.

HONOR TO WHOM IT WAS DUE.

A touching incident of gratitude comes to my knowledge connected with the death and burial of Charles Sedgwick, Esq., of Lenox, Mass., who was ever the devoted friend of the Irish. A correspondent writes: On the day of the funeral, the Irish flocked round the house, giving vent to their grief in tears. They requested the privilege of bearing the corpse on their shoulders to its final resting place in Stockbridge, distance of 6 miles. At first this was refused, but was granted finally, to their sad satisfaction, and twenty-four men selected to, what they undoubtedly considered, a post of honor. It rained in torrents all day, not enough however, to dampen in the least the grateful ardor of that ever grateful people." S. J. A.

MARRIED.

In Trinity Church, on Saturday, Augnst 9, by the Rev. Dr Haight, William H. Bolton, of Chicago, Ill., to Miss Tillie Tracy, daughter of Simon P. Tracy, of this city.

Special Notices.

If you wish a Portrait, call at Brady's Gallery, 359 Broadway. The Ambrotype.—Some members of the daguerrean fraternity have represented the Ambrotype—the latest and best improvement in the art—as unworthy of public confidence. Mr. BRADY, the introducer of the Ambrotype in New-York, has found in them a combination of rare qualities, never approached by any other style of camera pictures. 8m28ju

Photographs and Ambrotypes,—50 Franklin street, New-York. Persons wishing to have a true life-like Photograph or Ambrotype taken, will do well to call at this place; the pictures there made are finished in the best style, and no trouble or pains will be spared to suit the most delicate taste.

The prices will be lower than in any other establishment in town, the proprietor not having the expenses of artists to pay for the coloring of the pictures, or salaries of operators, the work being done by the proprietor himself.

Persons having black plain photographs, and wishing to have them colored or re-touched in China Ink, can have it done at low prices. The proprietor will also re-touch for any establishment in the city or country, that will ask for it, and those he has been coloring for can have their work done at the same rates and prices.

Instructions will be given to pupils in Photograph and Ambrotype. Good collodion for sale, and all kinds of chemicals for the business prepared to order. (8m12jly) A. Cosmes.

Holloway's Ointment.—The Great External Antidote.—When impurities in the blood are determined to the surface in the form of blotches, pustules, dry exfoliations, boils, rashes, &c., this potent preparation is the only safe and radical remedy. Sold at the manufactories, No. 80 Maiden Lane, New-York, and No. 244 Strand, London; and by all Druggists, at 25 cents, 62½ cents, and $1 per pot. aug16

Amusements.

BOWERY THEATRE.

THE PEOPLES TEMPLE OF THE DRAMA.

Open every night,

WITH A POWERFUL

Star Company.

Lessee and Manager.....John Brougham

PRICES OF ADMISSION:

Boxes.....50 cents. | Pit.....12½ cents.
Gallery.....12½ cents. | Orchestra Stalls.....50 cents.
Private Boxes.....Five Dollars.

Doors open at 7½; commence at 7½.

WALLACK'S THEATRE,

AND

SUMMER GARDEN.

RE-ENGAGEMENT

OF

MISS AGNES ROBERTSON

AND

MR. DION BOURCICAULT,

FOR A FEW NIGHTS.

On Tuesday,

Used Up, and The Young Actress.

Wednesday, ANDY BLAKE (her celebrated Irish character).

And, for the first time, THE CAT CHANGED INTO A WOMAN.

Thursday, Same. Friday (last night), Same.

PRICES OF ADMISSION.

Parquette and boxes.....50 cents
Family Circle.....25 cents

Doors open at a quarter past seven P. M.

Billiards.

IMPROVED BILLIARD TABLES AND CUSHIONS.

MICHAEL PHELAN'S

MODEL TABLES AND COMBINATION CUSHIONS,

(Patented February 19, 1856,)

CORRECT in principle and perfect in action—so constructed as to insure mathematical correctness of angles when played upon, and warranted to possess the requisite elasticity in all seasons, having been tested by the best players in this conntry, and by them pronounced the most perfect of any hitherto constructed—are offered to the public as cheap as the ordinary tables of the day. Orders promptly attended to for fitting up private or public Billiard Rooms; new Cushions put on old Tables, &c.

Saloon and Salesroom No. 39 Chambers street, up stairs.

O'CONNOR & COLLENDER,

BILLIARD TABLE MANUFACTURERS,

53, ANN STREET, NEW-YORK.

BUCHANAN AND THE PRESS.

THOMAS JEFFERSON ON SECTIONALISM AND BLACK-REPUBLICANISM.—A cotemporary, whose name we regret to have lost, says: The following extracts from the writings of Thos. Jefferson on "Sectionalism" and "Black-Republicanism" could not be more applicable if they were written at the present day. We invite the attention of our readers to these sentiments of the great apostle of Democracy. In a letter to Lafayette, dated Nov. 4, 1823, Mr. Jefferson said:

"On the eclipse of Federalism with us, although not its extinction, its leaders got up the Missouri question under the false front of lessening the measure of slavery, but with the real view of producing a geographical division of parties, which might insure them the next President. The people of the North went blindfold into the snare, and followed their leaders for a while with a zeal truly moral and laudable, until they became sensible that they were injuring instead of aiding the real interests of the slaves, that they had been used merely as tools for electioneering purposes, and that trick of hypocrisy then fell as quickly as it had been got up."

How exactly does the present aspect of the Missouri question agree with this description of it in 1823. Again, in the seventh volume of his writings, in speaking of the Missouri question, Mr. Jefferson says:

The question is a mere party trick. The leaders of Federalism, defeated in their schemes of obtaining power by rallying partisans to the principle of monarchism—a principle of personal, not of local division—have changed their tack and thrown out another barrel to the whale. They are taking advantage of the virtuous feeling of the people to effect a division of parties by a geographical line: they expect that this will insure them, on local principles, the majority they could never obtain on principles of Federalism; but they are still putting their shoulders to the wrong wheel; they are wasting jeremiads on the miseries of slavery, as if we were advocates of it. Sincerity in their declamations should direct their efforts to the true point of difficulty, and unite their counsels with ours in devising some reasonable and practicable plan of getting rid of it.

The following papers in South Carolina have hoisted the Buchanan flag:—

Charleston Mercury, Charleston Standard, Charleston Evening News, Darlington Flag, Marion Star, South Carolinian, Columbia Banner, Fairfield Register, Fairfield Herald, Yorkville Enquirer, Yorkville Citizen, Carolina Spartan, Literary Star, Spartanburg Express, Patriot and Mountaineer, Anderson Gazette, Rising Sun, Camden Journal, Chester Standard, Cheraw Gazette, Edgefield Advertiser, Edgefield Informer, Barnwell Sentinel, Lancaster Ledger, Independent Press, Keowee Courier, Examiner.

Against the Nomination.

Carolina Times, Southron, Sumter Watchman, Newberry Mirror, True Carolinian, Abbeville Banner, Southern Enterprise.

There are fifty-two German newspapers in the United States that uphold the genuine democratic republican cause, and Buchanan and Breckinridge.

It is said that the betting Democrats in Louisiana are exceedingly incensed at the Cincinnati Convention for nominating a ticket against which no one in that state dares to bet.

The Commercial Advertiser admits, that many of its friends, who for years have been decided Whigs, are "disposed to vote for Mr. Buchanan rather than see a sectional, unqualified candidate, like Col. Fremont, elevated to the Presidency."

The son of Henry Clay has written a letter announcing his determination to support Buchanan.

Two sons-in-law of the late Ex-President Harrison, and his living representatives, support Buchanan.

The Norfolk, Va., Herald, heretofore a leading Know-Nothing paper, has come out from that organization, and run up the name of James Buchanan for President.

The New-York correspondence of the National Intelligencer says that Mr. Buchanan may carry the Empire State in case the Hards and Softs are thoroughly united. Of that there now seems to be no doubt. The same writer says Fremont cannot carry Pennsylvania.

Wm. M. Burwell, Esq., formerly editor of the Know-Nothing organ at Washington city, has come out in a strong letter for Buchanan. He has sent his resignation to Governor Wise as a Know-Nothing member of the Virginia Legislature. In his letter he remarks:

"The issue upon which parties have organized for the ensuing campaign is: 'Shall any more Slave States be admitted into the Union?'

"Foremost and the most formidable in this contest stands the Black Republican party, a dangerous compound of fanaticism and political cupidity. It is numerous and of powerful resources; it is led by ambitious and sagacious men; it intends to employ the numbers of the North to subjugate the South and govern the country. Its material of warfare consists in impeaching the title of your property, defaming your character, and combining the most despotic and lawless influences in a crusade against you. Its plan of warfare is to cut off the supplies and communications of slavery, to invest its citadel, and to send a flag inscribed, 'Assault, or unconditional surrender.'

"The Democratic party has been, by force of circumstances, placed in direct antagonism to this party. It stands not only pledged, but committed, beyond the power of recantation or withdrawal, to maintain your rights as political equals in this confederacy.

"With my opinions, neutrality would be, at this important crisis, little better than treason. I shall, therefore, vote for the Democratic candidates at the ensuing Presidential election, because that is the only party committed to assert the rights of the South, and because the opinions avowed by that party upon the subject of slavery represent my own.

As some slight evidence, says the Baton Rouge Advocate, of the great reaction which has taken place in public sentiment in Iowa, and which is still progressing at a rate which cannot fail to afford the liveliest satisfaction to every patriotic heart, we give the following changes to Buchanan, from a late number of the Dubuque Northwest, which paper says:

George Nightengale—a true and tried man—for twenty years a wheel-horse to the national Whig party in Iowa.

C. C. Hewitt—for years the favorite of the Whig party in Dubuque county—a man of talents, influence and devotion to the Union.

Major A. M. Hare, Hon. John G. Stein, and a host of other good men and good citizens of Muscatine county, who were active Scott men in the canvass of 1852.

L. B. Fleek, Esq., of Washington county, an old-line Whig—a man among men—and an honor to any party.

IRISH MARRIAGES.

At St. Peter's Church, Dublin, the Rev. Thomas Whittaker to Harriet Alicia, daughter of the late Robert Christie, of Bray, county Wicklow.

At St. Mark's Church, Dublin, Charles W. Wright, of Downings, to Margaret, daughter of John Aylmer, of Courtown, Kildare.

At St. James's Catholic Church, Dublin, Michael M'Conn, to Frances, daughter of the late Charles Domville, formerly of Killala, Mayo.

At the Church of the Conception, Dublin, John Hicks, of Laurel Lodge, Roundtown, to Rose Emma, daughter of James Douglass, of Graville street.

At St. Peter's Church, Dublin, the Rev. Charles German, vicar-choral of St. Canice, Kilkenny, to Harriet Pitcairn, daughter of the late Henry A. West, of the 12th regiment.

At St. Peter's Church, Dublin, Charles Sanders, of Carrigfoyle House, county Kerry, to Mildred, only child of the late William Brown, of Springmount, county Kerry.

At St. Anne's Church, Dublin, Harward, son of the late Rev. John G. Hancock, of Annaduff, county Leitrim, to Frances, daughter of the Rev. N. Devereux, of Ballyrankin House, county Wexford.

At Newry, William S. Nicholson, son of the late W. S. Nicholson, of Balla House, county Down, to Jane Frances, daughter of the late Thomas B. Middleton, of Dublin.

At Geashill, Henry Clarke, of Ballybrittan Castle, to Susan, daughtrr of the late G. Newcombe, of Cloneyowen House, King's County.

At Mullavilly, Edward Armstrong, A. B., of Lurgan, to Emma, daughter of the late F. Sanderson, of Prospect House, Tandragee.

At Evergreen House, Cork, Francis Healy, M. D., of Highmount, county Limerick, to Ellen, daughter of the late James Galway, of Waterford.

At Buttevant, John Bevan, of Durragh, county Limerick, to Kate Crooke daughter of the late William Allen, of Glenville, county Cork.

At London, Theophilus Moon, of Her Majesty's Customs, to Elizabeth Lucy, daughter of the late T. Woolsey, of Castlebellingham, county Louth.

At Cheltenham, the Rev. John Bryson, of Anabawn House, county Down, to Maria Smith, daughter of the late Joseph Harwick, of Manor House, Oaken, Staffordshire.

At St. Patrick's Catholic Church, Sutton street, London, by the Very Rev. Canon Long, John Taylor, of Prospect House, Turnham Green, Middlesex, to Mary, daughter of John Tyrrell, of Greek street, London, and niece of the Rev. M. E. Tyrrell, parish priest of Clonmore, county Carlow, and of the late Rev. Thomas Tyrrell, of Tinryland.

At Paris, the Marquis de Vinchiaturo, to Charlotte Sinclair, widow of George Bagot Gosset, of the 4th Royal Irish Dragoon Guards.

At Fitzroy, Canada West, the Rev. W. C. Clarke, to Anne Charity, daughter of William D. Pigott, late of Dysart, Queen's County.

At St. Peter and Paul's Church, Clonmel, James Byrne, of Thurles, to Maria Moore, relict of the late Edmond Moore, merchant, Clonmel.

At "The Friends' Meeting House," Dublin, Charles Going Malone, of Churchtown Lodge, county Dublin, to Harriet, only daughter of William Doyle, of Cullenswood place.

IRISH DEATHS.

At Middle Gardiner street, Dublin, Susan, daughter of the late James O'Connor, and granddaughter of the late Rowland J. O'Connor, of Laurel Mount, county Cork.

At Blackhall street, Dublin, of bronchitis, in the 49th year of her age, Mrs. Catherine Flanagan.

In North Great George's street, Dublin, Mrs. Kirkpatrick, mother of the Rev. W. B. Kirkpatrick.

At Rathmines road, aged 87 years, Morgan M'Namara, of Scarteen, county Limerick.

At Sydney Cottage, Sandymount strand, Sarah, wife of Oliver Sinnott.

At Dundrm, Elizabeth, daughter of the late Henry Roe, M. D.

At Upper Mountpleasant avenue, Charles Hennessey.

At Kingstown, Anne Jane, daughter of the late Rev. Henry Boyd, Chancellor of Killenora, and formerly well known in the literary world as the earliest translator of the Divina Comœdia of Dante into English verse.

At Tritonville avenue, Sandymount, Margaret, daughter of George L. Shaw.

At Glendalough, Kate, daughter of Ralph Jordan.

At Athy, Joseph Delany, late of Derrydolney, King's County.

At Leinster Lodge, county Kildare, Louis Perrin, son of the late James Perrin, and nephew of Judge Perrin.

At Killare, in the county Westmeath, R. Mathews, aged 82 years.

At Bobsville, county Meath, aged 81 years, Maria, relict of Colonel W. Battersby.

At Castle Connell, aged 88 years, Elizabeth, widow of Michael Bolton, of Newcastle.

At Rathyark, county Wexford, aged 48 years, Richard Corish.

At Cliftonville, Belfast, Thomas, son of the Rev. Professor Gibson.

At Omagh, county Tyrone, Anne Cameron, wife of James F. Alexander.

At Drumgoold Cottage, Enniscorthy, Stephen R. Radcliff, formerly Lieutenant in the 6th Royal regiment, son of the late Rev. Richard Radcliff, rector of Enniscorthy.

Alicia, daughter of James Grimshaw, jun., of Whitehouse, Belfast.

At Bath, aged 90 years, General Martin White, of the Hon. East India Company's Bengal Establishment.

At Gravesend, Colonel C. Shee, son of the late Sir George Shee, Bart.

At Richmond, Surrey, Miss Hannah Penn, great granddaughter of the celebrated William Penn.

At Falkener street, Liverpool, the residence of her step-father, Captain Forrestal, Catherine Doyle.

At Castleconnell, aged 88 years, Mrs. Elizabeth Bolton, widow of the late Michael Bolton, of Newcastle, and mother-in-law of the late Eyre Powell, Captain of the City Limerick Militia, and one of the heroes of Colooney.

At Rathburt, county Louth, Rosetta Mary Constance, daughter of the late Owen Kiernan.

At Fermoy, A. P. Bridson, Royal Regiment.

At Eyre square, Galway, of malignant fever, William Carrigan. Deceased was agent for Mr. Bianconi over his extensive posting establishment in the West of Ireland.

Card from Edward Dunigan & Brother.

James B. Kirker, the present representative of the firm of Edward Dunigan & Brother, learns with regret that an attempt is being made to persuade the public that a circular issued by Mr. John Gilmary Shea, with regard to his correspondents, is a malicious attempt of the house to injure another.

Mr. John Gilmary Shea continues to enjoy the highest esteem of the firm, still it has not and will not interfere in his private concerns.

The House of Edward Dunnigan & Brother has as yet issued no circular whatever, relative to the forthcoming History of the Catholic Church, by Mr. DeCourcy and Mr. John Gilmary Shea.

New-York, July 17th, 1856. (3t) 151 Fulton street.

Caution to the Public.—To distinguish the genuine magnetic powder, for the destruction of insects, from poisonous imitations, it is necessary to examine the wrapper. See that four national medals—those of England, France, Belgium, and the United States—are engraved thereon. Be sure also that a lithographic fac simile of Lyon's signature appears both on the wrapper and label. This caution is necessary to protect the proprietor from fraud and the public from danger and disappointment. The leading scientific societies, and the first chemists of Europe and America, have pronounced the magnetic powder the only poisonous insect bane in the world, as well as the most effective and fatal means for the destruction of bed-bugs, roaches, fleas, ants, flies, moths, &c., that was ever prepared or sold. The proprietors of the principal city hotels endorse it. Come and see the testimonials of Prince Albert, ex-President Fillmore, and hundreds of the nobility of Europe, as well as the sovereigns of America. The magnetic pills, for the extermination of rats and mice, are endorsed with equal emphasis by all who have tried them. Call and see the medals, diplomas, government orders, scientific certificates, letters, &c., at the Central Depôt, No. 424 Broadway.

jun 21 3m EMANUEL LYON.

A perfumed breath.—What lady or gentleman would remain under the curse of a disagreeable breath, when by using the "Balm of a Thousand Flowers" as a dentrifice, would not only render it sweet, but leave the teeth white as alabaster? Many persons do not know their breath is bad, and the subject is so delicate their friends will never mention it. Pour a single drop of the Balm on your tooth-brush, and wash the teeth night and morning. A fifty cent bottle will last a year.

A Beautiful Complexion may easily be acquired by using the "Balm of a Thousand Flowers." It will remove tan, pimples, and freckles from the skin, leaving it of a soft and roseate hue. Wet a towel, pour on two or three drops and wash the face night and morning.

Shaving made Easy.—Wet your shaving brush in either warm or cold water, pour on two or three drops of the "Balm of a Thousand Flowers," ru the beard well, and it will make a beautiful soft lather, much facilitating the operation of shaving. Price only 50 cents. For sale by all druggists.

3mjly5 W. P. FETRIDGE & Co., Franklin Square, New-York.

SARAH McFADDEN,

Maritime and National Flag Manufacturer,

198 Hudson street, four doors below Canal street, New-York.

Mrs. McFadden justly boasts of having made up for Thomas Francis Meagher, the Irish tri-color flag which he presented to the Confederate Club Men of '48, resident in New-York: also the beautiful U. S. Flag recently presented by Mr. William Kinsella to the Montgomery Guard of Bridgeport.

y21june

DRILL ROOM GUIDE.

NINTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

TROOP A, (Irish Dragoons,) meet at the "Grape Vine Cottage, 45 Second Avenue, between Second and Third streets, on every Monday evening. JAMES MURPHY, Capt.

Company B, (Fitzgerald Guard) drill each Monday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." THOS. MAGUIRE, Capt.

Company D, (Guyon Cadets) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." THOS. MURPHY, Capt.

Company I, (Jackson Guard) drill each Thursday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." W. O. MURPHY, Capt.

Company H, (Erina Guard) drill Thursday Evening at "Military Hall." R. CODDINGTON, Capt.

Company —, (Irish Grenadiers) drill each Thursday Evening at 22 White street. FELIX DUFFY, Capt.

Company C, (Mitchel Guard,) drill each Wednesday Evening at the "Eagle Rooms." —— KEARNS, Capt.

Company J, (Carroll Guard,) drill each evening, at —— GALLAGHER, Capt.

TENTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company —, (Emmet Guard) drill each Thursday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." JOHN KENNEDY, Capt.

ELEVENTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company E, (Montgomery Guard) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." THOS. S. MURPHY, Capt.

FOURTEENTH REGIMENT, N. Y. S. M.

Company E, (Carroll Guard,) drill each Tuesday Evening, at the "Adelphi," Brooklyn. GEO. B. MAGRATH, Capt.

TWENTY-FOURTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company C, (Columbian Guard), drill each Tuesday evening, at Washington Hall, Troy, N. Y. RICHARD S. QUINN, Captain.

TWENTY-FIFTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company —, (Emmet Guard,) drill each Wednesday Evening at Albany, N. Y. P. H. GRIFFIN, Capt.

SIXTY NINTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Troop A, (Irish Dragoons,) drill each Thursday Evening at "Montgomery Hall." Lieut. B. O'CONNOR, Com'dt.

Company C, (————,) drill each Wednesday Evening at the "Eagle Rooms." Lieut. M. KEATING, Com'dt.

Company D, (Irish Rifles) drill each Monday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." JAMES QUINLAN, Capt.

Company E, (Fag a Bealac Guard) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." GILBERT RIORDAN, Capt.

Company F, (Shields' Guard,) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Milleman's Hall," 7th avenue, corner of 26th street. JOHN R. MURPHY, Capt.

Company G, (Mechanic's Guard) drill each Thursday Evening at the "Eagle Rooms." JOHN B. MADDEN, Capt.

Company I, (Irish Fuseleers,) drill each Monday Evening at 42 Prince street. M. CORCORAN, Capt.

Company K, (Brian Boroihme Guard) drill each Monday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." JAMES HUSTON, Capt.

Engineer Corps, (Emmet Life Guard) drill each Monday Evening at the Eagle Rooms. T. LYNCH, Capt.

70th REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company D, (Napper Tandy Light Artillery) drill each Thursday Evening at Brooklyn City Armory. WM. H. HOGAN, Capt.

SEVENTY FIFTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company A, (State Rifles) drill each Wednesday Evening at cor. of 11th street and 1st Avenue. Lieut. JAS. KELLY, Com'dt.

Company B, (Irish National Guard) drill each Friday Evening at "Centre Market Rooms." JOHN LANE, Capt.

Company C, (Young Ireland Rifles) drill each Friday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." JOHN BURKE, Capt.

Company D, (Wolf Tone Volunteers,) drill each Tuesday Evening, at the "Eagle Rooms." JOHN NUGENT, Capt.

Company E, (T. F. Meagher Rifles) drill each —— at cor. of 11th street and 1st Avenue. J. B. DONNELLY, Capt.

Company F, (Mich'l. Doheny Rifles) drill each —— at ——. J. F. MAGUIRE, Capt.

Company G. (Emmet Rifles) drill each —— at ——. JOHN BEGG, Capt.

INDEPENDENT COMPANIES.

Company —, (O'Mahony Guard, E. M. A.,) drill each Tuesday Evening a "North America Rooms," cor. of Bayard and Bowery. JAMES CAVANAGH, Capt.

Company —, (Sons of '98,) drill each Friday Evening at the corner of 11th street and 1st Avenue, N. Y. M. H. SMITH, Capt.

Company —, (Wolfe Tone Guard,) drill each alternate Monday Evening at the "Second Ward Hotel," cor. of York and Pearl streets, Brooklyn. JOHN J. CLANCY, Com'dt.

Company —, (Irish American Grenadiers,) drill the first and third Thursday of each month at "Montgomery Hall," 76 Prince street, N. Y. MICHAEL DOYLE, Capt.

Company —, (Montgomery Guard,) drill each Monday evening, at Bridgeport, Conn. MICHAEL O'CONNELL, Capt.

Company —, (Republican Guard) drill every Friday Evening, at "Worth's Military Headquarters," 22 White street. W. H. LYONS, Capt.

Company —, (Keystone Rifles,) drill every Monday evening, in Port Carbon, Pa. MATTHEW BYRNES, Captain.

Company—(Emerald Guard), drill each Monday evening, at "Smith's Hall," corner of 11th and First Avenue. JOHN COX, Captain.

SECOND REGIMENT—HUDSON BRIGADE.

Company —, (Montgomery Guard,) drill each week at the "Armory," Grand street, Jersey City. —— FARRELL, Capt.

FIFTH REGIMENT N. J. S. M.

Company C, (O'Brien Columbia Rifles,) drill on the 1st and 3d Tuesdays in each month at their Armory, "Willow Hall," Orange, N. J. OWEN MURPHY, Captain.

SECOND REGIMENT PA. VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Hibernian Greens,) drill each Thursday Evening at 88 South Fifth street, Philadelphia. P. O'KEAN, Capt.

Company —, (Meagher Guard,) drill each Tuesday Evening at 404 Market street, Philadelphia. Lieut. THOMAS ASMITH, Com'dt.

Company —, (Emmet Guard,) drill each Friday Evening at "Ewen Hall," Hawley, Pa. THOM. CAAS. FITSGIBBON, Capt.

FIRST REGIMENT ME. VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Grattan Guard,) drill each Thursday Evening in Bangor, Me. JOHN CARROLL, Capt.

SIXTIETH REGIMENT ILL. S. M.

Company —, (Shields Guard,) drill each Thursday Evening in Chicago, Ill. CHAS. E. MOORE, Capt.

FIRST REGIMENT VA. VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Montgomery Guard,) drill each Monday and Friday Evenings in Richmond. P. S. MOORE, Capt.

SIXTEENTH REGIMENT S. C. S. M.

Company —, (Meagher Guard,) drill the second Thursday of each month in Charleston. GEO. SERGEANT, Capt.

SEVENTEENTH REGIMENT S. C. S. M.

Company —, (Irish Volunteers,) drill once a month in Charleston, S. C. EDWARD MAGRATH, Capt.

—— REGIMENT GEORGIA VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Irish Volunteers,) drill each —— evening, in the city of Augusta. EDWARD J. WALKER, Capt.

FIRST REGIMENT ST. LOUIS LEGION, MO.

Company—(St. Louis Washington Guard) drill each Tuesday evening, in the city of St. Louis, Mo. D. M. FROST, Capt.

FIRST WASHINGTON BATTALION OHIO S. M.

Company A, (Shields Guard), drill on each Thursday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati. DENNIS KAVANAGH, Captain.

Company B, (Sarsfield Guard), drill on each Monday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati. JOHN LEVY, Capt.

Company C, (Republican's Guard,) drill on each Saturday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati. JOHN ELITCH, Capt.

Company D, (Montgomery Light Artillery,) drill on each Wednesday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati. THOS. TIERNAN, Capt.

Company E, (Queen City Cadets, Rifles,) drill on each Tuesday and Friday evenings, at the "Cadets Armory," Pomeroy's Building, Third street, Cincinnati. JOSEPH H. BURKE, Capt.

N. B.—Commandants of Irish-American Military Companies throughout the United States, are respectfully tendered a place in the above "Directory," and requested to send such information as will enable us to represent them in it.

Continental Military Establishment.

J. PARKES,

195 FULTON, BELOW CHURCH, N. Y.

Hats, Caps, Ornaments, &c., made to order. 3m28ju

Business Directory.

NEW-YORK CATHOLIC LIBRARY ASSOCIATION.

"The objects of the Association are, 1st. The dissemination of Catholic and useful knowledge. 2d. To forward the moral and intellectual advancement of its members. 3d. To create among its members a spirit of harmony and good feeling, that will be conducive alike to their interest and pleasure. These to be attained by establishing a Library and Reading Room, and by Readings and Lectures when practicable."

Contributions of either books or money received at the office, No. 107 Nassau street,

M. T. COZANS, President.
JOSEPH MCGUIRE, Vice-President.

CORRESPONDING SECRETARY, D. QUINN.
RECORDING SECRETARY, James Fabb.
TREASURER, John Russell.
LIBRARIAN, T. S. Haughey.
DIRECTORS, R. T. Kelly, J. J. Mullen, M. B. Lynch, L. T. Cozans, P. J. McGuire.
m8jun14

PIANOS, MELODEONS AND MUSIC

The Cash system adopted!—Prices greatly reduced.

HORACE WATERS,

No. 333 Broadway, N. Y.,

AGENT FOR THE BEST BOSTON AND NEW-YORK INSTRUMENTS.

The largest assortment of

Pianos, Melodeons, Musical Instruments,

AND

MUSICAL MERCHANDISE,

of all kinds, in the United States, Pianos from ten different Manufactories, comprising those of every variety of style, from the plain, neat and subtsantial 6½ octaves, in Walnut or Rosewood Cases, from $150 to $200, to those of the most elegant finish up to $1000. No house in the Union can compete with the above in the number, variety, and celebrity of its instruments, nor in the extremely low prices at which they are sold.

Horace Waters' Modern Improved Pianos,

WITH OR WITHOUT IRON FRAMES.

possessing in their improvements of over-strings and action, a length of scale power, and compass of tone equal to the Grand Piano, united with the beauty and durability of structure of the square Piano. They are justly pronounced by the Press and by the first Musical Masters to be equal to those of any other manufacturer. They are built of the best and most thoroughly seasoned material, and guaranteed to stand the action of every climate.

Each Instrument guaranteed to give satisfaction, or purchase money refunded. Second-hand Pianos at great bargains, constantly in store; price from $30 to $140.

Horace Waters' Melodeons,

SUPERIOR INSTRUMENTS IN TONE, TOUCH AND DURABILITY OF MAKE.

(Tuned the equal temperament.) Melodeons of all other styles and makes. Price, $45, $60, $75, $100, $125, $140; double Reeds, $150; double Reeds and two banks of Keys, $200. Less a liberal discount. Clergymen and Churches, an extra discount.

Martin's Guitars, Brown's Harps, Flutes, Flutinas, Accordeons, Violins, and Musical Instruments,

OF ALL KINDS, AT LOWER PRICES THAN EVER BEFORE OFFERED TO THE PUBLIC.

A large discount to Teachers and Schools. The trade supplied on the most liberal terms.

MUSIC.

One of the largest and best selected catalogues of Music now published, comprising many of the choice and most popular airs of the day, and will be sold at one-third off from the regular prices.

Music sent by mail to all parts of the country, post paid. Particular and personal attention paid to all orders received by mail. Satisfaction guaranteed in every instance. Pianos and Melodeons for rent, and rent allowed on purchase. Pianos and Melodeons for sale on monthly payments. Second-hand Pianos taken in exchange for new. General and select Catalogues and Schedule of prices forwarded to all parts of the country by mail.

☞ Great inducements offered to agents in all parts of the country, to sell the Horace Waters' Pianos, Melodeons, and Catalogue of Music.

PIANOS AND MUSIC.—We learn that Horace Waters, of 333 Broadway, N. Y., agent for the sale of many of the most celebrated makers of Pianos and Melodeons, is offering them at prices which we advise all who desire to purchase to avail themselves of. He is also selling his large and well-known Catalogue of Music at one-third off from the regular prices, and will forward the same free of postage. His offers to the trade, teachers and schools, are of the most favorable character, all of which he will be able to fill to the letter, for having wisely adopted the cash system. The Horace Waters' Pianos are known as among the very best. We are enabled to speak of those instruments with some degree of confidence, from personal knowledge of their excellent tone and durabe quality.—N. Y. Evangelist. ap19tf

I. E. Tate's Pannus Corrium Boot and Shoe store, for tender feet. A large stock of Boots, Shoes and Gaiters always on hand, in great variety, and made to order at the shortest notice, for Gentlemen, Boys and Youths—wholesale and retail, at the lowest Cash prices. Particular attention is requested to the Pannus Corrium or Leather Cloth Boots and Shoes, for those troubled with corns, bunions or tenderness of the feet. Its qualities for summer boots or shoes, surpass anything ever got up in this country for real comfort, as it keeps the feet perfectly cool, and at the same time is susceptible of the finest polish; for a dress boot more so than any French calfskin, with one half the labor. ISAAC E. TATE.
my 24, 3 mos. 427 Broadway New-York.

Massachusetts Advertisements.

BOSTON EMIGRANT SOCIETY.

OFFICE, CORNER OF SOUTH AND BEACH STREETS.

THE object of the Society is to protect the Emigrant from imposition. The Office is open daily from 7 o'clock A. M. to 6 P. M. Emigrants and others furnished with employment. The Society, having made the necessary arrangements, is prepared to furnish tickets of transportation to every section of the West. Persons procuring tickets at this office may rest assured that they will reach their destination by the best route, with the least delay, and the lowest cost.

MARTIN GRIFFIN, President.
JAMES FERGUSON, Rec. Sec. | JAMES DACEY, Cor. Sec.
JAMES FLYNN, Treasurer.
M. J. FENELON, Agent.

THE GREAT RUSSIAN REMEDY.

Pro Bono Publico.

"EVERY MOTHER SHOULD HAVE A BOX IN THE HOUSE HANDY IN CASE OF ACCIDENTS TO THE CHILDREN."

REDDING'S RUSSIAN SALVE. It is a Boston remedy of thirty years' standing, and is recommended by physicians. It is a sure and speedy cure for Burns, Piles, Boils, Corns, Felons, Chilblains, and old Sores of every kind.

For Fever Sores, Ulcers, Itch, Scald Head, Nettle Rash, Bunions, Sore Nipples, (recommended by nurses); Whitlows, Sties, Fosters, Flea Bites, Spider Stings, Frozen Limbs, Salt Rheum, Scurvy, Sore and Cracked Lips, Sore Nose, Warts and Flesh Wounds, it is a most valuable remedy and cure, which can be testified to by thousands who have used it in the city of Boston and vicinity for the last thirty years.

In no instance will this Salve do an injury, or interfere with a physician's prescriptions. It is made from the purest materials, from a recipe brought from Russia, of articles growing in that country, and the proprietors have letters from all classes, clergymen, physicians, sea captains, nurses, and others who have used it themselves and recommend it to others.

REDDING'S RUSSIAN SALVE is put in large tin boxes, stamped on the cover with the picture of a horse and a disabled soldier, which picture is also engraved on the wrapper. PRICE, 25 Cents a Box. Sold at all the stores in town or country, or may be ordered of any wholesale druggist.
ap19tf Redding & Co., Proprietors, No. 8 State st., Boston.

WEEMAN'S IRON RAILING MANUFACTORY.

No. 26 Merrimac street, Boston, Mass.

Where he has been for the past thirty years.

ALL persons in want of IRON FENCES, suitable for cemetery, house, garden, Balustrades, &c., can, by calling on the subscriber, purchase a better fence at a lower price, than at any other establishment in the state, as he makes it his entire business.
jun14m6 EBENEZER WEEMAM.

B. S. TREANOR,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,

15 MASSACHUSETTS BLOCK, COURT SQUARE, BOSTON.

Particular attention paid to Conveyancing, and the examination of titles to Real Estate.

Medical.

THE CAUSE OF CONSUMPTION.

BRONCHITIS.—WHAT PRODUCES BRONCHITIS?

FIRST STAGE OF DISEASE.

COSTIVENESS is the first link that connects disease in the System. It creates, induces, feeds and supports Bronchitis; and is slightly or indifferently treated, as though it was of no serious tendency: nevertheless, it has laid the fonndation of that destroying disease, without the knowledge of the sufferers, undermining and sapping the very vitals of their constitutions.

Among the numerous class of diseases which afflict man, there is none more silent or treacherous in its approaches or more certain to triumph over its slowly consuming victim, than that formidable and insidious leveller of humanity—Bronchitis, which is produced by catching cold, through a neglect of regulating the state of the bowels when arriving to adult age. It seldom excites attention or alarm in the mind of any person, until it has sown the seed of disease and suffering in the human system, by checking the circulation of the blood; and it is to this source alone that we attribute the awful mortality of Consumption.

The following is a simple but correct illustration, namely:—If the culverts and sewers of the city were choked or clogged up, accidentally or otherwise, what would be the result? An overflow of accumulated filth and slush on the surface of the earth in its neighborhood, until it fills every hole, corner and crevice. This is quite similar to the human body, when the channel or sewer of life, as I may term it, which is the bowels, is checked or confined through constipation or some unnatural obstruction, which prevents the blood from circulating through the general system.

What, then, is the consequence? An accumulation of diseased matter and bile. Where will this bile and poisonous substance go to when it is prevented from taking its natural exit, through the bowels? It must surge itself back again into the blood, to be infused through the entire frame by the agency of the blood, bringing in its passage disease and suffering, and exhibiting itself by pain, nervous sensations and irritation all over the body—producing a bad feeling at the stomach, sourness of the food, a rush of blood to the head, catarrh, bronchitis, a short dry cough, dizziness, pain in the shoulders, and through or under the shonlder blades, cold feet, a peevish and irritable temper, annoyed by this hacking cough, and then gradually begins the expectorating from the throat of a lightish phlegm, resembling boiled starch or tough jelly of various colors, from a light to a darkish substance, and hawked up like a string.

SECOND STAGE.

From this period the patient is aware of some unusual and disagreeable feeling, though he seldom takes the hint till it goes from bad to worse. Catching cold from the slightest exposure, which he cannot avoid in consequence of the blood being in a diseased and corrupt condition for a long time previous to the appearance of those troublous symptoms, through the impure state of the blood, that at every breath the patient draws he inhales a similar quantity of fresh air by the nostrils and mouth, which keeps the tickling that exists in the throat and bronchial tubes in a ferment of irritation—this is the reason why some people complain of catching cold, even when confined to their room. Hence the sufferer is hacking, hawking, or expectorating a little at a time, with the impression that there is something in his throat that wants to come out; and which he desires to get out. There is a frequent desire for heavy sighing, with a dryness of the nostrils, which inclines the patient to pick or scratch them; sleepy, drowsy, dull, and heavy loss of appetite, and confused memory; a stuffing, tightness, and oppression of the chest, with a rawness and soreness of the gullet of the throat. This is caused by the silent enemy that has lurked in the system for months, and even years, and has at last aroused your fears, and well it might; for out of one hundred persons who die of Consumption ninety-nine are owing to disease of the throat alone, though simply called Bronchitis; and wretchedly treated by this self-pretended and dignified class of sheepskin physicians termed M. D.'s, who have proved a curse to the human family. They treat their patient on the following abusive principle, by cutting the tonsils and palate from the throat, as you might cut the gills out of a fish—next comes the solution or wash of nitrate of silver or caustic, and the whalebone swab, to wash and burn away the disease that has occupied the throat. Then comes the application of blister, and Croton oil externally to the throat and neck, to draw out the inflammation, as the physicians suppose (what blind philosophy.) Then comes the quack sheet of their MATERIA MEDICA—Calomel, Antimony, Morphine and Opium, to salivate and lull the feelings of the pafient, which adds to the disease and increases the suffering, by giving the disease an opportunity of triumphing over nature. What a delusive idea to think the above treatment would be available in having recourse to those debilitating and irritating remedies of cutting, burning, blistering, purging and starving, which is of itself sufficient to lower and reduce the constitution of an ox.

THE THIRD STAGE

Confirms the above remarks. While undergoing this torturing treatment, the constitution is gradually failing and giving away, in giving rise to more alarming symptoms, evidently preparing its victim for the shroud, while the physician and friends fail to see the cause until those confirmed symptoms of consumption set in, but foolishly assign the cause to some other besides the genuine one, till the disease has reached its meridian, with a complication of fresh symptoms, breathing short and hurried, cough frequent, with an accumulation of corrupted matter, sometimes streaked with blood; profuse night sweats, emaciation and debility; cold chills in the forenoon, with a burning fever after; flesh soft and flabby, the limbs scarcely able to support the body; a susceptibility of catching cold on the least exposure, attended with a hoarseness and loss of voice, with a very heavy expectoration in the forenoon; flying pains in the chest, sides and shoulders, with a severe fit of coughing in the morning, or awaking from sleep. The painful crisis is fast approaching, with a swelling and puffing of the feet and ankles, and frequent attacks of diarrhœa. In females, the symptoms are more distressing at an earlier period than in the male, with a weakness in the back and loins, a sinking and exhausted feeling at the stomach, nervous and excitable, with gradual and frequent interruptions of the monthly flow, and as the disease progresses, a total or final cessation of it, with the harbinger of a broken down constitution which is a discharge of whites, a symptom that proves very debilitating and irritating to females.

All the above symptoms and sufferings are the fruits of costiveness at an early period, accruing to the sufferer through neglect of keeping the bowels in gentle operation, which would circulate the blood, and prove as ventilation to the general system, from the age of 18 to 26, when this disease creeps on and grows on, until every organ in the body is totally disorganized.

My long experience and observations, and my unprecedented success in treating consumption, inclines me to devote the remainder of my life to the cause of suffering humanity. I have cured more consumptive patients in the last ten years than any other doctor in the world in that time, and not by steam, smoke or vapor, nor by smelling medicine through an India rubber or glass tube, but through the selection I make from the forest and verdant meadows. I can always determine on examination whether I can be successful or not, and I speak accordingly. I have made it a rule to treat no disease longer than three weeks. If I cannot check the fatal progress of the disease in that time, I give up the patient as lost, and lead the sufferer to no further expense.

☞ In compliance with the repeated solicitations of consumptive patients living in remote parts of the country, I have opened an hospital at No. 178 Bowery, for the exclusive treatment of those laboring under any species of the above disease, where I can bestow on them the unremitted attention which the seriousness of their cases require; where I can be able to regulate their diet and regimen according to circumstances. Three weeks under the supervision of my especial care is worth four months at a distance.

All persons desirous of medical information can obtain it by enclosing one dollar, when all information and communication will be forwarded on receipt.

D. Durkin, Chronic and Consumptive Doctor,
my31 No. 178 Bowery, New-York.

DR. B. F. ADAMS,

SURGEON DENTIST, (formerly of Barclay street,) feeling grateful for the patronage so liberally bestowed upon him for the last fourteen years, respectfully informs his friends and the public, that he has taken an elegant suite of rooms, at

NO. 122 CHAMBERS STREET,

(near the Sixth and Eighth Avenue Railroads,) where he may always be found, ready to perform all operations pertaining to his profession, in a manner unsurpassed, and on the most reasonable terms. Whole or part sets of incorruptible teeth inserted without pain, on gold plate or gutta percha, excelling nature in beauty and durability. No impure gold or dangerous amalgams used. Irregularities in children's teeth prevented, or of adults remedied. Cleansing, extracting, &c. &c., all at reduced prices. Sets of teeth inserted on Silver or Gutta Percha, for six shillings each. Teeth examined, and advice given free of charge. Please call.
8m7jun B. F. ADAMS, 122 Chambers street, New-York.

DR. J. VOORHIES,

MEDICAL ELECTRICIAN,

NO. 69 SANDS STREET,

Brooklyn.

Office hours from 9 A. M. to 4 P. M.

N. B. All chronic or nervous diseases cured by Electricity in some form. Electro Medicated Vapor Baths ready for operation. Dropsy can be cured by this treatment. Consultations free. m8jun14

WRITING INKS.

WE ask the attention of all who wish imperishable records,—a matter of great importance to State, County and Town Offices, Banks, and others, to Dr. Chilton's test of the prominent Inks in use, made with a view to show their different degrees of permanence by exposure. Engraved facsimiles of the test can be seen at our office.

Thaddeus Davids & Co.,
ap19tm Manufacturing Stationers, 26 Cliff street.

Medical.

H. G. LUTHER,

SURGICAL AND MECHANICAL DENTIST,

No. 698 BROADWAY, Second House above Fourth st.

HAVING enjoyed an extensive practice during the last twelve years, feels confident of his ability to give perfect satisfaction to all who may honor him with their preference. He is prepared to perform all operations connected with his profession, in the most faithful manner, and in strict accordance with scientific principles, embracing all the recent improvements of the day.

References of the most respectable character given if desired. Patronage respectfully solicited.

☞ N. B. Teeth extracted without pain. my17 3m

Dr. J. J. McGowan, Physician and Surgeon, Graduate of Harvard University, Fellow of the Massachusetts and Rhode Island Medical Societies, etc., has removed to No. 69 Canal street, New-York, a few doors from Broadway, where he will attend to calls in every branch of the medical profession. Dr. McG. will devote particular attention to chronic diseases, and those of women and children. m10 1t

New School of Medicine and Pharmacy. The last Unfolding of the Art of Healing. My daily practice proves that I CURE CONSUMPTION, in all its varied forms and most advanced states, as readily as any other disease. Therefore I desire to treat all Consumptives, but particularly those who have tried all other physicians without relief. Mrs. M. J. MARIN, M.D., No. 37. Lafayette place, N. Y. (First street east of Broadway, between 4t and 8th sts.) Office hours: from 10 A. M. to 1 P. M., exclusively for Ladies; and from 2 to 5 P. M., for Gentlemen, Wednesdays excepted. All other hours by appointment. my31 3m

THE GREATEST WONDER OF THE AGE!

A REMEDY WHICH CURES IN FIVE MINUTES.—M. LEROUX'S FRENCH CHOLERA COGNAC BITTERS.—This wonderful and scientific compound is recommended by the most eminent and learned physicians of all Europe and America, and enjoys the best reputation of anything similar ever offered. It is without doubt the best, most efficient and generally acknowledged remedy against Cholera, dysentery, diarrhœa, and complaints of the stomach in general. The numerous patients who have tried it according to directions, have invariably found relief in a very short time, and the best proof of it is, that since this standard remedy was introducee in the armies of the allies in the Crimea, the mortality of the soldiers from Cholera and similar diseases was reduced by over 75 per cent.; in consideration of which, the inventor was presented by the French and English governments with a gold medal, bearing the inscription, "Hail! M. LEROUX, the great Chemist and inventor, by whose knowledge our armies are preserved from Cholera."

This invaluable preparation is also a remedy for biliousness, indigestion, weakness, and general derangement of the stomach. Upon being taken, it creates appetite, and prevents the heaviness attendant upon eating, by persons who are dyspeptic.

In this city, also, this remedy has been tried with the most undoubted success, and the undersigned can produce the best testimonials of our most celebrated physicians, as to its immediate and complete success, which he will be happy at any time to show to any that may wish to see them. S. STEINFELD, sole agent for the United States, No. 70 Nassau street, corner of John.

P. S.—Those not having money to pay, may call at my place from 3 to 5 P. M. and receive this remedy gratis. my17 3m

The Best Hair Dye.—DR. O. M. BALLARD'S new article received the highest premium at the World's Fair and American Institute, where it was examined by the distinguished Chemists, Dr. Chilton, and Prof. John Torrey, and pronounced the best. For sale by the best Druggists. Principal office and store, 498 Broadway, New-York. my17 3m

The undersigned announces to the legitimate faculty that he has opened a store for the dispensing of pure medicines, chemicals, &c. Having obtained a knowledge of the profession in the best schools in the world, during twelve years, he will be able to compound prescriptions precisely as they are ordered. JOHN. C. GILES, Apothecary,
2ljn8m 285 Bleecker, two doors above Barrow.

Reed's Celebrated London Cordial Gin, having gained much popularity in this country, being distilled the same as that in London, as he was formerly a distiller of the same kind of Gin in England, under the EXCISE LAWS.

This article is used in every hospital in and out of England's great metropolis. Its medicinal properties are invaluable.

☞ This Gin is not an imitation or a mixture of raw materials, of which much is sold in this city, under the name of London Cordial Gin, but a genuine and pure article, equal to any imported.

W. R. takes the opportunity of thanking the public for their liberal support, support, and begs a continuance of the same.

DISTILLERY,
118 East 29th st., New-York, between 2d and 3d avenues.

LABORATORY AND CHEMICAL OFFICE,
18 Exchange Place, N. Y., March 4, 1856.

MR. REED: Sir—I have submitted to close examination two samples of London Cordial Gin, manufactured by you, and purporting to equal the English article. I find on comparison with samples of Hodges' and Burnett's previously examined by me, and which I know to have been imported direct, that the quality of yours is by no means inferior to their celebrated compounds; while the perfect method you posess of rectifying, insures an article of a higher degree of purity and flavor, when it has the equal advantage of time to soften it, than much of the so-called imported London gin. As a medicinal agent and cordial, under proper advice, it may be depended upon, from the care with which you select the essential oils combined with it in the distillation.

Yours, respectfully,
ISAIAH DECK, M. D.,
Consulting and Analytical Chemist.
Mr. REED'S Distillery, 118 East Twenty-ninth st., New-York. [my31 3m

MRS. HAYES' SYRUP.

For Dysentery and Bowel Complaints.

WARRANTED to cure the worst cases in less than twenty-four hours, if used according to directions. It has stood the test of thirty-five years and has never been known to fail, even when the most eminent physicians had pronounced the patient beyond the reach of medicine. Over two thousand satisfactory references and certificates can be produced, sufficient to prove its superiority over all other preparations for these complaints.

The Syrup can be given to a child a week old with perfect safety. It is pleasant to the taste, and harmless in its composition, it being free from opium, alcohol, &c. Prepared and sold by Mrs. M. Hayes, 175 Fulton st., Brooklyn. Sold also by Joseph W. Hayes, 159 Atlantic st., H. Parker, cor. of Fulton Avenue and Cumberland street, M. Evans, corner of Myrtle and Classon avenues, Brooklyn. In New-York by F. C. Wells & Co., 115 Franklin street, C. H. Ring, 92 Broadway, T. T. Green, 862 Broadway, Guion, corner of Bowery and Grand streets, W. S. Dunham, 476 Broadway. In Williamsburg, J. D. Norvill, 26 Grand street. In Newark, by R. VanBuskirk, cor. of Market and Broad streets. 3m19jly

Special Notices.

OFFICE OF RECEIVER OF TAXES, No. 32 Chambers street, New Court house

To avoid the risks that must inevitably occur from the crowd of Tax Payers who put off to the latest day the payment of their taxes, I have determined to adopt the following rule, which will be rigidly adhered to during my term of office. I shall receive no money after 2 o'clock p. m. Every officer in this department is STRICTLY PROHIBITED from receiving ENVELOPES containing money or checks for the payment of Taxes. By order,
8mjly5 HENRY H. HOWARD, Receiver.
New-York, June 28, 1856.

Mayor's Office, New-York, June 16, 1856.

Notice to Owners of Dogs.—Notice is hereby given that on and after Wednesday, June 25th inst., the ordinance respecting dogs found running loose or at large in any street south of Forty-second street, without being muzzled, will be strictly enforced. The sum of fifty cents will be paid for every dog brought alive to the Pound, on the corner of First Avenue and Thirty-first street, which shall have been found in the streets, running loose or at large without being properly muzzled. on presentation of the certificate of the pound-keeper to the Chief of Police at his office in the Park. Owners of dogs may reclaim them at the Pound between sunrise and sunset on the day on which they are received, on payment of expenses.

FERNANDO WOOD, Mayor.

Proclamation.—500 Dollars reward.—I, Fernando Wood, Mayor of the City of New-York, by virtue of authority vested in me by law, do offer a reward of five hundred dollars, for the arrest and conviction of the person or persons who murdered Bartholomew Burke, on the night of Thursday the 17th, or on the morning of the 18th July, 1856, at the corner of Broadway and White-streets, said reward to be paid on the conviction of the offender or offenders, on the certificate of the District Attorney, that such conviction was had upon the testimony of the party claiming the same, but all claims for said reward not presented within twenty days thereafter, will be disregarded. Witness my hand and seal of Mayoralty, this 22nd July, 1856. 2aug [L. S.] FERNANDO WOOD.

☞ Post Office Notice.—The MAILS FOR EUROPE, per U. S. steamer Washington will close at this office on SATURDAY, the 16th day of August, at 10½ o'clock, A. M. Isaac V. Fowler, Postmaster.

Business Directory.

RICH CARPETING.

1856. SPRING IMPORTATION. 1856.

ARTHUR DONNELLY,

98 BOWERY, (West side,) BETWEEN GRAND AND HESTER STREETS.

IS now prepared to exhibit his New Spring Styles of

Foreign and Domestic Carpetings,

Comprising every grade and every description, from the Cheapest Fabric to the Richest.

Importing his goods direct and thus saving the commission and interest which most dealers pay, he is enabled to offer them at prices highly favorable to consumers, who will find at his store, among other Carpetings adopted to all varieties of taste, the following elegant descriptions:

Medallions,	at	14s to 18s	per yard.
Velvet,	"	10s to 16s	"
Tapestry,	"	6s to 12s	"
Brussels,	"	7s to 12s	"
Three-ply,	"	7s to 10s	"
Ingrain,	"	3s to 7s	"
Common Ingrain,	"	18d to 3s	"

English and American Floor Oil Cloths,

of every imaginable width, pattern and style.

A complete and choice assortment of

STAIR AND HALL CARPETS, RUGS, MATS, MATTINGS,

and of everything else appertaining to the Carpet Trade.

ARTHUR DONNELLY, 98 Bowery, (West side,)
ap19 8m Between Grand and Hester sts., N. Y.

NEW STORE

AND

NEW GOODS.

THE subscriber having leased for a term of years the premises

374 Hudson street,

and made exthnsive additions thereto, and having laid in a large stock o

Carpeting and Oil Cloths,

stly bought at Auction, for CASH, is now prepared to sell them at the owing extremely low prices:

Tapestry Brussels, 8s. usually sold at 10s.
Three Ply Ingrain 8s. usually sold at 10s.
Superfine do 6s. usually sold at 8s.
Fine do 5s. usually sold at 6s.
Common do All WOOL 3s. 6d. per yard, a price absolely unheard of.

Ingrain, Cotton Warp and Wool Filling 2s. 6d.
Oil Cloths 3s. per yard, usually sold at 5s.

Mats, Matting, Table and Piano Covers, Venetian and Hall Carpetting, Stair Rods, &c. &c.

Clergymen and Churches furnished at wholesale prices.
Goods in all cases warranted as represented.

J. R. Landon, 374 Hudson street, New-York,
3mjun a few doors from Hamersly.

JAMES CAIN,

MERCHANT TAILOR,

AND

CLOTHIER,

NO. 129 FULTON STREET,

(HERALD BUILDING,) New-York.
my31y

PHAIR & CO.,

STEAM JOB PRINTERS,

22 BEEKMAN STREET, NEW-YORK,

Are prepared to do Printing of all kinds in the best style and on reasonable terms. PARTIES desiring printing for BALLS, PARTIES, EXCURSIONS, CONCERTS, or PUBLIC MEETINGS, are invited to give us a call.
8mjly26

JAMES CRAFT,

FANCY CARD AND JOB PRINTER,

CORNER ANN AND NASSAU STREETS,

Entrance 29 Ann street, New-York. tf9au

M. GRADY.

27 FAYETTE STREET, LOWELL, MASS.

ju21 Agent for the IRISH NEWS and all the other choice literature of the day.

KNOX'S

OFFICE FURNITURE WAREROOMS,

59 BEEKMAN STREET, UP STAIRS.

DESKS! DESKS!! DESKS!!!

DOUBLE and Single counting-room DESKS, from 3 to 8 feet long. Office Desks from 3 to 6 ft., of Mahogany, blackwalnut and oak; cases for Books and pigeon-holes. Office chairs, cushions, lounges and Office Tables of every description. my17 tf

---

McLOUGHLIN & McSHANE,

(Successors to THOS. ANDREWS,)

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALERS IN

CHOICE TEAS, COFFEES, WINES, BRANDIES, AND GROCERIES,

61 FULTON STREET, near Cliff street,

NEW-YORK. 3m

SHIP STORES SUPPLIED.

MRS. J. McCARTHY,

FASHIONABLE MILLINERY STORE,

44 THIRD AVENUE

Third door from 10th Street, NEW-YORK.

Cheap Straw Hats, Ribbons, Flowers, Ladies' Straw Goods.

Straw Bonnets cleaned and altered to the newest fashions.
LADIES' OWN MATERIALS MADE UP TO THE LATEST STYLES. tf

DRY-DOCK DISTILLERY.

No. 291 East-thirteenth st., near Avenue B.

JAMES RUSSELL,

Rectifier and Manufacturer of Cordials,

IMPORTER AND DEALER

IN Foreign and Domestic Wines, Liquors, Cordials, &c. J. R. having had long experience in the liquor trade, he has facilities of selecting wines and liquors of the most superior quality, which he offers to dealers and families at the lowest market prices, and flatters himself that a single trial will be quite sufficient to secure custom.

Goods delivered free of expense in any part of the city, and country orders promptly attended to. 3m jun14

CALL ON

THOMAS LYNCH,

OF the "FULTON SHADES," Fulton Ferry, Brooklyn, for the best XX and XXX ales, brandies, and segars.

P. CUFF,

RECTIFIER AND DISTILLER,

NO. 306 EIGHTH AVENUE.

NEW-YORK.

Dealer in Foreign Wines and Liquors.

Goods sent to all parts of the country. Orders of all kinds promptly attended to. y jly26

Business Directory.

MEAGHER & CAMPBELL,

ATTORNEYS AND COUNSELLORS AT LAW,

NO. 82 BROADWAY.

NOTARY PUBLIC,

Commissioner for the U. S. Court of Claims.

THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER, having formed a partnership with MALCOLM CAMPBELL, for the general practice of the law, the firm will continue to devote their attention to such law business as may be intrusted to them, including conveyancing, practice in all the courts of the state of New-York and of the United States, and general collecting business in all parts of the world. Particular attention will be given to the prosecution of claims against the United States in the Court of Claims.

Mr. Meagher may be consulted daily, on law business only, at No. 82 Broadway, from three till five o'clock P. M.

THOS. H. HURLEY,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,

NO. 10 CENTRE ST., OPPOSITE CITY HALL.

WILLIAM E. ROBINSON,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR,

HAVING entered into partnership with ISAAC DAYTON, Esq., (author of the work on Surrogates,) and WILLIAM A. COURSEN, Esq., gentlemen long known, and of high standing at the New-York Bar, has removed to their new office at 267 BROADWAY, third door below Chambers street.

☞ All business either in the Criminal or Civil Courts, promptly and faithfully attended to. ap19 1y

---

JOHN O'ROURKE,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,

NO. 10 CENTRE STREET,

(Opposite the Superior Court Buildings,)

7jun NEW-YORK.

JAMES M. SHEEHAN,

Attorney and Counsellor at Law,

No. 13 Chambers Street, New-York.

2y1ju Collections promptly attended to, and Liens carefully filed, &c.

JOHN A. McSORLEY,

CUSTOM HOUSE AND SHIP BROKER, AND NOTARY PUBLIC,

7 BROAD STREET,

Clergymen, importing Vestments, Church Ornaments, &c., will be liberally treated with by calling on the subscriber.

REFERENCES:

Messrs. Thos. McClune & Co., C. Meletta, | Messrs. D. & J. Sadlier & Co., James Cook & Co. 6m

---

JAMES HARLIN,

WATCH, CLOCK MAKER, AND JEWELER.

236 HENRY STREET, BROOKLYN.

All watches and clocks bought or repaired at my establishment, warranted for twelve months. *

JOHN FOLEY,

WATCHMAKER,

JEWELER AND FINISHER OF FINE WATCHES,

NO. 202 BOWERY.

Between Spring and Prince Streets, New-York.

Watches of a superior quality made to order, and warranted not to err more than four minutes a year. Cases jointed, works jeweled, and chronometer balances set in the best style. Jewelry of every kind repaired in a jul2m6 workmanlike manner. All orders punctually attended to.

J. McCARTEN,

WATCH AND CLOCK MAKER,

154 SEVENTH AVENUE.

Between 20th and 21st streets, New-York.

Watches, Clocks, and Jewelry carefully repaired and warranted. A good
7jun assortment of watches and clocks always on hand. 8m

JOHN FOLEY,

MANUFACTURER OF FINE GOLD PENS

BEST QUALITY ONLY.

GOLD AND SILVER PENCIL CASES.

my24tf No. 163 BROADWAY, NEW-YORK.

JOHN KENNEDY'S

STEAM MARBLE WORKS,

35TH STREET, NEAR BROADWAY.

Statuary and Marble Mantle-Pieces, Monuments, Grave Stones, Tombs, &c. All orders thankfully received and punctually attended to. *

THOMAS GAFFNEY'S

SOAP AND CANDLE

MANUFACTORY,

825 EAST SENECA STREET, BUFFALO,

NEW-YORK. 6m June 7

WILLIAM M. SMITH,

The Public Favorite, and only American Opposition

BILL POSTER AND DISTRIBUTOR,

THE OLDEST ESTABLISHED IN THE BUSINESS.

Work done promptly and faithfully—cheaper, quicker, and better than any other poster in the city. Work done either in New-York, Brooklyn, Williamsburgh, or Jersey City. Boards lent for concerts, or any kind of work.

OFFICE, 23½ SPRUCE STREET, NEW-YORK,
ap26tf (Between William and Gold streets.)

THE METROPOLITAN

FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY,

No. 108 BROADWAY,

(Cor. Pine Street.)

CASH CAPITAL $300,000.

JAMES LORIMER GRAHAM, President.

EDWARD A. STANSBURY, Secretary. my31y

WILLARD, FELT & CO.,

MANUFACTURERS OF ACCOUNT BOOKS,

AND IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN PAPER AND STATIONERY,

NO. 14 MAIDEN LANE,

8mos (near Broadway.)

MATTHEW WALLACE,

25 CLARK STREET, CHICAGO, ILL.,

WHOLESALE DEALER IN NEWSPAPERS, BOOKS, &c.

☞ "The Irish News," on hand, by the earliest moment, each week. tf

Hotels.

STEVENS HOUSE.

(LATE DELMONICO'S HOTEL.

21, 23, 25, & 27 Broadway, New-York.

THE undersigned avails himself of this opportunity of informing his friends and the public that he has leased the above named house for a term of years, and has made extensive alterations and repairs, and omitted nothing that will tend to the accomodations or comfort of guests. The house having been newly furnished throughout in the most thorough and modern style, with a view to convenience and comfort, and as it will be conducted on the European plan, and with an experienced caterer, and thorough cooks, he hopes to give satisfaction to those who favor him with their patronage which has never failed while in other Hotels in this city.

Catholic families and clergymen visiting New-York will find in the arrangements of this spacious establishment, elegance, convenience, and comfort, at moderate charges. JOHN O'GRADY, JR.,
8m5jly Formerly of Judson's Hotel and the Brandreth House.

NEW HOTEL.

LAFARGE HOUSE,

Broadway, New-York.

This new and beautiful First-class Hotel, is now open for the reception of guests. The location is the most pleasant part of Broadway, opposite Bond street, and in the immediate vicinity of the most fashionable places of amusement. The rooms are large and airy, and so arranged that they may be connected in suites for families, or used separately for single seasons. The patronage of the public is respectfully solicited.

8m19jly STONE & BURROUGHS, Proprietors.

HOSEY & RILEY,

PACIFIC RESTAURANT,

600 BROADWAY, NEW-YORK.

Private entrance on the first floor, 134 Crosby street.

☞ Hosey & Riley invite their friends to give them a call.

my24 3m

Business Directory.

THOMAS RUSSELL.

209 FULTON STREET, BETWEEN CHURCH AND GREENWICH STS.

THE subscriber begs leave to inform the public that he has opened the above establishment for the sale of

PURE WINES, BRANDIES, &C.,

with an extensive assortment of

CHOICE CORDIALS,

by wholesale and retail, and womld call attention of buyers to his Stock, consisting, in part of

FINE COGNAC BRANDY.

The celebrated Brand of Leger Freres, a superior article for medicinal purposes.

Pinet Castillon, Vintage 1823 and 1842.
Otard, Dupuy & Co., Vintages 1836 and 1840.

PORT WINE,

(J. & R. Osborn's Importation,)

COLERAINE AND DUBLIN MALT WHISKEY,

(Imported by the subscriber to which he invites the attention of the connoisseur.)

HOLLAND GIN,

Meder Swan, and other favorite brands.

Together with a large assortment of

DUBLIN & LONDON PORTER, SCOTCH ALES, and a select supply of genuine Havana Segars, of various brands.

Particular attention given to orders for families, and goods forwarded to any part of the City, Brooklyn, Jersey, &c. Country Orders with remittance, immediately attended to.

Having engaged the services of Mr. Thomas Dillon, (late with Archdeacon & O'Connor, Wall Street) customers can depend on all orders entrusted to his care, being promptly and faithfully attended to.

Parties residing up town can procure the above articles of T. & J. Russell, corner 36th street, and 6th Avenue: T. Russell & Co., corner 4th Street and 6th Avenue, and at the corners of 18th Street, 8th and 10th Avenues.

THE VIRGINIA TOBACCO AGENCY,

(ESTABLISHED IN 1836.)

45½ Water street, New-York.

CHARLES M. CONNOLLY,

Commission Merchant and Agent for the sale of Manufactured Tobacco.

Has always on hand, at the above agency, a full supply of

Manufactured Tobacco,

Of all brands and descriptions, direct from the Virginia Factories, for sale on liberal terms. jly5y

---

"THE VINEYARD."

O'CONNOR & HOWARD,

PROPRIETORS.

17 WALL STREET.

Importers and Wholesale Dealers in Foreign and Domestic Fruit, Ales, Wines, Liquors,

Segars,

Gunniss Double XX porter, Scotch and Alsop's Ale, English pickles, sauces, marmalades, Jelly, &c. &c. 8m16au

---

P. COTTER,

DEALER IN

LONDON BROWN STOUT, SCOTCH & BURTON ALES,

PHILADELPHIA PORTER, ALE, CHAMPAIGNE CIDER AND SODA WATER.

Mercer House,

Corner of Broome and Mercer streets, New-York.

JOHN J. STAFF'S.

WINES, LIQUORS, SEGARS,
LONDON, DUBLIN, PHILADELPHIA,
PORTER and ALE,
SCOTCH, BURTON, and EAST INDIA ALES,
CHAMPAGNE CIDER, in quantities to suit purchasers,
at 333 Broadway,
tf corner of Anthony street, New-York.

P. MONAGHAN,

IMPORTER of the various and best brands of HAVANA SEGARS, &c. &c. Country and city merchants supplied in bond or in store. Duties paid or unpaid. 121 PEARL STREET, New-York.

N. B.—Sole Importer of the J. M. Vichot, La Union, and La Primavera brands. ap26 1y

---

WISE'S IRISH MALT WHISKEY.

IMPORTED by J. & P. Hogan, Nos. 6 and 12 West street, and 253 Third Avenue, corner of 21st street, New-York, and corner of Vanbrunt and Sullivan streets, Brooklyn. J. & P. Hogan wish to inform their friends and the public that they have just received a large quantity of WISE'S CORK MALT WHISKEY, which will be sold at a reduced price, out of bond and at the above establishment. They are the only firm who import the same in New-York. ap26 1y

The Irish News.

THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.
JOHN SAVAGE, LITERARY EDITOR.

THREE DOLLARS PER ANNUM. SINGLE COPIES 6 CENTS.
Publication Office, 29 Ann St., cor. of Nassau.

VOL. I. NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, AUGUST 23, 1856. NO. 20.

Publications.

CONTENTS OF NO. XX.

Editorial.

THE CAMPAIGN!
DEVIN REILLY.
COSTA RICA OUT IN PRINT.
THE FRANCISCANS IN ALLEGANY.
CATHOLIC LIBRARY AND LECTURES.
SAN FRANCISCO CORRESPONDENCE.

Literature.

PERSONAL RECOLLECTIONS.—The '82 Club—Its Origin and Object.
Illustrious Irishmen abroad—by "Omega."
The Delights of Patriotism.
Immigration to the United States—Bromwell's History.
Cousin Nicholas—Baron Humboldt's and J. S. Trasher's Cuba.
Funeral Oration—by Father Kenyon.

Poetry.

Newport—by "Barrett."

Correspondence.

Letter from California—by "Hard Facts."
" from Newport—by "Dinner Bell."
Letters from Wm. Smith O'Brien and Charles Gavan Duffy.

Miscellaneous.

European News—Irish Provincial News—Irish Assizes Intelligence—Buchanan and the Press.—American News—Congressional Summary, &c.

Answers to Correspondents.

THE IRISH NEWS,

EDITED BY THE PROPRIETOR,

THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER,

DEDICATED TO THE SERVICE OF THE

IRISH PEOPLE,

AT HOME AND ABROAD,

Will be published every Saturday, on and after the 12th of April, at 29 Ann street, corner of Nassau, New-York.

TERMS.

For subscribers, $3 per annum: 6 cents a copy.
For retailers and carriers, $4 per hundred.
For Clubs, 4 copies to one address, per annum, $10.
" 7 " " " " $17.
" 10 " " " " $20.

For advertising.—Each square of eight lines,

Transient	$1
Monthly	$2
Quarterly	$5
Yearly	$16

N. B. Four lines, or under, constitute half a square.

Agents or Postmasters who interest themselves in procuring and remitting subscriptions, may retain 50 cents out of each annual subscription of $3.

☞ Subscribers, Agents, and Advertisers will please send in their orders early, and observe that our terms are invariably, payments in advance.

Communications of a PRIVATE nature should always be marked so. Those connected with the editorial department are to be addressed to Thomas Francis Meagher, and those on business to Richard J. Lalor, Irish News Office, 29 Ann street, corner of Nassau.

☞ Subscribers, residing in New-York, Brooklyn, and Williamsburgh, who pay in advance, will have their papers neatly enveloped, addressed, and delivered on each Wednesday through Boyd's Express or some similar medium.

Wholesale Dealers.

BENTER & BROTHERS, 14 Ann Street, New-York.
ROSS & TOUSEY, 108 Nassau Street, New-York.
SAMUEL YATES, 22 Beekman Street, New-York.
MIKE MADDEN, 22 Ann Street, New-York.
HAMILTON & JOHNSON, 30 Ann Street, New-York.
DE WITT & DAVENPORT, 160 & 162 Nassau Street, New-York.
HENRY TAYLOR, Baltimore, Md.
FEDERHEN & CO., 13 Court Street, Boston.
WM. HICKEY, 128 Federal Street, Boston.
REDDING & CO., 8 Court Street, Boston.
THOS. McLOUGHLIN, 42 South 4th Street, Philadelphia.
T. R. CALLENDER, 88 South-Third Street, Philadelphia.
DROVIN & CO., Philadelphia.
A. WINCH, 116 Chestnut street.
J. M. CRAWFORD, 30 and 32 Chestnut Street, St. Louis, Mo.
MATTHEW WALLACE, 25 Clark Street, Chicago, Ill.
McNALLY & CO., 75 Dearborn Street.
J. W. SULLIVAN, Kearney Street, San Francisco, Cal.
ROY'S, Detroit, Mich.
J. B. MAHONY, Cincinnati, Ohio.
J. P. WALSH, Cincinnati, Ohio.
—— COURTNEY, Charleston, South Carolina.
BRICE, 100 Exchange Place, New Orleans.
JOHN PLASTO, 144 Upper Abbey street, Dublin.
STILL & CO., 120 Montgomery street, San Francisco.
WM. BOYLE, News Carrier, San Francisco.
J. C. Morgan, next post office, New Orleans.

Retail Dealers.

NAGLE, Bangor, Me.
O'CONNELL, Cincinnati, O.
HASTINGS, Albany, N. Y.
McGOWANS, Portland, Me.
ADAMSON, Washington, D. C.
DOWNS, New-Haven, Conn.
MORRISEY, " "
DONOHUE, Newark, N. J.
JOHN H. TYSON, 89 Washington street, Hoboken, N. J.
JOHN C. CLARKE, 38 Newark avenue, Jersey City.
B. E. DOWLING, Jefferson st., next the Post Office, Newport, Ky.
M. GRADY. 27 Fayette st., Lowell, Mass.

Printed by Watters Brothers, 47 Ann street.
POWER PRESS OF J. B. WILLIAMS.

KEATING'S IRELAND.

A NEW TRANSLATION OF THE

FORAS FEASA AR ERINN;

OR, GENERAL HISTORY OF IRELAND.

From a Manuscript Copy of the Original Irish of the Rev. and Learned

GEOFFREY KEATING.

With Notes, Historical, Topographical, and Explanatory,

By JOHN O'MAHONY, Esq.

The work is now in course of preparation, and will be speedily published, in one large octavo volume of about 600 pages, with plates. Price to Subscribers, $2,00.

The book will be got up in superior style, and furnished to the address of Subscribers giving their names to a duly-authorized canvasser, or to

A list of subscribers will be printed in the work.

P. M. HAVERTY, Publisher,
110 Fulton street, N. Y.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., July 16, 1856.

Dear Haverty—I wish you to put down my name as a subscriber to Mr. O'Mahoney's translation of the Foras Feasa ar Erinn.

That is a book long wanted, and which the "Celtic Society ought to have given us long ago. If William Eliot Hudson had lived, it would have been accomplished. And it will be no small credit to you, if you can bring out here in America a work long acknowledged to be a desideratum in Ireland; executed, too, by a scholar so competent both to translate and to illustrate it with notes, as Mr. O'Mahony.

I hope it is well advanced in its preparation.

Faithfully yo JOHN MITCHEL.

Publications.

BENZIGER BROTHERS.

Publishers and Booksellers,

MANUFACTURERS AND IMPORTERS OF

Church Furniture,

Einsiedeln, Switzerland, and 172 William street, corner of Beekman, New-York.

BENZIGER BROTHERS beg leave most respectfully to call the particular attention of the Right Rev. and the Rev. Clergy, the Religious Communities, Educational Establishments, and of the Trade, to the large and varied stock they have just opened in their new store, 172 William street.

Their Book Trade.

The old established house of Benziger Brothers, Eisiedeln, well known to many of the Hierarchy and the Rev. Clergy of the United States who have visited Switzerland, established this house in New-York four years ago, and they trust they will receive for the greatly increased advantages they offer, a continuance of that support, which for a period of over forty years has enabled them to build up, at the Pilgrimage of Our Lady of the Hermits (Einsiedeln) an establishment in which over four hundred persons are daily employed in the fabrication of the various articles that are used in the Church.

They desire particularly to call attention to their publications of PRAYER and DEVOTIONAL BOOKS, in German, French, Italian and Latin, consisting of over 200 different sorts. Being in immediate and constant intercourse with nearly all the principal publishers of Europe, they are enabled to offer a large assortment of standard THEOLOGICAL and LITURGICAL WORKS, among which are, the editions of Mechline, Paris, Ratisbone, &c., at exceedingly low prices.

They are also prepared to supply any of the English Catholic Books published in the United States, at publishers' lowest prices.

An assortment of Dutch and Fleurish Prayer Books, and of German School and Story Books.

2. They very respectfully invite an inspection of their extensive assortment of

Vestments and Church Vessels,

and, in doing so, feel confident that their stocks is more varied and of superior fabrication than any of the kind heretofore introduced into the United States, and from their facilities for purchasing in Europe, are enabled to sell at a lower price than any other house in the country.

3. Engravings, Beads, Crucifixes, &c.

ENGRAVINGS.—An immense variety of their own manufacture, including Altar, Baptismal, Confirmation, First Communion and First Confession Cards, Holy Water Pots, and

BEADS—Pearl, Garnet, Cornelian, Cocoa, Ivory, Wood, and Glass.

CRUCIFIXES, MEDALS, and RELIQUARIES, &c., in great variety. Also, STATUARY, in porcelain, biscuit, plastique, &c., &c.

4. Together with the above they have a large number of

Beautiful Statues,

suitable for Churches and Oratories, imported from Germany, France, and Belgium; amongst which are "The Immaculate Conception," "Virgin Mother" or "Our Lady of Victories," "St. Peter," "St. Paul," "Ecce Homo," "St. Joseph," "St. Aloysius," "St. Patrick," "The Resurrection," "Angel Guardian," "Angel Adoring," "The Infant Saviour in the Crib," "The Crucifixion," and many others. Any figure made to order, from design.

☞ Catalogues describing the Church Ornaments, Books, Pictures and Beads, can be had on application. jy19 3mos

NAPIER'S PENINSULAR WAR.

LIBRARY EDITION.

J. S. REDFIELD, 34 Beekman street, will publish, on Saturday, Aug. 16, 5 volumes, 12mo., price $7 50,

The History of the War in the Peninsula,

and in the

South of France from A. D. 1807 to 1814.

By Major-General Sir W. F. P. Napier, K.C.B., Col. 27th Regiment, &c.

 This edition is a reprint of the revised English edition, recently published, and contains all the author's emendations and "justificatory pieces," with

FIFTY-FIVE MAPS AND PLANS OF BATTLES,

There has been also prepared for this edition,

A Complete Index

to the whole work, (wanting in all other editions,) and the following

Portraits,

beautifully engraved on steel:

1. NAPIER, (the author,)
2. NAPOLEON,
3. WELLINGTON,
4. SOULT,
5. JOSEPH BONAPARTE.

"You should read Napier's volumes of the war in Portugal. He is a heroic fellow, equal to any thing in Plutarch; and, moreover, a long-headed, clever hero, who takes good aim before he fires."—Letters of Sydney Smith.

"Our English Thucydides, the historian of the Peninsular war."—Walter Savage Landor on Orthography. Fraser, Feb. 1856.

NATIONAL POLITICAL MAP

OF THE

United States.

JUST Published, containing accurate Portraits, from life, of FREMONT, BUCHANAN, FILLMORE, DAYTON, BRECKINRIDGE and DONALDSON, with the Platform of their respective parties, together with their letters of acceptance and a vast amount of statistical matter, interesting to all parties. This Map is beautifully colored, size 34 by 40 inches, extends through to the PACIFIC COAST, showing the exact boundaries of all the States and Territories, Missouri Compromise Line, &c.

It also contains a valuable Diagram, showing the ups and downs in relative rank, as to the population of the several States of the Union for the last Sixty years. Politicians of all parties, wishing to have before them material for being fully posted at a single glance, must possess a copy of this Map. Price in sheet form, 25 cents; price in pocket form, 50 cents.

N. B.—Copies sent (post-paid) on receipt of price. 100,000 Agents wanted to sell them. Address

A. Ranney, Publisher, No. 195 Broadway, N. Y.

N. B.—Editors of papers giving the above one insertion, shall receive a copy of the Map. A. R. aug16 2t

Special Notices.

OFFICE RECEIVER OF TAXES,
NEW COURT HOUSE, No. 82 Chambers street.

I HEREBY GIVE NOTICE, That the Tax for the year 1856 was confirmed by the Board of Supervisors on the 8th day of August, 1856, at 5 minutes before 6 o'clock, P. M. The rate, 1.38 80-100. The books will be placed under my charge on or about the 1st September next.

Tax payers are requested to refer to the published rules, which I shall be constrained rigidly to adhere to.

aug23 2t HENRY H. HOWARD, Receiver.

Publications.

JUST PUBLISHED,

And for sale Wholesale and Retail

BY

P. O'SHEA,

[789 Broadway and 20 Beekman street,

"AILEY MOORE,"

A Tale of the Times.

Showing how Evictions, Murder, and such like PASTIMES, are managed and Justice administered in Ireland.

Together with many stirring incidents in other lands.

BY FATHER BAPTIST.

1 vol. 16mo....75c.

Other New Books.

THE BELEAGUERED HEARTH.

1 vol. 12mo....$1 25

ELEMENTS OF GEOMETRY AND TRIGONOMETRY.

BY B. SESTINI.

Price $1 25....Per dozen, $10.

NORTH AMERICAN SPELLEL.

Price 12½c....per dozen, $1.

Samples of School Books sent to Teachers and institutions when applied for.

P. O'Shea, Publisher.

Importer of Vestments and Altar Furniture. tf au23

Study the Life of Mary!

THE OLD ESTABLISHED CATHOLIC HOUSE

OF

EDWARD DUNIGAN & BROTHER,

(JAMES B. KIRKER,)

151 Fulton street, New-York,

Are now publishing, in monthly parts, at twenty-five cents each, and with the express approbation of the

MOST REV. JOHN HUGHES, D.D.,

ARCHBISHOP OF NEW-YORK,

The Life of the Blessed Virgin Mary,

By the

RIGHT REV. ROMUALD GENTILUCCI,

Chamberlain of Honor to His Holiness,

Dedicated to and honored with the suffrages of His Holiness

POPE PIUS IX.,

ILLUSTRATED with fine steel engravings, and vignettes, borders, and initials, designed expressly for this work. This Life, published at Rome in 1848, by a Prelate high in the esteem of the Holy Father, is approved by the Master of the Sacred Palace, and has already been translated into other languages. Amid the many lives that have appeared, Gentilucci's will ever be remarkable for its unction and beauty of style, no less than for the deep knowledge which it displays of the writings of the Holy Fathers, and all the monuments of Ecclesiastical History that can in any way throw light on the Life of the Immaculate Mother of our Lord, as handed down in the loving traditions of the faithful from the age in which she lived.

It is a book for the studious as well as for the fervent Christian; a book for every one who seeks to rouse in his heart feelings of devotion for Her, whom the unerring Judge selected for the greatest honor which the human mind can conceive.

Conditions of the Work.

Gentilucci's Life of the Blessed Virgin Mary will be published in semi-monthly parts of 48 pages each, with a steel engraving in every number, and several fine woodcuts. Printed on fine paper, from new type, it will, when complete, form a most unique and beautiful volume of six to seven hundred and fifty pages.

OBSERVATIONS OF THE PRESS.

No other work of our day, on the same subject, can be compared to it. It is unrivalled for beauty of style and depth of erudition. It is the offering of a learned and devoted son of the blessed Virgin, who enjoys the confidence and friendship of our most Holy Father, to whom the work is dedicated. We are not more edified at the piety of the author, than astonished at the wonderful erudition displayed in the book. The translator has performed his task admirably.—Pittsburg Catholic.

We cannot too highly recommend it to the consideration of our readers, whether we regard the intrinsic value of the work itself, or the beauty and exquisite ensemble of its getting up.—Truthteller.

Profusely illustrated with engravings and vignettes, this work is brought out in such an elegant style, as to make it, exclusive of its literary merit, a fitting library companion to the Bible of the same enterprising publishers.—Detroit Vindicator.

This work is one of devotion and merit. We do not know who translated it, but it seems better than average translations.—Freeman's Journal.

This work, translated from the Italian, and apparently well translated, is by an eminent author, is dedicated by permission to his Holiness Pius IX., and is spoken of in very high terms by competent judges. As far as we have seen it, we like it very much, and think it must prove a great favorite with the children of Mary and all devout Catholics.—Brownson's Review.

Inducement.

Each subscriber to this splendid work will receive with the last number a magnificent steel engraving, suitable for framing, of the

MOST. REV. JOHN HUGHES, D.D.,

ARCHBISHOP OF NEW-YORK.

Canvassers will find it to their advantage to address the publishers.

8t12jly EDWARD DUNIGAN & BROTHER.

HUMAN ABORIGINES,

Omnivora, Herbivora, Carnivora,

WITH CHIEF REFERENCE TO

The Nations of Europe and their Descendants in America.

Illustrated with above Four Hundred Lithographic Portraits, Cranial forms, &c.,

BY

JOHN M'ELHERAN,

MEMBER OF THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF SURGEONS, EDINBURGH.

Natural History is the Key to all Human History.

Quarto price, $5. The first edition having the most perfect impression of the Lithographs, will be given to subscribers only. The work will go to press when a sufficient list is completed.

☞ Please send your orders to the Messrs. Appleton & Co., or to Dr. M'Elheran, 186 McDougal street, New-York, 4t16au D. Appleton & Co.

Shipping.

THE NEW-YORK AND LIVERPOOL

United States Mail Line.

The ships composing this line are the following:

The ATLANTIC .....Capt. Eldridge.
The ADRIATIC .....Capt. West.
The PACIFIC .....Capt. Eldridge.
The BALTIC .....Capt. Comstock.

These ships have been built by contract, expressly for the government service. Every care has been taken in their construction, as also in their engines to insure strength and speed; and their accommodations for passengers are unequalled for elegance and comfort.

Price of passage from New-York to Liverpool in first cabin, $130; in second do., $75. Exclusive use of extra size state rooms, $325. From Liverpool to New-York, 80 and 20 guineas.

An experienced surgeon attached to each ship.

No berth can be secured until paid for.

PROPOSED DATES OF SAILING.

FROM NEW-YORK.		FROM LIVERPOOL.
Saturday	Aug. 30	Wednesday	Sept. 3
Saturday	Sept. 13	Wednesday	Sept. 17
Saturday	Oct. 11	Wednesday	Oct. 1
Saturday	Oct. 25	Wednesday	Oct. 15

Edw'd. K. Collins & Co., No. 56 Wall street, New-York.
Brown, Shipley & Co., Liverpool.
Stephen Kennard & Co., 27 Austin Friars, London.
B. G. Wainwright & Co., Paris.

The owners of these ships will not be accountable for gold, silver, bullion, specie, jewelry, precious stones or metals, unless bills of lading are signed therefor, and the value thereof therein expressed.

Shippers will please take notice, that the ships of this line cannot carry any goods contraband of war. ap26 6m.

C. H. MARSHALL & CO.,

Old Black Ball Line of Liverpool Packets.

CERTIFICATES

Furnished for Passage to and from Liverpool, on the 1st and 16th of every Month, by the following splendid ships:

James Foster, Jr.	....	Capt. J. W. Porter.
Neptune	....	" E. W. Peabody.
Harvest Queen	....	" E. Young.
Isaac Webb	....	" J. M. Bayer.
Great Western	....	" W. G. Furrier.
Manhattan	....	" T. Dixon.
Isaac Wright	....	" E. Abeel.
Columbia	....	" C. Hutchinson.
Fidelia	....	" W. A. Macgill.
Yorkshire	....	" C. A. Marshall.

REMITTANCES.

Drafts, for £1 and upwards, on the Royal Bank of Ireland, and on Messrs. Baring Brothers & Co., Bankers, Liverpool and London, payable on sight.

C. H. MARSHALL & CO.,
88 Burling Slip, N. Y.

Agents in Liverpool, Baring Brothers & Co.,
OLD LINE PACKETS,
Pier 23 East River, foot of Beekman street. 6m

WILLIAMS & GUION'S

Old Black Star Line of Packets. 1856.

Passage from any part of Great Britain and Ireland, secured at the lowest possible rates by this old-established line, sailing from Liverpool to New-York every five days, comprising the following magnificent Ships:

Ships.	Captains.	Tonage.
AUSTRALIA,	Smith,	2,000
BRIDGEWATER (new),	Barstow,	2,000
CULTIVATOR (new),	Austin,	2,000
CYNOSURE,	Bray,	2,000
CORNELIA LAWRENCE (new),	Knapp,	2,000
DE WITT CLINTON,	Funk,	1,800
ENTERPRISE,	Davis,	1,200
GUY MANNERING,	Dollard,	2,000
JACOB A. WESTERVELT,	Hoodless,	2,000
IRENE,	Williams,	1,400
JOHN BRIGHT (new),	Cutting,	2,000
MARMION,	Hanley,	1,200
NORTH AMERICAN,	Clark,	1,800
OSWEGO,	Stevens,	1,400
ROBERT KELLY,	Barstow,	1,500
SILAS WRIGHT (new),	Freeman,	2,000
SOUTHAMPTON,	Furlong,	1,600
THORNTON (new),	Collins,	2,000
TICONDEROGA,	Boyle,	1,400
UNIVERSE,	Cave,	2,000
VANGUARD,	Norton,	1,800

The ships of this line are the largest and swiftest in the trade, their accommodations for passengers are unequalled, and the frequency and punctuality of their departure offer advantages to the emigrant not to be had by any Line of Packets. Such passengers as decline coming out, the money paid for them will be promptly refunded without discount.

Provisions of best quality are provided for passengers; rations, consisting of Bread, Flour, Rice, Oatmeal, Tea, Sugar, Molasses, Salt, &c.

The increased patronage received by the proprietors of the Old Black Star Line has induced them to add to the Line several New Ships, which have taken their place this season; no expense has been spared to render the facilities for Emigration equal to the times, and add to the renown of these celebrated Packets.

The regular Sailing days are 1st, 8th, 11th, 18th, 21st, and 26th of each month; this will give passengers opportunity for embarking more frequent than by any other established Line, to which the attention of the public is respectfully called.

No Certificate of Passage will be issued for children under 12 years of age unless accompanied by an adult, who must be paid for on same certificate; for persons over 60 years of age, or with any impediment, without a Permit from Commissioners of Emigration.

REMITTANCES.

Persons wanting to send money to their friends can obtain drafts for any amount, which will be cashed at sight at the following Banks:

Ireland—National Bank of Ireland; Royal Bank of Ireland; Ulster Banking Co., and their Branches.

Scotland—National Bank of Scotland and Branches.

England—Messrs. GLYNN, MILLS & Co, Bankers, London; GUION & Co., Merchants, Liverpool.

For further particulars apply, if by letter post-paid, to

WILLIAMS & GUION,
40 Fulton street, New-York.

GUION & CO.,
115 Waterloo Road, Liverpool.

AGENTS—JOHN WHITNEY, Providence, R. I.
EDWARD RYAN, 2 Albany street, Boston.
THOMAS RATTIGAN, Pittsburgh, Pa.

BLACK BALL LINE

OF LIVERPOOL PACKETS,

Sailing to and from Liverpool on the 1st and 16th of each Month.

THE following ten magnificent clipper Packet Ships comprise the "Black Ball Line, viz:—

James Foster Jr., | Manhattan,
Great Western, | Neptune,
Harvest Queen, | Columbia,
Isaac Webb, | Yorkshire,
Isaac Wright, | Fidelia.

DRAFTS AT SIGHT for any amount payable in every town throughout England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales.

Persons returning to the old country, or those sending for their friends, will find it to their interest to select the "Black Ball Line," as the accommodations in the above clippers for Cabin, Second Cabin, and Steerage Passengers, are well known by the travelling public to be far superior to any other.

☞ Apply or address by letter, post-paid; no letter will be answered unless a postage stamp is enclosed to pre-pay postage.

Jacob Wilson, 108 South street, New York,
Who is the only authorized Passenger Agent for the "Black Ball Line," which lay at Pier 23 East River, opposite this office. my8 3m

Shipping.

LIVERPOOL AND PHILADELPHIA

STEAMSHIP COMPANY,

Intend despatching their splendid Iron Screw Steamers as follows:

FROM LIVERPOOL		FROM PHILADELPHIA
City of Manchester	13 August	Kangaroo	21 August
City of Baltimore	27 August	City of Manchester	4 Sept.
Kangaroo	10 Sept.	City of Baltimore	18 Sept.
		Kangaroo	2 October.

Steerage passage from Philadelphia, $30; from Liverpool, $40, including cooked provisions. Persons wishing to visit Europe or to send for friends from Great Britain and Ireland, by the above line of splendid Steamships, or by first-class sailing Packets, can purchase passage tickets on application to

Sabel & Cortis, 177 Broadway, New-York.

Or to their Agents in

Albany—A. T. Holmes.....Dubuque—Jas. C. Rattray.
Baltimore—Foard & Rodgers.....Hartford, Ct.—A. Rose.
Boston—F. S. Saxton.....New-Orleans—Jenkins, Williams & Co.
Buffalo—Robt. Hager.....Pittsburg—John Thompson.
Chicago—Lull & Mayer.....Pottsville—R. Edwards.
Cincinnati—J. F. Meline & Co.....Toronto C. W.—D. K. Feehan. tf24my

Bankers.

GREEN & SEWELL,

BANKERS,

No. 29 Wall Street, New-York.

DRAFTS on the Belfast Banking Co., available in any part of Ireland, for sale.

REMITTANCES from the interior, promptly forwarded to any address in Ireland, and receipt therefor returned to the sender. General Banking business transacted. my17 6m

---

BREWER & CALDWELL,

20 OLD SLIP, CORNER OF WATER STREET, N. Y.

ISSUE BANK OF CHARLESTON BILLS
ON
BANK OF LIVERPOOL,

In sums of one pound sterling and upwards, payable at any of the Banks in ENGLAND, IRELAND, SCOTLAND, AND WALES. jun14

REMITTANCES TO IRELAND.

IRISH EMIGRANT SOCIETY,
Office, 51 Chambers street.

NOTICE.—The recent failures, by which a large amount of Bills remitted from this country to friends in Ireland, has been returned unpaid, afford to this Society the opportunity, and at the same time impose upon it the duty of informing the public, that such losses would have been prevented if the parties purchasing Bills had availed themselves of the advantages offered by the Society.

For the purpose of entire protection a fund is constantly kept on deposit in the Bank of Ireland, against which this Society issues its drafts, payable at sight (from sums of £1 sterling and upwards), on the Bank and all its branches, and has thereby for the last Ten Years afforded a mode of remittance perfectly safe and unquestionable.

New-York, December 29, 1851.

ANDREW CARRIGAN, President.
JOHN MANNING, ROBERT J. DILLON, HUGH KELLY, } Vice-Presidents.
EDWARD C. DONNELLY, Corresponding Secretary.
PETER CREBAR, Recording Secretary.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

Felix Ingoldsby,	John Nicholson,	William Redmond.
William Watson,	Hugh Kelly,	James Olwell,
John Manning,	Cornel Sheehan,	Daniel Devlin,
Terence Donnelly,	Romaine Dillon,	John McMenomy.

EMIGRANT INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS BANK.

No. 51 CHAMBERS STREET.

THIS Institution has been established for the purpose of affording to Emigrants and others, a safe place of deposit for their funds, to protect them from robbery and fraud.

It is conducted with the strictest economy—neither the Officers and Trustees, receive any compensation for their services. The entire profits belong to the Depositors, and will be divided amongst them, having due regard to the safety of the funds.

The last dividend was six per cent. upon all sums of $500 and under, and and will be continued or increased as the profits may justify.

Bank open to receive Deposits, daily, from 10 A. M., to 2, and from 5 to 7 P. M.

TRUSTEES.

William Watson,	John P. Nesmith,
John Nicholson,	John Milhau,
Andrew Carrigan,	Edward W. Tiers,
James Kelly,	Charles M. Connelly,
James Kerrigan,	Cornelius H. Sheehan,
Hugh Kelly,	Edward Bayer,
Charles O'Connor,	Daniel Devlin.
James Olwell,

JOSEPH STUART, President.
FELIX INGOLDSBY, 1st Vice-President.
JOHN MCMENOMY, 2d Vice-President.
TERENCE DONNELLY, Treasurer.
LOUIS B. BINSSE, Secretary.
PETER CREAR, Accountant.
JOHN MANNING, Comptroller. tf

REMITTANCES TO

ENGLAND, IRELAND AND SCOTLAND.

STERLING BILLS for sale on Messrs. Prescott, Grote & Co., Bankers, London, from £1 upwards, payable on demand, and negotiable in any part of the United Kingdom; also Bank of England Notes and Drafts of any of the English Banks or Bankers, bought and sold.
ap19 1y Prime & Co., 54 Wall street.

Coal.

COAL.

THE subscriber respectfully informs his friends and the public generally, that he has opened a new Coal Yard, cor. 27th Street and 9th Avenue, where he is prepared to sell the best quality of Red and White Ash Coal, at the lowest market price for cash. Weight warranted, or forfeit coal.
6mos* JOHN MACDONALD.

COAL of the very best quality both Anthracite and Bituminous, for family and manufacturing purposes, for sale by the subscriber from his Yards, 632 Washington, 123 McDougal, and 146 West Thirty-second streets. Also, Coal by the cargo.
ap19 1y Thomas Maher.

Business Directory.

HAMILTON & JOHNSON,

NEWS AGENTS,

30 ANN STREET, NEW-YORK.

DAILY, weekly and Sunday papers, Magazines, and Cheap Publications. The trade supplied. Orders from the country solicited and promptly filled.
tf JOHN HAMILTON, } H. W. JOHNSON. }

Business Notices.

Important to the Ladies.

GLENFIELD PATENT STARCH.

FOR the dressing of Laces and all descriptions of fine goods. This celebrated starch is unrivalled.

ONE TRIAL WILL CONVINCE.

For sale by all respectable druggists and grocers.
8m28ju ROBERT HOSIE, 8 Pine Street, New-York, Sole Agent for the United States.

S. CAHILL'S

BOOT AND SHOE STORE,

NO. 377 BROADWAY,

[(One door below White street), New York.

S. CAHILL respectfully informs his friends, customers, and the public generally, that, having made an extensive addition to his Store, for the better accommodation of his customers, he has now the largest and most extensive BOOT AND SHOE STORE in the world, and is prepared to exhibit the most extensive assortment of

LADIES, MISSES, AND CHILDREN'S, GENTLEMEN'S, BOYS, AND YOUTH'S
BOOTS AND SHOES
EVER BEFORE OFFERED TO THE CITIZENS OF NEW YORK.

His facilities for manufacturing on an extensive scale, together with his superb assortment of FRENCH BOOTS AND SHOES, received direct from Paris by every steamer, enable him to sell a much better article at much lower prices than can be purchased at any other house in the city. BOOTS AND SHOES OF ALL DESCRIPTIONS MADE TO MEASURE AT THE SHORTEST NOTICE. je28 3mos

Monday, June 16th, and during the week—

FASHIONABLE HATTER, 223 THIRD AVENUE.

COWHY'S Spring style of Hats, now ready, are superior to anything hitherto offered in Beauty of Shape, and Elegance of Finish. Being a practical hatter himself, Cowhy is enabled to sell A SUPERIOR HAT AT A VERY MODERATE PRICE.

His young gent's hat is one of great beauty, and his assortment of children's fancy hats and caps cannot be surpassed by any other establishment in the city.

N. B.—Hats and Caps made to order, and warranted to fit, by COWHY, 223 Third Avenue, between 19th and 20th streets. my3 1y

---

JAMES O'FLYN.

HOWARD HOTEL,

176 BROADWAY, NEW-YORK.

Advertising Envelope Manufacturer, Embosser, Die Sinker, and General Engraver. Notarial and Lodge Seals, Crests, and Coats of Arms. Seal Presses of every description constantly on hand. 14ju3m

---

Analytical and Metallurgical Chemistry and Mining Geology.

DR. ISAIAH DECK,

No. 18 EXCHANGE PLACE, NEW-YORK.

MAY be consulted on all subjects relating to Practical Chemistry, Mining- and Metallurgy. Assays of Ores, Analyses of Minerals, and Mining Products in general carefully and expeditiously conducted, and sound opinions delivered upon the most economical methods of working them, based on the atest chemical discoveries. Geological and Mining Surveys undertaken in any part of the world—Dr. DECK having had considerable experience in this branch of his profession. my31 3m

---

NICHOLAS WALSH.

SEXTON AND UNDERTAKER.

NO. 8 SIXTH AVENUE.

Employment.

EMPLOYMENT OFFICE FOR SERVANTS.

275 BOWERY, NEW-YORK.

MALE and Female Servants can be promptly suited at the above number, with any situation in the city or country, at good wages, in first-rate families, without delay.

N. B. Employers quickly supplied.
3m may 31 ALEXANDER F. RUNGE, Agent.

NEW-YORK EMPLOYMEMT OFFICE.

480 Broadway.

HONEST, capable, and faithful servants can at all times find good situations at this office. Protestant and Catholic have equal privilege. Established in 1844 by [8m21ju] T. P. SAUNDERS.

Business Directory.

NEW-YORK CATHOLIC LIBRARY ASSOCIATION.

"The objects of the Association are, 1st. The dissemination of Catholic and useful knowledge. 2d. To forward the moral and intellectual advancement of ts members. 3d. To create among its members a spirit of harmony and good feeling, that will be conducive alike to their interest and pleasure. These to be attained by establishing a Library and Reading Room, and by Readings and Lectures when practicable."

Contributions of either books or money received at the office, No. 107 Nassau street. M. T. COZANS, President.
JOSEPH MCGUIRE, Vice-President.
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY, D. Quinn.
RECORDING SECRETARY, James Fabb.
TREASURER, John Russell.
LIBRARIAN, T. S. Haughey.
DIRECTORS, R. T. Kelly, J. J. Mullen, M. B. Lynch, L. T. Cozans, P. J. McGuire. m8jun14

HERRING'S

PATENT CHAMPION FIRE AND BURGLAR PROOF SAFES.

THE great interest manifested by the public to procure more perfect security from Fire for valuable papers, such as BONDS, MORTGAGES, DEEDS, NOTES, and BOOKS OF ACCOUNT than the ordinary SAFES heretofore in use had afforded, induced the subscribers to devote a large portion of time and attention during the past fourteen years in making improvements and discoveries for this object, and they now beg leave to assure their numerous friends and the public generally that their efforts have been crowned with complete success, and now offer the "IMPROVED HERRING'S PATENT WORLD'S FAIR PREMIUM FIRE-PROOF SAFE," as the

CHAMPION SAFE OF THE WORLD.

Having been awarded Medals at both the

World's Fair, London, 1851, and in New-York, 1853,

As superior to all others. It is now undoubtedly entitled to that appellation, and, secured with HALL'S PATENT POWDER-PROOF LOCKS, which also was awarded MEDALS as above), forms the most perfect Fire and Burglar Proof Safes ever offered to the public.

The subscribers also manufacture all kinds of Boiler and Chilled Iron Bank Chests and Vaults, Vault Doors, and Money Boxes or Chests, for Brokers, Jewelers, and Private Families, for Plate, Diamonds, and other Valuables, and are also Patentees (by purchase) and Manufacturers of

JONES' PATENT PERMUTATION BANK LOCK.

SILAS C. HERRING & CO., Patentees,
GREEN BLOCK, Nos. 135, 137 and 138 Water street, New-York. my10 tf

---

☞ Post Office Notice.—The MAILS FOR EUROPE, per U. S. steamer Arago, will close at this office on SATURDAY, the 23d day of August, at 10½ o'clock, A. M. Isaac V. Fowler, Postmaster.

☞ Post Office Notice.—The Mails for California, &c., per U. S. Steamer Geo. Law, will close at this office on Saturday, the 23d day of August, at 1 o'clock P. M. Isaac V. Fowler, Postmaster.

European News.

SPANISH INSURRECTION.

A dispatch from Barcelona, dated the 29th July, says, that on the 28th, seventeen insurgents were shot for the assassination of Colonel Olviedo on the 19th.

The Semaphore, of Marseilles, says: "The Spanish packet El Vifredo, which left Barcelona on the morning of the 26th, has arrived. The following is a summary of the principal news: Barcelona has returned to its normal condition; most of the factories have resumed work. 16,000 troops are concentrated in the town, under the command of General Zapatero, Governor of Catalonia. If, however, the town is calm, the same cannot be said of the environs. The insurgents who were driven out on the 21st, spread themselves over the country, raised the peasantry, and are at this moment encamped with them in the mountains. According to letters from Saragossa, arrived at Barcelona at the moment of the departure of the El Vifredo. the number of the rebels was continually increasing, in consequence of the defection of some regiments in Arragon, and of the arrival of the peasants, who, as at Barcelona, made common cause with the insurgents. The Queen's troops, sent from Madrid, had not yet arrived."

The Moniteur publishes the following telegraphic dispatch from the French Consul to his Excellency the Minister of Foreign Affairs:

BARCELONA, Tuesday, July 29—3 P. M.

Order continues to reign at Barcelona. The whole of Catalonia is in the power of the Queen's troops. The militia of Girona, like the militia in other localities, give up their arms, disperse, and return to their homes.

SARAGOSSA.

From Arragon, although the telegraph is now at work, we have no news of the slightest interest. Troops must be arriving near Saragossa, and the truce of five days must shortly expire, so we may expect to hear something decisive very shortly. It is said that the Saragossans have dug ditches and made other preparations indicative of an intention obstinately to defend themselves, but it is still hoped that, when they become acquainted with all that has passed, and that the rest of Spain, with insignificant exceptions, has submitted to the government, they will not prolong a resistance which may lead to much bloodshed, but hardly to their ultimate triumph.

The Moniteur publishes the following as the latest telegraphic dispatches officially received:

MADRID, Wednesday, July 30.

The authority of the government of the Queen is recognized throughout the whole of Spain, with the exception of the interior of the town of Saragossa. Important intelligence is hourly expected.

ST. SEBASTIAN, Wenesday, July 30.

By a dispatch dated this day, Gen. Echague announces that Gen. Dulce is at La Muela, two leagues from Saragossa. There is no news.

THE RISING AT CORUNNA.

The Madrid papers bring us full accounts of the occurrences at Corunna, in the form of a dispatch from General Vasallo, now commanding there. They are not important, the total loss having been two men killed and two wounded, and the National Guards having given up their arms on receiving intelligence of the result of the contest at Madrid; but they are curious as an illustration of the state of the Spanish army, and of the dangerous tendency of its officers to postpone discipline to political considerations. The Captain-General of the Province was absent on a tour of inspection when news came of the change of ministry and the proclamation of martial law, but the segunda cabo, or second in command, published the proclamation notwithstanding the opposition of the civil governor, and reported what he had done to his chief, who promptly returned to Corunna, and who, almost immediately on his arrival, sounded General Vasallo and the commanding officers of the various arms with respect to a pronunciamiento in favor of Espartero, to which he himself evidently inclined. They all refused to join in any such demonstration. The superior officers of the Spanish army are all political partisans before they are soldiers.

Preparatory to the late crisis all the important posts had been packed by O'Donnell, and in those few cases where he had been compelled to appoint or retain a captain-general of a province who was not devoted to him, he took good care that his second in command should be of a better kidney, and ready "decorously" to arrest his superior as soon as it seemed advisable for the interests of his patron.

THE RISING IN GRANADA AND MALAGA.

From the Madrid Gazette, July 26.

Malaga has pronounced, the civil governor, Domingo Velo, having placed himself at the head of the movement. The deputy-commander of Granada writes on the 22d, that several chiefs and officers of the garrison of Malaga, who remained faithful to the government, had arrived in that city. The second battalion of Arragon, the greatest part of the artillery, and a detachment of the civic guard, had retired into the castle of Gibralfaro. The revolutionary junta having prohibited the entrance of provisions into the castle, the commander of the royal troops, after proclaiming martial law, threatened to bombard the town; the junta maintained its decision. The Carbineers had left Malaga, with their chiefs, for Estepona, being told that Granada had likewise pronounced. The Captain-General ad interim had since ordered them to join him at Granada, where they were expected on the 24th. The Almeria mail, due some days, has arrived, but brings no news. A column, composed of infantry, cavalry and artillery, had left Valencia for Villaverde, where Brigadier Damato is concentrating forces to operate against Teruel, which had declared against the government. Notwithstanding the disarmment of the National Guard of Seville, some disturbances took place on the 23d at the gates of the city. Some of the revolters were killed, and order was re-established.

THE GOVERNMENT AT MADRID—O'DONNELL'S POSITION.

A correspondence in the Presse, dated Madrid, July 23, says: "Marshal O'Donnell finds all parties against him. He has to contend with the Progresists and the Moderates. He must already see that the Cabinet which he has formed can only be a Ministry of transition—the stepping-stone to a definitive government, of which Narvaez will be the head. Whichever way he turns, O'Donnell sees before him an abyss. He has no option between the two courses of retiring in obedience to a hostile vote of the Cortes, or yielding to a dismissal if he should venture to thwart the power which would have shot him in 1854 if his insurrectionary movement had not succeeded. This situation is so complicated that although on the first blush it would appear that O'Donnell is all powerful and Espartero a nullity, one must be blind not to see that the latter is in reality in a much stronger position than the former. Espartero has not quitted Madrid. He resides in a house next door to the office of the journal called El Leon Espagnol, a paper which represents the old school of pure Moderates. In a recent conversation between the manager of this paper, Don J. de la Vega, and Marshal Espartero, the latter declared repeatedly that he had done all in his power to prevent an armed resistance."

The Outbreak in Italy.

PARTICULARS OF THE EMEUTE AT MASSA CARRARA.

Turin (July 20) Correspondence of the London Times.

This morning the Sardinian Government received a telegraphic dispatch from Sarzana, stating that about 200 persons with arms had during the night crossed the Modenese frontier near there, crying "Viva Vittorio Emmanuele, Re d'Italie!" They are said to have been furnished with arms in the Ducal territory, near Massa, where they joined a still larger body of insurgents already assembled; but, as they cut the telegraph wires in their passage, we are still without authentic particulars of their movements. I have already sent you a dispatch by telegraph announcing this fact; but as messages containing political news are not allowed to be forwarded without express permission of the Government, and as all the Ministers were out of town until a late hour at Pollenza, where his Majesty held a council, it did not arrive, I fear, to be of any use for publication to-day.

As soon as the above information reached Sarzana and Spezzia from the gendarmes, on the frontier, who had succeeded in arresting a few of those forcing their way over, troops were immediately put in motion from those places for their assistance, and two steamers were sent down from Genoa in the course of the day, with other reinforcements. Opinion here is, of course, much dividedas to thecause of this outbreak—some maintaining it to have been instigated by Austrian agents, while others hold that it is purely and simply one of Mazzini's mad projects, and the result of his recent journey to Italy. Both sides have much apparent reason for their views, for the Austrian Government evidently has most to gain by disturbances in that quarter at present, as they would afford it a plausible excuse for again occupying the Modenese territory, and forming a cordon of troops all along the Piedmontese frontier, from Piacenza to Massa, and the advocates of this opinion go so far as to declare that one or more persons known to be employed by the Milan police will be found among the rioters.

On the other hand it is said that Austria has no need of such far-fetched pretexts to justify her proceedings, if she has really determined on so extreme a measure as placing a cordon round Piedmont, and that seeing what insane acts Mazzini and his lieutenants have already been guilty of, there is no reason to suppose they required any incitement from other parties to commit this. Without more light on the subject it is impossible to arrive at a fair judgment between the adverse views, but at the same time there are some collateral facts which certainly seem to give additional weight to the former opinion. The latest accounts from Parma, for instance, inform us that so far from there being any prospect of evacuation of the Parmesan dominions by the Austrian troops, the Austrian military authorities there had been making arrangements of a permanent nature. A military chancellerie has been established there by them, which would have the effect of causing all orders, courts-martial, &c., to be referred to the commandant-in-chief, Marshal RADETZKY, so that in fact, the Government of Parma would be immediately under the control of the Marshal, instead of being directed by one of his Generals. Austrian troops have also for some time been collected along the left bank of the Po, and are now prepared to cross it, it is said, at four different points, and Count Crenneville has always expressed most ominous previsions, ever since his first difference with the Regent, that it would be necessary for Austria to occupy the whole duchy for its more effectual protection. However illiberal it may appear, therefore, towards the Austrian Government, it is not possible to avoid having strong misgivings as to its designs in all these preparations, and the delicate position in which it is placed in relation to the French Government seems to suggest a reason for its using the elaborate machinery of intrigue to give a color to its acts. It may be objected that no respectable Government would have recourse to such vile means to obtain its object; but unless history has been most unjust to the aforesaid venerable institution, it has not hesitated before now to avail itself of far baser expedients when they suited its purpose.

I understand that both the French and English ministers at this court were at Spezzia this morning, having gone there from Savona, in the yacht of the former. Count Cavour is also away at the Laggo Maggiore; but this news will probably bring them all back sooner than they intended, at least for a time. The Marquis Sauli, the Sardinian Minister at the Tuscan, Modenese, and Parmesan Courts, has been instructed to visit Modena and Parma, and has left Florence for that purpose.

A letter from Turin, dated 27th July, which has been received in Paris, says: "Rumors of an insurrectionary movement on Tuscany circulated here last evening, without exciting any alarm, it being known that the Ambassadors of England and France had recently repaired to Spezzia, and that our Government was apprised of what was going on in that direction. The Government had, in effect, been warned that a revolutionary attempt would be made at the extreme frontier of the Duchy of Modena, and on Saturday it sent a corps of Bersaglieri, from Genoa to Sarzana, to reinforce the frontier guard. In the meantime domiciliary visits were made at Genoa and at Novara, the former residence of the Anglo-Italian Legion. In the first of those cities the searches produced no result, but it appears that at Novara the authorities discovered a depot of arms. Notwithstanding those precautions, and the vigilance of our frontier guards, a hundred young men, unarmed, succeeded in entering the Duchy of Modena, and assembled at a point close to the village of Parmignola, where they found an ample supply of arms. Their captain, named Ratti, a native of Spezzia, gave those young men to understand that the inhabitants of Carrara would rise on their approach. They accordingly marched in that direction, after disarming the Modenese custom officers, and seizing on a few thousand zwanzigers belonging to the Administration. They then destroyed the telegraphic communication between Sarzana and Massa. That interruption, however, was of short duration, the insurgents having been completely dispersed by the gendarmerie of the reigning duke, near Ortoaro. Twenty of them, who were fortunate enough to recross the frontier, are now in the hands of the Sardinian authorities. That insane attempt has greatly increased the irritation against Austria. The people cannot be persuaded that she was a stranger to the affair. Many are of opinion that it was in anticipation of that movement the Austrians had thrown bridges across the Po on four different points, and, among others, at Casalmaggiore and Solarolo. Others affirm that Austrian agents, well known at Lombardy, have been seen at Turin and at Genoa. I know not how far these imputations may be founded. I mention them merely with a view to give you an idea of the state of public opinion."

THE POLITICAL PRISONERS—BARBAROUS TREATMENT.

A letter from Parma, the 24th July, published in the Dritto of Turin, says that, on the evening of the 22d, the prisoners still uncondemned had been bronght back to Mantua from Parma. There only remained, therefore, at Mantua those under sentence for the disturbance of the 22d July last year, and those are expected at Parma in a few days. The same letter adds, that Dr. Leonida Fanti, who was among the prisoners, had lost his reason in consequence of the ill-usage he was subjected to, and after three months' imprisonment, during which time he was obliged, notwithstanding his delirium, to sleep on the bare floor, and after passing a month in the military hospital, on account of the obstinacy of the Austrian doctors, who maintained that his delirium was all sham, had been at length transferred to a lunatic asylum.

MAZZINI ON THE ITALIAN QUESTION.

A new interest has been given to the Italian question, by what we may term a State Paper addressed by Mazzini to M. Manin, in which the latter is severely taken to task for his sudden affection for the House of Savoy; and the Piedmontese question is stated with much force and earnestness. Mazzini pronounces for the doctrine, "Break your chains, and be king of yourself," instead of the principle enunciated by Manin, "Agitate your chains, and choose your king," and then proceeds: "It is time to speak the truth to Italy, without hesitation. Men who continually sacrifice their convictions to the calculations of present expediency—men who await the solving of the Italian problem from abroad, and not from the country itself, can ill guide it—men who, after having cursed the delusions of '48, call upon Italy to retrace that path of sorrow and shame, more than misdirect it—men who have seen the people victorious upon ten different points of Italy, while the regular army, ill led and betrayed, succumbed, and yet declare that the people cannot conquer without the regular army, are incoherent—men who believe that by a few doubtful declarations and by false adulation we may win over the regular army and the Government that directs it—men who whisper that, at the price of apostacy, we may have a Piedmontese initiative—men who, after there has been so much bragging of volcanoes ready to explode, do not cry with one voice to the country, 'Take shame to thyself and arise!'—these men, either consciously or unconsciously—from a want of head or heart—are unfaithful to the cause of the nation, and the nation ought to reject their counsel whatever name they bear. That army for which you are ready to forget the entire nation we shall have with us. It is an Italian army; it is brave; it does not forget; and it feels as we feel it, the hatred of the foreigner. But we shall only have it by rising armed ourselves, to invoke the aid of its arms."

MARITIME LAW AND THE AMERICAN GOVERNMENT.

From the London Star.

The influence exerted by the new world upon the traditional policy of the old, is not a grateful topic to the governing classes of Europe, and hence they say as little as possible about it. It is with the greatest reluctance, indeed, that they can be brought to acknowledge the fact every day forced upon their attention, that—without partaking ostensibly and formally in the politics of Europe—the mere existence of powerful communities that have sprung into vigorous life on the other side of the Atlantic must, for the future enter as an essential element into the account whenever the affairs of the civilized world have to be adjusted. Few people are aware, for example, that the new principle which the belligerents in the late war adopted towards neutral powers at sea arose out of representations made by the United States, to the effect that "the right of search," for which we did battle with them in 1812, would no longer be submitted to. Nothing was said by our statesmen and diplomatists of the real motive which induced our Government to "suspend," during the war with Russia, the exercise of its old "belligerent rights;" and as our people know nothing of the secret correspondence that was carried on between Lord Clarendon and Mr. Buchanan, they have, of course, considered this more humane and courteous treatment which neutral flags have received, during the late war, as an act of homage on our part to the advanced civilization of the age.

The Americans are now taking another step in a path which, we predict, the rest of the world will be induced to follow, and from which we can foresee far greater consequences to the interests of civilization and humanity than from anything else likely to spring out of the blood and smoke of the siege of Sebastopol. It will be remembered that, at the late Peace Conference in Paris, a declaration was signed, pledging the great Powers of Europe to exert their influence to put down the practice of privateering in case of future wars between maritime States, and the Governments represented at that Conference undertook to invite the powers not represented there to become parties to the agreement. It appears, by late intelligence from Washington, that the American Government have met the invitation with a counter proposal, offering to go a great deal farther, and put down the robbery of private property at sea altogether. And we have not the slightest doubt that, eventually, the European powers will be compelled to acquiesce in this overture; for, as the United States are now the greatest maritime nation in the world, as measured by the only real standard, their mercantile tonnage, there can be no maritime international law enacted to which they are not assenting parties.

The Americans say, and say truly: "We have no large fleets like England and France; we have only one line-of-battle ship in commission. In case of war, therefore, we must rely on our merchant vessels for carrying on operations, at least for the first six or twelve months; and we should call upon our citizens to turn every private ship into a vessel of war. These you call privateers, but their mission would be precisely that of your royal and imperial navies—to capture or destroy everything afloat belonging to the enemy; and where is the difference in the scale of justice, morality, or reason, between doing those acts by means of vessels built expressly for the purpose, or by others which were originally designed for better uses?" There is no answering this logic, for the common sense and the natural conscience of mankind are on its side.

But the American Government does not stop here. "If," say they, "you are sincere in wishing to put down privateering, abolish the piratical system on which it subsists; treat private property at sea on the same principle of inviolability by which it is now every where guarded and secured by civilized warfare, on land. Why should the merchandise of a private citizen be safe from spoliation by an army when found in his warehouse on shore, and not be equally secure from plunder by a navy when in his floating warehouse at sea?" Again there is no answering this reasoning. Indeed, no attempt is made by writers on the law of nations to assign any ground for the distinction hitherto drawn between private property on land and private property on sea, except the arbitrary ground of custom, a plea which, if we ascend a little further back in the history of the world, may be urged with equal force in defence of a hundred other barbarous usages in war which have been gradually abolished by the general consent of mankind. And as the present proposal comes from a power which can insist upon being dealt with according to rules of fairness and justice, there is little doubt that it will ultimately become the international law of the civilized world. The consequences will be vast and almost incalculable.

We shall have to recur, again and again, to the bearings of this question on the interests of peace and humanity. Meanwhile we draw the attention of our readers to what is going on, with this single word of comment, that second only to the regret we feel that England has not had the honor of propounding this new doctrine, would be our sorrow to find, that she sets herself in unavailing opposition to its adoption.

Correspondence.

To the Editor of the Irish News:

Sacramento, July 20th, 1856.

Dear Sir—Since my last communication to you, the inquisition calling themselves the "Vigilance Committee," have held session, and, contrary to the general belief that it was only to be a temporary demonstration, still maintain their position. They have usurped all the powers of Government—set the Goverment proclamation at defiance, and arrested some of our most respected citizens at a public meeting called by themselves, because those citizens acted on their right as Americans to give free expression to their opinions. They dragged them through the streets by bands of men armed with muskets and bayonets—imprisoned them in cells, and otherwise treated them with brutality; such as handcuffing them together, and other acts of indignity that the writer would not name. They have tried by those means to create a reign of terror; but the true Americans in California cannot be easily intimidated. They are too true to the Republic under which they live, to succumb to a party here who don't conceal their design of separating this State from the constellation of the Stars and Stripes.

The True Californian "pitches into" the Sun for its report and article on the outrageous acts of the Vigilance Committee, on Monday night, 14 July. The Sun, in its issue of the 18th, says:

Our information regarding the proceedings was derived from respectable and truthful gentlemen, and not from "mendacious reporters." In their testimony and word, we placed the most implicit reliance, and assume, and still assume, the responsibility of their statements.

We have not had the time, neither the disposition, to hunt up testimony to sustain our report of the meeting, neither do we deem it necessary. We will however state, that we are informed that Mr. Jacob Ritchie, an honest, peaceable, and hard-working man, was one of the unfortunates who voted No, and in reply a crowd of Vigilantes rushed upon him, and carried him to the cells of the Inquisition, where he still remains, handcuffed, and, we understand, sentenced to banishment. We state this as one of the many instances of oppression and outrage which characterized the Sharron meeting, on the authority of Messrs. Hamilton, Bowie, Clary and Owner, who were present, and within fifteen feet of Mr. Ritchie. Thus, it seems, a peaceable and quiet man, for simply answering a question, which is put to every speaker almost at a political meeting, and is so far from being uncommon that it is almost universal, is seized, hand-cuffed, imprisoned and banished. Some fifteen or twenty others, for a similar offence, were treated in the same manner, except the banishment. Among the rest was Mr. Mike Hayes, the superior in all that constitutes the good citizen and upright man, of those who concocted, planned, and carried out the Montgomery street meeting. We will let him speak for himself.

The True Californian says: After that had happened, and a wholesome terror had been inspired in their companions, the proceedings were marked by the usual courtesy, which, with few exceptions, has always characterized the citizens of San Francisco in public meeting assembled. No man was prevented from voting, and the proof of this is in the fact, that when the votes on the resolutions were re-taken, every man opposed to them voted just as loud as he pleased.

No wonder, after such "a wholesome terror" had been inspired, that the meeting was very "harmonious," and the resolutions passed "unanimously." He would have been silly indeed, who would have jeoparded his liberty by protesting against the proceedings; for, with the Vigilance Committee at their back, we are willing to acknowledge the wire-workers had the power to do as they pleased.

We are also informed that several Vigilantes were taken prisoners that night at the meeting, (not being recognized), and put into a cell. But what is more singular still, they were the only parties who had arms, and seemed prepared for a death-struggle. In the excitement, however, their courage, like Falstaff's, oozed out of their finger ends, and they even forgot the magic pass-word and the mystic grip of the "order."

The following is from Mr. Hayes' statement:

In common with many others disapproving of the objects of the meeting, I was not afraid to give utterance to my dissent in a quiet and orderly manner; and when I found a desire to withhold the reading of letters, for causes which are now well known, after demand had been repeatedly made by one of the officers of the Vigilance Committee, I joined in the call to have the communication given to the meeting. Without any other provocation for violence, I was set on, each time I spoke, until, finally, I was dragged to Sacramento street by a party of men who turned a deaf ear to my remonstrances and claims as an American citizen. Did any act of mine, on Monday evening, justify this high-handed treatment?

I would not ask public attention to the wrong done me, but satisfied that the most captious could not condemn my conduct on that occasion, my imprisonment I consider unjustifiable. On reaching Fort Vigilance, I was conveyed through files of armed men to the presence of a person styled Chief of Police, and searched, when hand-cuffs were placed on me, and thus bound to another person, who was unfortunate enough not to applaud at the meeting and escape the tyranny of the Committee. To add to the irksomeness of confinement, we were forbidden to speak to those who were acquaintances, and who happened to act as guards. On Tuesday I was brought before a body of three men. Witnesses under oath stated that their opinion was that I wanted to break up the meeting; and one swore positively he heard me give "three cheers for the Vigilance Committee." This last piece of testimony was in keeping with the rest, and showed how easily he might be mistaken, as it is unnecessary to state I do not favor or admire that organization. I was then sent back and told my case would be taken under advisement.

Others, in like manner, underwent examination; and, on discovering that the charges were false, on Wednesday I was allowed to quit my place of confinement. Some members of the Committee came to me before leaving, and attempted to apologize for my long detention. They were not opposed to the free expression of public opinion, and at a public meeting a man had the right to vote as he thought proper. One of the daily papers, the morning after my arrest, stated I was among those who had attempted to disturb the meeting, and had drawn a weapon with the intention of using it. This I emphatically deny, and from whatever source the information was derived, it is no less untrue. It could only have come from a very fertile imagination.

The foregoing statement I submit to the public, confident that all will condemn this attempt to deprive citizens of the right of expressing their opinions on subjects in which every one has a common interest.

M. Hayes.

San Francisco, July 17, 1856.

A correspondent from Keystone Valley, Yuba County, who has been in the mountains for some weeks, and who, as he says himself, has made it his business to canvass the opinions of the people in the mountains, writes that a large majority of them for thirty miles round this locality, are now thoroughly disgusted with the Committee, and that a feeling of indignation is fast gaining ground at their continued usurpation of those powers which rightfully belong to the legally constituted authorities. From personal conversation with the miners and agriculturists, endorsed by the assurances of acquaintenances, who live in the various mining localities north of this beautiful Valley, I am enabled to assure the citizens of San Francisco, that the people did endorse the acts of the Committee, in the hanging of Casey, and many of them approved their course in the hanging of Cora, but, all their subsequent acts have been looked upon with suspicion. The people in the Mountains will repudiate to a man any attempt, either open or covert, to consummate that which appears now to be the main object of the Committee, viz: Secession from this glorious Union. It will be hardly credited that the most base and contemptible expedients are now being brought to bear in several portions of Sierra county, to manufacture public opinion in favor of the San Francisco Vigilance Committee, one of which I will now relate. There are memorials placed in almost every ranch on the usually travelled roads, which are sought to be signed by the unwary, setting forth that the miners are now called upon to give an expression of opinion as to whether they will be ruled and governed by rowdies, bullies, gamblers, ballot box stuffers, or whether they will Vote for the virtuous, good, moral law and justice parties of the community, as exemplified by the Vigilance Committtee of San Francisco. When such an issue is presented, of course the miners will unhesitatingly approve the latter. These memorials are being prepared, numerously signed, for what purpose, God only knows; if for political purposes, the concoctors of this scheme, and their intermediaries, will find themselves in the "wrong box" at the fall election. I most unhesitatingly assert, that were the issue now made (in the mountains North of Marysville) between the Vigilants and their adherents, and the stern Democracy, the latter could roll up an overwhelming majority. The people round Camptonville, Young's Hill, Galena, Railroad Hills, (making some two thousand) and all the mining localities within an area of two miles square, will, with but few exceptions, stand up for the great Democratic principles. They do not believe in any self-constituted "mercantile oligarchy" usurping their prerogatives, nor will they much longer submit to it.

There is one subject which is now agitating the public mind in this vicinity to no inconsiderable extent, which is the kidnapping of Judge Terry of the Supreme Court. Those "Arnolds" of the S. F. Vigilance Committee must recollect that there are now pending some very important cases on appeals to the Supreme Court (which would now be in session but for their treasonable acts), in which the legality and constitutionality of the "Settler's Bill," of last session, is called in question. The people in the mountains—honest, hard working farmers, the yeomen of the country—will not allow their rights to be trampled on much longer, even if they have to face an army of twenty thousand alien bayonets. Let the usurpers, then, Beware!! Don't let them place too much confidence in their treasonable presses, which are howling "Treason" from week to week, or, depend on it, they will be deceived. I am now speaking the sentiments of thousands, and I call God to witness ths truth of these assertions. I enclose you my name and address (not for publication), and am prepared to substantiate all I have written above, on the testimony of thousands of credible witnesses. These are bold assertions; but events are now arrived at such a crisis, that the people in the mountains are determined to avenge, if needs be, this unwarrantable usurpation of their free will. They want the Supreme Court in session for the regular July term; they want their land cases decided on; they want quiet; they want the Vigilance Committee to disband, and the ring-leaders to be tried by the Federal Courts for Treason! the same as the ring leaders of the Kansas riots are now being tried.

The mining prospects on the Main, Middle and South Yubas, are more flattering this season than ever known before; the cause is the continued hot weather; (thermometer at 100 and 110 deg. in the shade), is melting every particle of snow in the mountains, and consequently the Yuba will be but a mere rivulet for some months to come; the miner will be able to work the bed of the river thoroughly, a circumstance which is worthy of note, and an event that has never transpired before in California. So soon as the rainy season sets in, you may expect to see the miners at the Bay, with bushels of the precious "ore," that is, if it will be safe for them to come and express an opinion in opposition to the will of the usurpers. More anon from Veritas.

Great Riot at Yreka.

We have to record a dreadful and disgraceful riot at Yreka, on the 4th inst., and which is not probably yet stayed. From the Yreka Union, Extra, of June 6th, we take the following extracts:

On the 4th of July a man named John Blunt was shot dead by Deputy Sheriff James Millhouse. The particulars of the homicide are, as far as we have been able to learn as follows:

Deputy Sheriff James Millhouse, seeing a man named John Blunt in the act of kicking in the door of a Chinese brothel, attempted to arrest him. Blunt resisted, and threatened to whip the officer. Words passed between the parties, when Blunt's friends took him away. The officer followed, and in a second effort to make his arrest, was pushed back by Blunt, who this time raised his arm to strike, but was prevented. The excitement becoming great, Blunt's friends shouted to him to "Run!" This he did, but was pursued by the Deputy Sheriff, who on reaching him again, demanded his surrender. Blunt took hold of the officer, beat him badly, and again disappeared. The officer, however, arose to his feet, and was soon at Blunt's side again. This time Blunt struck him, and moved off. The officer drew, and fired two shots without effect. Blunt then advanced toward the officer, and on reaching within a foot or two of him, received a ball immediately below the base of the neck. He had but time to stagger across the street, when he expired. One or two others were injured in the struggle.

The occurrence created great excitement among the miners in the vicinity, and an effort was made to rescue the prisoner from the custody of the law. The Sheriff, however, with prompt assistance kept him secure.

About three o'clock in the afternoon, a large crowd of those who were anxious to rescue the prisoner, assembled in front of several houses inhabited by Chinese prostitutes, broke open the doors, turned the inmates into the street, and chased them forcibly to the outskirts of the town. In the chase the crowd yelled, danced and shouted most violently, and the frail prostitutes, frightened almost to death at the demonstration against them, ran and stumbled headlong before them. It is said that several robberies were committed in these houses, and that one of the women, whilst flying through the street, was knocked down and robbed of $750.

As soon as the result of the protracted struggle became known, and the death of Blunt was announced, a number of miners from Greenhorn Creek, at which deceased had resided, raised the cry of "hang him! hang him!" [illegible] for a Vigilance Committee!" and other expressions equally indicative of the rising fury. Before the doors of the building in which the Sheriff had his office could be closed, the crowd made a rush to enter the building and rescue the prisoner from the custody of the law. A short and sharp struggle occurred in front of the door beween the Sheriff's officers and the crowd, which resulted in the defeat of the latter.

During the latter part of the afternoon, a bloody fist fight took place between two men, one of whom was in favor of hanging Millhouse and the other opposed to it. After a sharp contest the law and order man got the best of the fight.

Saturday, July 5th, 1856.

During the day, several volunteer companies were organized, to support the Sheriff in case of emergency—all of them are well armed, and determined to put down, at all hazards, any attempt to override the laws.

Several days since, two poor Chinamen were most barbarously murdered, and yet we have not heard that "the all-seeing eye" has penetrated the veil of mystery which hangs over the affair. We have been told that when justice doffed the ermine, and arrayed herself in "gunny bags," crime would no longer be able to escape her dreaded glance, nor its perpetrators go unwhipped—but, perhaps, the killing of a Chinaman is not a crime under the new code.

The estimated damage by the recent fire at Marysville is $145,000. No lives were lost, although several of the Firemen were more or less burned or singed. The books and furniture of the California Steam Navigation Company were destroyed.

It is said that no less than 33 persons are at present held in "durance vile" in the dungeons of the Inquisition on Sacramento street.

To show the organization and object of this party I give you the annexed:

From a card published by the "Independent National Guard," we, of San Francisco, publish the following—

"Resolved, that this corps do now re-organize under the name of the Independent National Guard, holding ourselves subject only to such rules and regulations in sustaining the cardinal interests of the community as our best judgment may dictate, hereby repudiating all connection with the present State authorities."

As I have already warned the Eastern merchants of the failures they might expect, I annex the following copy of failures from the 26th of June till the 12th of July:

Failures:

Date.	Name.	Amount.
June 26	Marriott & Wheeler	$109,081
June 26	Laumeister & Roll	12,000
June 26	C. L. North	90,000
June 26	Ethan Boies	38,000
July 3	B. Nason	11,000
July 5	W. H. Duren
July 7	W. T. Boardman	13,500
July 7	E. T. Boardman
July 8	Alton, Welch & Co.	45,000
July 9	R. H. Elam	85,000
July 9	B. R. French	83,000
July 9	A. Walrath
July 9	F. Neufelder
July 10	M. Cohn	60,000
July 10	B. Rosenwig
July 11	Simon J. Simon	8,127
July 12	John Wilson	31,000

There are many more reported but I decline to give names, satisfied that the Eastern merchants will look to themselves.

As the affair now stands, no man knows how long his head will be on his shoulders. Probably the writer of this may, for thus freely expressing himself, be made a victim.

We have much faith here that the Government at Washington will settle the matter by an order to Gen. Wool to put down this rebellion. If not, this State is lost to the Union.

Hard Facts.

P. S.—A telegraphic report has just arrived telling that the city of Nevada has been laid in ashes.

More Indian Depredations. Yesterday, says the St. Paul, Min., Democrat, of July 31st, Mr. Wm. A. Hill, located near Rice Lake, informed us that on Sunday morning a band of Mille Lac Chippewa Indians, consisting of 7, visited the farm where he and his brother resided, and plundered his shanty of everything valuable, carrying off their entire stock of provisions, clothing, &c. At the time the Indians made the foray, Mr. Hill was absent, but his brother Henry was at home. He not thinking it judicious or safe for him alone to attempt resistance against such odds, decamped. When the two brothers returned to their cabin, they found a barrel and a half of flour, a lot of pork, and all their clothes missing. The Indians also destroyed their crops, leaving behind them incontestible marks of no friendly visitation.

Many of the wells and springs within a few miles of Wheeling, Va., it is said, have been completely dried up within a few days. A gentleman from Middle Wheeling Creek informs the editor of the Wheeling Argus, that in many places not a drop of water is to be seen in its usually well filled channel.

The Paducah (Ky.) Democrat, says there is a great demand for mechanics of all kinds in that place.

Irish News.

On the subject of the English and Irish Metropolitan Police, the Dublin Telegraph has an interesting article. It says that the Dublin Metropolitan Police Bill, introduced by Mr. Horsman in the present session, has been withdrawn, and it is likely that a similar measure may be proposed in the ensuing year. It may not be devoid of interest or utility to glance at the comparative labors and emoluments of the metropolitan magistrates of the English and Irish districts. In the English districts the custody cases for the year 1855 appear, by the criminal returns just published, to have been 68,505, which were disposed of by 23 magistrates, whose salaries amount to £27,900. During the same period, the custody cases in the public district of Dublin metropolis appear to have been 35,634, disposed of by seven magistrates, whose salaries amount to £4,200. Thus an English metropolitan justice disposes of 2,978 cases, and receives a salary of £1,200; whilst the Irish magistrate is required to go through 5,091 cases for £600.

A revival of the project for the extension of the Cork and Bandon line of Railway to Bantry and the west of the county, has been for some time past talked of, and some proceedings to bring the matter to an issue have been lately taken. A preliminary meeting has been held, at which there were present on the part of the Cork and Bandon Railway Company, Messrs. Valentine B. O'Connor, chairman; P. Grehan, deputy chairman; Lord Clinton, M. P.; Sir Matthew Barrington, W. R. Lefanu, C. E.; and H. William Wood, secretary; who were met by Lorn Bernard, M. P., and a number of gentlemen interested in the county through which the proposed extension will run; amongst whom were Willam Bence Jones, J. P., Colonel the Honorable H. B. Bernard, Wm. Leslie, Courtmasherry, J. P.; T. J. Hungerford, J. P.; Alex. Swanston, Bandon, &c. The meeting lasted for a considerable time and resulted in the resolution that the guarantee for the extension of Bandon to Bantry, with the branches to Skibbereen and Clonakilty be increased from 3 per cent. on £5,000 per mile, subject to a revision of the relative taxation as specified.

The Wexford Independent extracts the following from the Savannah Daily Georgian and Journal of June 11:

"Medal to Dr. Nunn.—We have been shown a very handsome gold medal, presented by the Howard Association of Norfolk, to Mr. Nunn, of this city, as a testimonial for his services to the sick of Norfolk, during the terrible epidemic of last summer. On one side are represented the three figures of 'Faith, Hope, and Charity.' On the other the 'Good Samaritan,' ministering to the man who fell among thieves. On one side the inscription, 'I was sick and you visited me.' On the other, 'Presented by the Howard Association of Norfolk, Va.'"

The Independent asks—"Should we not be highly proud of being sons of Old Wexford, when thus, almost weekly, we find ourselves called on to notice from the columns of the press in every quarter of the globe, the noble traits of character which distinguish our fellow-countrymen of all professions and grades of life? We feel particular pleasure," it adds, "in congratulating our old school-fellow, Dr. Nunn, in having a son who possesses so many of his own good qualities, carries them into foreign lands, and promises not only to perpetuate, but to add thereto others of his own."

From the Dublin papers we learn that an intelligent and most respectable audience crowded the Theatre of the Mechanics' Institute to hear the third of the series of lectures by the Rev. Dr. Cahill—the theme being "The Republic of America." The eloquent doctor, we are told, commenced by a brief yet graphic and comprehensive review of the governments and dynasties of ancient history, and showed their influence on modern institutions. Referring to the existence of slavery in the American Republic, he denounced it as unjust and impolitic, and a blot on the escutcheon of the "Union." He also referred to the influence which Irish emigration exercised on American institutions, and concluded by stating that whenever injustice was sought to be done to this country, or oppression enforced, the Irish people would always have the sincere sympathy and best wishes of the American Republic.

The annual show of the County Cork Agricultural Society came off a fortnight since in the Corn Exchange. The number of cattle exhibited was large. The splendid short-horned bull of Mr. Coppinger, which obtained the first prize in the Dublin show, and was purchased at an expense of one hundred and forty guineas, at the Cork exhibition stood only second in its class, that of Colonel Stawell being adjudged the first. In sheep a similar improvement was observable. The show of pigs was not so large, though excellent as to quality. Some fine cart stallions were on exhibition also. There was a limited show of poultry. Besides the show of cattle, there were also to be seen a great variety of grasses and vegetables, as well as a small show of dairy produce.

In Ireland the movement to obtain the half-holiday on Saturday is rapidly gaining on the good-will of those in whose power it is to bestow it. At a meeting of the wholesale druggists' assistants, held recently in Dublin, it was resolved to lay a statement on the subject of the Saturday half-holiday before their employers, in the hope they will second the good work already commenced by the wholesale Manchester and woollen houses in Dublin. There are upwards of a hundred hands employed in this branch of trade, and it is generally believed that no trade can accord the boon with less disadvantage than the wholesale druggists.

William Gernon, barrister-at-Law, has been appointed Secretary to the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests, in the room of Mr. Daniel McDermott, appointed one of the Divisional Magistrates of Metropolitan Police, vice the late Mr. Richard Bourke. She salary of the Secretary of Bequests is £400 per annum.

The Waterford News regrets that the house of Joseph Humphries & Son, millers, have stopped payment. Their liabilities are supposed to amount to about £5,000. It is said that 10s. or 15s. in the pound will yet be derived from the effects of the Messrs. Humphries.

The superintendent's office at the Drogheda station of the Dublin and Belfast Railway was lately entered, and about £200 in half-notes, the property of the superintendent, G. S. Mears, Esq., together with a sum of money, the property of the company, abstracted from the desk. The burglars are not known.

The cereal crops, the Dundalk Democrat informs us, are progressing fast to maturity, under very warm sunshine. Wheat will be a very early crop and also barley. Oats are a little backward. Symptoms of blight appear in the potatoe crop in a few places.

R. S. Hayes, Esq., coroner, lately held an inquest, in the board-room of Naas workhouse, on the body of a man named Owen Quinn, who died on a car, whilst an application was making for his admission into the workhouse hospital. It appeared that on the previous evening he applied for a night's lodging at the house of a widow woman residing in Ballymore Eustace, named Kelly, which was granted him; that during the night he complained of a pain in his stomach, which increasing, he wished for the attendance of a clergyman, who arrived, and administered to him the rites of the Catholic Church. In the meantime another messenger was despatched to the residence of George Wolfe, Esq., J. P., one of the ex-officio guardians of Naas Union, for an order for his admission, on the receipt of which he was driven to Naas in a cart, but immediately on his arrival he died. This being the only information the jury could receive, it was thought advisable to have an adjournment, to allow time for making a post mortem examination. From the evidence of Dr. Kellett, the verdict returned was, "Died from natural causes."

Acting-Constable Fitzmaurice charged two militia-men, named Farrell and Brennan, before the Maryboro' magistrates, with assaulting him when in discharge of his duty. Farrell was breaking down a travelling show erected in the Market Square, and when ordered to desist attacked one of the players. The owner of the theatre coming out gave Farrell in custody to the police. On the way to the barracks, the accoutrements of the police were torn by the militiaman and his comrade, who came to his assistance. They were ordered to pay 8s. compensation for the damaged articles.

Mr. Rossborough, the Respondent in the case of Rossborough v. Boyce, now occupying the attention of the House of Lords, was a clerk in the employment of Smith & Son, newsagents London and Dublin, and married a young woman, heir-at-law of Cæsar Colclough. He is now in the possession of the mansion of Tintern Abbey, county Wexford, and the Irish estates of Mr. Colclough, but it is doubtful if he will contine to hold them.

A child three years old, has been burned to death in the house of its father at Erry, Maryborough, near the town of Clara. The mother left the house to bring in some water from a well, about sixty perches distant. On her return she found the clothes of the child in flames, and the poor child so miserably burned that it died soon after. An inquest was held by James Dillon, Esq., coroner, and a vedict of accidental death was returned.

An unfortunate occurrence has taken place at Shannon-bridge. A boatman, named Patrick Tanner, became intoxicated and quarrelled with one of his fellow-boatmen. Both fell into the Shannon. Being extricated, Tanner renewed his quarrel. He struck the engineer several times with a fire-shovel, which Carter took from him, and gave him a blow on the face with his hand, which knocked him overboard. Tanner was drowned. Carter immediately surrendered himself to the police.

The Directors of the Young Men's Society of Cork have induced the Very Rev. Dr. Murray to visit their city, early in the ensuing month, for the purpose of delivering four lectures to the Institute. Professor Dr. Murray is well known by many of the clergy, who derived much of their professional knowledge under his teaching. As a man of letters, his position is defined and acknowledged. A literateur of great eminence did not hesitate publicly to declare him "the best living writer of the English language."

The Cork Examiner denies on authority the statement recently put forth in the Freeman's Journal, that preparations are being made at Killarney, the seat of the Earl of Kenmare, for Queen Victoria's reception. The Examiner says that no preparations of the sort are in progress, and moreover, the Queen will not become the guest of his lordship.

On Tuesday three weeks the wife of a farmer named Egan, who resides on the Galway side of the Shannon, not far from Banagher, left her house to bring some water. Her return being delayed, her family went to ascertain the cause of her detention. They found her quite dead near the well, having evidently fallen down in an an epileptic fit, to which she was subject, and been suffocated.

The Cork Examiner describes the squadron at Queenstown: "The stately bulk of the Duke of Wellington floats in the deep water close to Whiteport; the Conqueror lies a little removed from the Duke, while the despatch gun-boats, Mohawk and Lapwing, are moored at the quay of Haulbowline. The mortar-boat, the Forth, lies near the Conway, and the Hogue is anchored at some distanee in the man-of-war roads. It is said that this forms only part of a larger squadron intended for Lisbon."

Denis Malone, a strolling bellman, was also summoned for disturbing the same booth. Mr. Ferguson, the owner, proved the case. On being asked was it in the character of Romeo he appeared in on that occasion, he said he had taken the part of the First Robber, receiving the money at the door. The charge was dismissed.

At the Consistorial Court, Dublin, the Rev. William Berresford has been deprived of his benefice. The Rev. Mr. B. had, on the 4th of Nov., 1848, uttered a certain forged instrument, called a bill of exchange, for the sum of £100, with intent to defraud one Samuel Laycock, and being tried for the offence on the 8th of December, 1855, was found guilty and sentenced to transportation for life.

The Cork Constitution informs us that the Royal Humane Society has awarded Commander Berresford a silver medal for his daring. While in the Bosphorus, at the imminent peril of his life, he leaped overboard and saved a soldier from drowning.

The house of the Rev. Mr. O'Hanlon, P. P., Duleck, has been feloniously entered, and a chalice and a quantity of clothes carried off. Three persons suspected as the burglars have been committed to gaol by the Mayor of Drogheda.

The weather, for the last three or four weeks, about Roscrea has been rather cold and windy, with occasional showers and sunshine. The potatoe crops, however, are quite safe and luxuriant, and give a promise of a very abundant yield.

At the July fair of Dundalk, the business transacted was considerable. Young pigs were in great demand. In the horse fair there were some agricultural horses and a few good roadsters, some of which changed owners at excellent prices.

At Maryborough Chapel, 972 persons were lately confirmed by the Right Rev. Dr. Walshe, R. C. Bishop of the Diocese of Kildare and Leighlin.

The Earl of Portarlington has imported from Syria to Emo Park, Queen's county, a splendid Arab sire.

Everyone is aware by this time, says the Nation, of the cheerful reception which Justice Keogh has met with, not only from the day on which he took his seat on the Bench, but in his subsequent provincial 'progress.' To judge from appearances, he is a popular Judge—having been received in Court, and in several towns with such an eclat that one would think he had been tempering justice with mercy for half a century at least. Many are puzzled to account for his success, and regard him as a favored child of Madame Fortune, who favors him wherever he roves. There are individuals, however, more than a few, who stand behind the scenes and see how the wires are pulled and they will tell you that not even a cheer is to be had in this degenerate age without its being paid for. In fact, they account for the magnificent ovations he had met with by stating that the enthusiasts who composed each welcoming throng were no other than certain persons with an outlived gratitude for past or future events.

A singular occurrence has taken place in the Gleneaske mountains, county Sligo. A large number of sheep, not less than a hundred, were killed in a few nights in those mountains by foxes. One man lost 19 sheep out of a flock of twenty in one night. Another man lost fifty, and Mr. Downing, the proprietor of the property on which the havoc was committed, and who resides at Bonnecolan, lost twelve splendid sheep. The carcases, many of them much mangled, were removed to Ballins for sale, and were bought by the butchers at from 6d. to 1s. each. The meat was afterwards sold at from 4d. to 6d. per lb. to the townpeople.

The Nation, in an answer to correspondents, says it's quite true that Mr. Duffy broke with some of the foremost men in Sidney rather than permit the governor, Sir William Dennison, to be honored as a toast at his banquet, because in Van Diemen's Land Sir William Dennison had embittered O'Brien's bondage by mean and vindictive cruelty. It is also true, continues the Nation, that at Melbourne a few zealous factionists took exception, at Mr. Duffy's frank declaration that he was 'still a rebel to the back-bone and marrow.'

Mr. Thomas Bennett, of Grafton street, Dublin, has just completed to the order of the Officers of the Royal Cork City Artillery, a very handsome large size Snuff box, gilt inside, bearing the family crest, and following inscription:—"Presented by the officers of the Royal Cork Artillery, on the disembodiment of the Regiment, July 1857, to Lieut. Col. A. J. Wood, as a small token of their esteem and regard, in memoriam rei."

John B. Hyndman, Esq., city coroner, Dublin, has held an inquest at Mitchell's-court, Townsend street, on the body of a young woman named Mary Fleming, who perished in consequence of injuries received by her coming in contact with a portion of the machinery at the cotton spinning factory of Messrs. Pim, at Greenmount, Dolphin's barn.

The Nation hails with gratification the birth of the Mullingar Young Men's Society. With the sanction of the Spiritual Guardian the Telegraph has been rejected as unfit for the perusal of the Young men of Mullingar. Thus, from Cork to Manchester, York, and Mullingar, Mrs. Primrip, says the Nation, has the door slammed in her face.

The Kilkenny Journal is in ecstasies about an excursion to Tramore, on the Waterford and Tramore Railway. The trains were densely crowded. A delicious summer day displayed the beautiful scenery of Tramore in all its glory. In the evening there were Fireworks on the Atlantic parade.

The Ulsterterman understands that the carpenters of Belfast are at present out on "strike," arising out of the men wanting to leave off work on Saturdays at two o'clock. Some of the employers were willing to comply with this request, but others insisted upon keeping off a quarter day's wages.

A few days ago, two Scotch steam-boats, the Caledonia and the Ayreshire Lass, arrived in Belfast harbor with several hundreds of excursionists, from Scotland, on board. The steamers sailed from Ayr, and the excursionists belonged to that town, Glasgow, and the adjoining country districts.

A boy named Thomas Hobbs was picking up some small pieces of timber at Charlotte Quay, Cork, when stretching out too far he fell in. Some soldiers passing down at the opposite side, seeing the boy struggling in the water, called out to some men who were employed loading a vessel at the other side, upon which one of the loaders, named Cronin, jumped into a boat, and rescued the child.

There will be an installation, on a grand scale, it is rumored, of Knights of the Order of St. Patrick, in Dublin, during the autumn. The ceremonial usually takes place in St. Patrick's Cathedral. There are several vacancies in the order.

Lord Castlerosse having accepted the office of Comptroller of her Majesty's household, a new writ for the representation of the county of Kerry, in his room, on Saturday was transmitted to the Sheriff of the county.

The Dublin Gazette contains the following names in its list of Bankrupts and Insolvents: John Curell, Jane Curell, and Mary Curell, Belfast, linen merchants, dealers and chapmen, and James McClurkin, late of Glenwheary, county Antrim, farmer.

Ellen Cruise, late of Lower Leeson street, in the city of Dublin, spinster, has, by her will, dated the 7th of April, 1855, bequeathed in trust to Most Rev. Dr. Cullen and others, the sum of £42,000, for Catholic charities in Dublin.

The collection, at Bruff, in aid of the New Cathedral of St. John's, amounted to the magnificent sum of £300. The Very Rev. Dr. Cussen, P.P. V.G, gave £20. This gratifying fact we learn from the Munster News.

The retreat in Tuam, was attended by sixty clergymen. The Castlebar Telegraph is glad to find his Grace the Archbishop perfectly restored to health. His Grace had for some time much labor in his numerous visitations, owing to the vast numbers receiving the sacrament of confirmation.

The Rev. J. O'Callaghan one of the priests engaged in the Crimea during the war, has arrived in London. The Rev. J. M. Sweeney has also returned to London from the Crimea.

The Iveragh Races, Co. Kerry, were named to come off on the 26th and 27th August, on the course in the immediate vicinity of Cahirciveen.

The name of Mr. Charles P. Tivy appears as governor of the Cork city gaol on the cover of the criminal calendar for the present assizes.

Bernard Somers, Upper Light-House, Wicklow, requests information of a brother and sister who went to Philadelphia, and from whom he has not heard since October, 1853.

Denis Malone, a strolling bell-hanger, and Michael Farrell and Michael Brenñan, have been committed by M. S. Cassan, Esq., for assaulting the Maryborough police, at Maryborough.

The Cattle Show of the Louth Farming Society took place in Ardee, on the 30th of August.

Sentence of death has been passed on Stephen Burns, of the Tipperary Militia, who shot a soldier of the line in the barrack-yard at Nenagh. The jury recommended the prisoner to mercy, and Judge Moore in passing sentence said :

"I believe you acted under circumstances, like the other men convicted, of great excitement, but I am sure you now are deeply conscious that no excitement ought for an instant to have led you to commit the fearful crime of murder, and that against an unoffending man. You did not know the man that fell by your hand. You certainly, as far as I can ascertain, bore him no ill will, but rash and excited, I might say by drink, you deprived that soldier of his life. It is not in my power in the slightest degree to alter or vary that awful sentence of the law, but the recommendation of the jury will be laid by me before the head of the government, but it is not in my power to hold out to you any hopes. I cannot say there is any hope, but all I can say is, that I will transmit the recommendation of the jury to his Excellency the Lord Lieutenant."

Arthur Leahy, Esq., Royal Engineers, has returned to Dublin from the Crimea. This distinguished young officer, writes the Dundalk Democrat, had been for some years, before the outbreak of the war, stationed in Dublin, where he rendered himself highly popular. Transferred to Corfu in 1853, he there joined the expeditionary army, assisted in the works at Gallipoli, proceeded to Varna and the Crimea, was present at the Alma, and in the famous flank march was entrusted with the charge of the siege implements. Of all the officers who originally took part in that memorable expedition, only forty, we believe, survive who did not for a day desert the field, but steadfastly held on through the rigors of winter and the heats of summer, until peace restored them to their friends and their country. And of these gallant few Mr. Leahy is one.

An inquest has been held by Richard Byrne, Esq., coroner, on the remains of an unmarried woman, named Mary Hodgen, who died in the Louth Hospital, from the effects of an accident in the flax-scutching mill of Mr. J. P. Kelly, Dunleer. Deceased was passing the machinery in the scutching department, and having lifted a portion of the flax from the floor she put it into one of the stocks, when her finger was caught, and using her other hand to relieve herself, both her arms were cut off and a portion of her breast torn. The machinery was at once stopped, and the sufferer extricated. Mr. Kelly did everything he could to have her wants attended to, and had her conveyed to the Louth Hospital, where, after suffering great agony, she expired.

The Leinster Express mentions a remarkable incident. A horse was being taken to Old Dunleary Harbor to have his feet washed, and to that end was ridden to the slip, along the road running upon the summit of the sea-wall, upon which is laid the tramway for the stone wagons, when, being startled by the noise of a train in motion in its vicinity, the horse leaped from off the wall into the harbor below. The tide being out, there was not at this time more than a few inches of water. From the rocky nature of the bottom, the most fatal consequences were apprehended, both for the horse and for the child, which remained upon its back. Both escaped without other injury than a cut upon the leg. The horse, as soon as it recovered from its fright, walked to the landing-place.

